Lamberth Says Folsom For Segregation Bills

Also Backs Bid Measure, Senator Says

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH

Gov. James E. Folsom, who has been accused of being "soft" on the segregation question, will back pro-segregation measures in the legislative session which begins tomorrow, according to State Sen. Broughton Lamberth.

Mr. Lamberth, one of Folsom's floor leaders in the State Senat[illegible] a television program [illegible]y:

"We [illegible] everything possible to kee[illegible]gation in the public schools."

He said the Folsom administration will sponsor segregation bills o[illegible] back the ones which are introduced.

In Lamberth's opinion, the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision admitting Negroes to a private school in Philadelphia can be "circumvented" by the present Alabama placement law.

He said the Folsom administration also would try to make changes in the military department, in the governor's mansion fund, and in the purchasing laws of the state.

In the military department, he said there would be an administration-tacked bill "pertaining to active duty pay." Folsom has been criticized for putting so many people on active duty with the Alabama National Guard.

The governor's mansion fund, Lamberth said, would be put under the capitol services department, under the control of the finance director.

"He (the governor) will have no power over the mansion fund," Lamberth said. "That's the way it should have been all the time."

Lamberth said the Folsom administration will back a competitive bid bill, which would require competitive bidding on all purchases of more than $500. He said Folsom was in favor of putting towns and counties—as well as state agencies—under the competitive bid law.

Including of the towns and counties under the law would not help to get the law passed, Lamberth admitted.

Lamberth said the Folsom administration has a balanced budget ready to submit to the Legislature.

He said he believed that a 7 per cent increase in state revenue this year would cover the demands of all the state agencies. Most of the state agencies asked for more money this year.

"Each department (under the Folsom budget) got just a little bit more than it did in each of the last two fiscal years," he said.

Lamberth said he would introduce a bill this week which would exempt all cattle from ad valorem taxes. Cattle now are considered, under a ruling by the State Supreme Court, to be taxable.

He said he would back the Lackey-Edwards school bill, sponsored by Jefferson Rep. Rufus Lackey and Jess Edwards, which would set up a commission for a long range study of Alabama's schools.

The state senator said he would not favor a proposed board to replace the present highway director, which would take the highway department from under the control of the governor.

"It would strip the governor of his powers," said Lamberth, "and he's already like a glorified justice of the peace."

Lamberth also was against any bill which would change the setup of the state liquor board. He said it might get to a vote of the people, if changes were proposed, and that "we are all scared it might dry the state up."

In the coming session, Lamberth said he expects the legislators to "lie down like lambs and lions together for the first few days," but later he expects "one of the most controversial sessions since 1949."

Lamberth appeared on "Alabama Press Conference" over WABT. He was questioned by Fred Taylor of The Birmingham News; Jack Hankins, Lamar County Democrat, and J. W. Oakley, of Centerville Press. Charlies Davis, of WABT, was moderator.

Folsom Sees Assembly But Skips Race Issue

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 7 (AP)—Gov. Folsom welcomed the Alabama Legislature back in session today with a prepared address that omitted any mention of the racial segregation issue.

His message contained no recommendation for legislation to preserve the color barrier in the schools or elsewhere.

Administration leaders had predicted before the 1957 regular session opened that the governor would lend his support to a pro-segregation program aimed at preventing race mixing in schools, on public buses and in recreational facilities.

Folsom has been severely criticized in the past for what opponents called a "soft" attitude toward segregation. He vetoed or refused to sign all but one of the segregation measures previously enacted by the Legislature.

In his message the governor again disavowed any idea of asking for more taxes to finance education. He said the voters have shown they are looking to the cities and counties rather than the state government for additional school revenue.

The chief executive said, however, too many rural schools have been consolidated and that a study should be made "leading to the decentralization of our schools."

Education, particularly in the lower grades, should be returned to the "local level," he added.

Folsom gave his unqualified endorsement to legislation regulating public purchases, county as well as state, and added:

"Any legislator who grabs the microphone and says that he is in favor of a state purchasing bill and not a county purchasing bill is not being honest with himself."

The administration's purchasing policies have been criticized sharply under the present law which allows purchases to be made without competitive bidding. Folsom said he advocates stricter regulation but that the same restrictions should cover county offices "that administer tax funds."

Delousing For '62

IT NOW seems plainer than when we first remarked it some days ago that the business of the Folsom Administration from here on in is to delouse and soothe the state in preparation for a third term campaign in 1962.

One after the other Folsom has abandoned, or promised to abandon, legislation and policies that have set public opinion against him.

The first time Folsom went after office, the scandals of his maladministration continued right up to the end—the climax was the pardon-parole orgy—and he did not commence to regain favor until he had departed the Capitol. This time he evidently has concluded that the time to regain favor is before the end of the term and the way to meet opposition charges is to make the record show that he abated the abuses himself.

Not long ago Folsom himself announced that he would not agitate for reapportionment in this legislature. This is a notable come down since from the start that, with a constitutional convention, has been basic with him.

Sunday Senator Broughton Lamberth, a Folsom floor leader, said that the Folsom Administration would either sponsor its own legislation to preserve school segregation or support that offered by others.

Lamberth further revealed that control over Mansion Fund expenditures would be removed from the governor and that competitive bidding on state purchases over $500 would be required by new laws sponsored by the administration. Likewise the active duty pay for National Guardsmen would be regulated by a law that would remove the suspicion that the call-ups were used to pay off Folsomites.

All of this is sound legislation, but the droll aspect of it is that no new laws are needed by Folsom to achieve these reforms. For example, had Folsom believed in competitive bidding, he could have required it; nothing stood in his way except the need to gorge the faithful. At any time he could have told the adjutant general to eliminate the abuse of the Guard's active duty carnival.

If all of this comes to pass and in another campaign Folsom is confronted with the scandals attaching to these items, he will acknowledge them but point out that he cleaned his own stable before leaving office. This would probably be disarming and effective.

But one wonders why he is exerting himself so systematically to delouse. After all, did he not get elected in one primary by telling Alabama, "Shore I stole—that's the only way you could get it from them fellows down in Montgomery"?

PREDICTIONS — State Sen. Broughton Lamberth, of Alexander City, one of Gov. James E. Folsom's floor leaders in the State Senate, made some predictions yesterday about the coming legislative session.

Segregation Issue Ignored By Governor

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 5-8-57

By BOB INGRAM

In a 75-minute address which had both himself and his audience on the ropes, Gov. James E. Folsom kicked off the 1957 regular session of the Alabama Legislature yesterday with a promise to oppose any new taxes.

Addressing a joint session of the House and Senate the governor read a voluminous 35-page report to the lawmakers and a statewide television audience in which he completely ignored the issue of racial segregation.

Less than 48 hours earlier one of Folsom's key legislative leaders — Sen. Broughton Lamberth of Tallapoosa — had predicted the governor would make a forthright pro-segregation statement in his speech. He did not.

Instead Folsom gave a minutely detailed report on various functions of state government during the past 28 months of his second administration, and announced his support of a variety of bills some of which were introduced into the Legislature later in the day.

TAX STAND FIRM

While evading the race issue, Folsom made it crystal clear as to how he stands on any new taxes.

"I do not recommend any new taxes in my balanced budget," Folsom declared, "and I will oppose any new taxes which are submitted."

The governor even went further. Observing that in all probability monthly payments to the aged needy may have to be cut this fall, Folsom said the only way this slash could be prevented is through "securing additional revenue, of which I will oppose."

As far as educational revenue is concerned, Folsom reiterated his previous declaration that more local effort should be put forward.

"The voters have spoken, in no uncertain terms, during the last two years regarding additional taxes for educational purposes," Folsom declared. "I believe that the general trend, as expressed by their vote, shows that they expect that any further aid for education must and should come from the local level."

P. 2-A

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS

In brief, Folsom made the following recommendations to the Legislature:

Advertiser

Judicial — "I recommend a careful study by the judicial committees of both houses to the end that the deficiences of our courts be improved at the discretion of the Legislature."

Wed. 5-8-57

Legislature — "I recommend that the Legislature receive an annual salary to be worked out by this body, with the provision that the Legislature meet annually, and for a shorter specified time than is now the case."

Reapportionment — "I sincerely hope that you will come forth with a reapportionment bill that will give all the people a fair share of the vote in the Legislature of this state."

Jury Service — "I think the time has come when women should be given the privilege and right to serve on juries."

Election Laws — "My main recommendation is a change that will make the primary election closer to the general election."

Water Development — "There will be a bill presented to this body providing for a $10 million bond issue to finance the construction of inland docks."

Oil and Gas — Folsom gave his endorsement to a series of bills designed to encourage and facilitate oil development in the state.

Indigent Sick Care — "I would like to ask your serious consideration of a plan to provide some kind of medical care for indigent patients."

Education — "A study should be made, I think, leading to the decentralization of our schools instead of the consolidation of our schools, and turn our schools back to the local level, and thereby maintain good community spirit, because the local community is built around the local schools and churches, just as in our early days."

Prisons — Folsom outlined a series of proposals designed to improve the condition at prisons, particularly in regard to county prisoners being confined in state institutions to work out court cases.

Revenue — "I recommend that either livestock be exempt from the property tax or that timberland be subject to a severance tax. It is not fair for one to be taxed and the other not. Either tax timber or not tax cattle."

Finance — "I am in favor of a purchasing bill for the State of Alabama and I am also in favor of a purchasing bill for all counties."

Small Loan Laws — "I recommend stricter laws regulating small loan companies, especially in regards to excessive interest rates and the abuse of the borrower."

Folsom Lauds Rights Fight

Advertiser P. 1 Wed. 5-22-57

A legislative resolution of praise for Alabama Congressmen in their battle against civil rights legislation received both the Governor's signature and strong support today.

Montgomery, Ala.

Gov. James E. Folsom signed the measure sponsored by Sens. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County, and Joe Davis of Lowndes. It warns that the right of jury might be lost in civil rights cases if the program now before Congress is approved.

In a prepared statement after signing the resolution, Folsom said:

"Anything whatsoever at any time, any place, anywhere that takes the right of trial by jury from us is the most dangerous thing that can happen i our government.

"In my somewhat turbulent political career, had the jury trial been denied me, I would have been hung, strung and quartered for my political beliefs and fights, as the people of London were destroyed on the hangman's noose long, long ago."

Folsom didn't explain what trials he referred to.

Legal Battle Develops As Bombing Trial Opens

Fight Hinges On Admission Of Confession

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 5-28-57

By JO ANN FLIRT

A legal battle over the admission of a signed confession developed within an hour after the trial of two white men charged with racial bombings got under way here yesterday and still was raging when court recessed last night.

Most of the testimony hinged on the arrest of Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 19, who with Raymond C. Britt Jr., 27, was indicted last February on charges of bombing Hutchinson Street Baptist Church in the early morning of Jan. 10.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford questioned five state's witnesses in testimony concerning the bombing and leading up to the confession.

Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said Livingston directed him and Detectives Jack Shows and P. J. Ward to a gravel pit at the extension of Court street and pointed out an unexploded bomb.

Thetford announced he was prepared to offer evidence of Livingston's statement at that time, and the confession made later in the day.

REQUEST GRANTED

It was then that Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter granted the request of defense counsel, headed by John Blue Hill, to go into all the circumstances leading up to the taking of the statement from Livingston in order to determine if the confession is admissible in evidence.

Both state and defense witnesses were called by Hill as he sought to show that the men, and in particular Livingston, had been "coerced, intimidated" and otherwise mistreated by investigating officers.

First of the officers called by Hill was City Det. Jack Shows who was stringently examined by the defense for about an hour concerning the arrest and questioning of Livingston.

LISTS CLAIMS

Hill charged in his cross examination that officers broke at least three city or state laws as he attempted to show that:

(1) Livingston was arrested without a warrant or an explanation of the nature of his charge.

(2) That he never was taken before a magistrate, which Hill claimed, and the prosecution contested, was required in this case.

(3) Livingston was questioned in the Jefferson Davis Hotel in rooms registered under the fictious name of John G. Williams and party, in violation of a city ordinance against false registration.

Both Shows and Detective Ward, who followed him to the stand, said Livingston had not been intimidated nor threatened at any time nor had he been promised aid in securing probation if he signed the confession.

INTEROGATION ROOM

CMAPTAIN Brown said he directed Shows to rent the suite of rooms in a downtown hotel because there was only one small interroation room at headquarters. Both he and Shows denied registering under the fictious name.

Officers Ward and Shows testified Livingston was picked up at his job at a local machinery company at about 2:30 p.m. and taken to a hotel where he was questioned until about 5:30 or 6 p.m. and then taken to City Jail and booked for the night.

According to Shows, Livingston on Jan. 31 made an oral confession of participating in the bombings on Jan. 10. Shows said Livingston called him the morning of Feb. 1 from the jail and directed officers to the gravel pit and the unexploded bomb.

SECOND DAY

Testifying to the "nervous and upset" condition of Livingston when released from the jail the second day were the youth's wife and father.

W. K. Livingston said his son "didn't have a rational mind" and "I wouldn't have believed him if he had said he had done it." The elder Livingston said his son told him seven or eight officers stood over him during the questioning and that he was not allowed food or drink until he signed a confession.

2 GOING ON TRIAL IN BIAS VIOLENCE

Times P. 6A

To Face Court Tomorrow in Dynamiting of Negro Churches in Montgomery

Sun. 5-26-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 25 (AP) — Two young white men face trial Monday in the outbreak of racial violence that followed the end of bus segregation here.

The police have blamed the Ku Klux Klan for at least part of the reign of terror.

Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. are charged with dynamiting two of the four Negro churches before dawn last Jan. 10. Two other Negro churches and the homes of two ministers were also bombed that morning.

A Federal court injunction only twenty days earlier nullified city and state laws that historically had segregated white and Negro passengers on Montgomery buses.

Mr. Britt, 27 years old, faces another indictment for the bombing of a Negro taxicab stand in a second outburst of violence Jan. 27.

The county grand jury that indicted the two defendants also returned more serious charges against two other white men, James D. York, 52, and Henry Alexander, 27.

They will be called to trial June 3 for the dynamiting of a Negro clergyman's home while members of the family were asleep in the dwelling.

Under Alabama law, the bombing of an inhabited residence is punishable by a prison term of ten years or more, or death in the electric chair. No one was injured in the explosion at the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

Mr. Britt faces a maximum of ten years' imprisonment on each of three charges. He is accused of bombing Mr. Abernathy's church, the Negro First Baptist; the Hutchinson Baptist Church and the taxicab stand.

Mr. Livingston, 18, also is charged with dynamiting the Hutchison Street Church. The two defendants are expected to demand separate trials and state's attorneys will decide then which of them to call first.

Mr. Britt and Mr. Livingston will be tried under a law that prohibits setting off dynamite "in, under or dangerously near to" an unoccupied public building under a separate statute dealing with the bombing of inhabited dwellings.

Racial feelings that had simmered through a year-long Negro boycott of segregated city buses erupted shortly after the buses were ordered integrated last Dec. 21 under a Federal court decree. The United States Supreme Court had ruled bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

Asks U.S. Atty. Gen. To Probe Bombings In B'ham, Bessemer

Birmingham, Ala. - (ANP)- The United States Department of Justice has been urged by a group of organizations in the Birmingham and Bessemer area to "look into conditions of lawlessness" in this county which have resulted in a series of vicious bombings.

The request was contained in a telegram sent to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell May 7 which carried the names of Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president and Rev. H.N. Smith, secretary; the Ala. Christian Movement for Human Rights, Inc.; Rev. J.L. Ware, president, the Birmingham Baptist Ministers Conference; Rev. E.J. Minnifield, president of the Central Baptist Ministers' Conference; Asbury Howard, president, Bessemer Voters League; Rev. Elias S. Hardge, president, Community Civic and Commerical Association and Mrs. Lucille Ayers, president of the Ensley Voters League.

However, the Birmingham Post-Herald said that Tuesday night, May 7, Mrs. Ayers, a Brighton High School teacher, called that newspaper and said the Ensley Voters' League had not joined the request.

Text of the statement follows:

"Honorable Herbert Brownell, Atty. Gen. U.S., The United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

"Dear Sir:

Past events and present necessities force us to seek the immediate aid of your department in looking into the conditions of lawlessness which exist in the Birmingham-Jefferson County area. Since 1948 there have been an estimated 21 racial unsolved bombings, burnings, and explosive events in this area alone.

"On Dec. 21, 1950 the home of Mrs. Mary Means Monk, a participant in Zoning litigation was bombed.

May 6, 1951 homes at 1100 and 1104 N. Center St. were bombed.

In 1951 Rev. E.B. DeYampert's home was bombed twice in April and August; and another adjacent house was bombed.

In 1955 homes of 2 Negro families were bombed.

We point out that since Dec. 1956, the Bethel B.C., pastored by Rev. F.L. Shuttlesworth, was bombed, and the parsonage was completely destroyed by a large dynamite charge; the minister and family barely escaped death.

Early this year the Flowers home in Woodlawn was bombed.

In April 1957 2 homes in Fountain Heights were bombed.

On April 28, 1957, the Allen Temple AME church, Bessemer, was bombed.

On April 28, 1957, the home of Mr. Asbury Howard, a labor leader was bombed.

We do not incriminate, or attempt to charge anyone recklessly. Neither have we any intention or reprisals or retaliatory unchristian acts. But conditions are growing worse. There appears to be either inability or unwillingness on the part of the enforcement agencies to cope with the bombings. None is safe-of whatever persuasion-so long as an unprincipled few can harrass and intimidate, and use at random, such highly restrictive explosive materials, such as dynamite. We have already urged strict control of stocks, sales, use of explosives. We know that noe can be safe until all are safe.

Because of the danger, and the likelihood of even further widespread bombings and violence, we urgently plead you order and begin an immediate investigation in this area. We ask this in the name of Negroes of Birmingham and Jefferson County, and for the sake of America."

Confessed Church Bombers Acquitted

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Alleging that the "South has lost its soul," Congressman Adam Clayton Powell called for a boycott by Alabama citizens in the wake of last week's acquittal of two white men who confessed to having bombed Negro churches and homes here in a wave of terror.

• Powell's statements keynoted a rising storm of protest over the verdict of an all-white jury which found Raymond Britt, 27, and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 19, not guilty, although both men had confessed to committing the crimes.

The jury deliberated a mere one hour and thirty-five minutes before returning its verdict, which was greeted with cheers and applause by a packed courtroom.

• In his statement, Congressman Powell asserted, "The acquittal by jury of the bombers of Houses of God and the residents of men of God must clearly show to civilized Americans that the South has lost its soul and conscience and henceforth is not entitled to any respect.

"Three things have resulted from this: A major victory for communism, especially among the two billion colored people of the earth; the placing of our foreign aid program in jeopardy because billions of dollars cannot counteract legalized bigotry; this will unmistakeably reveal the hypocrisy of any Congressman or Senator who dares now to present and support an amendment to the forthcoming civil rights bill which would institute trial by jury.

• "It is now clearly evident that this move, sponsored mainly by Senator Ervin, is sheer, rank hypocrisy. The Negro people of Alabama should seriously consider some form of passive resistance directed against the jurors, and taking the form maybe of even boycott of any businesses of which they are directly or indirectly connected."

The prosecution had warned that a verdict of acquittal might result in "racial rioting in Montgomery." The defense counsel, John Blue Hill and John Harris had argued that the verdict would "determine our very civilization and our way of life." They had urged that the verdict "go down in history as saying to the Negroes that 'you shall not pass'."

VICTIMIZED IN the wave of Montgomery bombings were four churches and the homes of two ministers supporting integration, plus a Negro taxicab stand and an adjoining residence.

• Britt and Livingston were on trial for the bombing of one church. Britt still faces charges of having dynamited another church and the taxicab stand. Two other men are still awaiting trial in the bombing charges.

• William F. Thetford, the chief prosecutor, had told the jurors, "We don't want racial rioting in Montgomery . . . but if one can play the game, both can. If you turn these men loose under the evidence the state has presented, you say to the Ku Klux Klan, 'If you bomb a Negro church or home, it's all right.' Then the next thing you know it will be your church and your house, because it's a sword that cuts both ways."

A confession made by Britt was admitted by Judge Eugene W. Carter during the trial because it was "voluntary." However, Judge Carter refused to admit into evidence a confession by Livingston because the documents contained references to other incidents of violence.

AMONG THE witnesses to testify was Rev. Martin Luther King whose home has been hit twice by bombings. Also testifying was Detective T. K. Ward, who obtained Britt's confession. Ward said that Britt took him to a trash pile where Britt pointed out an abandoned cardboard box containing dynamite.

During the testimony, spectators who laughed out loud were chastised by Judge Carter who remarked at one point after an outbreak, "I know who just laughed, and if you do that again you're going to jail."

Jury Hears Bombing Confession

Dynamite Tossing Described

Post-Herald Birmingham, Ala. Wed. 5-29-57

BY REX THOMAS
Associated Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, May 28 —A signed confession from a young white man admitting he bombed a Negro chucrh was read today to a jury trying the defendant on a charge of participating in recent racial violence in Montgomery.

But because of a technicality, a statement bearing the signature of Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. wasn't allowed to go into the court record itself, even though Circuit Judge Eugene Carter had ruled earlier that the state had a right to introduce it.

When state's attorneys offered the confession, defense lawyers, reading it for the first time, won the right to exclude all mention of any violence besides the dynamiting of the one church.

Four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were bombed early Jan. 10, but Livingston and Raymond C. Britt Jr., another defendant, are being tried now only for the bombing of one church, the Hutchinson Street Baptist.

Although Carter refused to let the state put the confessio nitself into the record, he did permit Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford to get parts of it in by questioning a city detective who said he was present when Livingston made the statement.

Thetford asked Detective Jack Shows, 'Did you ask the defendant so-and-so, and did he answer so-and-so?" in that manner the prosecutor was able to read to the jury those portions of the statement pertaining to the Hutchinson Street Church.

By using that device, Thetford brought out from shows that Livingston gave the following account of the bombing in his signed statement:

He and Britt and others met at Britt's house the night of Jan. 9, discussed plans for the bombings and agreed to meet at midnight at a cafe.

At the restaurant, Britt and a city road scraper operator, James D. York, distributed dynamite bombs to those present.

Livingston and Britt drove to the Hutchinson St. Church and Livingston got out of the car, tossed a bomb on the side steps of the church and drove off. Later he returned to the restaurant, picked up his own car and went home.

York is under indictment for another of the racial bombings which followed the end of city bus segregation in Montgomery Dec. 21. He faces trial next week along with Henry Alexander for the dynamiting of the home of a Negro minister, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, on Jan. 10.

In Livingston's statement, he said he had recognized Alexander among those present at the restaurant when the bombs were distributed.

A member of the prosecution staff, Maury Smith, also testified that Livingston admitted the bombings and said in his signed statement that Britt was with him at the time.

Later the state began laying groundwork for an attempt to introduce a signed statement by Britt. As it had yesterday in a struggle over Livingston's confession, the defense demanded the right to interrupt the state's case to call its own witnesses in an effort to show the circumstances that led up to the statement.

Post-Herald

An obviously frightened witness who admitted he had belonged to the Ku Klux Klan told the jury he attended the meeting at Britt's house on Jan. 9 and that later a man he didn't identify threatened to kill him "if I said anything about it."

Wed. 5-29-57

That was the meeting Livingston mentioned in his statement, at which he said arrangements were made for the bombing.

The frightened witness, Walter King, a railroad employe, shook his head several times while trying to answer questions and at one point remarked that "I'm so nervous I don't know."

He said, however, that he heard no mention of bombings at the meeting at Britt's home even though he said he did hear dynamite discussed. King also testified that the attended one Klan meeting when Britt was present.

State's attorneys also sought to link Livingston to the KKK. A state investigator, Jake Kreis, testified that Livingston told him he was going to a Klan meeting after he was released from jail following his arrest for the bombing. Similar testimony came from a city detective.

Britt also faces charges of bombing another church and also of bombing a Negro taxicab stand early Jan. 27.

Thetford said the prosecution has a similar confession from Britt but the state hasn't tried to introduce it thus far.

Carter's decision to allow Livingston's signed statement to be read to the jury climaxed a bitter struggle by defense attorneys to keep it out. They sought to show that the confession was taken by coercion, intimidation and even "brutality."

The judge threw out the defense objections primarily because the state had produced evidence that before signing the statement, the young defendant had voluntarily guided officers to an abandoned gravel pit where he had tossed another unexploded bomb "to get rid of it."

Carter said that episode convinced him that Livingston wasn't acting under pressure.

Defense Attys. John Blue Hill and John Harris called the court's attention to several previous decisions which they said made the confession inadmissable.

RACIAL BOMBING TRIAL LAUNCHED

New Orleans, La.

Defense Seeks to Throw Out Confession

Times-Picayune 5-28-57

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 27 (AP)—The state blamed the Ku Klux Klan and defense attorneys waved the banner of segregation ntoday at the outset of the trial of two white men charged with bombing a Negro church.

Raymond C. Britt Jr., 27, and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 18, went on trial together accusde of participating in a reign of racial terrorism following the end of city bus segregation in Montgomery.

Four Negro churches, three homes and a Negro taxicab stand were bombed last January aftre racial barriers on the buses were set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Britt and Lipingston are being tried for the bombing of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church Jan. 10. The older defendannt also is charged with dynnamiting the Negro First Baptist Church Jan. 10 and the taxicab stand 17 days later. He faces trial separately onn the other charges.

As the trial began, Circuit Solicitor (prosecutor) William F. Thetford set the stage for the attempted introductionn of a signed confession and defense attorneys attempted to block it.

John Blue Hill, chief of the defense staff, accused city police, in his opening remarks to the jury, of using "coercion, intimidation and brutality . . ." He said he would prove that neither of the defendants made any statemennts voluntarily.

As the state put one police officer after another on the stand, the defense tried to show that Britt annd Livingston were held in custody for several days and that no one was permitted to see them.

Hill brought out that detectives rented three hotel rooms for questioning and accused them of violating a city ordinance by registering for the rooms under fictitious names. n

Thetford produced testimony from each offiecr that no threats or promises of reward were made to the defendants as an inducement to sign a confession.

Detective Capt. E. P. Brown told the jury he ordered the hotel rooms rented for questioning because "we don't have sufficient room at police headquarters."

Before that line of questioning began, the prosecutor put into evidence a statement from State Toxicologist Vannn V. Pruitt Jr., idenifying dynamite as the explosive used at the Hutchinson Street Church.

That was necessary to the state's case because the defendants were indicted under a state law which makes it unlawful to bomb a public building only if dynnamite is used.

Alabaman Says Negroes Bombed Own Churches

Atlanta, Ga. Times 5-30-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 29 (AP)—A white attorney charged in court today that Montgomery Negro leaders, rather than white men, were responsible for the bombing of their churches.

The accusation was made by the chief defense attorney for two young white men who are on trial charged with the bombing of one of four Negro churches here last Jan. 10.

Meanwhile, a second confession telling of plans for a reign of racial terror went into the record in the third day of the trial.

State's attorneys rested their case shortly after, and chief defense Atty. John Blue Hill began presenting his testimony.

The defendants are Raymond C. Britt Jr., 27, and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 19.

Hill made the charge that Negro leaders had their own churches bombed when presiding Judge Eugene W. Carter refused to allow the defense to question the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. about Negroes' plans for challenging segregation laws.

"Our contention," Hill shouted, "is that when the bus boycott ended they (the Negro leaders) organized goon squads and carried out these bombings."

He said he wanted to show that contributions which came from Negroes elsewhere in the United States during the year-long boycott of segregated city busses ended abruptly when the boycott stopped last December.

The Negroes became "frantic," the defense attorney continued, "and decided they had to do something to create sympathy and get more money."

The churches and the homes of two prointegration ministers were bombed shortly after bus segregation ended in Montgomery under a federal court order. The bus boycott ended when the federal integration order went into effect last Dec. 21.

Earlier, city detective T. J. Ward testified that Britt gave a detailed written statement admitting the dynamiting of one church and implicating others in other bombings the same day.

New York

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 30 (AP)—Two young white men were acquitted late today of the bombing of a Negro church.

The verdict by the twelve white jurors came after 1 hour and 35 minutes of deliberation and brought an outburst of applause from the packed courtroom after court had been adjourned.

The verdict cleared Raymond C. Britt r., 27 years old, and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 19, of the charge of bombing the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church early on the morning of Jan. 10 during an outbreak of violence that folowed the end of city bus segregation in Montgomery.

As the jury returned to the courtroom, Judge Eugene W. Carter of Circuit Court, warned the crowd against any demonstration. But the moment court was adjourned, the spectators burst into loud applause and cheering.

Fears 'Racial Rioting'

The verdict came after the prosecution had warned that acquittal might bring on "racial rioting" in Montgomery.

Four churches, the homes of two ministers supporting integration and a Negro taxicab stand and adjoining residence were bombed in two outbreaks of terrorism following the end of bus segregation in Montgomery.

Mr. Britt and Mr. Livingston were put on trial this week only for the dynamiting of one church. Mr. Britt also faces charges of dynamiting another church and the taxicab stand. Two other men are awaiting trial on other bombing charges.

State and defense attorneys alike waved the banner of segregation in their closing arguments. The defense appealed for a verdict that would give encouragement to "every white man, every white woman and every white child in the South who is looking to you to preserve our sacred traditions."

William F. Thetford, chief prosecutor, told the jury "we were on the very edge of racial rioting" before the two defendants and two other white men were arrested and indicted for the bombings last January.

Warns of the Klan

"We don't want racial rioting in Montgomery," he said. "But if one can play the game, both can. If you turn these men loose under the evidence the state has presented, you say to the Ku Klux Klan 'if you bomb a Negro church or home, it's all right.'

"Then," he continued, "the next thing you know it will be your church and your house, because it's a sword that cuts both ways."

John Blue Hill and John Harris, defense attorneys, argued that the verdict would "determine our very civilization and our way of life" in the South and that it must "go down in history as saying to the Negroes that 'you shall not pass'."

ACQUITTAL by an all-white Montgomery jury of two white men charged with dynamiting a Negro church is already being hailed in the North as proof that Congress must pass the pending federal "civil rights" bill eliminating jury trials in certain types of cases.

No evidence was presented that either defendant was mistreated by the police at the time the confessions were signed, and the Montgomery authorities seem to have made an earnest effort to get convictions.

P.7-A

Chief Defense Attorney J. B. Hill rang the changes on such arguments as "a not guilty verdict will sound a clarion call that you Negroes shall not pass," and the verdict "will determine our very civilization and way of life."

It was even charged by defense attorneys that the Negroes bombed their own churches, to create sympathy in the North.

On the other hand, Solicitor Thetford said in his argument for the prosecution that acquittal would play directly into the hands of the advocates of "civil rights" bills, and added:

"Let's lay it on the line, gentlemen. The question is not whether these men are guilty or innocent, but the question is whether this jury will convict."

The jury refused to do so. If the men were guilty, their acquittal is highly regrettable. Yet it would not be the first time that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the courts of this country.

J. Russell Wiggins says in his recent book, Freedom Or Secrecy, that there were 700 gang murders in Chicago over a 25-year period, and not more than 10 convictions of the perpetrators in the Chicago courts.

Two wrongs never make a right, of course. If white police, white jurors and white judges fail to accord equal and exact justice to Negro defendants in the courts of the South, we may be sure that the likelihood of a "civil rights" law, eliminating jury trials, will be vastly increased.

If the two men tried in Montgomery were guilty, the jurors would have done far more to uphold our "way of life" by convicting them than by setting them free. Let's be sure to remember this in Virginia, if and when similar issues arise.

The Bombing of Churches Is Not a 'Way of Life'

(Nashville Tennesseean)

Daily Worker Atlanta Ga.

With the acquittal of two white men charged with bombing a Negro church in Montgomery, a sickening spectacle has unfolded.

Tues. 6-4-57

On that question, however, it is difficult to accept the story of the story of the two men that the confessions they had signed earlier were obtained through coersion, intimidation and police brutality. The thought that a white police force in an Alabama city would use such methods to wring a trumped-up confession from two innocent white men charged with an offense against a Nego church is simply too implausible to be easily believed.

And it is equally difficult to understand why the same alibis produced by the pair were never even mentioned until they got into the courtroom.

But regardless of the guilt or innocence of the two, the bigger—and more disturbing—thing is the spectablce presented by their defense attorneys.

For these lawyers conducted their case as if the question of whether their clients were guilty or innocent did not matter much. And apparently the jury and the crowd which greeted its verdict with wild applause and cheers ("We've got to protect our rights", felt the same way.

38a Ala

Instead of basing their case on an attempt to establish the innocence of their clients, Defense Attorneys John Blue Hill and John Harris seemed to argue instead that even if they did bomb the church they should not be punished under the law.

The South, the defense told the jury, "is looking to you to preserve our way of life." And the verdict, it was added, "would determine our way of life . . . the lives of our children and our children's children."

Bombing

As if the implications of such statements were not plain enough. Mr. Hill spelled out his meaning when he went on to say:

o—o—o—o

"We must show the Negro race that the whites will not give one inch more in its fight to prevent the downfall of our traditions."

What he was asking the jury to show, in other words, was that white men have the right to bomb Negro churches or resort to other violence without being held accountable.

No argument more alien to decency and justice could be imagined. And the defense attorneys profaned and prostituted the name of the South when they linked the bombing of churches with "a way of life" and "sacred traditions."

It was, as it turned out, an effective defense. But far from being anything to cheer and applaud, it was an open invitation to more violence—which certainly is not a sacred tradition and which is a way of life that the South can travel only at its own peril.

NOTES REFERRING TO BOMBED CHURCH FOUND IN BRITT'S HOME

Two Notes Introduced As Evidence In Britt-Livingston Bombing Trial

Police Admit Illegal Search In Alabama Church Bombing

Post + Times Herald Thurs. 5-30-57 Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 29 (AP) — Defense attorneys brought an admission from a city detective today that officers violated the law in searching the home of a white man on trial for the bombing of a Negro church.

The testimony came as part of ta defense attempt to block introduction of, what the state says is a signed confession from Raymond C. Britt Jr. admitting he took part in the dynamiting of the church Jan. 10.

Britt and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. are on trial for the bombing, one of several dynamitings that followed the end of racial segregation on Montgomery city buses.

Chief defense attorney John Blue Hill brought an admission from Detective R. C. Houlton that officers failed to comply with city and state laws in searching Britt's home a few hours before he was arrested on Jan. 28.

Under questioning, the detective said neither he nor other officers made a return on the search warrant listing property taken from Britt's home. He answered "Yes" when Hill aswed him if that violated the law.

The defense attorney also produced testimony that officers took "personal, private papers" from the defendant's home although the search warrant authorized them only to seize "firearms or explosives."

Houlton said they also took a rifle and some shells.

Britt and Livingston are charged with dynamiting the Hutchinson St. Baptist Church.

State's attorneys got into the record yesterday a confession from Livingston admitting that he tossed a bomb at the church on the day that four churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were dynamited.

Bomb Jury Hears Data From Britt Confession

Notes Placed Into Record; State Rests

By JO ANN FLIRT

The state yesterday afternoon rested its case against two white men on trial for the bombing of a Negro church after winning for the second time the right to present testimony of a signed confession to jurors.

Judge Eugene W. Carter ruled a confession by Raymond C. Britt Jr. was voluntary and allowed Solicitor William F. Theftord to bring out facts contained in the confession by directing questions to the police officer who obtained it.

A similar confession by Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. was admitted in evidence Tuesday. Judge Carter has refused to allow the documents to go to the jury as exhibits because they contain references to other incidents of violence.

The two men are on trial for the bombing of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church early on the morning of Jan. 10.

Defense Attorney John Blue Hill and assistants immediately launched into their defense with efforts to impeach the testimony of a railroad switchman who had told jurors he was threatened after he refused to particpate in the Jan. 10 bombings.

Charles Smitherman, 71-year-old retired railroad worker and now an elevator operator at the courthouse building on Dexter avenue, and L. C. Childre, a clerk for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, both testified they knew Walter L. King and would not believe him under oath.

LIFE THREATENED

King testified Tuesday his life had been threatened by the defendant Britt and another man whom he did not identify.

High light of the defense tactics, spectator-wise, was the mid-afternoon performance of Attorney John Harris as he harassed and needled the Rev. Martin Luther King in an attempt to show the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which King heads, had a financial motive for committing the bombings for which Britt and Livingston are on trial.

Appearance of King and other Negro leaders of the MIA was followed by a parade of 43 character witnesses who testified to the good reputation of the two men.

The state climaxed its case with testimony of Britt's confession and introduction into evidence of two notes found in Britt's home on the day of his arrest which contained written references to Hutchinson Street Baptist Church.

Defense attorneys earlier presented a copy of the search warrant which according to testimony, only authorized a search for firearms and explosives.

Officers testified they also took a rifle, cartridges and shotgun shells from the Britt home. The search, they said, was made about 2:30 on the afternoon of Jan. 28. Britt was arrested about 8 o'clock that night, testimony showed.

According to additional testimony, he was held in the city jail until about noon on Jan. 30 when he was taken to a downtown hotel for questioning.

According to Detective T. J. Ward who obtained the confession, Britt orally admitted participation in the bombings after about two hours of questioning. Ward said a full statement later and decided to throw away the box while they were out there.

Defense attorneys argued the holding of Britt from about 8 p.m. on a Monday to the following Wednesday noon when questioning was begun invalidated the confession. They presented testimony by Mrs. Britt and Britt's sister that when he arrived home about 1:30 a.m. on the Friday following his arrest he was "filthy dirty," and in a nervous condition.

They also claimed the defendant had not eaten nor slept. State witnesses testified food had been furnished to him at the jail and during the several hours when he was questioned.

Judge Carter stopped proceedings several times yesterday to warn spectators in the packed courtroom who laughed aloud during testimony. At one point he remarked "I know who just laughed and if you do that again you're going to jail."

LASTED NEARLY HOUR

Immediately following testimony designed to impeach the railroad switchman's statements of threats, defense attorneys called the Rev. King to the stand for a series of questions which lasted for nearly an hour.

Judge Carter sustained the state's objections to the questions on the organization of the MIA, its relationship, if any, to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, financing of both the organizations, and statements allegedly made by the Negro leader concerning integration efforts in the Souh.

The only answers allowed by Judge Carter was an acknowledgement by the Rev. King that the MIA had spent $225,000 through last December. Several times he instructed the jury to disregard questions by Defense Attorney Harris and twice reminded the needling attorneys that the Negro leaders had been summoned by them.

After an hour of questioning of King and preliminary questions directed toward Negro attorney Fred Gray, the state was upheld asking the same questions after they had been ruled out by the judge.

GRAY DRAFT STATUS

Gray, before the questioning stopped, was queried about the controversy over his draft status, association with the NAACP and other areas which Judge Carter was taken by a police stenographer and signed by Britt.

About 8:30 the same night, according to Ward, Britt directed him to a trash pile near Dannelly Field where he pointed out an abandoned cardboard box which had contained dynamite. Photographs of the box, taken by toxicologist Vann Pruitt, were introduced by the state.

FOLLOWING KING

Ward said Britt told him he was accompanied on the trip when the box was discarded by Henry Alexander, J. D. York, and Kyle Livingston. Ward testified Britt said they had been following the Rev. Martin Luther King ruled were irrevelant in the case.

Questioning of the Negro leaders was stopped by Judge Carter at the insistence of Deputy Solicitor Robert Stewart who charged the defense was asking the questions "solely to influence the jury" and that they knew they were not relevant.

Other Negro leaders subpoenaed by the defense included the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, an MIA official, and E. D. Nixon, a former NAACP leader here.

The brief questioning of character witnesses was made by Joseph Pilcher as 43 witnesses were paraded on and off the stand in 50 minutes.

At one point the witnesses lined up at the back of the courtroom, marched forward one at a time, and after giving their names to the bailiff, were questioned. Each testified that he knew either Britt or Livingston and that they had a good reputation. There was practically no cross examination by the state.

Jim-Crow Waiting Room Big Issue

Birmingham Cops Ignore Supreme Court; Arrest Couple in Railroad Station

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 1-5-57

(Special to The Courier)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Defiance against the United States Supreme Court will be put to a test on Jan. 16 in Birmingham's Recorder's Court over the maintenance of segregated waiting rooms in the local railroad Terminal Station.

The case in question arose when Birmingham police arrested 36-year-old Carl Lambert Baldwin and his school-teacher wife, Mrs. Alexinia Young Baldwin, 31, who had ignored jim-crow signs and used the general waiting room in the station.

The couple had purchased tickets and made reservations on the crack train, "The City of Miami," for Milwaukee on Saturday, Dec. 23. When the train was late on arriving, the Baldwins used the nearest waiting room only to be "apprehended" by a five-man detail of city police who gave them 20 seconds to "get in the colored waiting room."

When the Baldwins refused, they were arrested, charged with "disorderly conduct," carried to the city jail, and then released on $100 bond each.

According to Birmingham police records, the arrest occurred at 6:28 A. M., Dec. 22, and was carried out by officers, Lieut. J. R. Davis, Sgt. J. E. Wilson, and Patrolmen A. E. Curry and E. E. Heat.

AT THE subsequent hearing into the case Atty. Demetrius C. Newton, the Baldwins' counsel, asked for a delay and Judge Ralph E. Parker granted the request setting Jan. 16 as the new hearing date.

Attorney Newton further asked the court for an arrest warrant. It was presumed that the Baldwins' lawyer is seeking to nail down the specified charges against his clients as they had been originally accused of "disorderly conduct."

The case had the following implications:

1. Several months ago the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission handed down a ruling which ordered railroad stations and bus terminals to remove their jim-crow signs to end all forms of racial segregation.

2. After railroads complied with the ICC order, Alabama Public Service Commission Chairman C. C. (Jack) Owens ordered the jim-crow signs put back and the segregated waiting rooms re-opened.

3. Later, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that Alabama's state segregation laws and Montgomery's bus jim-crow city ordinances were unconstitutional.

4. The Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, Dec. 20, addressed a letter to the three-man City Commission of Birmingham suggesting that the city's statute on segregated buses and street cars "is invalid, and should be immediately repealed at your next commission meeting."

The ACMHR letter was signed by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president, and secretary N. H. Smith. No member of the City Commission has offered any comment on the missive.

AS A follow-up to this event, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth said that if the commission chooses to ignore the ACMHR request, silence would be the signal for bus riders to seat themselves in accordance with the non-segregation decision of the U. S. Supreme Court.

This Birmingham Negroes have done and similar action has taken place in Tallahassee, Fla.

However, the significance of the Baldwins' case lies in the fact that Birmingham's police, who have a long, blood-stained record of shooting down defenseless Negro prisoners over past years, have decided to ignore the Supreme Court of the United States of America by enforcing jim-crow law.

It will be up to the Birmingham Recorder's Court to decide if the city police are right or wrong. In the event the court supports the city police in handing down its verdict, the Baldwins' case will undoubtedly face higher adjudication.

Birmingham Pastor Tells Of Incident

Daily Worker Thurs. 3-7-57 Atlanta, Ga.

By THADDEUS T. STOKES

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth said in Atlanta late Wednesday night that the Birmingham police did not try to molest him or his wife, Ruby, as they sat in a train station with intra-state tickets. He said they later changed their minds and purchased inter-state tickets to come to Atlanta. He first purchased a ticket for Autalla, Ala.

The minister who is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which has been spearheading moves for racial desegregation said it is apparant that segregation in public transportation in Alabama is dead, because a policeman came into the waiting room of the train station, inspected our tickets, but did not comment." They didn't arrest us."

"However, there were a group of men, milling around in the station who were identified to us as members of the White Citizens Council and the Ku Klux Klan. As we were entering one unidentified white man blocked the entrance and said we don't want you in here." said Rev. Shuttlesworth. "We didn't reply," continued the minister.

He praised the citys police commissioner, Robert Lindburg, as being a "man of high morals." He said the police protected them while they sat in the station.

"Since they didn't arrest us for traveling unsegregated, it would look bad if they would arrest anybody in the future They should take the "segregated signs' down," said the young minister.

Praising many white citizens of Birmingham, the minister said that the cowardly mob action of the true people of the town. "Most white people are lawful. Because this is a nation of law, not mob violence, he explained.

Shuttlesworth, pastor of Bethel Baptist church in Birmingham, said "the southern white man is missing a glorious opportunity to show the world that he can meet and master any situation. They would attempt to solve the racial problem by amending some of the segregation laws. If officials would take a stand, that would stop the violence of the Klansman and White Citizens Council, which they claim are safe-guards of segregated laws." Thurs. 3-7-57

"The white people of the south should know by now that there is no inclination on the part of Negroes to back down now. However, we are not angry with anybody, but we will continue to press until we have won our civil rights.

But Rev. Shuttlesworth and his wife, who was accompanying him, said they don't plan to remain in Atlanta no longer than Thursday. He said he came over to converse with Rev. William Holmes Borders on business matters.

IT CAN HAPPEN—For several days early this week citizens of all races rode the city buses in Birmingham, Ala., on a "first come first serve" seat basis. Police charged this violated the city segregation laws and arrested 21 colored riders. The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the bus protest, is in the second seat next to the window. His home was bombed Christmas morning.

Negroes petition U. S. Court—

Race suit names Ternimal Station

A complaint filed in U. S. District Court today asked for an order ending racial segregation in waiting rooms at the Birmnigham Terminal Station.

The petition was filed by Carl L. Baldwin and Alexinia Baldwin, Negroes, who were arrested in the white waiting room of the Termnial Station Dec. 22.

THEY WERE CHARGED with disorderly conduct but have not been tried. The case was passed until Feb. 25 when the couple demanded that a warrant be served upon them.

Named as defendants were members of the Birmingham City Commission, Alabama Public Service Commission, and the Birmingham Terminal Company.

The petition asked a quick hearing by a three-judge court. The court was asked to enjoin the city and state officials from enforcing the segregation statute pending a final determination in the case.

THE NEGRO PLAINTIFFS alleged that they and otherse similarly situated are "denied and deprived of their rights secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and equal protection of the laws and the rights and privileges secured to them."

They charged that the segregation statute is unconstitutional.

Birmingham Negroes Ask Federal Aid

Seek Injunction For Integration On City's Buses

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 14 (AP)—Negroes sought to by-pass the city courts today by asking U.S. District Court to order an immediate end to bus segregation in Birmingram.

Atty. Arthur D. Shores filed the petition on behalf of 21 Negroes arrested Dec. 26 after deliberately violating Birmingham's rigid racial segregation laws. Their trials on charges of violating the bus segregation ordinance are set in Recorder's Court Feb. 11.

Autherine Lucy Foster, the only Negro admitted, was driven from the campus by mob action last Feb. 6. She later was expelled for her unproved charges that University authorities conspired in rioting against her.

Shores is representing Mrs. Foster in her efforts for readmission. Grooms has set a hearing Friday on a petition of Mrs. Foster asking Grooms to declare University officials in contempt of court.

The bus segregation complaint names as defendants the three members of the city commission and the Birmingham Transit Co., which operates bus service in this industrial city of 600,000.

About 200,000 Birmingham metropolitan area residents are Negroes, and the petition asserts it was brought on behalf of all of them.

LED BUS RIDERS

The mass violation of Birmingham's bus segregation laws was led by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, a few hours after his home was wrecked by a heavy dynamite blast. Three Negroes, including two children suffered slight injuries in the explosion.

Shuttlesworth himself was not arrested in the bus case.

The Recorder's Court defendants face maximum sentences of 180 days in jail and $100 fine if convicted there.

Montgomery Negroes won a U.S. Supreme Court order ending bus segregation in Alabama's capital less than a month ago. Bus service has been halted there indefinitely due to violence that followed.

Birmingham Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh said the new legal move will be contested. No date for the hearing has been set.

Shores asked a temporary injunction barring enforcement of Birmingham's bus segregation ordinances, and a final judgment declaring such laws unconstitutional. He asked a "speedy hearing."

The petition will be heard either by Judge H. Hobart Grooms or by Judge Seybourn H. Lynne.

Lynne was the dissenting judge of a three-judge federal court panel which first declared Montgomery's bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

GROOMS OPENED DOORS

Grooms in 1955 opened the doors of the University of Alabama to Negroes by enjoining the school from barring applicants for admission because of their race.

Bomb Rocks Negro Church In Bessemer

Advertiser P.1 Mon. 4-29-57 Montgomery, Ala.

BESSEMER, Ala., April 28 (AP)—A bomb exploded at a Negro church, a bomb was seen lying in a street and a report of an explosion was being investigated in Bessemer tonight, police headquarters reported.

Bessemer is an industrial suburb of Birmingham.

Police said that one report was that four white men in a car were seen near the northside Negro church about the time of the explosion there.

Officers had been sent to the location where a bomb was reported lying in the street. The nature of the other reported explosion, on Bessemer's southside, had not been determined.

The type of bomb exploded at the Negro church was not known immediately, but sticks of dynamite tied together have been exploded at Negro homes and churches in this area in the past.

First meager reports did not mention any injuries.

Terror Pattern Strikes Bessemer

World Wed. 5-1-57 P.1 B'ham, Ala.

BESSEMER, Ala. — Terror intimidation of the church and Negro leadership which has brought repeated dynamite blasts in Alabama flared anew Sunday as explosions ripped the Bessemer home of a labor leader and the Allen Temple AME Church.

The blasts followed a pattern that has been evident in Montgomery and Birmingham during tests of segregation laws by church leaders. The bombings followed almost to the letter explosion leveled at the home and church of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., of Montgomery and against the residence of Rev. J. M. Shuttleworth, the Birmingham segregation fighter.

It was the first outbreak of violence in this smal industrial suburb of Birmingham and the resulting damage, according to police reports, was small.

DYNAMITE BLASTS

Bessemer Police Lt. C. T. Mullen indicated that the explosions "apparently dynamite," occurred at the residence of Ashbury Howard International Vice-President of the United Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and the Allen Temple AME Church.

Damage to both facilities was small but speculations indicated that a wave of attacks on Negro properties might follow. This view persisted in wake of Howard's militancy in behalf of Negro voting rights. Howard is president of the Bessemer Negro Voters League.

Hours after the bombing a third report gained circulation that a "bomb" was seen in the street near Howard's home. This proved to be a false alarm, according to police.

The bomb at the church was thrown on an annex at the rear and rolled off on the ground. Windows were blasted out of a house behind the church.

The bomb at the Howard home didn't strike the house but blew a hole about six to eight inches deep and 18 inches wide.

Mr. Howard was unavailable for comment regarding the bombing. He was in Denver, Colo., at the time of the explosion.

Negro Home, Church Hit By Bombings

Post + Times Herald P.6-B Tues, 4-30-57 Wash, D.C.

BESSEMER, Ala., April 29 (INS)—Bessemer police were searching today for four white men who, reports indicated, had bombed a Negro church and a Negro labor leader's home last night.

There were no injuries in either blast, although 200 people were in the midst of church services and the labor leader's son was shaken. The two explosions occurred within 10 minutes of one another.

Georgia May Steel, a witness at the bombing of the home of Asbury Howard, vice president of the International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, said she saw a green automobile with three white men ride by just before the explosion.

Howard, also president of Bessemer's Voter's League, a Negro organization, was not home when the explosion blew a hole in the door and one in the ground.

The first bomb was thrown towards the church, but rolled to an alley. It blasted windows out of the building and a home behind it.

Police said they had information indicating that four white men had thrown the bombs.

City Commission Bans Inter-Racial Athletics

Wed. 3-20-57

Montgomery, Ala.

Local segregation laws were beefed up yesterday by the City Commission with an ordinance calling for total segregation in athletics and other recreational pastimes here.

The statute, passed unanimously at the regular commission meeting, prohibits any athletic contest where Negroes are participating players.

One official said the immediate effect of the new law is the banning of a Kansas City Athletics-Birmingham Barons baseball exhibition here April 9-10 at Paterson Field "unless other arrangements are made."

Several Negroes are members of the Kansas City club. The games were initially moved here from Birmingham where a similar sports-segregation ordinance is already in effect.

Montgomery Rebels President Ernest O'Conner, who had arranged for the games, could not be reached for comment.

Yesterday's ordinance said "it shall be unlawful for white and colored persons to play together . . . in any game of cards, dice, dominoes, checkers, pool, billiards, softball, basketball, baseball, football, golf, track, and at swimming pools, beaches, lakes or ponds . . . and at games, or athletic contests either indoors or outdoors."

The ordinance also provides a "cover all" clause stating that if any section of the ordinance is declared unconstitutional, the action of the court will not affect other provisions of the ordinance.

In order that the law will become "immediately effective," the commission voted to suspend the rule requiring that a bill be read publicly at least one week before its final adoption.

City Of Montgomery

AN ORDINANCE

BE IT ordained by the commissioners of the City of Montgomery as follows:

¶ It shall be unlawful for white and colored persons to play together or, in company with each other, in the City of Montgomery and within its police jurisdiction, in any game of cards, dice, dominoes, checkers, pool, billiards, softball, basketball, baseball, golf, track, and at swimming pools, beaches, lakes, or ponds or any other game or games or athletic contest or contests, either indoors or outdoors.

¶ Any person, who, being the owner, proprietor, or keeper or superintendent of any tavern, inn, restaurant, park or other public house or public place, or the clerk, servant or employe of such owner, proprietor, or keeper or superintendent, knowingly permits white persons and colored persons to play together or in company with each other in the city of Montgomery and within its police jurisdiction any game of cards, dice, dominoes, checkers, pool, billiards, softball, basketball, baseball, football, golf, track, and at swimming pools, beaches, lakes or ponds, or any other game or games or athletic contest or contests, in his house, or on his premises, or in a house or on premises under his charge, supervision or control, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor against the City of Montgomery.

¶ The words "colored person," as used herein, shall have the same meaning as "person of color" as defined in Section 2 of Ttitle 1 of the 1940 Code of Alabama.

¶ Any person, firm or corporation, violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor against the City of Montgomery.

¶ The provisions of this ordinance are severable and should any sentence, paragraph, section, or clause of this ordinance be declared unconstitutional by any court of competent jurisdiction, then such action by said court shall not affect the other provisions of this ordinance which are otherwise constitutional.

¶ This ordinance shall take effect as provided by law after passage, approval and publication.

Montgomery Bans Racial Mixing In Sports Events

Courier-Journal Wed. 3-20-57

Louisville, Ky.

Montgomery, Ala., March 19 (UP)—The City of Montgomery today banned any kind of mixed recreation, from billiards to baseball, in the Alabama capital.

The City Commission took the action in the face of a United States Supreme Court ruling establishing the precedent that segregation at public playgrounds is illegal. P.13

The new Montgomery ordinance states, "It shall be unlawful for white and colored persons to play together . . . in any game of cards, dice, dominoes, checkers, pool, billiards, softball, basketball, baseball, football, golf, track, and at swimming pools . . . or in any athletic contest or contests."

No Mixed Athletics, Montgomery Orders

Post-Herald Wed. 3-20-57

B'ham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, March 19 (AP)—An ordinance banning racial integration in athletic events and at swimming pools was adopted by the Montgomery City Commission today without debate or advance notice.

It prohibits race mixing at baseball, basketball, softball or football games and all other athletic contests in the police jurisdiction of the city, as well as swimming pools, beaches, lakes or ponds.

Violation of the ordinance constitutes a misdemeanor and the owner or proprietor of any place where integrated sports activities are "knowingly" permitted could be prosecuted under the law.

One immediate effect of the ordinance is to prohibit race mixing on the baseball field in the coming season, although President Ernest O'Connor of the Montgomery Rebels said there are no Negroes in the Class D Alabama-Florida League of which Montgomery is a member.

No major league exhibition games are scheduled here this Spring, as they have been in the past, O'Connor said.

The new law also will prohibit integrated seating at sports events. It says whites and Negroes cannot "play together" or be "in company with each other" at athletic contests.

A house-to-house collection drive to raise a $60,000 legal defense fund for white persons accused of anti - integration incidents, got under way yesterday after an all-day recruiting effort at Carpenters' Hall, 1822 Mt. Meigs Rd.

Jack Brock, president of the Alabama Segregation Defense Fund, former state president of the American Federation of Labor and publisher of Alabama Labor News, said volunteers picked up 100 buckets which will be used to collect the money.

He said the 100 collectors each will contact 1,000 people in various neighborhoods for donations. It was estimated that about 400 persons visited the Hall during the day.

Collectors will visit Prattville, Wetumpka, Hope Hull, Ramer and Millbrook. Several gallon buckets were filled by visitors but Brock refused to estimate the amount collected.

Each collector was given an identification c a r d authorizing solicitation in the fund's behalf.

Brock said money committments were relayed from Pensacola, Fla., Fort Deposit, Union Springs, Luverne and other South Alabama cities.

Other officers of the Alabama Segregation Defense Fund are two printers, J. V. Smith, 210 Perry Hill Road, and M. T. Tew, 92 W. Clover Lane.

Meanwhile, another group, the Committee For Legal Defense, announced it also would raise funds for much the same purpose as Brock's organization.

A spokesman said it would not compete with the Alabama Segregation Defense Fund but would be a permanent fund-raising organization.

The Committee for Legal Defense listed as officers Ira Fred Watson, an investment firm owner, of 821 Monroe St.; K. G. Ingle, a city employee of 3460 Broadview; H. J. Jurist Says 14th Amendment 'Unconstitutional'

'Bama Judge Defies High Court

22 Negroes Fined In Birmingham Bus Segregation Trial

Courier P. 4
Pittsburgh, Pa
Sat 3-30-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—An Alabama judge defied the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation, called the 14th Amendment unconstitutional and fined 22 Negroes $55 each for what he termed violation of Birmingham's bus segregation laws.

Judge Ralph E. Parker, in fining the Negroes who are fighting to end segregation on the city's buses, said the Supreme Court made a mistake in declaring bus segregation unconstitutional.

Parker said if bus segregation in Birmingham were dropped it would create a "state of emergency," and added, "I will not be responsible for such a calamity."

ABOUT THE 14th Amendment, which guarantees equal protection under the law to all persons regardless of race, creed or color, Judge Parker explained, "Nowhere in the U. S. Constitution is there one word that says that a state cannot make reasonable regulations for the carrying of persons on public conveyances, wholly within the state . . . the Supreme Court has not interpreted the Constitution. It has amended it."

The ruling has no effect except in Judge Parker's court.

Atty. Arthur Shores, representing the Negroes, said he had not decided whether to appeal. The city of Birmingham has been given additional time, from March 27 to April 12, to answer a Federal suit challenging bus segregation laws.

Bus Case Negroes Pay $1,265 Fines

Fri. 3-29-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 28 (AP)—The attorney for 21 Negro defendants convicted of violating city bus segregation laws today paid fines totaling $1,265—$50 each on 23 counts.

Montgomery Ala.

Atty. Arthur D. Shores said his clients had elected not to pursue the cases on appeal, but rely upon a federal court test.

Shores previously had filed a suit in U.S. District Court on behalf of the defendants seeking to void the city's ordinance providing for separation of the races on public transportation vehicles.

Shores said he did not expect a hearing on his suit before May.

22 Ala. bus riders fined

By EMORY O. JACKSON

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Chief Recorder's Judge Ralph Parker, in finding 22 open seat bus riders guilty of violating Birmingham's seat segregation laws, declared in a written opinion Thursday (March 21) that "The 14th Amendment to the Constitution is void."

Mar 3-30-57

After the judge, who had promised a ruling in the case Monday during the trial March 18, fined the defendants $50 and $5 costs each on Thursday, Arthur Shores, their attorney, asked and was granted five days to decide whether to appeal or pay the fines.

The alleged violations of the bus ordinance took place Dec. 2.

"We cannot have good will and domestic tranquility in our city unless our segregation laws are respected and obeyed," the court said. He added that they "are vital and necessary to avoid friction and calamity. They are constitutional."

JUDGE PARKER, answering "an eminent authority," who was obviously U.S. Judge H. H. Grooms, said the "authority" was quoted in the press "as saying that the recorder of the city of Birmingham could pass upon the constitutional matter involved in the cases, that this court had taken an oath to uphold the constitution of Alabama, also the Constitution of the United States."

"This is true, "Judge Parker said, "but this court did not take an oath to uphold the Supreme Court of the United States, when, in the judgment of this court, error is manifest, precedent not followed and amendments to the Constitution utterly ignored in numerous cases recently decided by the Supreme Court."

THE CITY judge said he was not "required by the oath taken by me to uphold the decisions of any court which are destructive of the Constitution. I had rather wear a ball and chain around my ankle than to wear one around my conscience.

"Judicial dictatorship cannot compel social adjustment," the judge said in his nine-page opinion. He declared that "Just because the Supreme Court has ruled as it has in the Montgomery case does not make this ruling correct, either legally morally.

"The thing that has shocked me most in the past few years," Judge Parker said, "is that politicians elsewhere in both political parties are willing to hurt the South to gain colored votes in critical areas of our country.

"STATES FREE from the race problem should not sit in judgment on us," he declared.

"I am of the definite opinion that the segregation laws of the city of Birmingham are constitutional," he said. His reasons for this conclusion, he said, were set forth in the Ninth and 10th Amendments.

"The Supreme Court has not interpreted the Constitution. It has amended it." He quoted South Carolina's James F. Byrnes, as his authority for that quotation.

JUDGE PARKER said "The South is grateful to the press of the North," who are presenting the "southern point of view" and "the truth about our area." He then singled out U.S. News and World Report, edited by David Lawrence.

The opinion and findings of fact were rendered in the case of Mrs. Lela Baylor. Cases of Mrs. Dorothy Young, Mrs. Vioal Cherry and Douglas Jackson were passed for one week since they were not in court. Chief City Attorney J. H. Willis consented to the passing. The opinion applies to all of the cases.

Negroes Ask U.S. Intervention In Birmingham Bombing Probe

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Wed 5-8-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 7—A group of Negroes today asked federal intervention in the investigation of racial bombings in the Birmingham area.

P. 1

A telegram to Atty. Gen. Brownell in the name of six Negro organizations in Birmingham was made public by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

"Past events and present necessities force us to seek the immediate aid of your department in looking into the conditions of lawlessness which exists in the Birmingham-Jefferson County area," the telegram declared.

It was emphasized that "there have been an estimated 21 racial unsolved bombings, burnings and explosive events in this area alone."

The telegram listed many bombings and the dates on which they happened, including last Dec. 25, when Shuttlesworth's church and home were damaged by a dynamite blast.

"Because of the danger and the likelihood of even further widespread bombings and violence, we urgently plead that you order and begin an immediate investigation in this area," the telegram seid.

Other organizations signing the telegram were Birmingham Baptist Ministers Conference; Central Baptist Ministers Conference; Bessemer Voters League; Community Civic and Commercial Assn., and Ensley Voters League.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — A Federal Judge Friday gave the Birmingham Transit Company 20 days to answer a complaint calling for the end to bus seating racial segregation.

Judge H. H. Grooms overruled a motion by the bus company asking that the complaint be dismissed.

Twenty-two Negroes who were arrested Dec. 26 for a mass violation of the Birmingham segregation laws, had asked that bus segregation be declared unconstitutional. The bus company moved for the courts to dismiss the complaint.

DR. KING SAYS HE MAY MEET WITH NIXON

World Birm. Ala. p.12

Wed. 4-3-57

By THADDEUS T. STOKES

ATLANTA, GEORGIA — (SNS)—

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. of Montgomery, Ala. revealed Wednesday afternoon he expects to have an audience with Vice-President Richard M. Nixon sometime in the near future. It is expected he will discuss racial conditions in the south with the vice president.

King made the statement during an interview while he was in Atlanta enroute to his home, from Ghana, Africa, where he attended the celebration of the recently obtained independence of that country.

Nixon invited King to "come see me" when they met at the celebration in Ghana.

Dr. King and his wife went to the celebration after receiving a personal invitation from Prime Minister Kwame Nkruman.

King explained how he "experienced the greatest moment of my life" when he witnessed the Union Jack (British Flag) being replaced by Ghana's flag. "To me that symbolized the end of an old way of life and the beginning of a new way."

The Union Jack represented colonialism and racial segregation The new flag represents freedom and justice without regards to race, color of national origin. "I shall never forget the expressions on the faces nor the cry of freedom of those people," continued King.

King, the internationally famous Negro leader of the Montgomery Ala., bus boycott went on to say he felt the United States is determined to win the friendship and mutual goodwill of Africa, particularly Ghana, before it is infiltrated with Communism. "The United States will not make the mistake it did in Asia."

However, King said Prime Minister Nkrumah told him that his country would never be able to accept the American ideology of freedom and democracy fully until America settles its own internal racial strife and "treat our colored brothers as other citizens."

King explained that "racial upheavals and segregation in America is hurting our international relations."

On comparing racial conditions in America with Africa, he declared that colonialism as expressed there is not basically different from racial segregation here. The theory of race superority is similar. In this sense our racial problem in America is akin to those in Africa and Asia.

Only the American Negro is more advanced in literacy, economics, culture and politics.

The dark people of Africa and Asia have been exploited with ungodly injustices. He said Nigeria perhaps the next country to receive its independence, is much more poverty strickened than Ghana. "It is depressing and apalling. Natives have been exploited to a tragic point."

On giving his impression of Ghana and its leaders, King said he felt that the new nation had great possibilities. "I was impressed with the competence and dedication of the prime minister and his official family. Without such dedication corruption could easily beset the progress of any new nation. However, I feel that Prime Minister Nkrumah will keep it at a minimum."

"We have a responsibility to see that Ghana survives as a free nation. If it fails then we must take some of the responsibility for its failure," he said.

King and his wife stopped in Rome, Geneva, Paris and London "to see the historical sights." In London, he talked with the prime minister and addressed a group. He and his wife were out of this country 25 days.

The minister said beside his trip to Washington, D. C. within a month, he will be engaged in keeping speaking dates throughout the country for the next several months.

Hasty Sainthood

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Relative to Dr. Claude H. Thompson's reference in a church school publication of the Methodist Church to a certain Negro [Dr. Martin Luther King] as "an exceptional saint" and his reasons therefor as given in a letter to The Advertiser, I have presumed to ask Dr. Thompson the following questions (in a letter to him):

Adv. 4-9-57

¶ Do you consider that such comments or expressions of opinion are calculated to promote the cause of Christ or to enhance the unity and prestige of the Methodist Church?

¶ Do you believe that if we would seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, these other things would take care of themselves?

¶ Isn't it a fact that the Roman Catholic Church waits for a period after a person's death before making him a saint, because such lapse of time is necessary (a) to evaluate the truth about him, and (b) to give the proper perspective to his whole life? Isn't it a fact that we do not know from a part of an uncompleted life, just what the remainder of that life will show? Might it not be necessary, in some instance, to "de-canonize" a person who had been made a "saint" on a portion of his life? Isn't it possible, too, that lapse of time after a person's death would show up some of his pr[illegible]ssions and actions in an entirely dif[illegible]rent light?

¶ Doesn't the Roman Catholic Church require that the person proposed for canonization (a) must be dead; (b) must have performed at least two miracles and c) that strict inquiry must establish his character and the authenticity of the miracles?

¶ What is a miracle? It was a miracle that Truman was elected in 1948. Isn't he entitled to beatification? It was a miracle that Wellington won at Waterloo. Shall we canonize him? It was a miracle that most of the white people of Montgomery restrained themselves during a whole year, and patiently bore the arrogant pretense of piety on the part of Negro preachers who are more concerned with rights than righteousness, with the limelight than the Christ light. Are these people "saints?"

¶ Do you not believe in the transforming power of the Gospel of Christ? Do not His teachings and His example show that His whole concern was with righteousness and not "rights"—with things eternal and not place or power?

¶ Isn't it true that the Methodist Church has no "saints"—that the Methodist Church is "a hospital for sinners" (such as you and me)?

Ask rehearing of King appeal

Post-Herald Birmingham Ala. p. 2 2-20-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Attorneys for the Montgomery Improvement Association this week asked the Alabama Court of Appeals to grant a rehearing of the appeal petition of the Rev. Martin Luther King.

The Rev. Mr. King was meted a 386-day jail sentence for his part in leading the bus boycott movement here which led to the U.S. Supreme Court outlawing segregation on local buses.

On April 30 the appeals court threw out the Rev. Mr. King's appeal on a technicality, saying that the minister had failed to file a transcript of testimony in his trial within the required time.

THE REQUEST for rehearing states that the Rev. Mr. King's constitutional rights have been denied by the conviction in the case and that in such cases involving constitutional guarantees, the court is not bound by its rules on time to file a transcript.

In the appeals court opinion writted by Judge Aubrey M. Cates Jr. dismissing the case, the merits of the case were not considered.

This was pointed out by the rehearing request, which asked for a test of the conviction on its merits.

King, Wilkins Deny Rumors Of Feuding And Fussing

Defender Chicago Ill. 7-3

By ALFRED DUCKETT

Sat. 6-15-57

NEW YORK — The closest to anger we have ever seen calm non-violent Martin Luther King was his reaction to a published report that he and NAACP chieftain Roy Wilkins are "feuding."

Driving into New York City with the miracle man of Montgomery, following an Urban League meeting in Englewood, N. J., we read him an item from a magazine column to that effect.

Rev. King's response was immediate and explosive.

"That's a blatant lie," he declared when he had cooled down to characteristic farenheight.

Dr. King wondered aloud whether he should dignify the report with a denial. He finally decided to say, for the record, that it is untrue that he is feuding with Wilkins and added that his relationships with Wilkins and the NAACP have been nothing but congenial.

The minister's original wrath over the item was based, he explains, on the realization that there are people who would like to see disunity among Negro leaders.

Such disunity whether real or imagined, he declared, would serve the deepest purposes of people like Senator Eastland.

Speaking of Eastland, and you will forgive this public profanity, Rev. King gave off with a lulu about the Mississippi bigot during his Englewood address.

THE NATURE OF LOVE

The minister spoke of the nature of the love which he talks about to his people in Montgomery and throughout the nation. When he calls on people to love all other people, Rev. King said he is not speaking of sentimental, romantic, affectionate or even platonic love.

He is speaking of the love which Christ had in mind when he admonished man to "Love thine enemy."

"I'm awfully glad that Christ didn't say 'like' thine enemy," Rev. King declared amid shouts of laughter from the audience.

He added, "as for me I find it awfully hard to like some people. For instance, I don't know how to like Mr. Eastland; I don't know how to like his attitudes, his words or deeds.

"But the kind of love I'm talking about, the kind of love that Christ talked about enables me to love Senator Eastland as a child of God and a brother of every other child of God.

"It enables me to love the man who does me wrong while hating and detesting the wrong he does."

It is highly probable that Rev. King is having to apply some of that type of love in Mr. Wilkins' direction these days. It is no secret to this writer nor to certain other press folk that Mr. Wilkins has been saying some surprisingly unkind things behind the Montgomery minister's back.

In the interest of that unity which Dr. King, and we are certain basically Mr. Wilkins also so earnestly wishes for, we will not repeat any of these ill advised statements.

We phoned Mr. Wilkins at his home to find out what he had to say publicly about all this. The NAACP executive must have been in a harried mood.

After we had identified ourself he asked us how we had obtained his number and why we had called him at home. We did not bother to point out that Mr. Wilkins' home number is listed in the phone book, nor that as a one-time newspaperman he ought to appreciate that when a reporter is seeking out a public figure for a statement, he seeks every possible place the public figure might be — home and office alike.

THE HIGHEST DEGREE

We simply stated that we'd like Mr. Wilkins' reactions to the feuding report.

After attempting to cut us off several times with insistence that he didn't care to comment, Mr. Wilkins allowed us to reveal to him that Dr. King had already denied the rumor.

Then he became quotable "You may say that my sentiment is the same," he declared. "My relations and those of the NAACP with Dr. King have been friendly and cooperative to the highest degree.

"There has been no kind of feud and no disagreement. We have worked in close harmony on many projects, including the Prayer Pilgrimage. Dr. King was entertained at a special luncheon at which he met the entire NAACP staff. The NAACP and its branches supported the Montgomery movement completely and Dr. King addressed our San Francisco convention."

We believe Dr. King when he says that he has done no feuding. We believe also as we stated above, that Mr. Wilkins would like to maintain unity of Negro leadership. It occurs to us that the solution is a simple one.

Mr. Wilkins should be a little more careful about the kind of loose behind-the-scenes talk which helps to propagate such rumors.

Slips of the lip don't only sink ships, they also destroy the great good which such organizations as the Montgomery Improvement Association and the NAACP are doing and injure such respected leaders as Martin King and Roy Wilkins.

King Tells NAACP Meeting Segregation In U.S. Must End

Advertiser Sun. 6-30-57 Montgomery, Ala.

DETROIT, June 29 (AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King told a mass meeting of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People last night that "close adherence" to the passive resistance method he used in Montgomery, Ala., "might even mean going to jail."

P. 7-B

"If this is the case," he said, "we must with dignity and love fill up the jails of the South."

Calling for an immediate end of segregation in the United States, the minister said, "In the midst of all the pleas for gradualism and slowing-up, we must courageously keep moving."

Accepting an achievement award from the NAACP convention, the Rev. Mr. King said, "You are really honoring the 50,000 Negro citizens of Montgomery, Ala., who more than a year ago came to see that it is ultimately more honorable to walk in dignity than ride in humiliation."

The NAACP gave the Baptist minister its Spingarn medal for leading Negroes in a boycott against segregated bus service in the Southern city.

In his prepared speech the Rev. Mr. King said, "The tensions which we witness in the Southland today are indicative of the fact that a new South is being born and the old South is passing away."

In presenting the medal for the NAACP, Bishop Richard S. Emrich of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Michigan, said in prepared speech, "Since justice is God's will, we may say that the stars in their courses and the consciences of men support what Mr. King stood for."

Making Bond To Go To Jail —Or When Martyrs Meet

Advertiser P. 4-A Wed. 7-3-57 Montgomery, Ala.

Beau Tie Faulkner, prominent candidate for governor, has said that if elected, he would "go to jail" if necessary to preserve segregation.

Doctor King, who has been active in his passive resistance by employing a squad of NAACP lawyers to keep him out of jail, now says it may be necessary for some of his group to "go to jail" to destroy segregation.

Never since Gandhi has jail been so popular. The attitude towards jail is getting to be one of Pike's-Peak-Or-Bust.

The imagination cannot elude the vision of a Governor Faulkner and a Doctor King in jail at the same time—indeed, in the same hoosegow.

When Martyrs Meet—II.

Advertiser P. 4-A Thu. 7-5-57

A further vision of Governor Faulkner and Doctor King going to jail about segregation:

Doctor King would find himself patronizing a segregated jail.

But he would take jail segregation to court and the court would rule against it, 9 to 0.

Montgomery, Ala.

That would leave Governor Faulkner in jail, chided by those inside for tearing the barriers down and chided by those outside for presenting a personal example of race mixing contrary to "our Southern way of life."

If not kangaroo courted inside, he might be impeached on the outside. Certainly the lieutenant governor would not be in a hurry to go bail for him.

Nor could Doctor King be assured that his lieutenant governor, the Rev. Abernathy, and certain other of his colleagues would be in any greater hurry to go bail for him.

This dungeon business is a deep 'un.

Man Getting Too Smart For His Own Good—Rev. King

Defender Sat. 8-10-57 Chicago, Ill.

p. 3

BROOKLYN, N. Y. — Dr. Martin Luther King, Montgomery, Ala. civil rights crusader, warned that man may be getting too smart for his own good.

"We can boast of having made a neighborhood of the world, but we cannot claim the establishment of brotherhood among its people," he said in a sermon at Cornerstone Baptist church, last Sunday.

More than 2,500 persons heard his torrid against what he described as man's subjugation of moral laws to physical laws in his dealings with his brother.

"Today too many have adopted the conception that right and wrong are merely relative to our likes or dislikes. We decide how to act by a sort of 'Gallop poll' with a kind of an everybody's doing it attitude, or a just a matter of custom excuse," the youthful leader stated.

Others, the 1957 Spingarn medalist said, have assumed a sort of 'get by test' for right and wrong; survival of the slickest. They have set up an 11th commandment — "Thou shalt not get caught."

Dr. King warned that the world and America must rediscover the principals of the worth and sacredness of human personality.

"God does not want us to treat our brothers as a means to an end," he cautioned. "History has shown that nations, which have done so, have failed and faded into oblivion."

In his opinion, he said he felt that with all the faults that exist, if we continue to work and pray, we will see a new South arise in which all will live together in peace and dignity.

Dr. Sandy F. Ray, host pastor and president of the New York Baptists, praised the courageous leadership of Dr. King in the campaign for complete Democracy in America.

Southwide vote drive launched by Rev. King

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "Whether the civil rights bill is passed or not, we are going to launch a 'Crusade for Citizenship' throughout the South aimed at registering thousands of colored Americans to vote.

'When we launch this Crusade, in this city, there will be simultaneous mass meetings throughout every city in the South.

"I feel this Crusade to be one of the most decisive steps that colored people can take at this time, for it will give them the power of making the transition from a segregated society to an integrated society immasurably easier."

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and leader of this city's successful bus boycott, was telling the AFRO of a plan set for November to join all colored people in the South in the common purpose of gaining their right to vote.

THE NOTED minister said that the people in his city have "reacted with hearty enthusiasm" to the coming "Crusade for Citizenship."

"They gave the impression that they are ready," stated Dr. King, as he revealed "every major city" of the South will stage mass meetings and rallies when the crusade is launched.

"We don't anticipate any trouble in the larger cities," he asserted, adding, "when the crusade gets underway, trained persons will march in processions to registration offices throughout the South in a spirit of non-violence and insist upon being registered."

Sat. 8-17-57

DR. KING declared that colored people will remain in registration offices even if arrest results.

The young minister's statements came following a meeting of colored leaders from all over the South, who vote overwhelmingly in favor of the freedom demonstration.

The Southern Christian Leadership conference, a newly named group, blasted recent raids on the Tuskegee Civic Association headquarters here and denounced John Patterson, Alabama's attorney general for leading the raids.

The invasions of the association's headquarters came after colored residents here began a boycott of white merchants when an Alabama Legislative act disfranchised them from their voting rights.

The conference termed the raids "vicious" and "atrocious" as it unanimously approved of the "Citizenship Crusade" outlined by Dr. King.

"WE ALREADY have a budget of $200,000 for the first year of this crusade," the Rev. King stated. "And more organizations are rallying to our support daily."

"We have gained pledges from trade unions, civic, religious, fraternal and social groups everywhere. This crusade will be launched in cooperation with all other agencies engaged in pressing for the right of colored people to vote. It will implement and supplement other organizations" he stated, rather than compete with them."

Dr. King's voice was firm and direct as he pointed out that throughout an educational drive to get "many thousands" of colored persons to register in the South, preparations for utilization of legal facilities at registration centers in 10 major areas prior to the 1958 elections were being set up.

He said in each city in the South, colored persons will be trained and qualified to vote. He added, "The sentiment of the nation is with the right to vote."

IN ANNOUNCING the "Crusade for Citizenship," Dr. King listed four aims. They are:

1. "Arousing huge masses of colored people to the realization that their chances for betterment lie in their right to vote.

2. The establishment of voting clinics throughout the South to train colored persons on techniques of registration and voting."

3. Amassing evidence that can be used in court actions when rights are violated."

4. Publicizing the situation as it exists through the press and giving air to what is being done."

Dr. King explained that when the crusade is launched in November, there will be a central voting clinic in Atlanta and branch clinics in all major southern cities to educate the people on procedures and techniques.

He said each clinic will be staffed with the necessary secretarial help and will be responsible for organizing city and county - wide committees throughout their locales. He stated that each clinic will also be responsible for setting quotas of voters and time schedules.

HE POINTED out that each individual clinic will receive printed matter and literature from the central office as well as periodic visits from staff members in that office.

"Local offices," he admonished," "will report all unlawful practices to the central office so that executives will be in position to take up the matters with governmental organizations in Washington."

Dr. King indicated that the crusade would be launched even if the civil rights bill now awaiting congressional action, in Washington is not passed.

He said public relations offices and counsels to arouse the public interest, were being set up as part of the crusade. He explained that no persons yet have been named to operate the various clinics scheduled to be erected in cities over the south.

"LOCAL organizations," Dr. King declared, "will be based on churches of all denominations."

The 8-year-old cleric warned that the voter crusade would "by no means" hamper or frustrate efforts of colored leaders for desegregation in public schools.

At the same time, he asserted his position on the flagrant and deliberate raid on the Tuskegee Civic Association headquarters by calling for "more adequate federal protection for citizens in the pursuit of their most fundamental rights."

He offered his "whole-hearted" support to the colored people of Tuskegee for their "valiant stand," and expressed grave disappointment over the Senate rendition of the civil rights bill.

In pointing out the voter crusade was planned and would be perpetrated in the spirit of love and non-violence, Dr. King urged "The understanding and co-operation of white Southerners."

THE SOUTHERN Christian Leadership Conference earlier had adopted three resolutions, one condemning the Tuskegee raids, another expresssing and reaffirming the confidence of the group in Dr. King's leadership, and a third denouncing the U.S. Senate for attaching the jury trial amendment to the civil rights bill.

Another resolution expressed hope that the House version of the civil rights bill would "ultimately prevail."

Officers of the newly named group are; the Rev. Martin L. King, president; the Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee, Fla., first vice president; the Rev. A. L. Davis, New Orleans, second vice president; the Rev. Samuel W. Williams, Atlanta, Ga., third vice president; the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge, La., secretary; the Rev. Medgar Evans, Jackson, Miss., treasurer; Dr. Lawrence Reddick, Montgomery, historian; Kelly Miller Smith, Nashville, chaplain and Louis Berry, New Orleans parliamentarian.

All officers are either ministers or prominent lay members of churches.

MORE THAN 100 colored leaders from 14 states attended the conference.

Dr. King expressed confidence that the voter crusade program would manifest itself deep in the hearts of colored people throughout the South.

He said when the drive gets underway for "many thousands" of colored persons to register in November, mass meetings will resound over the entire Southland.

The militant clergyman indicated that nothing could stop the determination of colored peoples who have decided at last, bound in unity, that they want to secure the ballot.

Court Rejects King's Appeal

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., lost again yesterday in an appeal from his conviction of violating Alabama's anti-boycott law during the year-long Montgomery Negro bus boycott.

The Alabama Court of Appeals refused a rehearing in the case which was thrown out of court last April 30 because the transcript of evidence was not filed within the time prescribed by law.

Under the law the side appealing a case has 60 days in which to get the record filed. If the court reporter is unable to finish the transcript, attorneys can request an extension of time.

In King's appeal no extension was requested and the record was filed after the 60-day limit expired.

The Montgomery Negro minister, a leader of the bus coycotters, was one of 90 Negroes indicted by a Montgomery Grand Jury early last year on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law.

King was the only defendant actually tried. The other cases were postponed pending the outcome of this appeal.

Upon his conviction King was fined $500 and costs.

GOP Southern Strength To Increase

The Lee County Bulletin

The Montgomery Advertiser is fretting over the combination of circumstances which bid fair to set back the burgeoning two-party system in our state. Symbolic of these circumstances is the coming visit of Vice President Nixon to the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King in Montgomery.

That of course, will not raise the value of GOP stock with the majority of white voters in the Deep South. It leads the Montgomery paper to remark, "The GOP cannot be a national party with a fourth of the nation beyond its power to win."

The Advertiser assumes in that statement that the Republican courting of Negro votes will wash up the party down this way. Perhaps that will be the result in states such as Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina and two or three others. But even that is not a dead certainty. The Democratic Party for 20 years stood four square for a program designed to benefit the Negro and broaden the exercise of his economic and political rights. But during that time the majority in the region stayed Democratic.

Of course, the Supreme Court school decision has raised the emotional temperature of our region. But, we repeat, there remain a large number of white voters who do not make the race question the sole one which determines their political attitudes. Many of these always have been Republicans at heart. But until Eisenhower they somehow never were able to break with tradition and community pressure by voting anything but the Democratic ticket. They've declared their independence and our guess is that not very many of them will return to the "party of their fathers."

To be added to this bloc of GOP votes will be the ever-increasing number of Negro voters who will be enfranchised by the civil rights bill. (Whether the present bill becomes la win this session of Congress is not an important consideration here. It, or one even stronger, will become law eventually—now or next year, or the next, we may be sure.) If it is the Republican Party which gives the Negro the vote, it will be that party which gains the benefit of that vote.

So, we cannot agree with The Advertiser's assessment of the situation. Quite the contrary, we see an increase of GOP strength down here in the years ahead.

And, if The Advertiser can overcome its embarrassment at the Republicans putting over a civil rights bill and of Mr. Nixon's views, it can be the spokesman for a far stronger GOP than presently is the case.

Appeals Court Refuses Rehearing In King Case

Post-Herald Wed. 8-14-57
Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., lost again today in an appeal from his conviction of violating Alabama's anti-boycott law during the year-long Montgomery Negro bus boycott.

The Alabama Court of Appeals refused a rehearing in the case which was thrown out of court last April 30 because the transcript of evidence was not filed within the time prescribed by law.

Under the law the side appealing a case has 60 days in which to get the record filed. If the court reporter is unable to finish the transcript, the attorneys can request an extension of time.

In King's appeal no extension was requested and the record was filed after the 60-day limit expired.

The Montgomery Negro minister, a leader of the bus boycotters, was one of 90 Negroes indicted by a Montgomery grand jury early last year on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law.

King was the only defendant actually tried. The other cases were postponed pending the outcome of this appeal.

Upon his conviction King was fined $500 and costs.

Since the t rial, Montgomery's bus segregation law has been knocked out as unconstitutional under a ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court.

In today's ruling the Court of Appeals extended its previous opinion briefly to answer legal questions raised by attorneys for King. The court said since the transcript was flied late in the Circuit Court, there was no need to consider whether the appellant could have had more time for filing in the Court of Appeals.

The extended opinion by Judge Aubrey Cates added that the State Supreme Court previously had ruled that in such cases the deadline bor both the lower and appellate courts was the same.

South's Negro leaders meet tomorrow

Tribune P. 3
Wed. 8-7-57
Los Angeles, Calif.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The third meeting of the Southern Leadership Conference, the organization formed in Atlanta last January which led the Prayer Pilgrimage to Washington, will be held here tomorrow night at Holt Street Baptist church.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president, said more than 100 Negro leaders from 9 southern states are expected to attend.

Main item on the agenda, according to the Montgomery boycott leader, is "ways and means through which we may increase the number of Negro voters."

In addition to the Rev. King, conference officers are: the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the Tallahassee bus boycott, first vice president; the Rev. A. L. Davis, New Orleans, second vice president; the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge; the Rev. S. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham integration leader whose home was bombed; the Rev. R. D. Abernathy, of the Montgomery bus boycott; and Medgar Evers, of Jackson, Miss., former Naacp leader there.

Rev. King Blames Ike's Weakness On Weak Bill

Dispatch P. 6
Des Moines Iowa
Thurs. 8-1-57

Washington, D. C.—(CNS)—The weakness ofthe Civil Rights Bill is being blamed on Pres. Eisenhower's weak stand, according to Rev. Martin Luther King.

"If Eisenhower had taken a stronger stand on the bill, no matter how sincere his doubts, the bill would have had a good chance to pass without change. If we don't get a strong positive stand from him on the jury trial amendment, this fight will be lost too," said King in determined words.

King stated "there is a possibibility that the Tuskegee boycott could spread but I don't think so," he added. "Conditions and circumstances must be right for a boycott to succeed."

White House Meeting

Nixon, King Get Together June 13

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By LEVI JOLLEY

WASHINGTON—Racial segregation in the United States will undoubtedly be the major topic of conversation when the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala., meets with U. S. Vice President Richard M. Nixon in Washington on June 13.

The meeting will bring to fruition an invitation extended to the Rev. Mr. King by Mr. Nixon when both were in attendance at the independence celebration of Ghana in West Africa.

The men met formally during a reception held for American visitors in Monrovia, the capital of Liberia. At that time, Mr. Nixon told the Rev. Mr. King that he was deeply interested in the problems of the colored peoples of the world and would be happy to discuss those problems, including that of racial segregation in the United States with the Montgomery pastor.

THE MEETING was assured here after the Rev. Mr. King announced that he had accepted the Vice Presidential invitation.

The Rev. Mr. King, one of the co-sponsors of the giant Prayer Pilgrimage for Freedom, was also cited in Philadelphia by the National Conference of Social Welfare Workers for his activities in the handling of the year-long Montgomery boycott which resulted in the desegregation of seating.

Saturday, the Rev. Mr. King was cited by the Capital Press Club and Vice President Nixon was one of the honored guests for the occasion. Both the Rev. Mr. King and Mr. Nixon received plaques and Mrs. Frances Bolton, Ohio Congresswoman, delivered the main address.

Negro Leader Says Nixon To Visit South

News & Courier Fri. 6-14-57

Charleston, S.C.

King Also Plans Conference On Voting Clinics

By Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 13 — With the implied endorsement of the Eisenhower Administration, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Montgomery, Ala., Negro leader, announced tonight that Vice President Richard M. Nixon soon will visit the South to look into fair employment practices.

King, leader of the Montgomery bus strikes, made the announcement at a press conference attended by a member of the Eisenhower cabinet, Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, after a two-hour conference with Nixon.

CONTRACTS GROUP

Nixon is chairman and Mitchell is vice chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, a watered-down fair employment practices commission (FEPC) with jurisdiction over government contractors.

King said Nixon had agreed to bring the committee South, to a meeting in some Southern city, probably Atlanta or New Orleans, and added that the Vice President also had agreed to speak on the civil rights issue.

King met with Nixon this afternoon to lay before him a plea for a stronger administration leadership in the cause of civil rights. He told reporters he had outlined to Nixon recent bombings, police brutality and other injuries to Negroes, as well as "all types of conniving methods still being used in the South to keep Negroes from voting."

Secretary Mitchell, who attended the Nixon - King meeting also, said King was assured by Nixon that "he, the President and the Republican leadership are firmly in favor" of pending civil rights legislation.

He said Nixon told him that the civil rights problem is hurting the United States in international relations and that "We cannot continue to talk equality abroad and not practice it at home."

VOTING REGISTRATION

King said that on that basis he had asked Nixon to come into the South to "explain" the moral terms of civil rights, to urge all Southerners to uphold The Constitution by supporting the right of Negroes to vote, and to call together all Republican legislators to rally their support behind civil rights.

The Negro leader said he intends to make plans at a forthcoming conference of Southern Negro leaders to have mass attendance at voting registration offices in 10 Southern cities. But he would not identify the cities.

"Across the South we now intend to extend the voting clinics to help Negroes overcome the contrived and artificial obstacles to their registering and voting," King said.

Nixon had no comment on his meeting with King. But he posed for pictures, shaking hands with the Negro.

Role Of Rev. King In Southern Visit By Mr. Nixon Clue To GOP Politics

News & Courier Sat. 6-15-57 P.8-A

Charleston, S.C.

The Republican Party has been making overtures lately for support in the South. The News and Courier, believing that a two-party system helps to raise the level of politics through competition, has looked with favor on developing a clean and honest GOP in the South to compete with the Democrats.

In the light of developments, the value of the GOP overtures may have to be reassessed.

Pressure from the White House to ram a "civil rights" force bill through Congress has indicated that on this front, at least, the Republican high command is not seeking Southern white support at the expense of herded Negro voters in the great Northern cities.

Vice President Nixon, one of the leading candidates for the GOP nomination for president in 1960, now takes a spotlight focused on him by a Southern Negro leader. The Rev. Martin Luther King, who managed and promoted the Negro bus boycott at Montgomery, Ala., has announced that Mr. Nixon is coming South to look into "fair employment practices."

If Mr. Nixon authorized the Rev. King to be his spokesman at a press conference in Washington, he must have realized the effect on public opinion in the South. Under the auspices of the Rev. King, any field trip to survey "fair practices" starts off with a presumption of bias.

Mr. Nixon would act not only as vice president of the United States but as chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts. Heretofore this committee has not sought wide publicity or unreasonably oppressed Southern employers. It has sought, we believe, to work by persuasion rather than to shake a big stick.

Whether the Rev. King and his supporters now have succeeded in setting up a new course for Mr. Nixon's committee remains to be seen. Mr. Nixon gained his reputation as a conservative. Now he is said to be swinging toward a more "liberal" position. Stewart Alsop, one of the syndicated columnists who seem to prefer "liberals", discussed in a recent article changes he sees in Mr. Nixon.

"Nixon is anything but a radical today," says Mr. Alsop. "But experience has taught him that the strictly orthodox form of Republicanism is, at least in a national sense, bad politics . . . All in all, it would be surprising if there were a sharp turn to the right in domestic affairs in a Nixon presidency. Indeed, any shift in domestic policy might well be in the opposite direction."

Mr. Nixon's alliance with the Rev. King may mean nothing. Or it may mean a direct appeal for support of Negro voters, who have become a balance of power in presidential elections. Probably no one could be elected president by a straightforward appeal that would suit white Southerners. As usual, the white conservative voter may have to choose the lesser — or the least — of the evils that may be offered him.

Vice President Nixon And Rev. Martin Luther King

Nixon, Negro Leader Discuss Racial Problems in South

Evening Star Thurs. 4-13-57 Washington, D.C.

Amid indications he may play a leading role in Senate maneuvering over civil rights, Vice President Nixon discusses racial problems today with a Montgomery (Ala.) Negro pastor.

Mr. Nixon, as the Senate's presiding officer, would be in a strategic position to help or hinder a reported effort to bypass the Senate Judiciary Committee with a civil rights bill the House may pass tomorrow. The Senate's own bill is tied up in that committee.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, a leader in Montgomery Negroes' long boycott of buses in that city, reports to Mr. Nixon on conditions in the South as he sees them.

Mr. King's conference with Mr. Nixon grew out of conversations they held in Ghana on the Vice President's African trip last March. Mr. King had invited Mr. Nixon to visit the South to study what the Negro pastor called "the extent of violence" there so that Mr. Nixon might report to Mr. Eisenhower.

Southern Senators planned a caucus, meanwhile, on what they can do in case a Nixon ruling is called for on routing the House civil rights bill.

They accepted Mr. Nixon's meeting with Mr. King as further evidence that he would side against them if the parliamentary situation arises.

Senator nowland of California, the G O P leader, said that when the House bill reaches the Senate, supporters of Presiden Eisenhower's civil rights program are considering raising a technical point that it should go directly to the calendar.

This would have the effect of by-passing that Judiciary Committee.

If a point of order is raised, Mr. Nixon either could rule on it or could submit the question to the Senate. If he ruled the House bill should go before the Senate without committee conideration, this decision undoubtedly would be appealed to the Senate itself.

Rev. King To Talk With Ike

Plan Parley On Dixie Situation

Defender 7/1

By ETHEL PAYNE

Chicago Ill.

WASHINGTON — Vice President Nixon and Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., conferred here last week and agreed:

Sat. 6-22-57

1. The Administration will concentrate all its efforts on getting the civil rights bill passed without the trial by jury amendment.

2. The President's committee on government contracts will come South for a meeting either in New Orleans or Atlanta when Nixon, as chairman, will make a major speech on discrimination.

3. King and other Negro leaders will meet soon with President Eisenhower to discuss the whole matter of the tense situation in the South.

NO SUBSTITUTES

Rev. King made it plain that Thursday's meeting with the Vice President was no substitute for the long requested conference with the President, "but was a step in that direction."

The two leaders met in the vice-president's office in the Capitol for two hours and 45 minutes, although the time was originally set for one hour. King said they went over the entire problem in detail.

Sitting in with the Vice President Nixon was Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, who is vice chairman of the Contract Committee. Accompanying Reverend King was Rev. Abernathy, vice-president of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

IVES VISITS

Sen. Irving Ives (R) N. Y., made a brief visit to the office. Both he and the vice president commended the Prayer Pilgrimage rally as an "orderly, well-conducted meeting" and said they felt it had made a tremendous impression.

At a press conference following the meeting, King said he had asked the vice president to "come South on a number of occasions to speak to the people of the South and speak to them on the great crisis of civil rights thus giving strength to the southern liberals who fear to speak out;" to urge all southerners, Negro and white, to uphold the U. S. Constitution by supporting the Negro's right to vote, and to call together all Republican members of Congress to impress upon them the importance of passing the civil rights bill now.

King asked that when the vice president comes South, he be accompanied by Sen. Thomas Hennings (D) Mo., chairman of the Senate sub-committee on constitutional rights.

EISENHOWER

WELCOMES DEMS

The Montgomery leader was asked if he had any plans to seek out the support of leading Democrats as he had Republicans through the administration and he replied that he would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Democrats.

King revealed that plans are being readied by the Southern leaders conference to launch a campaign for the participation of three million Negroes in the South in the 1958 election.

He said they hope to set up voting clinics in 10 southern cities to help Negroes overcome obstacles to voting and registering and that mass attenda[illegible] be the aim at registratio[illegible].

He said he did n[illegible] resee violence as a result of this mass activity as the campaign would be conducted in orderly non-violent peaceful fashion.

Martin Luther King Raps Charges of Bombers

Atlanta Ga Journal 12-22-57

THE CLAIM THAT the Alabama leader bombed the homes and churches of his people was made by white suspects as they were facing trial for disastrous bombings.

Whether the jury believed them or not, the suspected criminals were acquitted. This acquittal brought a spirited resentment from Congressman Adam Clayton Powell.

Although confined to the hospital with a heart condition, Powell stated: "The acquittal by a jury of the bombers of houses of God and residences of men of God must clearly show to civilized men that the South has lost its soul and conscience and is not entitled to any respect."

Rev. Mr. King declined to comment on this theory as he had not seen a copy of the Vice President's speech at the time he was interviewed by this columnist.

The Montgomery minister referred to charges made by white Southerners that he was responsible for the bombing of Negroes' homes and churches as absurd. Such statements are too ridiculous to answer, he said.

Everybody knew how he stood on non-violence. And he didn't feel that anybody could possibly believe that he would resort to henceforth violence just to get sympathy and financial assistance from the North.

REV. M. L. KING, VICE PRESIDENT NIXON
A warm handclasp, some demands, but no promises

Was King Ready?

Afro-American
By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott, is an estimable young man and excellent pulpit orator, but he is not yet ready for the political ring.

Baltimore Md.

This estimate of the Rev. Mr. King is based on a year's observation, during which this reporter heard him speak at the Elks convention in Los Angeles, the National Baptist Convention in Denver, and at the Prayer Pilgrimage at the Lincoln Memorial here, and attended two press conferences he held.

Sat. 6-22-57

At his press conference here, after he and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, another leader in the bus boycott, talked with Vice President Nixon for more than two hours, he showed that he has more home work to do if he is to become a political as well as a spiritual leader.

HIS ANSWERS to political questions, even those relating to Alabama, were in generalities. He gave no particulars about the low registration of colored voters in Alabama, why more colored persons were not able to register, or what efforts had been made by colored Alabamans themselves to register.

On top of that, the public relations of the Rev. Mr. King were badly managed. News reporters hung around the entrance to the formal office of Vice President Nixon just off the Senate chamber in the Capitol for more than two hours waiting to see Mr. King.

After the conference with the Vice President ended, Mr. King was ushered out a side door and down stairs. Reporters with deadlines to make rushed after him. When they got outside, Bayard Rustin, who is his public relations director, was helping him to get into a waiting automobile and telling reporters that Mr. King had nothing to say until his six o'clock press conference at the Raleigh Hotel.

Afro-American

MR. KING was a half hour late in entering the room at the Raleigh where the press conference was held.

P. 2

Before he came in, Mr. Rustin distributed a statement, attributed to Mr. King, in which it was stated that the bus boycott leader had appealed to Mr. Nixon to do three things:

1. To come South and speak in "moral terms" to give strength to southern liberals who are afraid to speak or act with understanding and equality.

Sat. 6-22-57

2. To urge Southerners to support the right of colored people to vote.

3. To call together Republican members of Congress and impress them with the importance of supporting civil rights legislation.

ACTUALLY, WHAT Mr. King got from Vice President Nixon was a commitment to hold a regional meeting of the President's Government Contracts Committee in Atlanta or some other southern city.

Atlanta

The Government Contracts Committee is concerned with the policing of the clause in standard Government contracts forbidding the contractor or subcontractor to discriminate in employment under such contracts.

Mr. Nixon is chairman of the committee. Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who also was present at the talk between Mr. King and Mr. Nixon, is vice chairman of the committee.

MR. MITCHELL told reporters that the Rev. Mr. King and the Rev. Mr. Abernathy gave the Vice President a number of ideas and opinions as to the importance of the civil rights bill.

"The Vice President assured them," Mr. Mitchell said, "that the President, he (Mr. Nixon) and the Republican leadership were firmly in favor of the civil rights bill."

Mr. Mitchell said the conferees also discussed the equal jobs opportunities program and the President's Government Contracts Committee and its work.

The two Alabamans pointed out to the Vice President, Mr. Mitchell said, the small number of colored persons in the South who had any voting rights and the difficulty colored people are experiencing in obtaining those rights in most, if not all, of the Southern states.

MR. MITCHELL said the Rev. Mr. King and the Rev. Mr. Abernathy suggested that the contracts committee some South to hold a regional meeting.

The Vice President assured them, the Labor Secretary said that one of the southern cities would be a point which the committee would visit in the near future.

The Rev. Mr. King suggested Atlanta, Mr. Mitchell said, adding that the committee is meeting Wednesday and it will probably be decided then as to the southern city in which to hold a meeting.

The Rev. Mr. King told reporters that he accepted the invitation to convey to the executive branch of the Government, through Vice President Nixon, the conditions which exist in the South for 11,000,000 colored people, including the bombing of colored homes and churches to such an extent that it is "a scandal, morally and legally."

HE ALSO SAID colored people were being intimidated, segregation was being continued, and colored people were being deprived of the right to vote.

At the same time, he said, he emphasized the determination and single - mindedness of colored people "to end these indignities firmly though non - violently." He said he tried to give the Vice President "a glimpse into the hearts and spirit" of colored people who are united in their effort to obtain their rights.

He said he made it clear that he does not believe either the Republican or Democratic party has done enough with the moral and spiritual tools available to them to achieve civil rights.

ASKED WHAT was the Vice President's reaction, the Rev. Mr. King replied that the problem is "very important" and that it is "important and significant" for him to go South

Councils and the Ku Klux Klan

The Rev. Mr. King also said white people of good will in the South and that the real problem is that these people are afraid to speak out and take a positive stand."

He added that he made it clear in the discussion that "there are many clear that the White Citizens

Nixon agreed that "might be a very favorable idea and it is quite possible that we might meet with the President."

represent a minority view. He said he would welcome a conference with any outstanding Democrat of the House or Senate.

The Rev. Mr. King also said at a later day, and Mr. Eisenhower thought President Eisenhower "could do much more than he has done."

HE SAID he and Mr. Nixon also discussed the possibility of a meeting with the President

Ala. gets kinescope of sabotaged King telecast

Afro American p. 20

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Thwarted in an earlier attempt to present an interview with the Rev. Martin Luther King, Station WSFA-TV produced a kinescopic telecast for local showing here on Sunday.

A 47-minute radio and TV interview of the noted boycott leader was blacked out the previous Sunday when unidentified saboteurs reportedly tossed a chain across a power line leading into the local station. The act caused a short circuit, according to B. B. Marsh, manager of WSFA-TV.

The kinescope was obtained for Sunday's re-broadcast. The station, however, also provided 30 minutes to local citizens' councils representatives for the purpose of answering the Rev. Mr. King's statements.

Sat. 11-9-57

THE TELEVISING of the NBC network program, "Look Here," was not affected outside of the Montgomery area.

ALTHOUGH communication between the races in Montgomery have broken down "temporarily" following the year-long bus boycott, the Rev. Mr. King said this was a "natural development" in a "time of social change."

"Before the turn of the century," he predicted, "segregation on the basis of race will be non-existent."

Asked by his interviewer to reconcile his expressed approval of President Eisenhower's use of troops in Little Rock with his advocacy of non-violence, the Rev. King concluded:

"I believe in the intelligent use of police force. That's all we have in Little Rock."

Interviewed at his Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, the Rev. Mr. King voiced the belief that southern whites have a "guilt complex," stemming from their treatment of the South's colored residents.

"Racial violence by some whites," the Montgomery Improvement Association president declared, "marks efforts to drown out" feelings of guilt.

Whites Feel Guilty, Says Rev. King

Constitution, p. 7
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 10-28-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 27 (AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King said today he believes Southern whites have a guilt complex stemming from the treatment of Southern Negroes.

"I think we would have to say there is something of a guilt complex," the Negro minister said in an NBC TV interview—"Look Here!"—from his Dexter Avenue Baptist church.

The program was not heard in the Montgomery area because of a power failure to WFSA-TV that was termed "an act of sabotage" by an official of the Alabama Power Co.

King said psychologists report the reaction of persons with guilt feelings is to repent or to "indulge in more of the very thing that causes this sense of guilt." Racial violence by some Southern whites, he said, marks efforts to "drown out" guilt feelings.

Sellers Declares He Won't Cooperate In King Movie

Montgomery Ala. Sun. 10-27-57

Commissioner Clyde Sellers Friday wrote movie-producer Jeffrey Hayden that he refuses to cooperate in the filming of a movie depicting the life of Martin Luther King.

Sellers had been approached by Hayden last month, when the producer was in Montgomery doing groundwork planning for the proposed movie about the bus boycott.

"I will do everything within my power to prevent the filming of such a picture in our city or elsewhere," Sellers wrote Hayden yesterday.

The commissioner also wrote: "I now expressly forbid you or anyone else the use of my name or position or any fictional name or character that would depict me in any manner whatsoever in the making of a picture of this kind."

The letter, addressed to Hayden at his United Artists studio headquarters in Los Angeles, stated that Hayden misrepresented the intent of the proposed movie while he was in Montgomery.

"It was my understanding that this picture was to depict the great wrong that had been done to the city . . . and to give credit where credit was actually due for the lack of violence and bloodshed in our overly-publicized and overly-critized city," Sellers said.

The letter then referred to reports that Harry Belafonte was to portray King. "I must assume that this picture is being made . . . to further glorify and praise Martin Luther King," Sellers wrote.

"I am complete and sincere segregationist," the commissioner said, adding that he would not cooperate "in even the smallest way . . . in making such a picture."

Dr. King interview to be telecast in spite of saboteur

Afro American p. 3

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The unknown saboteur who threw a chain across a power line Sunday and prevented this city from seeing a televised interview of the Rev Dr. Martin L. King Jr., has not heard the end of Dr. King yet.

A local station, WSFA-TV, has announced that sometime in the near future it will re-telecast the program that was viewed by a nationwide audience, but blacked out here. Sat. 11-9-57

However, the station also declared it would allow one of Alabama's leading white supremacy advocates to reply to the telecast.

Rev. King's TV Interview To Be Telecast

Times 10-29-57

By ART OSGOODE

A television interview of the Rev. Martin Luther King by Martin Agronsky, top NBC newsman, knocked off the air by an unknown saboteur Sunday afternoon, will be telecast by local station WSFA-TV sometime in the near future.

Immediately after the broadcast, one of Alabama's leading spokesmen for white supremacy will be given a chance to reply to the views expressed by King, the station announced yesterday.

The following statement was issued by the station yesterday:

"Station Manager Gene Dodson says he has been notified by NBC that a film recording of the interview is being sent to Montgomery. This recording will be scheduled on this station at a date and time to be determined shortly.

'State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, head of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils, has been invited to appear on a half-hour program which will immediately follow the Agronsky-King interview. He will be given the opportunity to present the other side of the issue discussed by King."

Reached by telephone here last night, Engelhardt said he "wants to see the (King-Agronsky) program first," before deciding on whether to appear in a program presenting the case for segregation.

"Besides," he said, "I'll have to talk with the executive committee of the Citizens Councils of Alabama."

A meeting of the committee will be called, he said, to decide on whether to offer the program in rebuttal of King. "We'll have to see it before we know whether he said anything worth dignifying by reply."

He said he had informed Dodson that he wanted to see the King interview before making the decision.

Dodson said yesterday the time for the program will be announced after program commitments have reviewed and a time found available for it.

Though Montgomerians were unable to see it, the program was telecast over NBC stations across the nation, and a kinescope recording made by the network.

Only four calls were received yesterday regarding the program interruption, said Dodson, in contrast to the flood of calls that poured in when the station went off the air Sunday.

Meanwhile, law enforcement agencies reported no developments yesterday in finding out the identity of the person who flung a length of chain across power lines leading to the local TV station's transmitter just before the King interview was to go the air.

Sheriff Bill Kennedy of Crenshaw County, in which the sabotage was committed, said last night that so far he had turned up "absolutely nothing."

p. 2-A

VISITS AREA

He visited the area Sunday night, he added, and talked to Alabama Power Co. personnel, but had so far been unable to devote little time to the investigation because of current court sessions in Luverne.

Times 10-29-57

There is a possibility the FBI may enter the case.

The FBI office here said yesterday that facts concerning the case had been forwarded to the Department of Justice, which will determine whether an investigation will be made.

The State Department of Public Safety, which was also notified of the sabotage incident, is not investigating, a spokesman said last night. Neither are Montgomery County officers, since the sabotage was not in the county.

GOES OF AIR

The half-hour program, "Look Here," began at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, of which King is pastor. Only six minutes before it began, local station WSFA-TV mysteriously went off the air.

Investigation by the Alabama Power Co. located the length of chain wound about lines leading to the station's transmitter in the Fleta area. They reported that someone had apparently driven down a dirt road paralleling the 12,500 volt cable, and tossed the chain across it from a ridge overlooking the lines.

In the program which was cut off from an estimated 150,000 television sets in this area, King voiced his belief that segregation will disappear by the end of this century.

He also said he believed some Southern whites are made more violent in their attitude towards Negroes by a "guilt complex," and acknowledged that the bus boycott which he led had caused a "temporary" breakdown in communication between the races here.

King Interview Re-Televised; Dr. Lyons, Sellers Make Reply

By ART OSGOODE

Station WSFA-TV got its once-sabotaged interview of the Rev. Martin Luther King on the air yesterday, followed it up with a half-hour rebuttal by a pastor and a city official—and then the station's officials leaned back to heave a sigh of relief.

The King interview by NBC newsman Martin Agronsky was a little fuzzy, and there were a couple of bad spots in the tape recording of the program which was presented a week earlier over the NBC network.

p. 2 A

However, it finally gave the TV audience in this area a chance to hear King express his belief in the ultimate triumph of integration, and to describe his philosophy of non-violent resistance.

WEEK BEFORE RECALLED

The program was knocked off the air last week by an unknown saboteur who threw a length of chain across power lines leading to the WSFA transmitter.

Mtn 11-4-57

In the program following the King-Agronsky interview, WSFA newsman Crawford Rice tossed questions at Dr. Henry Lyons, pastor of the Highland Avenue Baptist Church, and Police and Fire Commissioner Clyde Sellers.

The Rev. Dr. Lyons defended his segregationist views against the charge that they "are unchristian" with the statement that "I consider separation of the races not only Christian, but morally right."

CALLED 'GOD'S LAW'

Calling separation of the races "God's law," he said it carries out "His eternal purpose for each of the races inhabiting the earth.

"I believe that God has made some men white, said Lyons. "His will is for them to remain white.

Lyons also quoted the late Dr. L. L. Gwaltney, prominent Alabama Baptist of an earlier era, as saying that "consciousness of kind" is one of four basic principles concerning mankind. "One never saw . . . a flock of crows enjoying the company of a flock of sea gulls, "he quoted Gwaltney as writing.

ATTACKS BOYCOTT

Lyons also attacked the use of the boycott as "unChristian, and foresaw a return to segregationist principles by leaders of the major churches in the United States. He said local congregations are expressing resentment at intergrationist teachings and statements by church leaders.

Selers labelled the use of federal troops in Little Rock as "an invasion of the state of Arkansas" and a violation of the U.S. Constitution.

The city commissioner went on to attack President Eisenhower, who, he said, "will go down as the weakest President we ever had."

CHANGE FORECAST

Sellers predicted that a new enterpretation of the Constitution will restore segregation as "other states become aware of the problem we are faced with.

The station was flooded with hundreds of telephone calls during the morning by persons who wanted to know when the program would go on the air. (The TV log provided by The Advertiser-Journal for Sundays papers failed to list it.) Station employes who answered the calls said none of them protested against the program, but that all the callers indicated a desire to see it.

Brilliant Press Agentry

MARTIN AGRONSKY, the TV man for NBC, and Dr. M. L. King really couldn't have asked for more. It was above and beyond Southern hospitality.

p. 4-A

Agronsky is new to the Murrow-type program and trying to establish the new program Look Here. His Montgomery interview was heard by millions of Americans. It was just another program.

Times 11-4-57

But then the story went out over the national news wire that the program had been sabotaged in Montgomery. The world will hear of it.

Montgomery, Ala.

Gronsky has now taken on new stature as one who saw action on the renowned Montgomery front. Edward R. Murrow, seeing his competitor get this fine break, was probably chewing a rattail file.

The only Americans who didn't hear the program were South Alabamians. WSFA presumably will now show the program on film. Thousands who wouldn't have listened in the first place will now glue themselves to their sets.

Dr. King will now have a larger Montgomery audience than he could ever have hoped for normally. He is more famous than before the chain was thrown over the wire. He is stronger with his Negro followers.

The man who threw that chain is the most accomplished press agent in this country. All the advertising firms on Madison Avenue couldn't have promoted the name of Dr. King with such skill as our cowboy with the iron lasso.

Dr. King has had nothing but the ablest promotion services from whites.

Those who consider themselves his keenest adversaries are in fact his press agents and ablest sponsors.

To try to prevent a man from being heard is the most certain way of getting him heard.

Dr. King seems to get break after break. Regard the case of the bombed churches. The day after the dynamite went off there was no limit to the amount of money King could raise from citizens outside the South.

And by now there isn't a national broadcaster that doesn't itch to try his luck on a King broadcast emanating from Montgomery in the hope that the cowboy, hi-ho, will ride again, casting a lariat over the wire.

It is not the luck of "the Irish" we need talk about any more. For it isn't much compared with the boob genius at work promoting the Reverend.

King, South African Bishop Discuss Racial Problems

Courier-Post Camden, N.J. Sun. 7-28-57

NEW YORK, July 27 (AP)—A Negro churchman from Alabama and a white bishop from South Africa met today to discuss racial problems. They told reporters later "there is no hope in this situation outside religion."

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Baptist minister from Montgomery, Ala., talked for about an hour with the Rt. Rev. Ambrose Reeves, Anglican Bishop of Johannesburg, South Africa. Bishop Reeves, who supported Negroes in a recent bus boycott in Johannesburg, said he wanted to meet the Rev. Dr. King ever since reading about the Negro pastor's leadership of the Montgomery bus boycott.

"I felt that we had gone through a similar experience," he said. In a press conference after the meeting, both stressed the need for churches to realize their responsibilities in promoting racial justice and easing interracial tensions.

Both emphasized, also, the importance of avoiding violence in the struggle for racial justice.

"The attempt to break loose from bonds of repression should not lead to an anti-white attitude," said Dr. King.

Bishop Reeves, who is in the United States on a speaking tour, said South Africa is "fear-ridden." He described the racial situation there as far more difficult than in the American South.

He said that if the white people of South Africa could feel "a tiny measure of security" tensions would ease there.

Dr. King said he would like to go to South Africa, but added he couldn't answer whether he will actually make an attempt to go there. "I haven't really thought it through," he said.

Bishop Reeves said he didn't know whether the South African government would grant Dr. King a visa.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Billy Graham Share Program

World P. 6 Wed. 7-24-57 B'ham Ala.

NEW YORK — Madison Square Garden of pugilism fame featured two different kinds of champions Thursday night when crusading Evangelist Billy Graham and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., shared the same pulpit before more than 19:000 persons.

Dr. King, who was received with enthusiasm, delivered the opening prayer. The noted leader of the successful Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott made no mention of his accomplishment which received international publicity.

Rev. Graham praised the Alabama minister as a most illustrious leader in "a great social revolution" in America.

He attacked bigotry and racial prejudice, saying that "some people profess love of their neighbors, but let a person with a different color skin move into the neighborhood, and then do they start practicing their love? Why? they're ready to start a fight!"

Dr. King slaps 'Gallup Poll' deals

Afro-American Sat. 8-10-57 Baltimore, Md.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.—Dr. Martin Luther King, Montgomery, Ala., civil rights crusader, warned that man may be getting too smart for his own good.

"We can boast of having made a neighborhood of the world, but we cannot claim the establishment of brotherhood among its people," he said in a sermon at Cornerstone Baptist Church Sunday.

More than 2,500 persons heard him preach against what he described as man's subjugation of moral laws to physical laws in his dealings with his brother.

"Today too many have adopted the conception that right and wrong are merely relative to our likes or dislikes. We decide how to act by a sort of 'Gallup poll' with a kind of an everybody's doing it attitude, or just a matter of custom excuse," the youthful leader stated.

"OTHERS" the 1957 Spingarn medalist said," have assumed a sort of 'get by' test for right and wrong: survival of the slickest. They have set up an 11th commandment, "Thou shalt not get caught."

Dr. King warned that the world and America must rediscover the principals of the worth and sacredness of human personality.

"God does not want us to treat our brothers as a means to an end," he cautioned. "History has shown that nations, which have done so, have failed and faded into oblivion."

Dr. Sandy F. Ray, host pastor and president of the New York Baptists, praised the courageous leadership of Dr. King in the campaign for complete Democracy in America.

Dr. King accepted the invitation of the president of the National Baptist Laymen's Movement, Allen Jordan, to address the laymen on Sept. 4 during the National Baptist Convention session in Louisville. Dr. King was accompanied by his sister, Miss Christine King, who is studying toward a Ph.D. degree at Columbia University.

When Greek Meets Greek

One of the brilliant epochs of the year was the meeting of Billy Graham and the Rev. M. L. King, Jr. in the interval of one of the great revivals of many years. Here were two young audable Americans who are dedicating their lives to the christian ministry. P. 6 Voice of Atlanta, Ga.

Each has attained fame on his own hooks and each proclaimed powerful factors not only in the ministry but assets in every walk of life. Sat. 7-27-57

Here were two ambassadors of peace, goodwill to all men. Both have won their spurs as Christian leaders and having to their credit examples of what pious industry and prayer and long suffering will accomplish in this age of trillions for defense, billions in killing munitions and death-dealing gadgets of every description.

In this stirring age when there is going on this present moment debates in the Congress of a free nation as to whether one segment of citizens are entitled to the same protection in the eyes of the law and guarantee of unrestricted circulation in a free society.

We come to a pass to see the race question enter our school program; the withdrawal of bonds for improvement because of the race question making investments questionable. We see billions hampered because of the refusal of certain states to abide by a ruling of the United States Supreme Court.

These two young men, having dedicated their lives and talents to this civilization are symbols of what the world needs most to effect a lasting peace.

They would spread the gospel of goodwill and peace before their own doors and from them will come finally the solution of these grave problems now menacing our civilization if the nation would just listen.

Two stalwart Americans, two students of humanity and apostles of the Lord Jesus are before us. Let the nation and the world listen to what the Lord saith to the churches.

The nation will be wise if it listens to Billy Graham and Martin King, Jr.

Howard U Students Mass To Hear King

Louisville

Washington, D. C. — (ANP) — An overflow congregation which flocked to the sanctuary of Rankin Chapel at Howard University last week heard Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., say that nonviolence can be used to "turn civilization upside down." P. 16 Courier

Students filled the basement hall of the chapel, stood in corridors, and sat on the stairs of the library building where a loudspeaker had been set up to hear the young minister from Montgomery, Ala. advocate civil-disobedience where segregation is involved.

"We must stand up as an organized mass," Dr. King said, "and refuse to cooperate, yet somehow do this with love in our hearts for those opposed to us." Warning against violence, he said that it would create more problems than it could solve. Courier 11-21-57

If violence is resorted to, Rev. King said, "unborn generations will be the recipient of a long night of futility and wickedness."

But the Negro, he said should not resign himself to discrimination. "The minute we passively accept injustice we cooperate with it."

Preaching without notes in a sermon occasionally punctuated by an "Amen" from some older person in the audience, Dr. King said that Negroes should obey Jesus and love their enemies because hate does nothing but intensify the existence of hate and evil in the universe.

"Through the power of love," he said, "we can redeem our enemies and transform them."

Would Have Invited Violence, Many Feel

Southerners Glad Nixon, King Didn't Meet in Dixie

(Courier Staff Writer)

AUGUSTA, Ga.—As far as the man in the street is concerned—and he includes some of the upper crust, too—last Thursday's meeting between Vice President Richard M. Nixon and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was held at the proper place—the nation's capital.

A sampling of the opinions of a cross-section of local citizens, including the distaff side, showed the feeling decidedly in favor of the Vice President staying out of the South.

ONE HIGH school teacher, who quickly refused to allow his name be used, sounded off "If they had held the meeting down here, King might have been killed."

A letter carrier—who also asked that his name not be printed—had this to say:

"I can't say too much about it, but I don't think it would have hurt anything or done any more harm than has already been done if they had met in the South. After all, civil rights is going to be a fight all the way."

Robert H. Rucker, retired Federal employe and businessman, had this to say:

"I think Washington was the best place for the meeting. I think they're grooming him (Mr. Nixon) for President and he would lose a lot of prestige in the South. For him to come down here could retard him and retard the Republican party in the South also."

CLAUDE W. CROOKE, executive secretary, Richmond County Non-Partisan Voters League, shared the feelings of Mr. Rucker. Mr. Crooke said this:

"I think just about the same thing. I think Washington was the better place because Nixon was able to drive home his points with more force. I would help none of us down here had they met in the South."

Noy Maben, barber shop manager, was emphatic in his feeling that Washington was the proper place for the meeting:

"I don't know if it actually would do any good if Nixon came South, because the South is boiling over with meanness, hatred and malice. The South is just not able to accept facts as they are. For that reason I think it was wiser to hold the meeting in Washington."

Businessman and fraternal leader, John U. Strother, was brief and to-the-point: "It looks like Washington was a good place, to me. It might help get the President to help out a bit. He hasn't done a darned thing so far."

WE ASKED Mrs. Idelia Simpson, a seamstress, how she felt about it. Here is what she had to say:

"In my opinion I think it was better meeting in Washington." She further opined that the general atmosphere in the South is not favorably receptive to such a meeting here on such an explosive subject as civil rights.

DETROIT—Thousands jammed the Henry Ford Auditorium to get a glimpse of Montgomery's Dr. Martin Luther King and to hear his ringing address to the fourth session of the 48th annual convention of the NAACP.

Dr. King was awarded the coveted Spingarn Medal "on behalf of the more than 50,000 Negro citizens of Montgomery, Ala., who more than a year ago came to see that it is ultimately more honorable to walk in dignity than to ride in humiliation . . ."

Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Michigan, presented the award.

In accepting the award, Dr. King said: "The NAACP has given courage to a disinherited people who dared only to dream of freedom.

"I would urge every freedom-loving person to double his financial support of the NAACP at this time in order to make it clear to those who are seeking to outlaw the NAACP that we stand by this noble organization for better or for worse, until death do us part."

The Spingarn Award was created in 1914 by the late J. E. Spingarn, then chairman of the NAACP board.

The NAACP wound up its convention with a mass meeting at the huge Detroit Olympia. Jackie Robinson, national Freedom Fund chariman; Roy Wilkins, excutive secretary, and Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel, were the principal speakers.

Newsweek P.19

Administration leaders consider the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, leader of Montgomery's bus boycott, a coming leader of Southern Negroes.

Newsweek 7-29-57

Here is why this is important:

If the civil-rights bill passes (see page 23) and is firmly enforced, Negro voters will suddenly acquire great political power in the South.

They have no political leader. King has proved a smart and patient worker. Administration leaders think he could move into the vacuum.

Vice President Nixon says: "Dr. King is one of the most outstanding men who has ever walked into my office."

My admiration for the Rev. Martin Luther King is of the highest. His is a great and dedicated spirit . . . the kind the times demand. I think, however, that he makes a monumental error in saying about the Negro, "Once he thought of himself as an inferior." Too much in history contradicts this assertion. It might be more correct to say that the Negro thought of his inferiority as being imposed and accepted its consequences with a cunning patience that was used as a technique of sheer survival.

To the Editor:

My admiration for the Rev. Martin Luther King is of the highest. His is a great and dedicated spirit . . . the kind the times demand. I think, however, that he makes a monumental error in saying about the Negro, "Once he thought of himself as an inferior." Too much in history contradicts this assertion. It might be more correct to say that the Negro thought of his inferiority as being imposed and accepted its consequences with a cunning patience that was used as a technique of sheer survival.

Aid For Bombed Churches Asked Of Congressmen

World P. 4-6-57 Birm. Ala.

WASHINGTON, D. C., — Members of the House of Representatives are being asked to make contributions to help rebuild Negro churches bombed in recent racial strife in Montgomery, Ala.

Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., disclosed Wednesday he is soliciting all House members for contributions to a special fund drive currently underway.

A New York Democrat and one of three Negro members of the House, Powell is telling all members their contributions will be treated with secrecy. Those who might be embarrassed at home by gifts may send cash in a "plain white envelope" either to him or the officers of the fund drive in Montgomery, Powell says.

$100,000 NEEDED

The drive is for $000,000 to repair four Negro churches and two Negro parsonages damaged in controversy over a boycott by Negroes of the city's segregated bus system.

Representative George M. Grant (D-Ala.), whose congressional district includes Montgomery, confirmed he has received the plea. He said he believes the people of Montgomery, white and Negro, disapproved of violence and he thinks funds to repair the churches can be raised locally.

Funds to Rebuild Churches Sought

Minneapolis Tr. Tues. 4-9-57 P. 3

NEW YORK, April 8 (AP) — A group of eight Protestant clergymen, including two bishops, are seeking funds to help rebuild Southern churches bombed or damaged in the racial segregation struggle.

The group, to be known as the Committee to Aid Bombed Christians of the South, is sponsored by the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Nyak, N. Y.

The members are Dr. George A. Buttrick, Harvard Memorial church, Cambridge, Mass., and past president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; Methodist Bishop Matthew W. Clair Jr., St. Louis; Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of the Episcopal diocese of Western Massachusetts, Springfield, Mass.; Dr. Edward T. Dahlberg, St. Louis, former president of the American Baptist Convention; Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, Central Methodist church, Detroit; Dr. Elmer A. Fridell, Baptist missionary executive, New York, and two professors, the Revs. John Oliver Nelson and Paul Scherver of the Yale university divinity school and Union Theological seminary respectively.

The Why And Wherefore Of Non-Violence

Advertiser P. 4-A Thurs. 3-14-57

Our fellow Americans on the New Yak Post continue to be racked with the dry heaves over the wonder of the "non-violent resistance" of Montgomery colored citizens.

Montgomery, Ala.

The truth is, both the white and colored communities in Montgomery have been wonderfully restrained in their collisions. Montgomery is against violence. A tiny fraction of the population heaved the bombs. No colored citizen has been murdered with a hammer in daylight on the street, as has just happened in Chicago.

But since the Post has got its hosanna button stuck on the non-violence of the Negro community here, it might go a step further and tell us what else colored citizens could have done. They are about a third of the population; the constabulary, soldiery and arsenals are all in white hands.

This is a disagreeable subject. We don't like to discuss it. Our town is now as peaceful as the Easter Parade on 5th Avenue. No more violence is foreseeable—because public policy, expressed through white officials and executed by white policemen, is one of non-violence.

But were it otherwise, just what, as a matter of reality, could the outnumbered, unarmed and unorganized minority have done? Their non-violence was sensible under the circumstances, not lofty under a divine nimbus.

Good Police Job

The Lee County Bulletin

Opelika, Ala.

No well-meaning citizen will want to let the fact of the Montgomery racial bombings cloud from view the faithful and effective police work which promises to bring an end to the terrorization. The same goes for Birmingham, where the police department moved swiftly to break open the shooting affair involving the Ku Klux Klan.

It is this type of honest, intelligent police work which, coupled with public support of law and order, will harness and bring to an end these reigns of terror growing out of racial hatred.

Law cannot dictate that the haters and radicals purge their feelings in favor of good will and patience. But it can insist on order and safety. Thank goodness the vast majority of Alabamians finds violence repugnant and stands instead in full support of faithful enforcement of the law.

2 White Men Will Face Trial Tomorrow On Charges Of Bombing Negro Churches

Advertiser Sun. 5-26-57 Montgomery, Ala. P. 1

By REX THOMAS
AP Staff Writer

Two young white men face trial here Monday in the state's attempt to punish the instigators of racial violence which followed the end of bus segregation in Montgomery.

Police have blamed at least part of the reign of terror on the Ku Klux Klan.

Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. are charged with dynamiting two of the four Negro churches which were bombed along with the homes of two ministers before dawn last Jan. 10.

A federal court injunction had gone into effect only 20 days earlier nullifying city and state laws which historically had segregated white and Negro passengers on Montgomery buses.

Britt also faces another indictment for the bombing of a Negro taxicab stand in a second outburst of violence on Jan. 27.

A county grand jury which indicted the two defendants also returned more serious charges against two other white men, James D. York, 52, and Henry Alexander, 27.

They will be called to trial June 3 for the dynamiting of a Negro clergyman's home while members of the family were asleep in the dwelling.

Under Alabama law, the bombing of an inhabited residence is punishable by a prison term of 10 years or more, or death in the electric chair, even though no one was injured in the explosion at the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

The 27-year-old Britt faces a maximum of 10 years' imprisonment on each of the three charges against him. He is accused of bombing Abernathy's church, the Negro First Baptist; the Hutchinson Baptist Church, and the taxicab stand.

Livingston, 18, also is charged with dynamiting the Hutchinson Street church. The two defendants are expected to demand separate trials and state's attorneys will decide then which one to call first.

Britt and Livingston will be tried under a law which prohibits setting off dynamine "in, under or dangerously near to" an unoccupied public building; York and Alexander under a separate statute dealing with the bombing of inhabited dwellings.

Racial feelings which had simmered through a year-long Negro boycott of segregated city buses exploded with violent fury shortly after the buses were ordered integrated last Dec. 21 under a federal court decree. The U.S. Supreme Court had ruled bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

Buses were ambushed with gunfire six times and a Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs. Later, when city police arrested the four men now facing trial, they charged Alexander with shooting into one of the buses. He subsequently was indicted for that offense along with the bombings.

Bus service was restricted to daylight operations and then suspended altogether for six days after the sleeping city was jarred into wakefulness by the bombings.

SEVENTEEN days later the terrorists struck again, bombing the Negro cab stand and an adjoining house and leaving an unexploded bundle of 12 sticks of dynamite on the front porch of the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., recognized leader of the integration campaign.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal charged later that four of the bombings were done by "members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan."

The grand jury which returned the indictments declared segregation must be preserved in the Deep South but warned that it must be done "openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness."

Unpunished Crime Aggravates Race Problem

Montgomery, Ala.

The Birmingham News

THE recent acquittal in Montgomery of two men accused in the bombing of a Negro church has emphasized anew the failure so far to achieve convictions in a number of such cases of violence—some in Birmingham—related to racial tensions.

P. 4-A

So long as such crimes go unpunished, those disposed to defy the law at the expense of the peace and well-being of all the people are the more likely to resort to such outrageous tactics.

So long as such crimes go unpunished, demands will continue to be pressed for more federal action, more federal intervention, in the handling of racial problems of the South.

When such crimes go unpunished, feelings among our white and Negro citizens inevitably are involved in heightened stresses.

It should be obvious to really thoughtful people that such vicious tactics as bombing, aimed at meeting racial problems by violence and fear, can only worsen conditions that are grievous and perilous in many respects. Yet some there are among us who have turned to such despicable methods. Unless such means and methods of dealing with racial problems and difficulties can be curbed, our situation is bound to continue greatly troubled. Punishment of the guilty should be a primary objective in seeking to curb such gross lawlessness.

Difficulties of finding and convicting the guilty are substantial. Those who turn to such bombing usually operate in darkness. It cannot be foreseen where they will strike. Fear makes the finding of clues and evidence the more difficult.

Failure to convict the guilty leaves questions in some quarters as to whether such bombing might have been staged by extremists fighting segregation rather than extremists favoring it.

The Supreme Court's decision against public school segregation has been followed by so much extremist comment on both sides of the issue that the cause of orderly lawful processes and respect for the law has deeply suffered. Where law attempts compulsions against deep and strong public sentiment, such difficulties inevitably result. Challenge of such legal efforts may go to such extremes as to encourage those disposed to flout orderly processes of the law.

Orderly, lawful processes are basic in maintaining our way of life, with its freedom and its security. Whenever we depart from those processes, we move into swampy areas, infested with dangers of many kinds.

Whenever those processes do not operate effectively to check tactics that are directed against lawful procedure itself, our structure of law and peace is weakened. When such tactics go unpunished, conditions are made the more hazardous for us all.

In the Montgomery trial, the state presented its case with earnestness and vigor. Such spirit and method should mark persisting, resolute endeavor to bring about conviction and punishment of the guilty. The fundamental interests of us all call for such continuing efforts.

Leaders Organize for Southwide Drive for Citizenship

Daily World Fri. 8-9-57 Atlanta Ga. P.1

BY EMORY O. JACKSON
(Staff Writer)

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. president of the Christian Leadership Conference here Thursday called for a massive voter-registration drive at the morning's session.

The eminent leader said it would entail political education, tactics, public relations and coordination with central headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. King explained that the crusade for new voters would neither compete with nor duplicate any existing program and does not seek to replace any organization. Instead, he said it would seek to supplement and complete the work presently conducted by local organizations.

He said the program to secure new voters would include persuasion, legal action and direct action. He added that the work would be specialized and limited.

Meanwhile leaders also said insertion of the jury trial clause into the Senate version of the Civil Rights Bill was branded "a tragic error" by the Southern Christian Leadership conference.

The leaders from 14 states adopted the strongly-worded policy statement at the wind-up business session of a two-day meeting where a Southwide crusade for citizenship was formulated. A voter-registration drive to be financed by a proposed budget was approved.

Meantime a second resolution condemned the state legislature for passage of the Tuskegee city shrinking law and openly criticized Attorney General John Patterson for an alleged "Gestapo-type of Pressure" used by him against the leaders of the Tuskegee Civic Association.

POLICY STATEMENT

The adopted resolution appealed for federal protection of the leaders who are victimized by state and other forces.

Conference leaders in their policy statement said they were "gravely disappointed over the Senate version of the Civil Rights Bill." The leaders added that they wanted the House version of the Bill to obtain."

The Senate passed the diluted Civil Rights Bill 72 to 18 Wednesday evening. It also differs from the House version by deleting section 3.

The resolution said that the right to vote is not merely a political necessity but a moral imperative. It added that the Congress has the responsibility to insure the right to vote.

Conference leaders in their statement on the Tuskegee vote protest noted the "Silence" by persons in high places and called upon the responsible voices of goodwill "to step forward and be heard."

In reporting for the budget committee, Dr. Samuel Williams of Atlanta, Ga. said the proposed minimum budget would be used for voter-registration education, organization work and a staff of workers.

Among delegates from Birmingham were W. C. Patton, Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Rev. E. S. Hardge, Rev. N. H. Smith and from Bessemer, Asbury Howard, William Thomas and Will Arnold.

Atlanta delegates included Rev M. L. King, Sr.; Dr. W. H. Borders; Rev. A. Bell; Rev. R. Julian Smith, Rev. W. W. Weatherford and Rev R. W. Shawk.

The meeting closed out Thursday night with a giant mass meeting. Over 100 delegates attended the two day conference.

S. C. L. leaders present at the press conference were Reverends Theodore J. Jemison of Baton Rouge, La.; F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham; C. R. Steele of Tallahassee, Fla.; M. L. King, Jr., A. L. Davis, New Orleans, La. and A. L. Scott of Shreveport.

KING SAYS NEGROES MUST SHUN VIOLENCE

Courier 9-7-57

Minister Declares Peaceful Resistance Will Win

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., Sept. 2. —(AP)—A Negro leader said Monday his race must be willing to accept continued violence without striking back as the price for tearing down the barriers of segregation.

"We must struggle passionately and unrelentingly for the goal of justice," declared Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., of Montgomery, Ala., "but we must be sure that our hands are clean in the struggle."

"We must not struggle with falsehoods, hate or malice—we must never become bitter," he added. "We must never succumb to the temptation of using violence."

Reverend King, who led a year-long boycott that ultimately brought an end to enforced bus segregation in the Alabama capital, spoke at the 25th anniversary of the Highlander Folk School.

The Baptist minister consistently advocated passive resistance and non-violence in the bus protest despite the bombing of Negro homes and churches in Montgomery.

He said Monday that the refusal to strike back with violence "will mean suffering and sacrifice."

But the Negro's defense, he explained, is "to meet every act of violence toward an individual Negro with the fact that there are thousands of others who will present themselves in his place as potential victims.

"If the oppressors bomb the home of one Negro for his courage," Reverend King continued, "then this must be met by the fact that they will be required to bomb the homes of hundreds and thousands of Negroes.

"If they deny bread and milk to Negro children whose parents want them to be free, then they must be required to deny these children every necessity of life —water and air itself," he said.

Reverend King said an unrelenting policy of "dynamic unity, the amazing self-respect, this willingness to suffer, and the refusal to hit back will soon cause the oppressor to become ashamed of his own methods."

Deny King Appeal

Afro-American Sat. 8-24-57

MONTGOMERY, Ia. — The Rev. Fred D. Gray, counsel for the Rev. Martin Luther King and others of the 90 leaders of the Montgomery Improvement Association which led a successful year-long bus boycott here, Saturday, told the AFRO he would appeal the conviction of the Rev. Mr. King to the Alabama State Supreme Court.

He spoke four days after the Alabama Court of Appeals declined to reconsider its previous decision which dismissed the appeal of the Rev. Mr. King from a Montgomery Circuit Court conviction of violating a 1921 state law aimed at labor violence during his activities as leader of the bus boycott.

The Circuit Court had fined the Rev. Mr. King $500 and costs.

THE APPEALS court had thrown out his appeal petition on the grounds that it was not filed within the 60-day limit prescribed by law. The reason it was not filed, according to the Rev. Mr. Gray, was that the court reporter had not finished transcribing the record within the alloted time.

The Rev. Mr. King was the only person to face trial among the 90 arrested under the labor-violence statute. The other cases were postponed pending settlement of the Rev. Mr. King's case.

The Rev. Mr. Gray said he would file a writ of certiori before the State Supreme Court asking a review of the Court of Appeals' refusal to hear the Rev. Mr. King's appeal petition.

SINCE THE Rev. Mr. King's conviction, Montgomery's city bus segregation law has been knocked out as unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

In its Tuesday ruling the Alabama appellate tribunal extended its previous opinion to answer further legal issues raised in the Rev. Mr. Gray's petition for a rehearing.

Since the transcript was filed late in the Circuit Court and no motion for a new trial filed there, the opinion by Judge Aubrey Coates said there was no need to consider whether the appellant could have had more time for filing in the Court of Appeals.

THE OPINION said the Supreme Court previously had ruled that in such cases as this the deadline for filing in both the lower and appeallate courts was the same.

It pointed out that the court reporter has 60 days to get the transcript ready and responsibility rests with the appellant to see that it is filed on time or request an extension of the deadline.

E. D. Nixon, Founder Ala. Group, Honored

Daily World 8-26-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(ANP)— The Montgomery Improvement Association, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president, in a culmination of the dream of E. D. Nixon, civic-minded leader and militant citizen of this city, Nixon was the first Negro to qualify for a jury committeeman and is founder and president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters Chapter in Montgomery.

Twenty-five years ago when E. D. Nixon started his fight for the Negroes in his hometown his goal was "to see the Negroes in Montgomery united."

This dream became a reality on December 5, 1955, when MIA was organized and he was offered the position as president.

Casting aside this possible bid for fame, Nixon told the association's members: "Dr. Martin Luther King is your man. He is better prepared and the people will follow him." With this terse reply Nixon gave a leader, not only to Montgomery, but to the world.

FOUNDATION LAID

Citizens here and throughout the state know that MIA has gained nation-wide repute because of the foundation laid 25 years ago by Nixon. The recent idea of all Negroes voting and the importance of being a registered voter were his main concerns when he organized the Montgomery Voters League of which he is the president.

Recently the citizens of Montgomery honored him with an "E. D. Nixon Night," at Holt Street Baptist Church, Dr. A. W. Wilson, pastor. This was the same church where months ago the opening protest meeting was held with more than 3,500 persons attending.

Among the notables present at the Nixon Testimonial who paid tribute to the honored guest was Aubrey Williams, former head of the National Youth Administration and now publisher of a Farm Journal in Montgomery. Mr. Williams said: "I know only three totally honest men, and E. D. Nixon is one of the three."

New MIA Secretary in Montgomery to Direct the Efforts of Negro Citizens

Montgomery, Ala.—The Montgomery Improvement Association, through its president, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., made formal announcement of the appointment, effective July 15, of the Rev. Mose Pleasure, Jr., as Executive Secretary. The MIA, whose successful protest against the indignities of discrimination on buses in Montgomery has won nationwide acclaim, has embarked on a positive program of economic and social betterment for the citizens of the Alabama capital city.

"Rev. Pleasure will spend full time in implementing and directing the efforts of Montgomerians to make our community a better place in which to live," Rev. King said.

"The new plan will put in motion a program of fundamental education" Rev. King continued, "which will be a sustained attack against those elements in our community giving rise to and perpetuating a disregard for the worth and dignity of the human personality."

Thurs. 8-29-57

Christian Minister

"Rev. Pleasure comes to us with excellent qualifications and a splendid sense of dedication to the task to be done here. First of all, he is a Christian minister whose dedication to Freedom, Justice, and the principles of non-violence is without question. Secondly, he is a young man who is well prepared to undertake the challenge offered by the task which confronts him here." A native of New Orleans, Louisiana, Rev. Pleasure attended Dillard University, of that city, graduating with honors. From there he was awarded

Ford Foundation Fellowship for further study at Harvard University where he earned the Masters degree. Prior to this appointment Rev. Pleausre worked for two years as Alumni Secretary at Dillard University.

"We, here in Montgomery, are pleased to welcome such a capable and promising person to join in our struggle for first-class citizenship and the betterment of the Negro people," Rev. King concluded. "It is our hope that his presence among us will add greatly to the strength of the movement here and to the ultimate triumph of Freedom and Justice for Negroes throughout the South.'

REFUSAL OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER TO MAKE APPEAL AGAINST RACIAL STRIFE IN THE SOUTH

March On Washington

Afro-American

Dr. Martin Luther King's call for a march on Washington fired the imagination of southerners who have been attempting in vain to have the President speak out on violence in the South.

They want him to use the tremendous power and moral suasion of his office against resistance to the Supreme Court's school integration decision and denial of the rights to vote in some six or seven states.

Baltimore Md.

In the old days when Coxe's Army marched on Washington, it was a march in the literal sense. His followers walked and burned out shoe leather.

During the depression when World War I veterans were reduced to selling apples, a march on Washington meant thousands of unemployed people getting to Washington in any way they could and throwing themselves on public charity.

Sat. 3-30-57

In the bonus march of the '30's, these men actually slept on the Capito grounds and were eventually evicted by troops, who, on orders of Chief of Staff Gen. Douglas MacArthur, fired on them and burned their shack encampments.

That's not the kind of march on Washington that Dr. King proposes.

It will be called a march on Washington but the participants will actually come to Washington by automobile, train, bus and plane.

And the heart of the movement will be a public mass meeting before thousands of persons. Speakers elected by the Rev. King would dramatize the disadvantages under which the people in the South are living.

Such a meeting would be thoroughly covered by the press, radio and television.

Thousands of people so demonstrating and making a mass public protest in Washington would command the attention not only of the nation, but the world.

When tagged with dignity and orderliness, it is bound to be effective.

The right to meet, to protest and to ask redress of grievances is inherent in our form of government and guaranteed by the Constitution.

The only persons who can make a decision as to whether or not they want to stage that kind of protest are the people in the South who are suffering from terror, violence and oppression.

If they want to stage such a movement, all other persons should cooperate fully.

Dixie Leaders To Discuss Ike Snub

Defender 1-6

Chicago Ill.

NEW ORLEANS — Negro leaders from the troubled areas of the South will meet in New Orleans Wednesday for a two-day conference on the refusal of President Eisenhower to make an appeal against racial strife in the South.

Sat. 3-16-57

The conference will convene at 4 p. m. Wednesday and continue through the next day. The meeting will be held in New Zion church, under the direction of Rev. M. L. King, of Montgomery, Ala.

The White House recently announced that Mr. Eisenhower would be unable to make a major speech in the South against opposition to the segregation rulings of the Supreme Court.

The statement was in answer to a plea from the Southern Negro Leaders Conference that Mr. Eisenhower could ease racial tensions by coming to the South and speaking out against bigotry and violence.

On the heels of President Eisenhower's refusal to heed the plea, he attended services at First Presbyterian church in Thomasville, Ga., and heard the minister there, Rev. A. Allen Gardner jr., warn that the racial tension "hangs over our southland like a thunderhead."

The President was accompanied to church by Mrs. Eisenhower and Treasury Secretary and Mrs. George M. Humphrey. The Eisenhowers are house guests at Humphrey's Milestone plantation.

In the meantime leaders of the conference have not disclosed what steps will be taken at the meeting which will be closed to the public. It is expected that a statement will be issued to the press on Thursday.

Why does Ike snub colored reporters?

Afro-American Sat. 4-27-57

Baltimore Md.

WASHINGTON

Why does President Eisenhower make a studied practice of refusing to recognize colored reporters at his White House press conferences?

That is the question which was put to Presidential Appointments Secretary Bernard Shanley Thursday by two reporters, Alice Dunnigan of the Associated Negro Press, and Ethel Payne of the Chicago Defender.

Thus far there has been no answer.

EVER SINCE the President's illness, he has refused to recognize a single colored reporter, who stood up at his press conferences with a question.

The studied effort not to grant representatives of the weekly press an opportunity to ask a question has become so noticeable, it has become a topic around Washington.

The matter was brought to a climax at last week's conference when Mrs. Dunnigan bounced up and down six times only to receive the customary presidential brushoff.

EACH TIME the President would look away to the other side of the aisle, or would recognize someone at Mrs. Dunnigan's back, at her side, or in front, but never the ANP reporter.

Afro-American

Observers believe the President has been coached not to give colored reporters an opportunity to ask a question out of fear that an embarrassing civil rights issue would be raised.

Sat. 4-27-57

Mrs. Dunnigan said Wednesday she had wanted to ask Mr. Eisenhower to comment on the praise Jackie Robinson had given Vice President Nixon and White House assistant Sherman Adams on their recent statements, condemning discrimination and prejudice in America.

IT WAS hoped the question would give the President an opportunity to speak out to the world on the bombings, cross burnings and persecution of colored citizens who speak up for their civil rights in the South.

Both Mrs. Dunningan and Miss Payne on previous occasions have incurred the wrath of President Eisenhower's White House assistants.

Miss Payne, who angered the President with racial questions some 18 months ago, was summoned to the White House by White House press secretary James Hagerty and warned that she could lose her White House press credentials if she wasn't "careful."

MRS. DUNNIGAN was also called into the Capitol Gallery and questioned about some public relations work she had done for a government official.

The cases of the two women reporters were taken up by he NAACP and the charges against them were dropped.

Plan To "Get Out The Vote" And Take Advantage Of New Civil Rights Law Adopted In Congress Spearheaded By Southerners In Memphis This Week; Southern Christian Leaders To Put Meaning Into Exercising Suffrage

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, composed of Ministers, Lawyers and other professional Negroes, met today to lay final plans for the Crusade for Citizenship.

The Crusade will assist Negroes in every Southern State to register and vote in the 1958 and 1960 elections.

Seventy-five leaders from 40 communities in eight Southern states voted to raise $200,000 for the first years budget.

Tenative plans include 20 simultaneous mass meetings on January 20th throughout the South. Important Southern Negro leaders will speak at these mass meetings to point out that "a voteless citizen is not a citizen."

The crusade will include "education and action." Voting clinics will be set up in every possible country. Thousands will be taught to read, to write and how to register.

The crusade of Citizenship office will be set up in Atlanta. In addition to the Executive Director the staff will include 2 traveling assistants, legal advisor, and educational and literature personnel.

In a statement Dr. King said: "The Crusade for Citizenship seeks to double the Negro vote in the South. The Civil Rights Bill is meaningless unless we go out and make use of it. Negroes must vote because every problem we face can be, in large part, overcome by a short walk—a few steps into the Ballot Box."

Pointing out the urgency of the Civil Rights problem at home and abroad the Negro leaders urged President Eisenhower to meet with Negro leaders "as soon as possible." In a letter to the President they said, "Little Rock points a dramatic finger to the urgent necessity for the President to confer with Negro leaders from across the nation.

They further told the President that such a meeting "will do much to give heart and courage to white people of good will who remain silent when their voices are needed."

Commenting on the Civil Rights Commission, Dr. King urged the President to appoint the commission immediately. He then added, "We further urge you, Mr. President, to include on this commission two qualified Negroes one of whom should be from the South."

In a letter to the Mayor and Superintendent of Schools of Pleasanton, Texas, the Negro leaders expressed to the townspeople "our warm satisfaction with the peaceful manner in which integration of school was accomplished in your community."

The letter concluded. "We sincerely believe that your handling of the situation is an example for the whole Southland and a source of pride to our nation."

In the struggle for civil rights Negroes for many decades have relied in a large part on appeals for justice to public officials. Today, the letters and telegrams we have sent to the Executive Branch of Government will be effective according to the political activity of the masses of Negroes at the local level. As I pointed out at the Prayer Pilgrimage to Washington, there cannot be citizenship without the right to vote. A voteless citizen is no citizen. Men and women who can not vote are forcibly exiled from their national heritage. That the Negor remains patriotic American while deprived of this sacred right is a tribute to his deep allegiance to his nation, its ideals and its promise of Democracy.

We are now embarking upon a historic campaign - The Crusade for Citizenship. We intend to encourage every Negro in the South to register and to vote. We intend to make the citizen of Negroes a living reality. Fri. 11-8-57

There is no problem the Negro now faces which is not closely related to the fact that he does not or cannot vote. Once he has seen this relationship and has begun to vote he will not only insure his owr rights but also will enrich our nation as a whole.

We are realistic. We do not expect all those who have denied the Negro his right to vote to welcome this Crusade for Citizenship without some resistance. However, we are determined as never before to pursue our objective with firm, unyielding and non-violent action. Beyond this we know that millions of white Southerners recognize the justice of our cause, appreciate the spirit of our method and stand four-square that the time has come when all Americans should exercise the duties and responsibilities of citiship.

This effort is not for Negroes alone. It serves to restore the honor and integrity of our nation as a whole. For until the Negro possesses the right to vote America's economic, social and political institutions cannot be free to meet the full needs of the American people

Honorable Dwight D. Eisenhower
White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear President:

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference in session at Memphis, in the state of Tennessee, extends its warmest commendation for the positive and forthright stand that you have taken in the Little Rock school situation. You have shown to the nation and the world that the United States is a nation dedicated to law and order rather than mob rule. In an hour so charged with the tragic possibility of world conflict, America can ill afford to be guilty of sins against her own way of life.

It is regrettable that by intransigence and irresponsibility, the governor and irresponsible elements of the state made it necessary for the use of troops to guarantee the rights of citizenship to Negroes in Little Rock. But the law of this land must be enforced or the result will be anarchy. The irresponsibility and intransigence of public officials must be countered by the stern determination of the chief executive to secure for all citizens the blessings of first-class citizenship.

As regrettable as it is, however, that federal troops were necessary, they must remain until there is every evidence that state and municipal officials in Arkansas will respect and enforce the decrees of the federal court. We, therefore, urge you, Mr. President, to keep troops in Little Rock until it is possible for Negro children to attend school freely without the threat of physical or phschological violence.

Little Rock points a dramatic finger to the urgent necessity for the President to confer with Negro leaders from across the nation. Men and women of good will, both black and white, look for presidential guidance in solving the problem created by the breakdown of communications between the races in the South. By meeting with Negro leaders as soon as it is conviently possible the President will do much to give heart and courage to white people for good will who remain silent when their voices are needed.

We find reason to hope that the Civil Rights commission that is called for in the recent Civil Rights bill will do much to remove existing inequities in voting in the South. Yet, the time is passing and the effectiveness of the commission is being diminished in proportion to the time that is allowed to pass before the appointment of the commision. It is urgent that this commission be appointed immediately. We further urge you, Mr. President to include on this commission two qualified egroes of whom one should be from the South.

May the Richest blessings of almighty God continue to be yours,

Sincerely,
Martin Luther King, Jr.
President

To the Mayor and Superintendent of Schools
Pleasanton, Texas

Gentlemen:

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, composed of Negro Ministers and other professional men and women from across the South is holding today a conference in Memphis to lay final plans for a crusade for Citizenship. This campaign plans to urge Negro Southerners to register and vote that our nation might move closer to its democratic ideal and heritage.

Despite the fact that the details of this crusade are of such importance that we may not complete all the business that brought us here today, we feel that we must find time to express to you and your fellow townsmen our warm satisfaction with the peaceful manner in which integration was accomplished in your community.

We commend you for firmly applying the spirit of Jesus and the principles of the Declaration of Independence to the integration of your schools.

We sincerely believe that your handling of the situation is an example for the whole Southland and a source of pride to our nation.

Sincerely,
The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.

"A FAITH FOR DIFFICULT AND CRITICAL TIMES"

Wdnesday Birmingham, Ala.

By THE REV. F. L. SHUTTLESWORTH

Sat. 6-15-57

This is the text of the speech delivered by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights at the Movement's first anniversary celebration, Wednesday night, June 5, 1957 at St. Paul A. M. E. Church pastored by the Rev. A. L. Lamar.

REV. F. L. SHUTTLESWORTH

ONE YEAR AGO AT SARDIS

Acts 27:25 "Wherefore, Sirs be of good cheer: For I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me". Tonight one year ago we met in Sardis Baptist Church to form an organization designed to strike forever from our lives the shackles and bonds of an outdated slave society, and to press forward in this our day for the full Rights, opportunities, and privileges of first class citizenship. We met then in a critical time and under difficult circumstances. Men who had the power of the South in their hands were trying to kill our hopes for freedom, and to stamp out by judicial directive the spark of faith that had fired the hearts of the Founding Fathers. Without a legal arm of defense, it was thought that Negroes could not again, or would never again dare attack the vile god of Segregation, and that there would be no further Clamor from us for our Rights. The voice then was that of the WCC and KKK, who because of the political prestige that Segregation had given them, were able to dedicate to the legislature, the Courts, and the seats of local government.

But they reckoned without the power of Almighty God, or forgot to remember that Faith works its best miracles under difficult and critical circumstances. For we arose up that historic night to keep our date with destiny. We stood together as one man—pledging each to the other our lives, our fortunes, our sacred honor. With massive voice from unafraid hearts, we cried out "Give us liberty or give us death." We possessed that night a "faith that would not shrink, though pressed by every foe."

CHALLENGE SEGREGATION

We stood up like men of faith, with love in our hearts, but with determination in our breasts not only to defy and challenge Segregation practices and customs, but also to say to the "Uncle Toms" of yesterday, "get behind us Satan, for you are offensive to us. You have kept us behind long enough. No longer do we need you to procrastinate and receive "pats" and "handouts". Find your crack and hide, for Negroes from henceforth will follow a leadership that will lead to the mountain top. Crumbs will no longer sustain us; we must have part of the loaf that is democracy. Some became angry and envious and the politicians raved; but together we have marched for a whole year. Some felt that this was just another "stunt" by eager and misguided Negroes, and that it would—as had many things in the past—blow over in a fortnight. It was felt that "they're hot now but they'll cool off afterwhile."

But God was speaking to us and through us, and tonight the "stunt" is still going strong; stronger than ever before. For in spite of the slander we have withstood, the threats that we have heard, and the violence we have sustained, I am sure, positively sure, that nothing shall stop us until we cross the Segregation river and tread the shores in our day of unrestricted freedom.

Our inspiration for freedom is bringing us closer together, and thank God, has made us unafraid. Never before have we stuck together and never before have we spoken as one. We are a Christian Organization and therefore will not hate. We are not against white people or their valid interests, but we are for true Americanism. God will that we shall ever remain so.

NEVER GIVE UP

Let us now consider the times and a faith for these times. Darkness never subdues itself; it must be overcome by light. Satan, the arch-enemy of love, mercy, and justice never gives up in his struggle to imprison men's minds and create confusion. Thus our times are as critical and dangerous as a year ago.

Southern hospitality has taken wings and Southern justice has taken a holiday. Justice is what the Councils and Klans want it to be. The Supreme Court of the U. S., is the object of official and judicial Southern scorn, and the Birmingham City judge has opinioned as unconstitutional the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. All this despite the laws made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land. . . . and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby. . . "It would be the worst of tragedies and the height of folly for the Federal Government to remain silent while the authority of the Constitution is being superceded in 4 or 5 states of the South.

In the absence of a positive and forthright position from the Federal Government, the scene in the South today is one of defiance, subversion of the Constitution, a tendancy to challenge all federal authority, and confusion. Our legislative halls ring with efforts to preserve Segregation, even to the threat of abolishing counties to prevent Negroes from effective voting. While jury trials are called for by Southern Spokesmen in Washington, juries are busy in Alabama turning loose Criminals who sign confessions of bombing sacred Churches and defenseless homes at night, and freeing Klansmen who confess to wearing weapons and engage in violent shootings. In our area alone, 21 bombings have occurred without the apprehension of one person. We stand in extreme danger for our lives day and night, and it seems that help is far away. They would like for us to think there is no hope.

"CHEER UP MEN"

It was also in a distressing situation when Paul uttered the exhaltation found in the text. He was a prisoner on a ship headed for Rome. Being caught in the treacherous currents between the islands in the Agean Sea the ship was exceedingly tossed with a tempestuous and windy sea. Efforts to lighten and relieve the situation failed; neither the sun nor stars was seen for several days, all hope seemed to fail, and they were on the verge of shipwreck. Human efforts gave way to faith, as in the previous night God's Angel visited Paul to tell him that Heaven was watching. And to the terrified sailors aboard the servant of God spoke words of faith: "Cheer up men, for I believe God". The ship will be lost, and you will be saved—some even by broken boards, but none will be lost. Cheer up men; have courage, keep faith; the voice said it would be all right. Men I believe God.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are tonight in deep and treacherous waters. Without trying to be either philosophical or pathetic I tell you in plain simple language that some men are yet trying to hold shut forever in our faces the doors of equal opportunity and privileges. But I read in Revelation that God would set before us an open door which no man could shut. And I believe God, that it shall be even as He said.

LOVE FOR THE NEGRO

Truth would compel us to admit that there is really no real freedom for us under Segregation. And the professed love for the Negro by the Southern White man is in fact not real love, which means mutual respect and admiration but a kind of paternalism, such as master for a slave, or big man to a little friend, or as a helping hand to one in need. Nobody fully respects anyone whom he can control or maneuver at will. So long as the Negro is docile, quiet, and "in his place", back doors, back seats, specially marked inferior facilities, his big friend will be sweet and kind; but once in a front seat, or First class facility, this same friend becomes a raging enemy.

Segregation has become a way of life for whites in the South. It is the real enemy we face, and Segregation laws are what we are fighting. It legislates that a white person is superior and a Negro inferior. It places all governmental and judicial positions in white hands so that the politician feels and acts as if "all power is in his hands." But Jesus said "all power is in His hands" and I believe God.

Segregation is a moral and social cancer which is corrupting the health of the whole Southern body. It is an evil which must be destroyed. It causes otherwise normal men to forget dignity and act like beasts in defense of its laws.

DOUBLE STANDARD JUSTICE

It causes men who live together all their lives to fear and be suspicious of each other all their lives. It makes color of skin the criteria for supremacy: thus the worst low class white can occupy a place above the best Negro; and white skin becomes more important than white and pure hearts. The love of Segregation has taken precedence over the Love of God: thus it becomes relatively easy for some white men to sing Amazing Grace on Sunday morning in the choirs, and march at night in robes to burn crosses. Segregation causes one standard of justice for Whites and another for Negroes. It was perhaps ironic that the same paper which reported the release by a jury of confessed church bombers in Montgomery also carried that of a 17 year old Negro boy getting 20 years for attempted rape.

And so the story goes, all down the line. Segregation, not the white man, is the enemy we face. It has become the fundamental issue in the country. If Segregation lives then Democracy must die. Any system which must be supported by threats, unjust laws, bombs, and ill will cannot forever live.

And so tonight, we reaffirm our Faith in American Democracy, and pledge our continued resistance to Segregation and Discrimination. We must never retreat from this position no matter what the cost. There must be one law for all or there will be no peace. We are called upon by God to stand now like men. Therefore be strong, and of good courage ..... and let us play the men for our people ..... and the Lord do that which seemeth Him good. 2nd Samuel 10:12.

MAN OF FAITH

A personal word, please. I speak tonight as a man of Faith. I have no magic wand to wave nor any quick solution by which the God of Segregation can be made to disappear. I offer myself — my life — to lead as God directs. My family and I — and Bethel Church — have tasted of the bitterest dregs of the vile cup of Segregation. But from the pitch black terrors we have learned a Faith which cannot be conquered. We have found out that there's a Man upstairs who is not asleep; a Man who was there Christmas night, even before the bomb exploded. Truly the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear God.

Because we stand up in these times. we may, even as the early Christians, have to pass through the fire and run through the waters. But I read in Isaiah 43:2, "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shalt not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, it shalt not burn thee, neither shalt the flame be kindled upon thee. Ladies and gentlemen, I believe God, that it shall be even as He said. Thus we say to the god of Segregation: "It may be that our God whom we serve will deliver us; but if not, we will not bow, nor serve any longer.

Let us go on knowing in our hearts that we hate no one nor will we harm anyone. Let us persevere through this midnight of terror and madness, so that the American children of the Future will not have to undergo these ordeals; and thus will rise up and call us blessed.

I know not what the future holds. It matters little who is elected or who comes and goes; we will follow Him who was born to be the Leader and Savior of men. Be not dismayed whatever betides. God will take care of you. ..... A mighty fortress is our God ..... A bulwark never failing.

I close with these words which are my daily inspiration: "Lead kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom The night is dark, and I'm so far from home. I do not ask to see the distant scene, One step ahead is enough for me."

Group To Move Negroes North Ready For Fight On Curbs

ATLANTA, Nov. 2 (UP)— The American Resettlement Foundation announced today it is looking for homes in exclusive neighborhoods of the non-south for at least 50 Negro families.

The group warned it is prepared to fight in court any effort to stop the purchases or the occupancy of the homes by Negroes.

This latest plane in the Deep South cold war against forces promoting racial integration evolved as the idea of a Georgia chicken farmer. It is now in full bloom as a going corporation.

Although cloaked in words that do not include anywhere the word "Negro," it's easy to read between the lines of its charter and discover its real purpose: To pressure liberal elements into soft pedaling further attempts to desegregate the South.

SPOTS SINGLED OUT

The sponsors contend there are numerous fashionable residential areas of the non-South where either in writing or by agreement Negroes are excluded. Those spots will be singled out for the resettlement. If a nationally prominent figure lives nearby, so much the better for the foundation's purpose.

Sun, 11-3-57

This non-profit corporation was chartered less than a month ago "to assist underprivileged persons to obtain adequate housing."

But the real intent behind the foundation is to hurl the charge of racial discrimination right into the faces of prominent white non-southerners who have been active in the civil rights campaign.

At this stage of the organization, the strategy of the founders appears to be: To encourage rumors that they are buying property for Negro resettlement in exclusive non - southern neighborhoods and, on occasion, actually to plank down money for options.

$3,000 RAISED

So far the group has raised only about $3,000, not even enough to pay the customary 5 per cent earnest money for an option on a really-swanky layout.

The foundation was chartered Oct. 10, listing three founders in the front lines of Georgia's segregation camp:

Alpha Alsbury Fowler, Jr., a legislator, former adjutant general and guiding spirit of the movemen. He first came into prominence in Georgia as a wartime B17 squadron commander who nursed his plane home from Vienna with two engines shot out. He raises chickens and runs theaters for a living.

Alan Kemper, professional politician now serving as state welfare director; also weekly newspaper editor.

Roy V. Harris, long known as a governor-maker in the state; current president of Georgia States Rights Council; publisher of a private paper playing up his racial views.

"This is as good as Little Rock," Harris said as the headlines grew bigger over published reports the group had optioned a $75,000 home near Vice President Richard Nixon's and would move in a Negro family with 15 children. The report was later denied, but only after it had a full day's buildup.

Although not averse to publicity, the resettlement bosses are not in it just for that.

"One of the great tragedies of race relations is the fact that many advocate integration and practice segregation," Flower said. "We intend to point up the hypocrisy and low state to which both political parties are sinking on this subject."

Fowler said the intent of his movement is to expose real estate covenants in non-southern cities that forbid Negroes to buy homes certain areas although state laws prohibit segregation.

He contends such covenants are in force in disregard to the Supreme Court decisions outlawing such covenants.

"We intend to go into the northern courts whenever the chance arises and fight to the finish to gain the admission of Negroes to white areas," he said.

He claimed at least 50 Negro families have applied to the foundation for "resettlement."

'I Won't Take Back a Thing I've Said!'

'Satchmo' Tells Off Ike, U. S.!

Armstrong Blasts Bias In America

FARGO, N. D. — Louis (Pops) Armstrong, in the rapid-fire manner of the jazz classic, "Little Rock Getaway," has not only "sounded" on Uncle Same's treatment of "his people" once more, but has also blown some awfully sour notes in the direction of road manager Pierre Tallerie.

Tallerie earned the invective of "Pops" when he told reporters that Louis, who had blasted U. S. jim crow, had turned down a State Department tour, was "sorry he spouted off."

Louis' reactions were such that there is a strong possibility that Mr. Tallerie may be removed from his job. Armstrong told the Courier, "As much as I'm trying to do for my people, this road man, Tallerie, whom I've respected for 20 years, although I've suspected him of being prejudiced, has worked with Negro musicians and made his money. off. them,. has proved that he hates Negroes the first time he opened his mouth, and I don't see why Mr. (Joe) Glaser (booking agent) doesn't remove him from this band.

"He has done more harm than good. I can't see why Mr. Glaser doesn't transfer him to a white band where he belongs. Everything Tallerie said he made it up with that newspaperman without my signature.

"I wouldn't take back a thing I've said. I've had a beautiful life over 40 years in music, but I feel the down-trodden situation the same as any other Negro. My parents and family suffered through all of that old South and things are new now, and Tallerie and no prejudiced newspaper can make me change it. What I've said is me. I feel that."

"I wouldn't take back a thing I've said. What I've said is me. That's the way I feel!"

After Tallerie had spoken to white reporters, Armstrong stated, "I was hot . . . and am still hot . . . over the school situation in Arkansas and the way Governor Faubus has mishandled it.

"My people . . . the Negroes . . . are not looking for anything . . . we just want a square shake. But when I see on television and read about a crowd spitting on and cursing at a little colored girl . . . I think I have a right to get sore and say something about it."

With respect to the proposed trip to Russia under State Department auspices, Louis said, "Maybe I will . . . if they do something to straighten out that Arkansas mess. After all, America is my country, too, and I've always tried to do anything I could to help it. But do you dig me when I say I still have a right to blow my top over injustice?"

LOUIS' SPURNING of the proposed trip had hit the headlines last week in Grand Forks, N. D., when Louis announced that he was going to spurn the trip to the Soviet.

Louis had then explained: "The people over there ask me what's wrong with my country. What am I supposed to say? The way they are treating my people in the South, the government can go to hell."

"Pops" had also described President Eisenhower as being "two-faced" and having "no guts." Louis asserted that the President was allowing the Governor of Arkansas to run the Federal Government.

. It's getting almost so bad a colored man doesn't got any country," said Armstrong. Louis also had choice words to say about Faubus, whose action he called a "publicity stunt by the greatest of all publicity hounds."

Louis had some kind words for the South's "intelligent white people," noting, "It's the bad lower class people who make all the noise." As for Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, "He's the greatest man down there. I hope North Dakota has a lot more like him!"

STATE DEPARTMENT spokesmen have been singularly reticent about the Armstrong sounds.

In fact, Lincoln White merely observed, "Mr. Armstrong has made a tremendous hit wherever he has gone and we've always been pleased when he traveled abroad."

The Armstrong statements also shocked many of his critics who have long put him in the ranks of the "Uncle Tom's" because of his willingness to play before segregated audiences in the South.

Blows His Own Horn— Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong, celebrated trumpet player and jazz expert, rocked the world with a new tune when he refused a trip to Russia sponsored by the U. S. State Department. He said he couldn't accept the trip when this country allows Negro school children to be mistreated and molested. Louis is shown here surrounded by friends and well-wishers during his recent visit to Oslo, Norway.—Story on Page 3.

Now that the Supreme Court has "crammed" integration down our throats the relationship is becoming rather strained because my firm belief is that the average Negro prefers to be with his own kind as a cook of ours told us when we wanted to build a house for her on our property.

I think the average Negro would rather be left alone but they have no choice either. RUTH CUNNINGHAM,

Satchmo Does Fast Switch After Ike Gives His Talk

DAVENPORT, Iowa —(AP)— Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong says he may go to Russia after all.

After hearing President Eisenhower's televised explanation of why he sent troops to Arkansas, the famous Negro jazz trumpet player declared: "Things are looking better than they did before."

Armstrong had planned to make a government-sponsored tour of Russia but canceled it in bitterness when the school integration problem developed in Arkansas this month.

After the speech by the president, whom Armstrong had criticized previously, Satchmo said he wired the president.

"If you decide to walk into the schools with the little colored kids, take me along, Daddy. God bless you."

Armstrong heard the speech while here to play a concert. "It was just wonderful the way he explained it. It was all in good faith," he said.

Of his proposed trip to Russia he said, "I won't say that I won't go. We may get to Russia on our next trip. We have Germany, Italy and France in mind and Russia isn't far away."

"All I want to do is blow that horn," Armstrong insisted. "Music puts everybody in good spirits."

Satchmo Flips His Wig

Our grinning, effervescent, jovial ace trumpeter, Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong, who has been hailed as Ambassador of Jazz by a grateful America deep in the cold war, has surprisingly gone berserk over the current rash of civil rights violations.

Denouncing President Eisenhower and Governor Faubus in strong terms, Satchmo has cancelled his State Department-sponsored Russian tour saying, "The way they are treating my people in the South the Government can go to hell."

All of which confirms what the celebrated Rev. John Jasper said about "the sun do move."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Let Armstrong Go To Russia

Who cares whether "Satchmo" Armstrong goes to Russia or not, unless, of course, he wants to stay over there, along with Eartha Kitt, Lena Horne and any others who want to go. Also, why should the taxpayer have to pay the expense of this so-called good will tour?

I think this outrage of his against the government is insulting and contemptuous, and why does he say only the South is mistreating his people. He had best take another look around his habitats and he will learn that our Negroes aren't as mistreated as he imagines.

Miss Kitt Joins Louis in Blast at Ike

Eartha, Lena Agree With 'Satchmo'

CHICAGO (ANP) — A rising chorus of support from prominent Negro entertainers and national figures has resulted from the wake of Louis Armstrong's tirades against jim crow in the United States.

Lena Horne, Eartha Kitt, and Jackie Robinson were among those who lifted their voices against racial prejudice and injustice. On the other hand, concert artist Marian Anderson was rather reticent about making her feelings known to the public.

From Philadelphia, singer Lena Horne commented:

• Personally, I think people of all colors should be concerned about what's happening in the South. I, too, would decline to appear in Russia if I were asked by the Government, because I would fear embarrassing questions by the press, especially the Soviet press."

EARTHA KITT

Miss Horne would not sanction Satch's remark that Ike "had no guts," because she said she was a Democrat, and "would feel much freer to criticize a President of my own party."

MARIAN ANDERSON, from Honolulu, where she is on a State Department sponsored tour of Asia, said, simply:

"One has feelings . . . but now is not the time for me to say something. He (Armstrong) is a great artist. I could say something."

EARTHA KITT, at a motel in Windsor, Ont., just before her appearance in a supper club, had a caustic comment to give. Pulling no punches, Miss Kitt said:

- "Armstrong is absolutely right. We shouldn't go to Russia preaching things we are not.

Labeling the President as "a man without a soul," she continued:

- "How can he sit and not have any emotion for what is happening right under his nose? He is not even two-faced. He has not even shown us one side of his face.

"I don't see how President Eisenhower can have any pride or any respect for his position when he lets somebody like Faubus get away with this. All the purpose of the whole country is being lost. We don't have any principles or honor. We don't have anything to stand for any more.

- "I have become a very discouraged person myself. I certainly feel as though I'm not human."

Another outspoken Negro personage in the entertainment field, retired baseball player Jackie Robinson, congratulated Satch for expressing "a feeling that is becoming rampant among Negroes.

Said Robbie: "It is spreading very rapidly. Now the Negroes are beginning to stand up and be counted. I am very pleased. It shows a unanimity that has been lacking in the past. I can't say President Eisenhower is letting Governor Faubus run the country. I do say he (Ike) has been lacking in leadership."

Satchmo Blasts—The above scene, showing Louis Armstrong, center, and, left to right, drummer Barrett Deems, clarinetist Edmund Hall and trombonist Trummy Young, alighting on foreign soil on his goodwill tour last year, will not be repeated again unless something is done about the way Negroes are being treated in the South.

Little Rock Woman's Outburst May Draw Eastland Citation

Commercial Wed. 10-30-57

MEMPHIS, Oct. 29 (AP) — In a wild climax to a dull day, the Senate internal security subcommittee today voted to consider a citation of contempt against Mrs. Grace Lorch.

The fiery wife of a white professor at a Little Rock Negro college threw the hearing into an uproar by answering every question with a statement which began: "I am here under protest. . ."

Sen. Eastland (D-Miss), subcommittee chairman, said the group would decide later whether to cite Mrs. Lorch for contempt, along with any possible action against witnesses who failed to appear.

As Mrs. Lorch repeatedly tried to read her prepared statement, Sen. Jenner (R-Ind) pounded the the table with clenched fist and shouted:

"You're a troublemaker, aren't you? Saying this committee investigated you because you protected a Negro girl in Little Rock's integration struggle. We are not concerned with integration.

"We don't care what you did in Little Rock. We are concerned with the threat of Communism to this nation. We want to know if you were a member of the Communist party in Boston. . ."

Mrs. Lorch again began: "I am here under protest . . ." Sen. Eastland's pounding gavel drowned out a sentence. ". . . that is my answer."

"This woman came here to try to disrupt this proceedings," Jenner thundered. "If she's not going to answer questions I think she should be excused and cited for contempt."

The standing-room-only crowd in the federal courtroom where the hearings were held erupted with a roar of applause mixed with rebel yells.

Mrs. Lorch, a small, gray-haired woman, showed recently on the nation's newspages when she defied an angry crowd of whites to offer sympathy to a weeping Negro schoolgirl turned back from Little Rock Central High.

The two-day hearing, originally scheduled for three days, was called to investigate "reports which indicate Communist activities in Tennessee, Kentucky and nearby areas."

Both Mrs. Lorch and her husband, Lee, have long been active in working to breach racial barriers. He was cited for contempt after refusing to answer questions on Communism before a House subcommittee in 1954.

The charge against Professor Lorch was dropped 14 months later, only to be refiled. The case was heard before a federal judge in Dayton, Ohio, last April. A decision is pending.

Jenner said the subcommittee had information that led it to believe Mrs. Lorch was a member of the New England district of the Communist party in 1945.

The senator said "we have information that she had connections with Junius Scales, southern regional director of the Communist party."

Little Rock Woman Balks Closed Probe

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 10-29-57

MEMPHIS, Oct. 28 (AP)—A white woman who shielded a Negro schoolgirl during Little Rock's integration uproar refused to testify at a closed session of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee hearing today.

"Anything I say will be out here in the open court," said Mrs. Grace Lorch of Little Rock in an angry recess exchange with Sen. Jenner (R-Ind). "I'll see you up a tree before I'll go into any executive session."

Mrs. Lorch said she had no lawyer and had been given no time to hire one. Sen. Jenner, presiding in the absence of the chairman, Sen. Eastland (D-Miss), gave her 24 hours to obtain counsel.

Thirty persons, including Mrs. Lorch, were subpoenaed as witnesses in a hearing on "reports which indicate Communist activity in Tennessee, Kentucky and nearby areas."

Of 14 scheduled to testify today only five were present. Sen. Jenner said the others declined to attend on reasons ranging from childbirth to medical disability. The three-day hearing resumes tomorrow.

The lone "unfriendly" witness, Donald L. West, who said he farms near Douglasville, Ga., turned away some 20 questions on the [illegible] and [illegible] during the brief afternoon session were Dr. Ralph Franklin of Morehouse, Mo., who testified he was a Communist for 18 months during his student years, and Mrs. Alberta Ahearn of Louisville, Ky., a former FBI undercover agent.

When subpoenaed at Little Rock Saturday, Mrs. Lorch said the action must have "some connection with her recent show of sympathy for a Negro schoolgirl heckled by an angry crowd of whites at Little Rock Central High.

Mrs. Lorch, a small, gray-haired woman, was alone among whites in comforting 15-year-old Elizabeth Eckford when she was turned back by National Guard troops at the school last Sept.

She sat beside the weeping Negro girl on a bus stop bench near the school and snapped back at taunting whites.

Deplore president's decision—

Southern governors shocked by federal troop threat

BY JACK BELL

SEA ISLAND, Ga., Sept. 24—(AP)—Southern and border state governors presented a solid front today against any use of the federal troops to enforce school integration in Arkansas or elsewhere in Dixie.

President Eisenhower's statement yesterday said he would use the full power of the United States—"including whatever force may be necessary—to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the federal court" shocked this conference of Southern governors into the general interpretation the president was threatening the use of federal troops to enforce desegregation in classrooms.

THE IMMEDIATE REACTION from Republican as well as Democratic governors was against an assumption of presidential authority paralleling President Grover Cleveland's use of federal troops to break the Pullman strike in the past century.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, a Republican Eisenhower rooter, said he hopes there will be no necessity of sending federal soldiers into Little Rock to enforce integration at Central High School there.

McKeldin said he hopes "the people of Arkansas will comply with the law and make integration possible."

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS of Arkansas, who ordered out national guardsmen who denied Negro students entrance to the high school and then withdrew them in compliance with a federal court edict, said he did not believe he had obstructed any federal court order.

In a proclamation Eisenhower commanded "all persons engaged in obstruction of justice to cease and desist in obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the federal court" in the Little Rock integration case.

Faubus himself deplored any clash of state and federal authority in the explosive Little Rock situation, although he maintained that Gordon was free to call out the state guard if he chose.

GOV. RAYMOND GARY of Oklahoma, who has sponsored the school integration cause at this conference, said that regardless of how any governor personally felt about the mixing of the races in the classrooms, he would deplore the use of federal troops to enforce it.

"It would be very regrettable if the president were to order federal troops into Little Rock," Gary said.

GOV. MARVIN GRIFFIN of Georgia said he hopes Eisenhower's statements are not interpreted as meaning the president intends to use federal troops in the South. Griffin recalled that in the Congressional passage of the civil rights bill the so-called "force" laws of 1870 had been repealed. These permitted the use of federal troops to enforce U. S. court orders.

"President Eisenhower has said so many times he would not use federal troops to enforce integration orders I hesitate to think that he now would do so," Griffin said. "I have also heard him call for patience in this situation.

"It is time for the president to utilize some patience and understanding. It is time for him to stop and think. A majority of the people in the South are unalterably opposed to integration. The decision of the Supreme Court on this question is not the will of the Congress or the people of the United States."

GRIFFIN, WHO IS credited in some quarters with inspiring Faubus' decision to call out the Guard in Little Rock, gave the Arkansas governor a break at last night's state dinner of this 23rd annual meeting of the Southern governors.

In introducing Faubus, Griffin told the audience:

"I like the way this man talks and acts."

The crowd, mostly made up of assistants and supporters of the governors, let loose with rebel yells and the most enthusiastic demonstration that was given to any of the dozen attending governors.

GOV. JAMES E. FOLSOM of Alabama and Gov. Earl K. Long of Louisiana offered no official comment, but they made it apparent they endorsed generally the expression of Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina.

Timmerman said that if Eisenhower has directed the people of Arkansas to "mix the children of Arkansas against their will, he is attempting to set himself up as a dictator and this may be taken as a further evidence of an effort to communize America."

"This statement of the president's also points up the incompatibility of trying to solve local problems by orders of a federal court," Timerman said. "On the one hand we have a federal judge sitting in judgment on the actions of a responsible governor in seeking to preserve the peace. On the other hand, we have the president of the United States threatening to do himself that which the court condemned the governor of Arkansas for attempting to do, insofar as the president threatens to use troops to preserve the peace."

Timmerman said he is convinced a majority of the people in the South are opposed to integration.

"The decision of the Supreme Court on this issue does not represent the will of Congress nor a majority of the people," he declared.

GOVERNORS TO MEET UNDER RACE SHADOW

Some Talk Of Move To Oust Democratic Chairman

FAUBUS DUE TO ATTEND

By The United Press

ATLANTA, Sept. 20.—Southern governors, with Arkansas' Orval Faubus scheduled to join them, converged on Georgia Friday night for momentous talks on the racial issue.

Some of their state Democratic chairmen already were talking of a Southwide move to oust National Party Chairman Paul Butler because of his censure of Governor Faubus and strong civil rights stand.

To Gather At Sea Island

But at the executive level, the governors were holding their fire until they get together over the week end, first in Atlanta for the dedication of a new Regional Education Building Saturday.

On Sunday, governors from a dozen Dixie or border states will gather at Sea Island, Ga., for the annual Southern Governors Conference.

Not one item of segregation or integration appears on the advance program. Governor Faubus, for instance, is due to preside at a discussion of industrial development.

Certain To Be Aired

But recent events in Arkansas, leading to Governor Faubus' showdown with the Federal courts and to a lesser extent with the President himself over integration of a Little Rock high school, are certain to be aired by the governors privately or publicly. The situation in Arkansas affects the entire area.

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia announced that Governor Faubus' office had notified him the Arkansas Governor would attend the conference. There had been doubt that he would be able to do so with the Little Rock crisis still unresolved.

Governor Griffin and Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina, were the two governors who praised Faubus' stand without reservation.

Significantly, the angriest resentment to National Democratic chairman came from Georgia and South Carolina.

LIBRARY DEFERS CASE

Request By Negro Is Put Off By Board

The Memphis Public Library Board has deferred action on the request of a Negro bank executive that he and his family be issued cards for use at the main library at McLean and Peabody.

The request was made by Jesse H. Turner of 1278 Gill, an officer of the Tri-State Bank of Memphis, through H. T. Lockard, attorney and president of the Memphis Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Jesse Cunningham, librarian, said no action was taken at Thursday's meeting because some board members had not become well enough informed on the details of the request.

Wassell Randolph, board chairman, presided at the meeting. The next meeting will be Oct. 17 at Cossitt Library.

Governors Hit Faubus; President Praised

Atlanta Ga. Journal 9-26-57

SEA ISLAND, Ga. — Governor Cecil Underwood of West Virginia told a group of Southern governors here Wednesday that he was against any condemnation of President Eisenhower's actions in the Little Rock situation and strongly blasted Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus who has "clearly calculated to reap maximum publicity for himself at the expense of this conference.'

Atlanta Ga. Constitution 9-26-57

Underwood was joined by Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland in his outspoken support of the president. The two governors were among a group of Southern Govvernors here attending the Southen Governor's Conference.

Underwood's statements preceded an executive session in which the majority of governors named a committee to ask the President to remove troops from Little Rock "at the earliest possible moment." It is not certain that the President will meet with the Dixie Leaders

Attacking his colleague's stand on the Little Rock school integration issue, Gov. Underwood charged the other members with breaking faith by bringing the South integration troubles up for formal action.

Referring to Faubus, he said, "In the face of civil stdife--apparently created by his own actions----the governor of Arkansas came to this conference.

"Since his staged entrance, amid fanfare and planted props, to the dinner in Atlanta Saturday evening, he moved in a manner clearly calculated to reap maximum publicity for himself at the expense of the conference."

Republican Governor McKeldin said he voted for the call for a meeting with the President because he thought such a session now would be "highly beneficial to the cause of orderliness in the continuing implementation through out the South of the laws contained in the 14th ammendment."

McKeldin blamed the difficulties squarely on Ark. Gov. Faubus and declared:

"The contagion of violence and of disrespect for the law which he sewed with reckless abondon spread as a threat to decency, huobedience throughout and the law abidence throughout the South."

"I know," McKeldin said, "that moderation prevails in the thoughts of most of the governors in the South. I am sure that all have learned from the horrible example in Arkansas that a repetition of the Faubus procedure would be tragic if extended to another state

Southern Governors Will Appeal To Ike For Withdrawal Of Little Rock Troops

SEA ISLAND, Ga., Sept. 25 (AP)—Southern governors voted 11-1 today to seek conferences with President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas aimed at the withdrawal of federal troops from Little Rock, Ark.

They elected Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, regarded as a moderate on integration, as their leader for the coming year although the nominating committee had favored Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, a fervent segregationist.

GOV. LEROY COLLINS
Conference Choice

Virginia, the Southern Governors Conference acted in closed session to set up a five-man committee headed by Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina to seek meetings with Eisenhower and Faubus in an attempt to find a formula to end the Arkansas controversy over school integration.

Montgomery Ala.

Hodges told newsmen he had talked to White House staff members about the resolution and "they liked the resolution and the idea" of a presidential conference.

Hodges declined to name the presidential aides involved but others said contact was made primarily through former Gov. Howard Pyle of Arizona, a presidential assistant.

Hodges said the committee also had called Gov. Faubus and that the Arkansas governor would be glad to cooperate. The governors suggested Friday as their choice for such a conference.

IMMEDIATE TALKS

Collins, elected to succeed Hodges as chairman of the conference, indicated the committee will ask for an immediate audience with Eisenhower. Besides Collins and Hodges, other members are Gov Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee, and Griffin. All are Democrats except McKeldin.

The nominating committee, made up of Clement, as chairman, and Govs. Earl Long of Louisiana and Thomas Stanley of Virginia, voted 2-1 for Griffin. But before the governors went into executive session, Clement indicated he would ask the conference to elect Collins. Long and Stanley reportedly favored Griffin because of his all-cut opposition to integration.

MODERATE VICTORY

After the session, it was announced that Collins had been elected in what apparently was a victory for the moderate point of view, but neither the vote nor details of the discussion were revealed.

Underwood, newest member of the conference, said he was opposed to action on the integration controversy because he belives the conference was being made a "tool" of Faubus, who attended the opening meeting but flew home Tuesday.

"I am tired of participation in a conference which increasingly becomes a grandstand show for one governor," Underwood said in a statement.

MAXIMUM PUBLICITY

"A governor rarely leaves his state in times of critical emergency. In the face of civil strife—apparently created by his own actions—the governor of Arkansas came to this conference. Since, he has moved in a manner clearly calculated to reap maximum publicity for himself at the expense of the conference.

Underwood said that if any action by governors was indicated, it should have been taken in the full conference of governors of all the states and not in a regional meeting.

Eleven other governors, including Republicans McKeldin and J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware, went along on the adoption of the following resolution:

"The situation in Little Rock is a matter of grave concern. It is imperative that a constructive solution be found. A committee of this conference, appointed by its chairman, should request a conference or conferences with the President and the governor of Arkansas, separately or jointly, seeking withdrawal of federal troops from Arkansas at the earliest possible moment."

HIGHLY BENEFICIAL

McKeldin said in a statement he voted for the resolution not because he believes it is needed "to correct the unhappy situation created by Gov. Faubus in Arkansas" but because he believes a conference between the President and Southern governors "would be highly beneficial to the cause of orderliness in the continuing implementation throughout the South of the law contained in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution."

Collins told reporters the White House knew in advance 'on an informal basis," of the action planned here. He said the committee would be prepared to meet Eisenhower "at any time he sets." Clement, who originally suggested that the governors act to seek a conference with Eisenhower, said he was gratified at the conference vote.

"I feel sure the governors selected for unprecedented service on this most important committee will approach their duties with prayer and a determination to render service to their fellow Americans of every race, creed and color throughout the country," he said.

STUNNED REACTION

There was little doubt here that Eisenhower would be willing to meet with the Southern governors. There was some question, however, whether the President would feel there would be any value in including Faubus in a joint conference.

freezing the Arkansas action in Guard by federalizing it and then sending in federal troops to conduct Negroes to classes in the Little Rock Central High School.

Eisenhower and Faubus conferred Sept. 14 at presidential vacation headquarters at Newport, R.I., on the Little Rock situation.

Gov. A. B. Chandler of Kentucky who did not attend the conference, invited the group to meet in Kentucky next year and the indications were that they would accept.

The action of the Democratic governors in pushing the resolution through reflected their stunned reaction to Eisenhower's

M'Keldin Gets Fiery Cross

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 6 (AP). — A cross was burned early today in front of the executive mansion of Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin. City and State police were investigating.

The cross, measuring three feet high and two feet wide, was attached to an iron fence in front of the mansion. It was flanked by signs saying "Down with traitor McKeldin!" and "Save our Southern way of life!"

CRITIC OF FAUBUS

McKeldin has publicly criticized the actions of Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas in the Little Rock integration crisis and has blasted segregationists in his own State.

The governor later issued a statement in which he said the cross-burning apparently was the "bitter fruit" of the "seeds of intolerance" planted in Arkansas.

He said it created no sense of personal fear and would not change "either the commendable position of officialdom of the State and its civil divisions or the praiseworthy support of the general populace in the cause of human rights."

SEEN AT 1:05 A. M.

The flaming cross was spotted about 1:05 A. M. by William Clark, an 18-year-old sailor who lives in Annapolis and is a member of a volunteer fire unit. He ran to a nearby apartment, phoned city police and then helped them tear down the cross and extinguish the flames.

The cross was wrapped in burlap and soaked in oil, police said.

Two four-by-five-foot cardboard signs, neatly lettered with red paint, flanked the cross.

One sign bore a verse from the State song, "Maryland, My Maryland." It read: "Better the fire upon the roll; better the shot, the blade, the bowl; than crucifixion of the soul — Maryland!"

Beneath the verse were the words, "Down with traitor McKeldin!"

The other sign read: "Save our Southern way of life! States' rights and segregation or secession."

A small Confederate flag was affixed to both signs.

Sputnik jeering at U. S. for Little Rock, says Mrs. Luce

Wed. 10-30-57, p. 7

NEW YORK — The "beep" of the Russian earth satellite, "Sputnik", gave the "intercontinental, outer-space raspberry" to the United States for Little Rock, and for U. S. pretentiousness, Mrs. Clara Booth Lucy, famed playwright and former U. S. Ambassador to Italy, told 2500 persons attending the Alfred E. Smith Memorial Foundation dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria last week.

Mrs. Lucy told a $100-a-plate audience, which included the Mayor and Governor of New York, also the archbishops of New York and Los Angeles, that Little Rock and the Soviet achievement are "shocking defeats" for the United States and threaten the "security, indeed the very survival of America.

"The baleful beep of the Sputnik, which is heard in every land, every hour, on the hour, is an intercontinental outerspace raspberry to a decade of American pretensions that the American way of life was a gilt-edged guarantee of our material superiority.

"It has been the American pretension that what we sometimes call somewhat too vaguely the American way, was destined, indeed, predestined, to remain militarily and scientifically stronger than any other 'way of life' . . .

"It is a grim portent to hundreds of millions . . . that American leadership can no longer be counted on to keep even a narrow lead over its enemies," the wife of the editor-publisher of Time and Life said.

Mrs. Lucy said people of the world are asking, since Little Rock, if there really is equal opportunity here, whether the nation is really devoted to equality "regardless of color, race, or creed. She continued:

"They have seen men, white men, burn a Negro in effigy. They have see men, white men, strike children because their skins were dark. They have seen teenagers tormenting other boys and girls for the same reason.

"A united nation must resolve to overcome these splits by 'an utter devotion to freedom, a devotion which envisages sacrifice for all American citizens,'" she concluded.

Amsterdam News: JAIL THE LEADERS 38a

The pictures showing white mobsters at Little Rock defying the Federal law on integration and beating and kicking Negro newsmen and their friends are as plain as day.

They show the faces of the mob leaders and they show the actual violence of the mob. In other words the pictures themselves make up a clear legal case by which the members of the mob could be put in jail.

But here, almost a month after the violence of the mob at Little Rock, the authorities in that strange city have come forward with a new law by which they hope to jail, not the mobster who defied the Federal Government in violence, but the NAACP leaders who were attempting to see that the law of the land was upheld.

What kind of business is this? What manner of men are these who seek to jail those who have been wronged and make heroes of those who committed the wrongs?

Frankly we have just about lost all patience with Little Rock. There was a time when we felt that Arkansas' crack pot governor was to blame for all the evils of Little Rock.

But now we are not so sure. Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, who showed a reasonable degree of sanity when Faubus called out troops to block integration is the man who issued an order to the NAACP to make its records public and now we have the assistant mayor and the City Council demanding that Mrs. Daisy Bates and all NAACP officers of the city be arrested. Fri. 11-15-57

This is the most ridiculous thing we have heard of in a long, long time. It's sheer nonsense.

Here we have people who have trampled the Federal Constitution into the dust, walking the streets free and the city calling for the arrest of the very pillars of freedom in the city.

Have the people of Little Rock lost their minds? Or are they trying to kid the rest of the nation?

Everyone knows that as soon as the legal machinery of the NAACP gets this latest development into court any sane judge will dismiss it for what it is—another move to find a legal way to commit an illegal act.

There simply is no legal way to commit an illegal act and it's time that the people of the South be made to realize it.

The sane decent minded people of this nation would be much more sympathetic to the people of Little Rock if they were to spend their time tracking down and jailing the leaders of the recent mob violence there and creating a climate under which nine little children could peacefully attend school and - get on with their education.

Amsterdam News: ALL HAIL!

We can think of no person whom we were more happy to welcome to New York City than Mrs. Daisy Bates, the manipulator of the nine heroic "pebbles of Little Rock."

Here is a young woman who epitomizes the courage, versatility and determination of today's Negro woman as she goes back to face the mob at Little Rock.

Mrs. Bates, as state president of the NAACP in Arkansas, clearly saw her duty when the Little Rock crisis arose and how she has performed that duty is one of the most historic and heroic chapters of the fight for civil rights.

At a time when courage is so sadly lacking among many of our people, and when leadership is almost at a permium, Daisy Bates, a working newspaper woman, has stepped into the gap and filled a great need in a manner which can only reflect credit upon herself and the race of women from which she sprang.

She is a credit to her race and as such is a credit to America in the eyes of the world.

All hail!

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT in the N. Y. Post:

Little Rock still seems to be battling against the Supreme Court in roundabout ways:

NAACP officials have been arrested because they did not comply with a recently enacted city ordinance which gives the city the right to examine the membership and financial records of any organization. This, of course, would put in the hands of the city the names of people who would then be made the targets of special threats and probably would be subjected to financial and other handicaps. So the organization would immediately lose many of its members

N. Y. Post: LITTLE ROCK SPEAKS UP

The fallout from Little Rock's Hate-bomb that exploded so many weeks ago will continue to poison the name of America for years to come. But it is heartening to know that decontamination measures have been taken by the voters at the blast site.

City elections in Little Rock Tuesday were a test of support for Gov. Faubus. He lost. Six moderates, backed by the Good Government League and pledged to abide by the Supreme Court integration decision, were elected to the seven-man city board of directors despite intensive rabble-rousing opposition from the White Citizens Council.

The world may take little note of this repudiation of Faubusism in its home town, but America is a cleaner place today than it was before the people of Little Rock found their voice.

Little Rock Church Bars Five Negroes

23 (AP).—Five Negroes tried to
3 (AP).—Five Negroes tried to break the racial barrier in a Little Rock church yesterday but were turned away. They left peacefully.

A church official quoted the five as saying they were instructed by their own pastor to go to the white church.

W. S. Simmons, chairman of the board of Henderson Methodist Church here, gave this account.

A Negro couple asked for admittance just after the Rev. Herston R. Holland's prayer after the collection.

After hasty consultation with Mr. Holland, Mr. Simmons told the couple the board had made no decision on integrating the church and advised them that it "would be best for all concerned" if they left.

He said the couple told him that three Negro women also planned to attend Henderson Methodist Church and, in a few moments, three Negro women arrived in a car.

However, Mr. Simmons said, the couple notified the three other Negroes of Mr. Simmons' suggestion and all five left without further conversation.

"They were very apologetic and as nice as they could be," Mr. Simmons said. "But I think their timing was bad on account of this controversy at Central High School."

Irked Rockefeller To Blast Faubus

By TOM DAVIS
Special To The Herald

LITTLE ROCK — Arkansas' richest citizen is disgusted with Gov. Orval Faubus.

Winthrop Rockefeller, who moved to Arkansas in 1953 to build a model farm and cattle ranch, is getting ready to denounce Faubus in the strongest possible language.

Rockefeller, when he lets loose on Faubus, will resign as chairman of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission.

Although a Republican, he was appointed to the post by Democrat Faubus in 1955. It was a master political stroke by Faubus. The business community hadn't been sure it could trust Faubus.

Many businessmen thought Faubus would be a New Deal Harry Truman Democrat because Faubus got his political start under Gov. Sidney S. McMath, a real Trumanite Democrat, and because Faubus was a friend of Truman.

The business community knew that Rockefeller didn't believe in socialized government, big government spending or the welfare state.

In a real sense, Faubus used Rockefeller.

He knew the name of Rockefeller would be handy in trying to persuade industry to move to Arkansas. He knew that the appointment of Rockefeller would do much to remove doubt by business leaders about Faubus.

Thus far, Rockefeller has refused to turn loose on Faubus. He thinks it wouldn't do any good right now. He is waiting until he thinks he can do the most damage to Faubus' position.

Rockefeller spent about three hours with Faubus Sept. 1, trying to talk him out of calling out the Arkansas National Guard. Faubus ignored him and the National Guard took over at Central High School the next night.

In the 1956 Democratic primary when Faubus was seeking a second term, the segregationists opposing Faubus attacked him by linking him with Rockefeller.

The segregationists pointed out that Rockefeller is a national director of the Urban League. They noted that Rockefeller's Arkansas attorney, Edwin E. Dunaway, of Little Rock, represented the Hoxie, Ark., School Board in 1955 when it won a Federal Court injunction against segregationist interference with integration there.

The segregationists made much of Rockefeller's offer to give one to two million dollars to the Morrilton, Ark., School District to help it build a school program that would be a model for the nation.

Although Rockefeller didn't insist on integration as part of the package, it was assumed by Rockefeller and the school board that the law would require integration.

The segregationists said that Rockefeller was buying integration.

Rockefeller's farm manager is a Negro, which doesn't set well with many Arkansans.

More than a year ago, Rockefeller warned that industry looking for new locations would avoid areas where there were racial disorders.

Now, he feels that much of the good work done by his industrial development commission has been undone. He thinks Arkansas has lost what gains it has made toward convincing the nation that it wasn't still a backward area.

During the past weeks of turmoil, Rockefeller largely has confined himself to his Winrock farm, atop Petit Jean Mountain, about 60 miles from Little Rock.

Here, Rockefeller raises Santa Gertrudis cattle, the breed developed by the famous King Ranch of Texas. His farm is open for public tours, and thousands of Arkansans have visited the impressive layout.

He has developed a new type of lawn grass which has enjoyed a remarkable sale.

Rockefeller likes Arkansas and has made many contributions to his adopted state. He probably will continue to live in Arkansas, but he's through with Faubus.

BE CALM . . . DON'T COMPROMISE

WATCH YOUR CONDUCT . . . .

State Press - P.1 Fri 8-16-57

In a few days, Negroes and whites alike will experience a new day in this section of the confederacy — under a court order, Little Rock's hi school, heretofore reserved for whites only, will have to open its doors to Negro students, thereby losing all its vanity thru the misconception of racial superiority. There are many whites and some blacks who are critical of the method that was used to bring about this transition in the lives of our boys and girls. We too, are critical, — critical that a court order was necessary, but are thankful to whatever the gods might be that there were Negroes with the "guts" to go to court. Little Rock, Ark.

In this new transition, it is well understood that there are going to be conflicts. Not so much from the youth as it will be from the elders who are so absorbed in prejudice that they are blinded to any resemblance of reasoning. This is where (eventho we hate the use of the word, but we believe it's applicable here) TOLERANCE to a certain degree must be used. Somebody has to display intelligence, and why not let it be the Negro.

We are appealing to you to be calm, but in no way are we remotely suggesting that you "Turn The Other Cheek." By being calm, we have everything to gain, because we have no foolish notion that we are superior to anyone, to lose

* * * * * *

As time approaches for us to enter former all-white schools, there are going to be many who are going to attempt to discourage, intimidate, and use many other tricky methods to get parents to not take advantage of the opportunity for better education for their children. In some of these instances, the children themselves will be contacted or attacked, but under no circumstances should we weaken from our objective.

The United States Supreme Court has declared that segregation in schools is unconstitutional, therefore integration in education becomes the law of the land. So whenever or whereever we are approached to violate the law of the land, there is no room for compromise. It is far better to sacrifice a friend than to compromise a principle.

* * * * * *

Integration or no integration, as parents, we have been too negligent in training our children to conduct themselves properly. In some cases, we have been too busy to properly train our children, and in some cases our false love for them refused to let us properly discipline them. But in either case, lack of proper training is evident. This, if it's not too late, is going to play a major and decisive part in the success of an integrated education.

How our children behave in public, is a delicate subject, that we do not enjoy discussing. But it is a subject that cannot be discussed too much.

Many of us leave this part of the training to the classroom teacher. Irrespective to how efficient a teacher might be, and how sincere one might be in molding your child into respectful woman or manhood, this is one subject that she has to have plenty of help from the home.

Use of profane language is becoming prevalent among hi school students, and is sometimes heard among the elementary, these epithets cause misunderstanding and sometimes friction. These epithets are never conducive to a group who is seeking first class citizenship.

This practice MUST be stopped and our children must be taught how to act in public. In order for that to be done, they must be taught at home. Improving our conduct is a must if we are going to take our place in the transition.

Arkansas Segregation Bills Signed Into Law By Governor

Commercial Appeal 2-27-57 p.17

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 26.—Gov. Orval Faubus Tuesday signed into law four segregation bills designed to stand between the state's "local" control of schools and the Federal Government.

The measures became Acts 83, 84, 85 and 86. The two most far-reaching call for creation of a state sovereignty commission and the registration of organizations opposing segregation with the commission. They became Acts 83 and 85, respectively.

The other two acts give local school boards authority to hire legal counsel in school litigation, and make it optional for children to attend schools where mixed classes are allowed.

The Governor pledged that the sovereignty commission, which he himself will head, will do nothing to violate "the rights of the people." He said he hadn't yet decided on whom he will appoint to it.

Some of the membership already is set up by the bill itself, since it provides for the Governor, the attorney general, the lieutenant governor and speaker of the House to serve as ex-officio members.

Others On Committee

In addition, three citizens, two members of the state Senate and three members of the House shall be appointed. The Governor said his "citizen" appointees probably will include either Richard B. McCullough of Forrest City or J. L. 'Bex' Shaver of Wynne, both of whom helped in shaping the legislation.

The sovereignty commission will have the authority to "perform any and all acts and things deemed necessary and proper to protect the sovereignty of the State of Arkansas," . . . provide legal assistance to school districts, and to "study and collect information concerning economic, social and legal developments constituting deliberate, palpable and dangerous invasions of or encroachments upon the rights and powers of the state" provided under the 10th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The act requiring various organizations to register and report their activities periodically to the commission had been pictured generally as one to curb activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It is the only one of the four which doesn't bear an emergency clause—that failed in the Senate.

Budget Is Reduced

Signing of the four bills into law was accompanied by beginning action on the proposed $50,000 budget for operations of the sovereignty commission. The House reduced that figure to $30,000.

Representative Lucien Rogers of Earle, a sponsor of the segregation legislation, offered the amendment reducing the figure, but failed on a first vote for the appropriation after it had been reduced.

The House, however, expunged the record, and with House Speaker Glenn Walther pleading for more votes, finally approved the budget 79 to 2. Senate action awaits.

Separate Measure Proposing $50,000 Appropriation For Sovereignty Commission Is Still Pending

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 21.—Four segregation bills which stirred bitter Senate opposition this week await only Gov. Orval Faubus' signature to become law.

The House of Representatives sent the bills to the Governor Thursday afternoon after giving speedy adoption to amendments the Senate wrote into two of them.

Governor Faubus didn't sign them immediately, but there were indications he might do so Friday.

No House Debate

There was no House debate on the Senate amendments when Representative Lucien Rogers of West Memphis, House sponsor, called the bills up for concurrence.

The more controversial of the bills provide for creation of a state sovereignty commission and registration of non-profit organizations opposing the segregated school system.

The sovereignty commission plan, criticized by opponents as giving "extreme" powers to the agency, was "toned down" by two Senate amendments.

As now written, the bill gives the commission power to investigate complaints referred to it by school districts on integration questions, and to resist in various ways any encroachments on the state's sovereign rights by the Federal Government.

The commission is given subpena powers and would be headed by the Governor, the lieutenant governor, the speaker of the House and other members of the General Assembly, plus private citizens—making a total membership of 12.

Some of its originally-proposed investigative powers were stricken following prolonged Senate opposition which resulted in Governor Faubus, who backed the measure, eventually suggesting amendments.

Check On NAACP

The registration bill seeks to control the activities of such organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, by requiring a periodic accounting of their contributions and activities. Sponsors of the bill said the measure also could apply to such organizations as the White Citizens Council.

The other two bills were not amended. One gives school districts the right to hire legal counsel in litigation arising from integration problems, while the other would remove compulsory attendance requirements for school children in cases involving mixed classes.

Still pending was a separate bill proposing a $50,000 appropriation for the sovereignty commission.

Several Senate members who voted for creation of the commission have served notice privately they will oppose that large an appropriation for the agency. One member said he thought the commission could operate without any state appropriation.

Georgia would void 14th and 15th rights amendments to U.S. Constitution

Sat. 2-16-57 Baltimore, Md.

AUGUSTA, Ga.—A resolution declaring the 14th and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution null and void was adopted by the Georgia Senate Friday and copies sent to President Eisenhower, Chief Justice Warren and members of Congress.

These amendments, passed shortly after the Civil War, granted colored people full rights and the right to vote. The grounds upon which they were held void were that the Congresses in which the legislation was framed excluded Georgia and 10 other southern states which sided with the Confederacy.

State Sen. Peyton Hawes, who introduced the resolution declared:

"The continued recognition of the 14th and 15th Amendments as valid parts of the Constitution of the United States, is incompatible with the present-day position of the United States as the world's champion of constitutional government."

SMITH RIPS GOVERNOR

Opponents Report Flood Of Pleas From Both Whites And Negroes For Public Airing Of Measures

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 15.—The Arkansas Senate, after bitter debate, voted Friday to conduct a public hearing Monday night on four segregation bills endorsed by Gov. Orval Faubus.

Sixteen senators succeeded by one vote in blocking final action and in scheduling the hearing which they said was being demanded by whites and Negroes alike.

The action was a slap at East Arkansas legislators who had hoped to gain final passage of the anti-integration measures Friday. The bills gained House adoption Wednesday after being introduced Monday by Representative Lucien Rogers of Earle.

Commission Target

The surprisingly heavy Senate opposition gave those opposing the bills some hope of amending the more stringent provisions of at least two of the measures. The most controversial of the four would set up a state sovereignty commission.

Senator Charles F. 'Rip' Smith of West Memphis, Senate sponsor of the bills, charged after the vote that Governor Faubus, in effect, had "run out from under him" in supporting the measures.

In an angry speech, Senator Smith said that although he will continue to support the bills he no longer cared to handle them in the Senate. He said Governor Faubus had given him to understand he was supporting the measures, but that at the last minute apparently had "passed the word" that a public hearing should be held first.

Calls, Telegrams

When debate started, Senator Smith appeared to have enough votes assured to get the bills through the Senate. But senator after senator in a tense, often dramatic session, arose either to denounce the bills as presently written, or to demand a public hearing.

Those objecting to an immediate, showdown vote said they were being "covered up" with calls and telegrams from whites and Negroes demanding a public airing of the bills before they were voted upon.

Lt Gov. Nathan Gordon, the Senate's presiding officer, had to threaten several times to clear the Senate chamber and galleries of spectators. A number of pro-segregationists leaders were on hand and cries of "nigger lover" at one point greeted a senator urged a public hearing.

Senator Morrell Gathright, who opposed an immediate vote and said he would attempt to amend two of the measures, asserted he had "literally been threatened" if he took any stand against them.

"However, I'm going to stand up and be counted, anyway," he said.

Offering the motion to postpone action on the bills and set them down for public hearing was Senator Boss Mitchell of Danville, who gained the floor after about an hour of debate.

The motion for public hearing called for only a standing vote, so no official registration was made of how individual senators voted.

'Day In Court'

Senators arguing against an immediate vote said the issue at the moment was one of whether state minority groups such as Negroes "shall have their day in court on these measures."

"You're about to tear down the good name of this state if you don't allow a public hearing; not to do so would be the lowest type of statesmanship," said Senator Ellis Fagan of Little Rock, who announced that he himself didn't understand the full import of the bills.

Senator C. E. Yingling of Searcy, who stated his outright opposition to the bills themselves, said the state sovereignty bill would "defeat its own purpose."

Senator Yingling differed with arguments of Senator Smith and those advanced earlier by Representative Rogers in the House that the people of the state in the November General election had given the Legislature a "mandate" to pass the measures. The people voted for two interposition measures and a pupil assignment law at that time.

"The people knew little of what they were voting for," said Senator Yingling. "I doubt if one in 10 had even read the proposals on the ballot, and even if they had they wouldn't have understood them."

Would Avoid Radicalism

Senator Yingling, who at one point during gallery applause asked Senator Smith if he had "brought along your cheering section," said he was "as Southern as any man in this Senate," but that the only solution to the segregation problem was to avoid radicalism on both sides.

The objecting senators pointed to provisions in the proposed sovereignty commission bill which they said gave "far too broad and dangerous" investigative powers to the 12-man agency which the measure would create.

Withhold Lorch Case Verdict

Chicago, Ill.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A federal district judge in Dayton, Ohio, has withheld rulings in the contempt trial of Dr. Lee Lorch, professor of mathematics at Philander Smith college.

Judge Lester Cecil will issue a verdict after receiving written briefs from both the prosecution and defense.

Dr. Lorch, a civil rights advocate, was tried for contempt of congress on charges growing out of his refusal to answer certain questions before a hearing of the House Un-American Activities committee in September, 1954 in Dayton.

Dr. Lorch was called before the committee right after he attempted to enroll his daughter, who is white, in an all-Negro school.

At that time, he was serving as head of the Fisk university mathematics department.

The verdict is expected to take about 60 days.

Arkansas Cleric Scores Race Bias

Atlanta, Ga.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(ANP).—"It is a fallacy to make God a god of one race, to seek religious sanctions for racial differences and mistreatment of races."

Such was the text of a sermon presented last week by the pastor of one of this city's largest white Baptist churches, as he denounced racial segregation and prejudice to the astonished ears of some of his listeners.

Dr. Nolan P. Howington, pastor of the First Baptist church here made the statement from the pulpit as he delivered a sermon last week. He hit out at "perversion of the scriptures" by pro-segregationists and soored anti-integrationists for attempting to sanction their beliefs through the Bible.

WORLD POPULATION

The outspoken cleric declared that the white man no longer can be sure of keeping the Negro or other colored races in their places because 75 per cent of the world's population is colored.

A native of Georgia, the minister said that the belief that Negroes are mentally inferior to whites is unfounded because scientists have discovered that a man's skin color has nothing to do with his capacity for learning.

After the lecture, Howington described the congregation's reaction as "surprisingly good."

SOVEREIGNTY GROUP CHALLENGED IN SUIT

Arkansas Laws To Protect Segregation Are Hit By Negro Action

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

Memphis, Tenn.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 16.—A group of Negro attorneys and pastors filed a Federal Court suit here Friday afternoon attacking validity of the Arkansas State Sovereignty Commission and other pro-segregation legislation adopted by this year's General Assembly.

The suit named Gov. Orval Faubus and the 11 other members of the commission as defendants. It asked for a temporary injunction to make the state legislation void and without authority to function pending a final court hearing.

Rights Violation Claimed

The complainants included U. Simpson Tate, Dallas Negro attorney who is a legal spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Negro attorneys of Little Rock also were involved. They attacked the Sovereignty Commission and related legislation as in violation of civil rights, and unconstitutional under Federal law.

The case was assigned to the docket of the Eastern Division of Federal Court, which at present has no judge due to the June 1 resignation of Judge Thomas C. Trimble. As a result, the Negro attorneys immediately left for Hope, Ark., where they hoped to locate Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley, who is the roving Federal judge for Arkansas, and who reportedly was to be in that Southwest Arkansas city several days.

Tate and others said they hoped to get a show cause order from Judge Lemley against members of the Sovereignty Commission, which would prove the basis for an eventual three-judge hearing on their complaints.

Their complaint attacked not only the sovereignty commission, but also an act requiring certain organizations such as the NAACP to register with and make periodic reports to the commission.

Creation of the Sovereignty Commission and the registration act produced a bitter fight in the Arkansas Senate early this year when the anti-integration legislation, endorsed by Governor Faubus, came up for a vote following House passage.

The suit was filed after reports that the integration order of the Little Rock School Board was soon to be called to the attention of the Sovereignty Commission by school patrons opposed to the order. The Little Rock School Board has approved a gradual plan of integration, starting this fall at the high school level.

Governor Faubus said he hadn't been served with any notice of the lawsuit.

Violence In South Deplored

Bishop Lord Says Rights Of Negroes Violated In Ark.

BOSTON (INS) — Undersecretary Christian A. Herter and Methodist Bishop John Wesley Lord have spoke out on the integration crisis—Herter scoring those who likened the situation to Russia's use of force in Hungary, and the prelate lashing at southern hoodlums who breed hate.

Herter, just returned from a trip to nine countries in the Far East, said bluntly that it is "blasphemy" to compare the use of troops in Little Rock, Ark., with the Russian show of force in the Hungarian rebellion.

AT THE SAME time, Bishop Lord, from the pulpit of historic Old North Church, pointed out that the "inalienable rights of the Negro in Little Rock have been flagrantly violated by a group of hoodlums who are not worthy of their American heritage of freedom."

Herter told newsmen: "The troops are being used in Little Rock to safeguard the liberties of minorities guaranteed to them by law.

"IT IS A great credit to the United States that those liberties are so important that they must be safeguarded at any cost. And it is outright blasphemy to compare that with the use of troops in Hungary."

Herter talked to newsmen preceding the 20th anniversary dinner of the International Friendship League Inc., at which he was guest of honor.

'Sputnik' to Zoom Over Little Rock

LONDON, Oct. 9 (AP).—Moscow Radio made a special note tonight of a new point on the schedule of places its space satellite will zoom over.

Three hours after the list of cities for the next two days' schedule had been completed, Moscow resumed the transmission with a short note:

"It will also pass over Little Rock, Ark., at 0636 Moscow time on Friday" (10:36 P. M., EST, Thursday).

THREE FINED IN LITTLE ROCK RACIAL INCIDENT

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. Three men were fined in Municipal Court here last Friday as a result of charges stemming from the school integration dispute.

They were: F. T. Surrett, 19, Prosper Williams, 23, both Negroes and Vernon H. Duncan, 47-year-old white man.

Judge Harry C. Robinson sentenced Surrett to pay $100 and spend 30 days in jail and gave Williams a fine of $151.50 and a 90 day prison sentence. Both were charged with fighting with white youths in the center of town. Surrett's jail was suspended. Williams' attorney said he would file an appeal for his client.

Duncan was fined $51.50 for failing to move from outside Central High School, scene of the integration crisis, on the order of federalized National Guardsmen.

Four other men who were arrested in the vicinity of Central High were found not guilty of various charges arising out of the mob action. The court issued a warrant for another defendant who did not appear in court Friday.

Seven Arkansas Segregation Acts On The Books

In View Of This, Voters May Wonder Why Worry About Enacting Any More

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 30.—With talk of a special session of the Arkansas Legislature continuing, some voters who remember last year's general election and this year's regular session may be asking, "Why bother?"

The state already has seven separate acts dealings with the integration question, which have been put on the books since about this time a year ago.

Mr. Johnson

Three are by direct vote of the people, that is, by changes in the Constitution. The other four were voted by the Legislature which met early this year.

With those seven now in effect, it would appear there would be little left to add in the form of state legislation as a "buffer" against Federal laws and the fateful 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated classes.

However, the seven were put into effect before the Little Rock integration dispute arose. And Little Rock has changed a lot of things, including the thinking of some state legislators.

By way of refreshing memories, here is a brief review of new laws which have been added during the past year. First, the constitutional issues.

Pupil Assignment Act

In the Nov. 6 general election of last year, the voters approved a Pupil Assignment Act and two measures which might be described generally as "interposition" measures. Although worded differently, both have the general objective of "interposing" state authority or sovereignty against Federal rulings and encroachments, and also directs state officials to do all within their power to resist the Supreme Court ruling on integration.

The Pupil Assignment Act is more specific. It gives school districts the authority to assign pupils to schools on a wide variety of factors, except on the factor of race. Although the factor of race is ruled out, the act has been viewed generally as another move to give state or local authorities the legal tools with which to continue segregated schools.

After the people had voted in November, the Legislature went into session in January and by the time the 60-day assembly was over and after some hard-fought Senate battles, the four additional acts had been placed on the books.

The Legislature created the State Sovereignty Commission, relieved school children of compulsory attendance in racially mixed schools, directed that organizations promoting integration file periodic reports of their activities with the Sovereignty Commission and, finally, authorized school districts to employ legal counsel when school officials are named defendants in education controversies.

The seven, in short, cover a wide range of powers and not only authorize but in some instances directs state officials to wage all-out war on integration.

For instance, Amendment 44, which was one of the general election's interposition measures. Note some of its wording—

"From and after the adoption of this amendment, the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas shall take appropriate action and pass laws opposing in every constitutional manner the unconstitutional desegregation decisions of May 17, 1954, and May 31, 1955, of the United States Supreme Court, including interposing the sovereignty of the State of Arkansas to the end of nullification of these and all deliberate, palpable and dangerous invasions of or encroachments upon rights and powers not delegated to the United States. . . ."

What Happened To Them?

At still another point, the same amendment says that "Said opposition shall continue steadfast until such time as such unconstitutional invasions or encroachments shall have abated or shall have been rectified, or the same shall be transformed into an amendment to the Constitution of the United States and adopted by action of three-fourths of the states as provided therein."

What has happened with or to the seven?

The four passed by the Legislature are now tied up in litigation. They were the prompt target of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and although Gov. Orval Faubus and other members of the Sovereignty Commission have won one opening legal round on them, their final testing in the courts is yet to come.

Muscles Or No?

Until that is done, the Governor has indicated, the commission is hesitant to move out in any flexing of its muscles, if indeed it has any.

One of the acts, however—that requiring registration of certain organizations—has formed the basis for some local ordinances suggested by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett, requiring such organizations as the NAACP as well as White Ctizens Council to register with City Councils. Little Rock and North Little Rock City Councils have adopted such ordinances.

Now what about the Pupil Assignment Act? With that behind him, wouldn't Governor Faubus have authority to order the nine Negro pupils at Central High School back to an all-Negro school?

And if that could be done, wouldn't that quickly dissolve the entire controversy of integration in the state capital?

It certainly wouldn't resolve the entire question, but it might raise some more legal questions.

The Pupil Assignment Act gives most of its power to local school boards. And Governor Faubus has acted in the Little Rock controversy on the issue of maintaining the public peace and order. If he started reaching down to the board level to attempt to tell a board what specifically it should do on a specific question, he might find himself in still further legal involvements than he already is.

The Little Rock School Board would be the logical one to invoke the Pupil Assignment Act, but it's not likely it would attempt it now, even if it might have at one time. The board now has a Federal court order over its head to carry out integration.

Empty Gestures?

Furthermore the Little Rock Board, with a "gradual" plan of integration its objective for the past year or two, never has appeared inclined to give much credence to such state measures as the Pupil Assignment Act.

However, that may not be the case with all school boards. In fact, it will be interesting to see whether or not some school board in the future takes the assumption that a state law does have some weight and authority behind it, and put it into effect. So far, the seven measures adopted jointly by the people and the Legislature appear to have been forgotten, as if those who backed them in the first place automatically assumed they were nothing but "gestures" against the Federal court rulings.

ROCKEFELLER SPEAKS AT RACIAL MEETING

Says Little Rock Problem Is Not Settled

THINGS ARE 'JUST QUIET'

OKLAHOMA CITY, Dec. 7.—(UP)—Little Rock's racial problem is not settled, "It's just quiet," Winthrop Rockefeller told an interracial goodwill meeting here Friday night.

The wealthy industrial and civic leader said his adopted state of Arkansas may suffer economic losses as a result of the turmoil over admission of Negroes to Little Rock Central High School.

Mr. Rockefeller spoke before about 500 whites and Negroes at the 11th annual dinner of the Oklahoma City Urban League. He said he believed the racial problem will be solved eventually.

Had No Leadership

Describing himself as a "moderate" on racial issues, Mr. Rockefeller said such persons were without leadership during the fight between Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus and Federal authorities.

Memphis Tenn.

"A great number of moderates were left without leadership or means of expression," he said. "They are gradually putting their heads together and seeking solutions."

P. 15

Community activities which promote understanding and goodwill are essential to offset intolerant forces, he said, and time will work to the advantage of the moderates.

"Each progressive year as children get out of school, they will improve community integration," he said. "It's hard to be prejudiced against someone you know."

Industrial Firms Object

Mr. Rockefeller, who heads the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, said it would be at least six months before an evaluation of damages can be made. He said that many industrial firms object to coming to a state where law enforcement is a question.

The youngest son of John D. Rockefeller, a trustee of the National Urban League, said the radicals and extremists on both sides were the leaders in the Little Rock controversy. He said he thought a year's delay in integrating schools in Arkansas would have avoided the trouble.

Mr. Rockefeller refused to comment on factors which he felt caused the trouble, but pointed out that schools in other Arkansas cities such as Fort Smith had integrated without violence.

Mississippi Roundup—

Council Says It's Flooded With Orders For 'Remember Little Rock' Stamps

GREENWOOD, Miss., Jan. 3 (U.P.) — A Mississippi Citizens Councils official said today the organization's headquarters is swamped with orders for a rubber stamp depicting soldiers with bayonets at the backs of teen-age girls and the slogan "Remember Little Rock."

Executive Secretary Robert Patterson said the council originated the stamps several weeks ago "because we don't want the people to forget."

Patterson said the stamps were sent to officials of Southern states who were now using them on their correspondence. "As folks see these stamps on letters, checks and other papers," he said, "they call on us for stamps."

"We've already filled orders for 500 of them," he said "and we're getting orders from most of the 48 states."

He said the Citizens Councils were not making money off the two-dollar sales but were "doing this as a public service."

The engraving of the soldiers was taken from a photograph.

U. S. Studies Legality Of Segregation Stamp

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (UP) —Post Office officials said tonight they would look into the possibility that a segregationist stamp depicting soldiers with bayonets pointed at the back of teenagers might be illegal. The stamps, bearing the legend "Remember Little Rock," are being distributed throughout the South by the White Citizens Council.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia, a segregationist leader, announced that all his official mail was carrying the stamps.

Abe Goff, general counsel of the Post Office Department, said he could not comment on the legality of the stamps until he had studied them.

However, he said Federal law forbids putting anything on the outside of a mail wrapper "intended to reflect injuriously on the character or reputation of anyone."

U. S. DISCRIMINATION CHARGED BY ALASKA

New York Times 3-21-57

WASHINGTON, March 20—Former Gov. Ernest Gruening of Alaska charged today that the territory had been subject to consistent economic and political discrimination "during its ninety years under the American flag."

Governor Gruening is one of the two "Senators-elect" the territory has sent to Washington this year to plead the cause of statehood. He listed these major examples of discrimination to a House Interior subcommittee:

¶Shipping discriminations make the cost of shipping goods from Seattle to Alaska ports almost three times the cost of shipping the same goods from Seattle to Asia.

¶Similar railroad rate discriminations which, for instance, make the cost of sending household appliances from Newton, Iowa, to Alaska $3.80 a hundredweight, while for destinations elsewhere in the Pacific the charge is only $1.58.

The subcommittee is studying several varying versions of legislation that would give the territory statehood but retain for President Eisenhower the power to "withdraw" more than half of it for defense purposes if he deemed necessary. This would leave the state with direct sovereignty over 102,000,000 acres.

Red Man's Defender Discriminates Against Negro Culture In U.S.

Integration of Negroes with white people is right, but it is wrong for the American Indian. This is the curious reasoning we detect in a speech delivered in Oklahoma to the National Congress of American Indians.

The speaker was O. Meredith Wilson, president of the University of Oregon and chairman of the Commission on the Rights, Liberties and Responsibilities of the American Indian. This group is making a two-year study of Indian problems, financed by the Fund for the Republic.

Mr. Wilson told the Congress of Indians, an all-Indian body representing 62 of the nation's 230 Indian tribes and bands, that it is "an arrogant assumption" to insist that American Indians want to drop their folkways in favor of the dominant white culture of the United States.

Then he added—though why the subject had to come before the Indians was not explained in the news dispatch that we read—the following:

"We have no alternative but to provide integration for the Negro for we have torn him from his original culture and forced him to adapt to a new one." On the other hand, he said, the Indian was here first and has retained his culture despite two centuries of white dominance.

Why has not the Negro the right to maintain such elements of his African culture — or his way of life, or his racial integrity — as has been left to him by the dominant whites? Why is the Indian in a privileged sanctuary of racial self-determination while the Negro, emancipated in body, is doomed to become a carbon copy of the white master that no longer owns him?

Are these defenders of the Indian culture not implying that the Negro's African culture, or such traces of it as he has retained, is inferior to the red man's as well as to the white's?

These are questions that we do not expect the NAACP and its white allies to answer. The assumption that Negroes have no pride is perhaps the crowning insult to the race — one that is more common from Northern "friends" than from Southerners who know, understand and like the colored people for what they are.

SAYS THE JEWISH COMMUNITY IS UNITED AGAINST ALL SEGREGATION

Detroit — "The organized Jewricanish community of today is united against racial segregation," Shad Polier, vice president of the American Jewish Congress, told the 1,000 delegates assembled here for the 48th annual convention of the National Association for the Advancedment of Colored People.

"Not a single responsible Jewish organization defends the institution of segregation and virtually all have spoken out against it. All accept not only the abstract justice of the cause of equality but also the practical argument that the fight against all forms of discrimination must be carried on by all groups on all fronts."

Mr. Polier, the son-in-law of the late Rabbi Stephen Wise, one of the signers of the historic Lincoln Call which led to the establishment of the NAACP, said: "I am talking of the organized vocal part of the Jewish community. I do not mean for a moment that all Jewish Americans have rid themselves of the prejudices that pervade the population or that none of them engage in discrimination: Jews have prejudices and do give vent to them — against Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Asians and even other Jews."

effect of the assault upon the NAA

It would be a grave error, he said, "to think of the corrosive CP as if it were merely a threat to the integrity of an organization bearing those initials. The very association of like-minded groups and like-minded people is at stake. It is not the intention of the American Jewish Congress to permit reactionary elements in America to destroy this freedom of association which we have so dearly established."

Mr. Polier cited the pamphlet entitled The Assault on Freedom of Association, recently published by the American Jewish Congress, as an indication of the interest and the position of his organization. This study, he pointed out, is "The first and the most fully documented report on the legisla tive attack upon the NAACP ir the South."

The AJC, he asserted, "realizes that neither the NAACP nor the Negro community are the sole victims of this attack. Great religious movements are being torn asunder with northern and southern versions of what their faiths teach. The Jewish people, though not directly involved in this conflict, are directly affected by it."

This study, he pointed out is "the first and the most fully documented report on the legislative attack upon the NAA CP in the South."

The AJC, he asserted, "realizes that neither the NAACP nor the Negro community are the sole victims of this attack. Great religious movements are being torn asunder with northern and southern versions of what their faiths teach. The Jewish people, though not directly involved in this conflict, are directly affected by it."

Negro Segregationist Denies Group Received Aid From WCC

Advertiser Wed. 8-7-57 P.1
Montgomery, Ala.

DUTCHTOWN, La., Aug. 6 (AP)—A Harlem segregation bishop said today any claim the White Citizens Councils are financially backing his Negro movement to retain segregation "is a downright lie."

Archbishop C. C. Addison of New York, who identified himself as head of the "African Universal Church and Commercial League Corp., African Stock Exchange Assn., Development Corp., United Counsel of Organizations," was here to attend a "national convention" of the group.

The first meeting was scheduled this morning in a faded white building, undergoing repairs, in this small town by the Mississippi River about 20 miles south of Baton Rouge.

Addison said construction work delayed the first meeting until tonight. Only about five persons, all officials, showed up for the meeting, along with four press and television men.

"Does your segregation movement receive any money from white segregation outfits, such as the White Citizens Councils?" he was asked.

"Absolutely not," Addison snapped. "Some have claimed we do but that is a downright lie. We have no link with any white group."

"The only way there will be peace is through segregation in the fullest sense of the word. We have a different interpretation of white supremacy that the citizens' councils, for instance," he said.

"We believe that the white man must be the controlling factor in his own destiny and the black must be the controlling factor in his destiny," Addison said. "This is the only way the Negro can be a first class citizen of America."

Advertiser P.3-A

He said his group, for Negroes only, has about 3,000 members, "throughout the world."

Also, he said, his was the only church authorized to engage in business as a church, but, "the only business we're in is benevolence—sick benefits, death benefits, cash loans and that sort of thing."

Addison said he planned to address the delayed opening session tonight and the "national convention" would continue through Sunday with the "big meeting" Saturday night when "we will prove from the Bible that segregation is the way intended by God."

Whites are invited to all meetings, if they don't mind sitting in segregated seats. "We practice what we preach," said Addison.

Addison defended the late Marcus Garvey, widely known in the 1920s as a "black supremacy" advocate. Garvey was sent to federal prison for misuse of funds from his organization and deported to his home in Jamaica.

Addison said Garvey merely wanted the black race to work toward self-sustenance and ally itself economically and culturally with Africa.

He said Garvey was wrongly jailed, just as Addison himself was "framed" to spend 52 days in the Ascension Parish, La., jail in 1942.

Addison said he was charged with taking money to keep Negro youths out of the Army but an FBI investigation cleared him.

The organization was the "African Universal Church and Commercial League Corp., African Stock Exchange Assn. Development Corp., United Counsel of Organizations" headed by Addison.

"Does your segregation movement receive any money from white segregation outfits, such as the White Citizens Council," one reported asked.

"Absolutely not," Addison said. "Some have claimed we do but that is a downright lie. We have no link with any white group.

"The only way there will be peace is through segregation in the fullest sense of the word. We have a different interpretation of white supremacy with the Citizens Council, for instance.

"We believe that the white man must be the controlling factor in his own destiny and the black man must be the controlling factor in his destiny," Addison said. "This is the only way the Negro can be a first class citizen of America."

ATTORNEY GENERAL BROWNELL

Brownell Labeled South's Leading Foe In 90 Years

Courier-Journal p. 2
Louisville Ky 38a

Washington, March 4 (AP)—A South Carolina lawyer today pictured Attorney General Brownell as "the greatest enemy of the South" in either political party in the past 90 years.

Tues. 3-5-57

This word picture was by Thomas H. Pope, Newberry, in testimony before a Senate judiciary subcommittee conducting hearings on civil-rights legislation. Pope spoke as a representative of the South Carolina Bar Association.

He said the South has had no greater enemy since Thaddeus Stevens, a Pennsylvania Republican who led the forces in Congress demanding stringent punishment for the South after the Civil War.

Neuberger To Testify

Senator Thurmond (D., S. C.), former Senator Wofford (D., S. C.), and several others from South Carolina testified. Hearings will close tomorrow after testimony by Senator Neuberger (D., Ore.) and Governor James P. Coleman of Mississippi.

The subcommittee is considering various civil-rights bills, among them the Eisenhower program approved last week by a House subcommittee.

The Administration bill calls for a special federal commission to investigate civil-rights complaints and make it easier to bring federal court actions in cases where violations are alleged.

Johnston Vows Fght

Senator Johnston (D., S. C.), acting subcommittee chairman, promised he would do all in his power to defeat civil-rights legislation.

John West, a member of the South Carolina Legislature, predicted that if civil-rights legislation is passed and is used to bring about integration in schools, the Legislature will close the public schools in the state.

Senator Thurmond said the proposed bills are unconstitutional because "they attempt to usurp or infringe upon the rights of the states. They have added to the tensions and unrest which did not exist until recent unconstitutional decisions of the Supreme Court destroyed the faith of a great many people in the court."

Fisherman's Wharf's Noted Grotto in San Francisco is Named in Civil Rights Suit

Des Moines, Iowa

San Francisco, Cal.—Fisherman's Wharf's famous Grotto is one of the few restaurants in this city where Negroes face discrimination, according to the NAACP.

Named in a suit filed in Municipal Court last week, was Grotto No. 9, on the wharf, filed by Maxine Butler and Philip Gordon, both Negroes who charge that a waiter in the restaurant refused to allow them to occupy a booth overlooking the wharf "solely by reason of plaintiffs' race and color."

'At Least 10 Years'

The suit alleged that "for a period of at least 10 years . . . defendants (Grotto No. 9) have engaged in . . . flagrantly violating the rights of Negro customers in all manner and means by resorting to petty, viscious and contemptible practices designed to humiliate Negro customers and discourage their patronage, a fact well-known throughout San Francisco's Negro community."

Whether or not food for Negro tions," the complaint states, "to indicate to the kitchen staff that a certain meal is intended for a Negro customer by mentioning the letter 'C' when placing the order.

Whether or not food for Negroe customers is prepared differently was not stated in the complaint.

Damages of $2,000 are sought aaginst Nino and Michael Garaldi, the Grotto owners.

9 Seek Damages From Hotels, Cafe

Defender Sat. 4-27-57
Chicago Ill.

LOS ANGELES — Striking hard against what they termed blatant discrimination in places of public accommodation, nine Los Angeles Negroes have filed a total of 36 damage suits against three downtown hotels, the Victoria, the Yorkshire and the San Carlos hotels, one cafe, Ray's Band Box, and a Vic Tanney's gymnasium.

The plaintifs, all of whom are members of National Consumers Mobilization's A. M. Drew Foundation, filed their cases in Small Claims court and charged that their right to services established under Sections 51, 52, 53 and 54 of California's civil code have been violated.

Herbert W. Simmons, jr., general counsel for the Foundation, stated that cases of this kind have never before been filed in Small Claims court to his knowledge, though such cases clearly fall when the jurisdiction of the Small Claims division.

He said this method of seeking legal redmess might be the answer to many problems in those areas where there are no attorneys available to handle civil rights cases. In California, all parties in small claims actions appear without attorneys.

"Californit law," said Simmons, "declares that every citizen regardless of race had an equal right to service in public places. It fixes $100 as the minimum damage a defendant must pay who is found to have violated anyone's rights in this respect."

The A. M. Drew foundation was named for the author of California's civil rights law, and as a unit of National Consumers Mobilization, it has aided in the filing of many similar suits. In addition to the suits mentioned above, cases against four downtown hotels were filed recently in Superior court with the aid of the Drew foundation.

Manuel D. Talley, general manager of the Dred foundation, claims a survey by his organization shows that less than 20 per cent of California's hotels and motels will accommodate Negroes.

'After having a civil rights law for 50 years," said Talley, "it is high time Californians started making it work."

Riot Feared, Dizzy Banned In 'Frisco

Courier Sat. 1-19-57
Pittsburgh, Pa.

SAN FRANCISCO—Trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie, one of the nation's foremost exponents of modern jazz, was denied a Jan. 26 booking in Veterans Auditorium because a building official feared a riot.

Sat. 1-19-57

William B. Dorsett, general manager of the American Legion War Memorial Commission, told promoter Mannie Schwartz:

"I don't know of Mr. Gillespie and I don't know his kind of music. All I know is that I'm here alone with no help and if things get out of hand, what can I do?

"If we get jazz in there, then pretty soon it will be rock and roll, and I don't want to be any party to it."

Dizzy will play the Jan. 26 date at the new Fillmore Auditorium.

Judge says retail store not required to sell to Negroes

Tribune P. 5
Wed. 8-14-57
Los Angeles Calif.

A notice of appeal to the superior court was filed Monday by Atty. Samuel McMorris from the order of Municipal Court Judge Lucius P. Green, that retail merchantile stores are not required to sell to Negroes.

The suit was brought by McMorris on behalf of Mrs. Virginia Lambert and Mrs. Josephine Webster, Pacoima residents, who charged that Mandel's of California, which operates women's shoe stores throughout Los Angeles, had refused them service twice because of their race.

Without denying or affirming the charge, the shoe store, through its attorney, Milton Fenton, demurred to the complaint, arguing that "a retail store . . . was not liable for refusing service . . . since it was a private business and not a place of public accommodation."

McMorris argued against the demurrer that shoe stores are included within the disignation, "other places of public accommodation", required under the California Civil Rights law to treat the public equally, regardless of race.

Any person or corporation engaging in a public enterprise, loses "private" rights and become the instrument through which citizens satisfy their needs so that to permit any of them to refuse Negroes,

Chief Justice Scatters Pearls Before Swine

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-12-57

LOS ANGELES—Figuratively "casting his pearls of wisdom before swine," Chief Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren hurled a challenging plea for "equal opportunity regardless of race" in dedicating a new high school, named for him, last week in the town of Downey, which is notorious for its prejudice.

Chief Justice Warren said:

"We should dedicate ourselves and our schools to equal opportunity to all, regardless of race or background.

"If you do this and dedicate this wonderful new school in this manner, it will be an inspiration to me in my work to do a better job for the people of the country than I ever have done before."

The Chief Justice, who handed down the decision outlawing jim-crow public schools in Dixie, possibly didn't know that Downey keeps Negroes from buying or renting property there through an alleged "gentlemen's agreement" among real estate salesmen and brokers.

The new high school was named for the Chief Justice.

Several city officials, when asked to comment on the Chief Justice's remarks about equality, refused to make any statements.

Barber Spurning Negro Loses Suit

STOCKTON, Calif. Jan. 31 (AP)—Archie Manley, a Negro deacon, had a $200 damage award today because a barber refused to cut his hair.

Barber Robert Murrillo testified yesterday he refused because he had not been trained to cut the hair style of a Negro.

Municipal Judge Bill L. Dozier remarked that a licensed barber "must learn to cut a Negro's hair."

Laud L.A. For Racial Progress

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 3-9-57

NEW YORK—A prominent lawyer and newspaper publisher has hailed Los Angeles, once a racial trouble spot, for the great strides it has made in race relations.

Loren Miller, a board member of both the NAACP and the Urban League, declared in the new issue of Look Magazine that Los Angeles is now one of the nation's leading cities in enlightened race and community relations.

Miller said in the magazine:

"There are many, many rough spots, of course, but I regard Los Angeles — and I think most Negroes regard Los Angeles— as one of the better cities of the nation."

BACK SENTIMENTS

Miller's sentiments were backed by 21-year-old Willard Johnson, president of the student body at the University of California at Los Angeles. Johnson is the second Negro ever to hold this position.

"The students elected me only because of the issues . . . There has been an improvement in the general attitude. But there are still problems, and none of us should be complacent," Johnson said in Look.

UCLA also came in for praise from Dr. Ralph Bunche, who said of his alma mater:

"Possibly no institution of higher education on the country has as good a record as UCLA over a long period of years on the question of integration of minority groups, and particularly of Negroes."

Largely responsible for Los Angeles' success in race relations, according to Look "is the proliferation of what might be called 'do-good' or humanitarian organizations."

Here the magazine credits the work of churches, labor unions, minority groups.

HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
WASHINGTON, DC

AT HOUSE HEARING

Legal Chiefs Will Testify

Advertiser 2/

Montgomery, Ala.

By BOB INGRAM

Atty. Gen. John Patterson yesterday requested and was granted permission to testify before the House Judiciary Committee next week in Washington when it holds hearings on civil rights legislation.

Adv. 2-2-57

Permission was granted for Patterson and Asst. Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion to testify only a short time after it was learned that Montgomery Negro Attorney Fred Gray also is scheduled to appear as a witness.

Meanwhile, there were three other new major developments on the segregation scene. They were:

(1) In Birmingham, the City Commission filed a petition yesterday asking the U.S. District Court to dismiss an attack on the city's bus segregation laws. The dismissal request was based on the grounds that the laws' constitutionality can be tested in state courts.

(2) In Washington, the Justice Department said President Eisenhower will not be able to make a major speech in the South on civil rights as had been requested by a group of Negro leaders including the Rev. M. L. King Jr. of Montgomery.

(3) In New Orleans, two Negroes filed suit in District Court seeking to nullify all bus segregation laws in the city and state.

GRAY TO APPEAR

Patterson's request to appear before the powerful House Judiciary Committee was made only a short time after it was learned that Gray was to appear as a witness next Tuesday.

When first contacted for comment, Gray emphatically denied any knowledge of the hearing.

"Where did you get that information?" he asked. "That's the first time I've heard of such a thing; if I'm going to Washington I don't know it."

However, The Advertiser later contacted committee officials in Washington and they confirmed that Gray was to testify.

When presented with this evidence, Gray hastily back-pedalled.

"Did I say I wasn't going?" Gray asked. "Well, I guess if the committee says I'm to be there then I suppoise I will. I just don't think I better comment on it at all."

The action by the City of Birmingham in seeking to dismiss a case aimed at breaking down bus segregation in that city came after a group of Negroes had filed a suit directly to the federal court several weeks ago.

The Negroes are asking for an immediate temporary injunction restraining the city from enforcing segregation on buses. The city petition charged that the Negroes failed to state any claim for which relief could be granted.

The announcement from Washington that the President would not make a civil rights speech in the South came from the Justice Department. A spokesman for that department said Asst. Atty. Gen. Warren Olney III had wired King two weeks ago that a conference at this time "would not be helpful or appropriate."

LETTER FOLLOWS WIRE

In a letter to King that followed the telegram, Olney made mention of the fact that the "primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order is lodged in state and local authorities."

The release also confirmed yesterday that the FBI had been investigating the series of bombings in Montgomery, but the department declined to comment on the status of this investigation.

The suit in New Orleans attacking Louisiana bus segregation laws was filed by two Negro men — a minister and a physician. In their petition they requested the creation of a three-judge panel, the same procedure which was followed locally.

Their petition further contended that the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawed segregation, but city attorneys in New Orleans countered with the argument that this case had applied only to Alabama and Montgomery statutes.

Biased Words Cost Woman DAR Position

Denver. — (INS) — A Denver official of the Daughter of the American Revolutin went into seclu[illegible] after losing her post over a published statement that she would not want boys of Mexican descent to carry the American flag.

In a statement to the press, Mrs. Charlotte C. Rush apologized, saying she was "deeply sorry that in an unguarded moment I made such an unfortunate statement."

Mrs. Rush's position as chairman of the Patriotic Education Committee of the Denver Dar Chapter was declared vacant.

It all started Saturday when Mrs. Rush asked the Denver Post to publicize a patriotic pageant planned — but now cancelled -- for tomorrow at the State Industrial School for boys at Golden, Colo.

She was quoted as saying: "I wouldn't want a Mexican to carry Old glory -- would you? It just wouldn't seem right."

Mrs. Rush said she hoped the DAR work among boys at the state school would receive "headline publicity" and that is exactly what she got and more.

DAR Officer Loses Job Over Biased Statement

BY HARVEY A. KADISH

DENVER. — (INS) — A Denver official of the Daughters of the American Revolution went into seclusion Tuesday after losing her post over a published statement that she would not want boys of Mexican descent to carry the American flag.

In a statement to the press, Mrs. Charlotte C. Rush apologized, saying she was "deeply sorry that in an unguarded moment I made such an unfortunate statement."

Mrs. Rush's position as chairman of the patriotic education committee of the Denver DAR chapter was declared vacant.

In the meantime, Gov. Steve McNichols has barred the D.A.R. from further activity in Colorado institutions pending an investigation of the group.

The governor called upon the Denver DAR regent to submit the organization's policy in the wake of a flare-up over Mrs. Rush's remarks.

It all stared Saturday when Mrs. Rush asked the Denver Post to publicize a patriotic pageant planned—but now cancelled—for February 12 at the state industrial school for boys at Golden, Colo.

During an interview with a reporter, Mrs. Rush said she would not allow boys of Mexican descent at the school to carry the American flag during programs her committee directs.

She was quoted as saying: "I wouldn't want a Mexican to carry Old Glory—would you? It just wouldn't seem right."

Mrs. Rush said she hoped the DAR work among boys at the state school would receive "headline publicity" and that is exactly what she got and more.

The Colorado House of Representatives passed a joint resolution censuring Mrs. Rush, using some of the strongest language ever used in the state legislature. The resolution noted the contributions of Spanish-Americans in Colorado since Cordonado in 1540, and mentioned the infringement of their rights by bigots in recent years.

Rep. Betty Pellet, herself a DAR member, was one of the 14 sponsors of the resolution.

Other reactions was swift, including a plan to introduce a measure in the Denver City Council to ban the DAR from sponsoring programs in public institutions. Council President Elvin R. Caldwell said he would introduce the resolution.

A mass meeting of Denver war veterans of Mexican ancestry also was called for to protest Mrs.

Threaten Mass Protest In Washington

Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 2-23-57

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A mass pilgrimage to Washington is planned if President Eisenhower does not agree to a second request of Negro leaders that he personally urge the South to accept integration.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Montgomery, Ala., movemeent to end racial segregation said a group of Negro leaders from ten southern states have joined in another appeal for the President to speak out against continued segregation, and violence in the south.

The group originally asked the President to make a major address on civil rights in the South. Thursday, during another two-day meeting, the southern Negro leaders conference said the President is now being urged to speak on the topic, even though he cannot arrange a speech in the South.

The alternative, King said, would likely be a pilgrimage to Washington of thousands of Negroes from the south, to be joined by other thousands of Negroes and whites from other parts of the country.

The conference leaders called on the President "to enunciate, whether in the North or South, an Eisenhower doctrine for democracy at home."

The President was also urged to call a White House conference on preservation of law and order, to "help develop in the South and in the nation an orderly growth toward civil rights," the Rev. King said.

The D.A.R. Incident

Afro American

The Daughters of the American Revolution moved with commendable speed in ousting Mrs. Charlotte C. Rush, from her committee chairmanship out in Denver.

The quick repercussions followed Mrs. Rush's refusal to let a boy of Mexican parentage be a standardbearer during a patriotic pageant, declaring, "I wouldn't want a Mexican to carry Old Glory—would you?"

From Washington, Mrs. Frederick Groves, DAR national president, termed Mrs. Rush's remark "unfortunate" and "entirely contrary to the national policies and practices of the organization."

Sat 2-23-57

The incident further illustrates how times have changed.

Only 16 years ago, the DAR was making world headlines with its bigoted refusal to permit the great Marian Anderson to sing in its Constitution Hall.

Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes invited her to give an outdoor concert in front of the Lincoln Memorial where some 30,000 persons were thrilled by her voice on Easter Sunday.

Apparently the DAR learned its lesson then, but all of this furor has failed to shake Mrs. Rush, who in what was supposed to be an apology, said,

Baltimore, Md.

"I am deeply sorry that in an unguarded moment I made such an unfortunate statement regarding the American flag in connection with our Spanish-American people.

"I repeat that my statement was purely personal and in no way reflects the policies of the DAR."

Obviously, she still hasn't seen the light.

This case does establish that when you are in a representative position, the wiser course is to withhold your personal views, and if you do insist on stating them, you are going to be held strictly accountable for them.

DAR Chief Raps Attack As Unfair

Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 2-23-57

DENVER — Mrs. Charlotte Rush, member of the local Daughters of the American Revolution chapter who precipitated a storm when she said, "I wouldn't want a Mexican to carry Old Glory," said last week that her remark was misunderstood.

The statement was made in connection with a school pageant, in which a boy of Mexican ancestry was named to carry the American flag.

A wave of protests was made to not only the local chapter, but the national office in Washington.

From Washington the DAR national president Mrs. Frederick A. Groves, dispatched telegrams to state regents, to the effect that the DAR "believes that a little boy of Mexican origin is as entitled to carry an American flag as any other citizen."

She said Mrs. Rush's remark was "entirely contrary to the national policies and practices" of the DAR.

Mrs. Rush, in explaining herself, said she had made a "purely personal" statement which "in no way reflects the policies of the DAR."

She added that "I was not referring to the boy, but to nationals of other countries German, Swiss and Mexican."

Ban on Mexican Boy as Flag Bearer Cancels DAR Patriotism Program

Evening Star Washington, D.C. p. 1
Mon, 2-11-52

DENVER, Feb. 11 (AP).—A patriotism program, scheduled for tomorrow at the State Industrial School for Boys, was called off yesterday after the Daughters of the American Revolution chairman for the event said she would not permit a boy of Mexican descent to carry the American flag.

Mrs. Charlotte C. Rush of Denver, the DAR chairman, had said she would insist that "only American boys" carry the flag.

The incident had immediate repercussions.

Elvin R. Caldwell, a member of the Denver City Council, said he would ask the council tonight to prohibit the DAR chapter from sponsoring programs in public institutions.

Mr. Caldwell, a Negro, said he notified Mrs. James T. McDowell, chapter regent, he would seek the ban against the DAR "until the organization develops more democratic policies toward all racial groups."

Tomorrow's program had been scheduled as part of the Lincoln birthday observance at the school, which is in nearby Golden. The school is a State correctional institution for younger boys sentenced from juvenile and county courts.

Mrs. Rush said at least half the inmates are offspring of parents who came to the United States from Mexico. "They are Mexican boys, not American boys," she said.

Mrs. McDowell said she was "heartsick this had to happen. . . . Our organization does not countenance such policies." She called a meeting of the DAR Executive Board which Mrs. Rush will attend.

Gunnar F. Soelberg, superintendent of the schools, said the program was cancelled by mutual agreement.

"The DAR has never shown any discrimination before this," he said. "In fact, most of the medals they've given our boys for good citizenship were to Spanish-American boys."

Mr. Soelberg said he believed all boys at the school were American citizens.

Connecticut Survey Notes Treatment of Negroes

New Orleans, La.

HARTFORD, Conn., Feb. 8 (AP)—The Connecticut commission on civil rights, in a report just issued, concludes that the treatment of Negro families in this state is far removed from perfection.

388

p. 22

The report, described by chairman Allen F. Jackson, Hartford, as "one of the most important ever made by this commission," is a story of the trials and tribulations of some 219 Negro families in purchasing homes in "white" neighborhoods, and what has happened to them since.

According to Dr. Jackson, the report shows that the same element of suspicion, the same belief in stereotypes that hamper desegregation in the South are also present in Connecticut, impeding integration of Negroes.

The study was conducted by the commission's research division under Commissioner Elmo Roper of West Redding.

Field interviewers from Negro and white families living in nonsegregated neighborhoods provided the data. They concentrated on principal urban and adjacent suburban areas of Ansonia, Bridgeport, Danbury, Hartford, Middletown, Meriden, New Britain, New Haven, New London, Norwalk, Stamford, Norwich and Waterbury.

The 219 Negro families interviewed, the report explains, were better educated than their white neighbors. They were considerably higher economically and professionally than the average Negro of the state. Neighborhoods that were predominantly Negro or in process of transition were excluded from the study.

The commission is an official state body.

The Saturday Evening POST

June 22, 1957 - 15¢

A CURTIS MAGAZINE

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST is one of the national periodicals which are generally fair to the South.

Birmingham Ala. Post-Herald 6-18-57

With Newsweek and The Wall Street Journal, it ranks second to The United States News. Its current series on the situation here begins in obvious fairness but is guilty of confining Southern no-surrender to Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina when it is actually twice that big. It is also guilty of making the resistance mainly a Citizens Council thing when it is universal.

A DISTINGUISHED editor of The Post, Ashley Halsey Jr., is visiting our Fant Thornley this week. He isn't author of the series but his visit is an occasion for letting The Post know through him (1) how the South appreciates its general attitude, (2) how much wider and longer the South's no-surrender is than its current series makes it out, and (3) how determined the South is not to let Kluxery and foolish knights ruin its case.

Birmingham Ala. Post-Herald

THOSE OF US who said it immediately after the Supreme Court's decision note with satisfaction the title of the first article of this Post series by Bartlow Martin. It is "The Deep South Says Never."

At the time of the decision, Mr. Martin writes, "desegregation seemed inevitable, and not far off. Today, in the Deep South, it seems unlikely in the foreseeable future. The South was divided, perplexed, resigned. Today the Solid South is a fact, and its resistance to desegregation is granitic."

Birmingham Ala.

MR. MARTIN sees truly but too small.

Why overlook the "granitics" of Virginia? They have much to do with the case, giving it a "social standing" only Virginia can give.

Birmingham Ala. 6-13-57

You can't think him like Editor McKnight, of The Charlotte Observer, who has strained to picture the movement as exclusively Deep South and reflecting what he calls a "crumpled culture."

Virgina has embarrassed Editor McKnight very much, and so has his own North Carolina where the no-surrender is granitic, too, even if without benefit of a press. Yet Mr. Martin leaves it out, and, amazingly, even Louisiana and North Florida.

MR. MARTIN overlooks, too, the legal, legislative and editorial no-surrender. That is the real front line.

Without the proof of passion and unanimity which the councils and their counterparts have provided some of these frontliners might have faltered—as some did indeed at first—but it is they who are making the case.

And Mr. Martin credits the councils with only half of their own great achievements. He fails to stress their influence against the Kluxers and foolish knights, the Kaspers, Carters, Horns and such.

They were formed to keep these from taking over and they have done so in most areas. I believe they'll continue as the need increases.

THE POST must not have seen the latest survey by Southern School News. It reports "no desegregation" in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina or Virginia.

* * *

"NO SOUTHERNER," says Columnist Doris Fleeson, "looking to his future in politics would even argue that the South is bigger than the Supreme Court."

Now, Doris, you stop and think!

Of course the South is bigger than the Supreme Court. It is a civilization and the Court is only an institution. Armed with principles more constitutional than the Court's, possessed of sovereignties ante-dating the Court's, able with enough wit and courage to exercise now a national balance of power, these states have only to mind their manners and hold their lines through the constitutional crisis and Doris will see who's who in America.

Negroes Lose In D.C. Bar Vote

Star P. 12-a

Washington, D.C.

Ballot Is Fourth Since 1950

The District Bar Association has voted against amending its bylaws to admit Negroes to membership.

The result of a mail ballot, which got underway in July and ended on August 31, were announced yesterday by David G. Bress, association president, after a meeting of association officers in the boardroom of the Union Trust Co., Fifteenth and M streets N.W.

The announcement dropped the curtain on the latest move, the fifth since 1950, to amend the bylaws so Negroes could become members.

150 Short of Requirements

The vote was 1,366 for and 908 against the amendment, 150 ballots short of the necessary two-thirds majority. Seventy-seven per cent of the eligible members voted.

The decision to conduct a mail referendum was made by the association's board of directors after District Court Judge Robert N. Wilkin last June set aside an association voice vote taken in May, 1956, which called for amending the bylaws to permit Negro membership.

Immediately following an announcement that the proposal had carried, a dispute among the members regarding the chair's ruling divided the association sharply. Finally it was taken to court by six members who challenged the chair's procedure.

Judge Wilkins ruled that the voice vote authorizing a change in the bylaws violated the association bylaws and Roberts' Rules of Order, parliamentary authority.

Rising Vote Needed

He held that a rising vote should have been taken and that persons eligible to vote should have been separated from ineligible persons present.

Attempts to change the bylaws had been made on three occasions previous to the disputed voice vote and the mail referendum.

The first was made in May, 1950, when a vote recorded less than a majority of the membership in favor of the bylaws change. The second, in January, 1955, failed by only 17 votes of the necessary two-thirds. The third, in August, 1955, showed 1,160 in favor and 712 against, or 90 votes short of the necessary two-thirds majority.

DAR Bares Fangs

WASHINGTON—Reminiscent of more than a decade ago when it sank to infamy by refusing to allow Marian Anderson, world-famous contralto, to present a concert in its auditorium because she was a Negro, the Daughters of the American Revolution scored a new low in patriotism during its national convention here by approving a resolution to oppose school integration and all civil rights legislation.

After disclosure that Miss Anderson was refused the right to sing in the DAR auditorium because of her race, the organization became the target of bitter criticism.

AS A rebuke to the organization and its long policy of racial discrimination, the late Harold Ickes, then Secretary of Interior, had Miss Anderson to sing on an Easter Sunday from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial to 25,000 persons.

The resolution opposing school integration and civil rights legislation read like the "Southern Manifesto" against the Supreme Court which was signed by 100 Southern Congressmen last year.

Scores of the women delegates gave rebel yells when the civil rights resolution was presented.

One delegate voted against this race-baiting resolution. Questioned later, she would not give her name, but said, "I don't think you should be against all civil rights legislation—it's too broad a statement."

Bar Integration Trial Delayed

Herald Washington, D.C.

Trial of a suit contesting a vote by the District Bar Association to admit Negroes, which had been slated today, has been postponed until May 20.

The delay was granted by Visiting Judge Robert N. Wilkin because Charles Rhyne, who was president of the association when the vote was taken last year, is out of town. He is considered an indispensable witness.

A voice-vote had been ruled by the chair to have carried the necessary two-thirds of the membership in favor of amending the by-laws to admit Negroes.

puted testimony given Monday by witnesses for six lawyer-members of the local association who claim the membership requirements were illegally changed.

The lawyers filed suit asking District Court to declare void a bylaw change voted May 8, 1956. The action removed the word "white" from membership requirements. Judge Robert N. Wilkin, visiting here from Ohio, is hearing the case without a jury.

D. C. Horrifies Deep South

Post + Times Herald

THE CITY of Washington has committed what amounts to a sacrilege in the eyes of the dedicated segregationists.

It integrated its public schools in rapid steps and under conditions which resulted in large-scale intermixture of the races in several schools.

This violates the Deep South dogma that "It can't be done." Acceptance of the fact of successful desegregation would undercut the fundamental anti-integration argument.

Accordingly, the Washington experience is being deprecated energetically in the South. The widest publicity has been given to the rigged hearings of the Davis Subcommittee's investigation of Washington schools. The result is that the Southerner sincerely believes it when he says—as he repeatedly does—that what Washington did is the classic example of what not to do.

Will Gerber, former Crump machine lieutenant who was counsel to the Davis Subcommittee, is tireless in his speech-making to Citizens Council groups, pointing out the horrors of what happened here.

Segregationists shake their heads in disbelief when told of Assistant School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen's conclusion that integration here was a "miracle of social adjustment."

Racial Voting Orderly, Says Bar President

Post + Times Herald Wed. 5-22-57

Charles S. Rhyne, president of the District Bar Association when its bylaws were changed to permit Negro members, described yesterday his parliamentary actions at the meeting when the change was voted.

Rhyne, president-elect of the American Bar Association, disassembly of some 600 persons that any member could call for a division when the vote was taken, and persons ineligible to vote, such as guests, would be asked to step to one side of the room. He said no division was requested, however. On Monday, several witnesses testified Rhyne had been asked to order a separation.

Before the vote, Rhyne said, motions to table the bylaw change and to conduct the vote by secret written ballot were "overwhelmingly defeated." He said he called for further discussion but there was none. The meeting became so quiet immediately before the vote, Rhyne assetred, that "you could hear a pin drop."

After the voice vote and his announcement that the change had been carried by the necessary two-thirds majority, Rhyne testified, there was "a tremendous burst of cheering." He said a subsequent vote on his ruling that there was a two-thirds majority, "overwhelmingly sustained" him.

The case resumes at 10 a. m. today.

by the then Association president, Charles S. Rhyne, "bedlam" followed.

According to Baker, whose testimony was corroborated by several other witnesses, Rhyne told the meeting that when the time came on the controversial bylaw amendment there would be a separation of those eligible and those ineligible to vote.

No Separation

However, Baker said, there was no separation made before the vote. After the vote was taken and the result announced, the witnesses testified, some members called on Rhyne for a "division" to make certain the two thirds majority requirements had been met. Rhyne did not order a count, the attorneys said.

Claude E. Hobbs, assistant parliamentarian for the House of Representatives from late 1951 to 1955, said there should have been a division under Robert's Rules of Order.

Plaintiffs in the case, which will resume at 10 a. m. today, are Alfred F. Goshorn, Paul Lee Sweeney, Lawrence J. Simmons, Wesley E. McDonald, Thomas J. Jackson and Harrington. They are represented by McDonald and Simmons.

Attorneys Preston King Jr. and Howard Westwood are representing the Association.

Court Told Bar Voted Illegally On Negro Issue

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Tues. 5-21-57

Trial of a suit attacking the parliamentary methods used to change the District Bar Association's bylaws to permit Negro members got under way yesterday before District Court Judge Robert N. Wilkin.

Six lawyer-members of the organization claim the methods by which the word "white" was stricken from membership requirements at the May 8, 1956, meeting were illegal. They contend the action, taken by voice vote, should have been taken by a counted vote to make certain there was a two-thirds majority.

They also contend that ineligible persons voted at the meeting.

Impossible to Tell

Four witnesses testified yesterday that it was impossible to tell from the oral vote whether there was the necessary two-thirds majority.

Ward B. McCarthy, a lawyer since 1922, told Wilkin "nobody could tell from the oral vote whether it was two-thirds or not." Attorneys Kathryn Casey and Dayton M. Harrington also testified they could not determine whether there was a two-thirds majority.

Gibbs L. Baker, another long-time member of the Association, said "it was indeterminable by any human being" on whether there was the necessary majority. He said as soon as the result was announced

Woman Reporter Declares Partiality Is Shown at White House Press Conferences

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. Fri. 5-17-57

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—White House press conferences have become a forum for the favorite few. The old spirit of democracy and fair play has vanished and only the privileged characters are putting on the show.

Recent charges that Negro reporters were being ignored by the Chief Executive became more evident at Wednesday's news conference. The President continued his boycott against the one Negro woman who tried again and again to get recognition.

The reporter only wanted to get the President's opinion on one of the hottest issues facing the nation today—the proposed "right-to-work" amendment to the civil rights bill.

This issue is discussed at meetings of every national organization and by members of the Congress. The Democratic Alvisory Council recently approved a resolution opposing such an amendment. Republican Senator Irving Ives came out with a statement in opposition to it. Democratic Senator Thomas Hennings has referred to it as a "kiss of death" for civil rights legislation. The NAACP has spoken out against the amendment "designed to wreck the bill." So it seemed important that the nation should know how the President feels about such an amendment to his proposed civil rights bill.

There have also been charges made around Capitol Hill that the President was not putting the full weight of his office behind the bill to get it out of committees.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, had recently called to the attention of Vice President Nixon the policy of "silence and inaction" in the White House.

Here again, legislators as well as other advocators of civil rights are anxious to know whether the President will use his influence to break the committee bottle necks so that this bill can come out in the open for action.

After listening to these heated discussions daily from many sources, the reporter had planned to remind the President that Congressman Emanuel Celler had recently charged the Administration with failure of putting sufficient "elbow grease" behind pending civil rights bill.

Then she intended to ask (1) if the President planned to exert any pressure upon congress for immediate action on this legislation, and (2) if he approved the proposed "right-to-work" amendment to the bill.

But she was not able to get the question in, therefore she got no answer.

The ironic part is that some reporters are recognized every week, and some get two questions in. Such was the case Wednesday when Georgia born Merriman Smith, dean of White House Press Corps was recognized twice by the President while others were clamoring for his attention.

There's never a press conference that Sarah McClendon of the Texas paper, fails to get a question in. Her questions are usually long and involved, and centered around some local problem of the Texas area, but the President recognizes her.

Some times questions are put in by five or six different reporters all for the same publication.

This is a serious matter—it is much bigger than personalities—it means that an important news source of interest to some 16 million people is being curtailed. This is no laughing matter, it is no publicity stunt, it is something which should be protested by that group of people who threw their weight behind Mr. Eisenhower and forrested him to the White House.

Judge Rules Out Negro Admissions to Bar Assn.

Post Times Herald P.5-b Sat. 6-8-57 Washington, D.C.

By James Clayton
Staff Reporter

District Judge Robert N. Wilkin yesterday threw out an amendment to the District Bar Association bylaws which allows Negroes to join.

Wilkin ruled that passage of the amendment required a "rising vote." He said the action of Charles S. Rhyne, the president at the time, in accepting a voice vote was "a violation of the bylaws and of Robert's Rules of Order."

Rhyne took the vote on May 8, 1956, when 500 persons gathered at the Mayflower Hotel to debate the amendment. Six members later filed suit asking the Court to nullify the vote on the grounds it was illegal. They contended the required two thirds of the membership did not favor the change.

Testimony at the trial, Wilkin said, indicated there was great confusion while the vote was being taken and that the chairman should have recognized that a visible count of the members was desired.

To allow the vote to stand, under those conditions, Wilkin said, "would reduce to a nullity the provisions for two thirds votes in the bylaws of all associations and corporations."

His ruling, the judge pointed out, was not on the purpose of the amendment but the method of adopting it."

He suggested, "if the defendant association wishes to represent and to speak for all the lawyers of the District, then in all fairness it ought to make all members eligible for membership. If it does not do so, then members of the bar who championed the proposed amendment ought to unite with other members . . . to form an all-inclusive bar association."

Wilkin, a visiting judge from Ohio, tried the case without a jury.

A spokesman for the Bar Association said it would have no statement until its board of directors has an opportunity to study the verdict. It can appeal Wilkin's decision or accept it and arrange to re-introduce the amendment.

No Negroes have been admitted pending outcome of the suit.

Bar to Hold New Vote On Admitting Negroes

Star Fri. 6-21-57 P.11-a Washington, D.C.

The District Bar Association's board of directors voted Wednesday to take a new vote by mail referendum on the question of admitting Negro lawyers to the association, David Bress, president, announced.

The board voted against taking an appeal on a District Court ruling earlier this month setting aside a voice vote May 8, 1956, which resulted in changing the bylaws to admit Negroes.

Mr. Bress' announcement following Wednesday's special meeting of the board said it was decided to conduct the new vote some time during the summer. He added the board wished to conduct the ballot "as expeditiously as possible."

The balloting period will be set at another special meeting to be held next Tuesday, when rules for operation of the referendum will be taken up. The board voted to allow 30 days' balloting time.

Before the board acted, Preston C. King, jr., and Howard Westwood, counsel for the association in the recent litigation, appeared before it.

The amendment to the bylaws to permit Nego membership in the association was nullified by District Court Judge Robert N. Wilkin. Judge Wilkin ruled that the vote authorizing the bylaws change violated both the association bylaws and Roberts' Rules of Order, parliamentary authority.

He held that a rising vote should have been taken and that persons eligible to vote should have been separated from ineligibles at the time.

The suit to invalidate the action was brought by six members against the association.

Files Racial Suit Against D.C. Cafe

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 6-29-57

WASHINGTON — (ANP)—Mrs. Loopoidino H. Tynes, white wife of a Negro, filed a $25,000 damage suit against the Moulin Rouge restaurant here last week, charging that the management would not permit the couple to dance together "on the ground that mixed dancing was not allowed."

The Tynes' suit said actions by employes, and the proprietor, Pandora P. Goges, caused the woman embarrassment and humiliation and interfered with the couple's marriage relations.

The owner admitted interrupting the dance—last Nov. 22—but only to ask Tynes to take his hat off while he was on the dance floor. She denied trying to stop the dance because persons of different races were involved.

D. C. Bar Sets Vote on Negro Admissions

Evening Star Washington, D.C. June 27, 1957

About 3,000 members of the District Bar Association will vote from July 15 through August 30 on the question of admitting Negro members.

David G. Bress, association president, announced the dates for a mail referendum after a meeting of the board of directors Tuesday. The question will be whether to amend the by-laws which now restrict membership to white attorneys.

Decision for the referendum arose from a District Court ruling setting aside a voice vote by the association to accept Negro members. The court ruled that the voice vote was contradictory to both the association by-laws and Roberts' Rules of Order.

The directors then decided to settle the issue by mail referendum. Forty-five days were allowed for the balloting because many members will be out of the city during the summer.

Ballots will be mailed to members early next month. At the close of the voting period, they will be tabulated by the Election Board and a report prepared for directors at their September 6 meeting. The outcome of the voting will be made public at that time.

Ghana Minister Refused Seat In Cafe

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8 (AP)—The finance minister of Ghana, the newly independent African Negro republic, said today he was hustled out of a restaurant at Dover, Del., Monday because "colored people are not allowed to eat in here."

Wed. 10-9-57

K. A. Gbedemah, a highly educated man who speaks flawless English, reported the incident today on his return to New York.

"If the vice president of the United States can have a meal at my house when he is in Ghana, and if Adlai Stevenson can come into my home, then I cannot understand why I must receive this treatment at a roadside restaurant in America," Gbedemah said.

Vice President Nixon dined at Gbedemah's home in Accra last March 4 while visiting Ghana for the country's independence celebration. Nixon returned the invitation this September and Gbedemah attended a cocktail party at Nixon's Washington home.

Gbedemah said the incident occurred at 6:30 p.m. Monday while he was driving to Maryland State College in Princess Anne, Md., to attend a meeting in his honor.

"I stopped at Howard Johnson's at Dover, Del., with my private secretary, Bill Sutherland," he said. Sutherland, an American, also is a Negro.

"Colored people are not allowed to eat in here," Gbedemah said the girl told him.

"I said, 'What, in America? I'm amazed to hear this.'"

He said the girl "seemed embarrassed" and called the manager. The manager repeated that "colored people are not allowed in here." Gbedemah said he identified himself and was still told to leave.

WALKED OUT

"I walked out quietly, but I told him he hadn't heard the last of this," Gbedemah said.

p. 24

Gbedemah said he would write to the Howard Johnson restaurant chain demanding an apology. He said he would send a copy to the State Department and lodge an official protest through the American ambassador to Ghana when he returned home.

Times, 10-9-57

Gbedemah lunched today at a New York club with Thomas E. Dewey, former New York governor and twice Republican candidate for president. Gbedemah leaves for London tomorrow.

In Dover, Howard Cook, who operates the restaurant under a franchise, confirmed the incident in general. He said by telephone he regretted that it occurred and that it happened as a result of "an unwritten community custom."

Generally, said Cook, as a result of area custom, Negroes are not served in the restaurant. "However," he added, "we do make exceptions on certain occasions and have served mixed parties and colored alone here."

He said also that some of his employes thought a "test case" was being made. The employes said they noted more than the two Negroes got out of the car carrying Gbedemah but that the others went to a rest room at an adjoining service station.

NEW DEFENSE SECRETARY CONFERS WITH PRESIDENT ON BIRTHDAY

CELEBRATES 67TH BIRTHDAY

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

End Prejudices, Ike Asks

Sun. 10-15-57

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 (AP) — President Eisenhower appealed to Americans on his 67th birthday today to "wipe out differences based upon rejudice."

The President speaking informally after receiving a 500-pound birthday cake from Republican party workers, made no specific mention of school integration troubles at Little Rock, Ark., and elsewhere. But he quite possible had that situation in mind in discussing a GOP "neighbor to neighbor" campaign for funds and voter support.

"This neighbor to neighbor program, it seems to me," Eisenhower said, 'is not merely you visiting over the back fence with your neighbor, reaching common conclusions about something, it is national in scope; it is state to state, region to section, where we must wipe out differences based upon prejudice, unreasoning adherence to our own beliefs, and refusal to listen to our neighbor."

SERENADED

He sounded his solemn appeal after being serenaded on the White House lawn by Vice President Nixon and GOP National Chairman Meade Alcorn, who led several hundred party workers in singing "Happy Birthday to You."

"As I look forward into these next three years—if the Lord be willing to spare me that long—it seems to me that more and more we are forced to conclude that the problems we face are not those of partisanship but of Americanism," Eisenhower told his audience.

"I am very proud of the Republican party and what I believe to be its determination—its desire to rise above mere partisanship and to serve the nation, never to end its work of promoting its civil beliefs, convictions, enterprises and activities. They make us stronger among ourselves at home, in our economy, and give us greater prestige, security and influence abroad."

In another talk—this one recorded for an Eisenhower birthday celebration in San Francisco—the President said that during his 67 years America has passed through wars, epidemics, depression snd panics.

CAN SURVIVE

'In all her tests, no matter how stern," the President said, "America has proved she can survive and conquer adversity."

Then he added that "At this moment she calls upon us to prove that she can live with sustained prosperity without damaging the free system that has produced that prosperity."

Eisenhower, looking well and described as feeling fine, received birthday greetings from scores of well wishers including Britain's Queen Elizabeth.

The White House reported a shower of congratulatory messages. The one from Queen Elizabeth in Ottawa, in advance of her visit to the United States later in the week, said:

"I and my husband send you our warm good wishes for your birthday," the Queen said in a telegram to the President. "We look forward very greatly to our visit to your country and to the pleasure of meeting you, Mr. President, and Mrs. Eisenhower once more."

The Eisenhowers met Elizabeth as a princess in England after World War II when her father, the late King George VI, still was on the throne.

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, told newsmen the President also received birthday messages from other heads of state and of government, and from many other persons in this country and abroad.

Eisenhower received gifts from his wife and other members of the family. But just what he got was not immediately made public.

For the President, who on his birthday two years ago was in a Denver hospital recovering from a heart attack, this was a day of business as usual against a background of continuing domestic and international troubles.

Eisenhower got to his White House office at 7:45 a.m. and found displayed there a huge bouquet of 67 red roses—the gift of staff members.

A bit later he pointed them out proudly to news photographers on hand to take his picture with a visitor, Gov. Luis Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico.

Florida Town Trying Hard To Forget Storm Over Ex-Health Officer Lunching With Negro

Advertiser Lun. 4-21-57 p. 2-A

Montgomery, Ala.

MADISON, Fla., April 20 (AP)—Like a child who has been burned by a forbidden firecracker that exploded unexpectedly, Madison is reluctant to talk about the racial controversy which rocked it a few months back.

38a

"It's water over the dam," said a prominent Madison attorney. "As far as most people here are concerned the matter is forgotten."

Dr. Deborah Coggins, the attractive former tricounty health officer who saw a storm break over her head when she had a business luncheon with a Negro nurse, is as averse as most people here to rehash the events.

The 32-year-old Dr. Coggins said she felt no bitterness over being fired from her $675-a-month health officer job, and hoped there was no resentment toward her.

Last Jan. 1, she set up offices with her doctor husband in private practice here. And she has been so busy helping to attend to the physical ailments of the town she has had little time to dwell on the past. She and her husband Dr. Wilmer J. Coggins constitute half of the force of four physicians serving this county seat town of 5,000 persons.

HAPPY IN WORK

"I'm very happy in my work," she said, fingering a stethoscope during an interview between appointments.

"You don't do the good for a large number of people as in public health work, but I believe that here I do more individual good, and you get more of the personal touch through getting to know the whole family."

It was a composed Dr. Coggins in her trim white uniform, unlike the fired-up young physician who stormed up to the Madison County Commission last October. She called them "fools" and "cowards" for refusing to tell her whether she was being fired because of the luncheon with the Negro.

At the time of her dismissal, the blonde Dr. Coggins was Florida's only woman health officer.

She said she had planned to go into private practice when the need for a tricounty health officer developed last May and she suddenly found herself thrust in that position.

"I had no particular ambitions in the public health field although I certainly enjoyed the work and see the great need," she said.

"My husband needed me in his practice so I probably would have quit in time, anyhow."

Dr. Coggins repeated that she had no idea of breaching Southern social custom when she arranged the luncheon conference with a Negro midwife consultant for the State Board of Health in the private dining room of a restaurant here last Aug. 22.

"But I don't believe I would do it again in the same manner," she says now.

"I would certainly be more cautious in my approach. I did it naturally as a professional health worker not thinking of the complications which might develop. If the situation came up again I would force myself to behave differently in the light of my experience."

Out of the great uproar which focused national attention on her, Dr. Coggins says she can perhaps see some lasting good.

"I believe it may have stirred some respect for the individual whether he be white or colored," she said.

"Let's call it human dignity. In the medical profession we draw no color distinction when we treat human ailments."

There is a feeling here that a chain of events blew the matter out of focus and magnified the situation. A member of the Madison County Commission which dismissed her, Grover Cone of Greeneville, said:

"I consider Dr. Coggins a very fine woman and an able doctor. No member of the commission has anything but the highest respect for her."

Cone said he believed the situation could have been smoothed over "if a couple of fellows had used their heads at the very start. Nonetheless, they were clobbered by a Senate committee which voted 10 to 2 for interposition and killed Eaton's more tempered proposal for handling the same question.

What does interposition do that will insure segregation?

Eaton asked that question. So did Wigginton.

The answers were rather vague — but determined.

Interposition itself does nothing. It merely puts the state on record as opposing the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court by declaring them null and void. It accuses the high court of invading the field of state rights.

Would Eaton's plan have done more? Remember, it had the potent backing of Sen. President William A. Shands and was viewed far more favorably by Gov. LeRoy Collins than the interposition resolution which the committee approved.

As we see it from the sidelines — from a layman's point of view — Eaton's plan guaranteed nothing. However, it did not defy the Supreme Court and it might, though we are none too sure, have given a better chance to insuring the constitutionality of the pupil assignment act passed by the 1956 special session.

Eaton claims that it would. Most of his fellow senators disagreed.

Under the pupil assignment act, each county assigns pupils to specific schools. With this system, a county could put all white children in certain schools and all Negro children in others.

While not designated as a segregation move, its underlying motive is just that.

Wigginton warned repeatedly that there is no magic in the word "interposition."

However, it has caught the public fancy — especially here in North Florida — and from the applause which swept the galleries during the public debate each time a proponent of interposition finished, it is apparent that many citizens view it as a panacea for present racial problems.

Wigginton described interposition as an attempt to play "hocus pocus with the courts." Maybe it is. Anyway, the Florida Legislature, like other southern states, is going to give it a try.

The thing kept getting bigger and bigger and pretty soon it was out of control."

T. C. Merchant Jr., editor of the weekly Madison Enterprise-Recorder, who defended Dr. Coggins, said he had experienced a "negligible amount" of economic retaliation as a result, but that he — like everyone else — wanted to forget the thing.

Merchant told the Madison County Commission the day of her firing Dr. Coggins had been "subjected to the most vicious assortment of lies, misrepresentations and slander that I have had occasion to witness in this community."

Merchant said that on the whole racial relations in Madison were good, and there had been no incidents growing out of the differences which split the town sharply. Now, he said, "the wounds are about healed."

Dr. Coggins' job as health officer was taken over several weeks ago by Dr. H. H. Ring, a quiet-spoken man with a north Florida background who is being kept busy rebuilding the health organization.

Because of her work at the office and hospital, and attending to the needs of her three small children, Dr. Coggins said there is little time for other activities.

She used to be active in women's club and civic work before she took the public health job. A woman of diverse interests and many hobbies, she plays golf, is a good swimmer and makes hooked rugs. Her husband — whom she met when both were students at Duke Medical School —attests to the fact that she also is a good cook.

Why the Uproar On Interposition?

Herald Miami, Fla.

Wed 4-17-57

TALLAHASSEE — Florida legislators are determined to preserve segregation in this state, come what may.

P. 11-A

38a

With that as an established fact, why all this uproar over interposition?

That question is baffling, even to many veteran newsmen who have a ringside seat here at the legislative debates.

The lawmakers have made it clear beyond a shadow of a doubt that preserving segregation has top priority; even over the remote possibility of avoiding new taxes — and holding the line by reducing taxes always is dear to the hearts of vote-seeking politicians.

Yet, the dispute over an interposition resolution as opposed to a more tempered plan to resist the U. S. Supreme Court's school integration rulings, has topped debating here.

There have been more harsh words, more bitterness and more excitement created by this question than any other piece of legislation at this otherwise relatively harmonious session.

You might have thought Miami Sen. Joe Eaton and Tallahassee Attorney John T. Wigginton were advocating a plague for all the support they mustered during a Senate public hearing on the question.

Both Eaton and Wigginton said repeatedly they want and favor a continuation of the segregation policies which are part of the Old South's mode of living, tradition and culture.

'Ours Is a Land of the Law'

Florida Governor Fights for Moderate Stand on Integration

St. Louis Herald 1-16-57

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

While many Southern liberals and moderates brood in silence during these troubled days in Dixie, Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida stands articulately for moderation on the desegregation issue.

Other Southern politicians and leaders preach hot defiance of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision and vow there never, never will be any integration in the schools.

Collins has spurned this vision of a never-never land and has refused to stir his people where their emotions run deep. Instead, he has appealed to another side of the Southerner: A great respect for law and order.

Now there are those who express the suspicion that Collins is taking this stand with an eye toward national applause and ultimate nomination to the Vice Presidency which no defiant Southern Governor dare hope for.

Motives Laid to Others

These persons link the moderation of Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina and Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee with the same ambition, and this theory can be put down as either keen insight or slanderous rationalization.

Seasoned observers and politicians, including many who disagree with Collins, push aside such hints and forthrightly declare his sincerity.

They subscribe to the theory that Collins, a liberal by Southern standards and a moderate by any other, is attempting to create a climate in the Sunshine State in which his people can gradually accept the principle of the Supreme Court decision and move gently on toward compliance.

Collins' stand is clear, not muddied nor changed by the crises he has been through. While the dilemma between cold law and hot emotions has panicked many other Southern liberals and moderates, Collins has stood fast.

"A Land of Law"

"The Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land," he told his people. "And this Nation's strength and Florida's strength are bottomed upon the basic reverse premise that ours is a land of the law."

His stand on States' Rights to some Southerners is nothing short of treason. While other Southern politicians expound the doctrine and paint a terrifying picture of Federal encroachment, Collins has this to say:

"I am for States' Rights too. But I think we will make more progress if we think in terms of States' responsibilities. Very few invasions of States' Rights have occurred except in cases of failure of states to meet their responsibilities . . .

"By antiquated constitutions, by weak leadership, by being afraid to move forward to meet challenging new needs, the State door has too often been closed in the face of the people."

His efforts to create a moderate climate lie first in asking his people to face the fact that

GOV. LEROY COLLINS
. . . moderation advocate

Negroes are woefully lacking in the areas of health, education, employment and housing, and are morally and legally entitled to progress more rapidly.

He asks the Negroes to help by realizing they must merit the place they achieve in their communities.

"Our motive," he said, "should be the doing of that which is right and just."

He next requested Floridians themselves to assume the leadership in the problem. He put it this way:

"This is the call of history—a history which grows impatient. Ours is the generation in which great decisions can no longer be passed to the next.

"We have a State to build, a South to save, a Nation to convince and a God to serve."

And so it is with these avowed principles that the 48-year-old one-time Tallahassee grocery clerk is attempting to lead his State along the path of moderation, with trouble all around.

There is little doubt among Florida politicians and observers that Collins' approach represents the opinion of a majority of Floridians.

Assailed in Campaign

He was elected Governor in 1954 to succeed Dan McCarty who died in office, and in his Democratic primary campaign last year for renomination was faced by opponents who raised the flag of defiance and castigated him for his moderation.

Collins told the people then not to reelect him if they wanted four years of racial hatred, and the people showed him what they wanted by boosting him to the nomination in the first primary, something that never happened before in Florida's no-machine, every-man-for-himself politics.

Significantly, Collins closest opponent, State Sen. Sumter Lowry, an advocate of defiance, carried more counties than the Governor. These are rural, backwoods counties which can control the Legislature but lose their disproportionate power when the majority of Floridians speak in a State-wide election.

Pupil Placement Adopted

Between the primary and the general election, Collins called a special session of the Legislature and asked enactment of a pupil placement program recommended by a committee he had appointed. The legislators did, but the urge and pressure to go further mounted. An interposition resolution was certain to be adopted when Collins sent them all home by using a dusty and forgotten law allowing him to do just that when the legislators had completed the designated business at hand.

Collins then appointed a bi-racial commission which now is studying why Negroes do not vote more, ways of getting them out of substandard housing and how the State can better use the brains of college-trained Negroes.

Irritated though the defiant segregationists were, Collins won the general election by a record vote.

When the present session of the Legislature convened, Collins proposed a challenging and progressive program for the booming State. He also specifically asked that no further desegregation legislation be passed.

He lost a battle there, for the Legislature passed an interposition resolution which sharply declared the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision "null and void." Collins called this action "demagoguery" and a "lie."

This was the kind of legislation meaningless legally as it might be, that disrupted Collins' efforts to create a moderate climate, and he didn't like it.

Other bills, harsher than he desires, have been dropped in the hopper, and the Governor has a battle on his hands.

Hildy

Miami 7-22-57

Circuit Judge John Prunty of Miami last week announced his decision: six-year-old Hildy Ellis could remain with Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis of Brookline, Mass., the Jewish couple who took her ten days after she was born out of wedlock to her Roman Catholic mother, Marjorie McCoy. Judge Prunty ruled that the Ellises were fit parents, approved their application to complete adoption procedures under Florida law. The decision ended six years of litigation and controversy: Hildy's mother had persuaded a Massachusetts court to order the Ellises to give Hildy up so that her mother could turn her over to a Catholic adoption agency. Rather than submit, Ellis abandoned his home and thriving dry-cleaning plant to smuggle Hildy to Florida.

Ellis, now a sportswear salesman, was in his car looking for a new house in Miami when he heard the news over the radio. "I pulled over to the curb and stopped the car and I couldn't help it—I started to cry," he said. "I would have cried longer, but I was in a no-parking zone."

Hildy's mother, now Mrs. Gerald R. Doherty with another child of her own, issued her own statement. "Some day [Hildy] will learn the facts about her mother's desire to protect her with the privacy that others are willing to destroy. Meanwhile . . . I entrust her to the loving protection of God. The rest is in the hands of my attorneys."

Golf Course Segregation

Negroes Ask Ruling Today

Miami Fla.

Negro petitioners this morning will seek a Federal Court injunction against segregation policies at Miami Springs Country Club golf course — without going to trial.

Herald 1-29-57

Judge Emett C. Choate at 9:30 a.m. will decide whether to end the 10-month-old case by summary judgment, or order trial of the issues.

Trial has already been set for March 4 before Judge Edgar Vaught, visiting from Oklahoma City.

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney for four petitioning Negroes, has asked Choate for summary judgment on grounds that the answer of defendants leaves "no genuine issue of facts."

The Negroes want full rights on the course. They may use it now only on Mondays. They want an injunction against continued segregation, and a declaration of the rights of all parties to the suit.

Defendants are the City of nMiami Wooodrow Laughinghouse, course manager; E. A. Evans, city manager; and F. O Roberts, head of the Department of Public Welfare.

They claim mixing the races at the course would endanger the peace, health and safety of Miami and Miami Springs, and that no federal laws requires integration there.

Negroes Entitled to Use Golf Course, Judge Feels

Herald Sun. 1-25-57 P.2-B

Miami, Fla.

By RONALD YORK
Herald Staff Writer

Federal Judge Emett C. Choate said Thursday he is "inclined to feel" Negroes seeking integration of Fort Lauderdale's municipal golf course are entitled to it.

But he withheld judgment until he has studied the situation and prepared a written order.

Trial of the case in Miami Federal Court lasted only two hours. There was no defense testimony by the city of Fort Lauderdale, and only two of the four Negro petitioners took the witness stand.

Key witness was Dr. Joseph Morehead, Negro physician, who testified that he and other Negro golfers were barred from the course when they appeared to play last November.

He said it was "insulting and degrading" not to be able to share the city golf facilities with other taxpayers.

Morehead is president of the Northwest Golfers Assn., which petitioned the City Commission, but were denied the right to play.

The suit asks an injunction to stop Fort Lauderdale from enforcing any resolution barring Negroes from the course.

The suit also asks a declaration of the rights of Negroes and the city.

Dr. Morehead said he was a member of a Race Relations committee named by the City Commission to study the golf integration problem. It got nowhere, he said, and "just died."

He said about 100 Negro golfers belong to the association and would play if allowed. City Attorney Julian Ross asked Morehead what "irreparable injury" he would suffer unless he plays at the course, as is charged in the petition.

G. E. Graves Jr., counsel for the Negroes, said it would be a "legal injury," but Dr. Morehead added:

"The injury is having to contribute taxes to pay for these things and having to face our children when they ask, 'Why can't you use the course?'"

Judge Choate said whether or not the Negroes pay taxes will have no effect on the constitutional question involved.

The other witness was Alvin Cooper, a member of the association, who said there may be close to 1,000 Negro golfers ready to use the course if it is opened to Negroes.

Before trial, Choate dismissed the city's strongest defense — that allowing Negroes to play would keep many white golfers from playing, would cut income and jeopardize a $262,000 bond issue being paid off from golf revenues.

Choate noted the city never had a Negro course and the "separate but equal" doctrine could hardly apply.

Segregationist Big Guns Sounding Off In Florida

Herald Sun. 2-24-57 Miami, Fla. P.26-A

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

The top guns of the segregation forces are converging on Florida in a stepped-up drive.

The campaign, which is extending into Miami, is apparently a calculated answer to Gov. LeRoy Collins' statement in his inaugural address that mixed schools are inevitable, though not in the foreseeable future.

Since that speech activity by segregationist groups has hit a new high, with aid from such figures as Robert Patterson, John Kasper, "Ace" Carter and Capt. John C. Crommelin.

Patterson is head of the Mississippi White Citizens Councils and principal advocate of the boycott weapon. Kasper is the agitator who helped stir up riots in Clinton, Tenn. Carter, the Birmingham filling station operator, heads the North Alabama Citizens Councils which was disowned by the regular state organization because his views were too strong for them. He, too, was on the scene during the Clinton disturbances.

Capt. Crommelin, who resigned from the Navy after helping spark a feud with the Air Force, has been campaigning in segregation and anti-Semitic themes.

Now a resident of Alabama, the former Navy officer made headlines in Pensacola last week with a speech attacking the Jews.

The presence of these segregation leaders in Florida, or their close association with local groups, is hardly a coincidence. Patterson, in an address at Tallahassee when a statewide White Citizens Council was launched, made it plain he came here to counteract the effect of Collins' stand.

"There are those who throw up their hands and say integration is inevitable, but I am not so sure," Patterson said. "Organized aggression must be met by organized resistance."

Kasper was scheduled to be the principal speaker at a large Ku Klux Klan rally last weekend at Brooksville. He did not show, but Klan officials said he will definitely speak March 9 at Inverness.

This Klan rally is being given state-wide buildup.

A top lieutenant of Kasper in the Seaboard White Citizens Councils, with headquarters in Washington, has taken up permanent Miami residence.

Fred Hockett, the Kasper henchman, now lives in a trailer camp in North Miami and has been speaking at neighborhood meetings in Miami's northwest section where there is tension over a Negro family moving into a White neighborhood.

At one meeting last week, Hockett said:

"We are not averse to burning crosses. The psychological effect is good on the people who burn them, and the people who own the property."

Hockett listed a number of tactics used by segregation groups in other sections, declaring he wasn't recommending them, but merely pointing out that they had been effective.

Among them, he said, were tying up the telephones of newspapers "that give us bad publicity" and boycotting businessmen "who don't go along with us."

Carter has been in close touch with Ku Klux Klan groups in the Jacksonville area and is expected to make a major address soon.

The upsurge in segregationist and similar activity has drawn the attention of several organizations, including the Anti-Defamation League.

Nathan Perlmutter, Florida ADL director, said the meetings of the groups were drawing larger crowds than any since the German-American bundist movement.

"The analogy becomes more distressing when we of the South are in some meausre confused, perplexed and angry over something we can't precisely put our finger on in terms of this social change that is taking place," Perlmutter said.

"People are even more confused by these new arrivals who are out for a quick buck.

"Increased evidence of this activity is causing concern, particularly when respectable persons see fit to give open voice to racial and religious prejudice."

Miami Probe Of NAACP Opens Today

Herald P.2-A Mon. 2-25-57 Miami, Fla.

The special state legislative committee probing the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People will open a three-day hearing here today, with 25 witnesses already subpoenaed to testify.

Ten subpoenas were served earlier last week, and 15 more were delivered Saturday night and Sunday according to Constable W. M. Hudson.

The committee's chairman, Rep. Henry Land of Orlando, said the hearings, which begin at 10 a.m. in the Dade County Courthouse, probably will last through Wednesday.

Most of those called by the committee are members of the NAACP or are figures in the Florida school segregation suit now being appealed in the federal courts.

Those subpoenaed include the state NAACP president, Albert Reddick, 1842 NW 66th St., and Mrs. Ruth Perry, a white employe of the Miami Beach Public Library who is secretary of the Miami NAACP branch.

Quaker Jailed After Racial Meeting Upset

Sun. 3-3-57 P.4-A

MIAMI, Fla., March 2 (AP) — An Atlanta, Ga., Quaker minister interrupted a segregation meeting speaker last night with questions challenging the white supremacy theme. In an uproar that followed, the Rev. Ashton Jones, 61, was carried bodily from the scene by Miami police and booked on three charges.

A bondsman was waiting at city jail but Jones declined to provide $150 bond and was placed in a cell on charges of trespassing, resisting arrest and provoking breach of the peace.

Jones occupied a front seat as organizer Fred B. Hockett addressed the Seaboard White Citizens Council's new Miami chapter in a member's backyard.

Hockett described the late Booker T. Washington as "a credit to the Negro race, but raised by a white man — the only kind that amounts to anything."

"What about Ralph Bunche (United Nations official)?" Jones asked, rising.

"You keep quiet!" Hockett said, "you' get your chance to speak."

More words were exchanged between Hockett and Jones, and shouts and hoots broke out from the gathering.

There were cries of "get him out of here before he gets hurt." Hockett shouted, "Don't nobody lay a hand on him, we don't want violence."

The minister sat down, saying "I'll sit here and be quiet."

Police arrived and spoke with Jones, who shouted "I have a right to sit here and listen quietly."

Florida Legislative Group Votes For Probe Of NAACP, Ku Klux Klan, White Citizens Councils

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 16 (AP)—A legislative committee investigating the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People voted today to inquire also into activities of the Ku Klux Klan and the Seaboard White Citizens Councils which figured in the race riots in Clinton, Tenn.

After hearing that residents from other states are coming to Florida to agitate and form, three other men Saturday night in the act of placing a kerosene-soaked cross on the lawn of a home recently purchased by Negroes in a white Miami section.

Arraignment of the four, who were charged with unlawful assembly, was postponed in city court today until March 6 at the request of the defense attorney, J. T. Gordon.

cial dissension," the committee approved without discussion a motion by Rep. Cliff Herrell of Miami to investigate the white groups "at the earliest opportunity."

A short time later, the committee issued a subpoena for Fred B. Hockett, who has identified himself as a member of the Seaboard councils. A constable was sent out to find Hockett and serve him.

Hockett was arrested with three

The Miami Herald quoted an unidentified man who attended a meeting with Hockett as saying that 100 boxes of dynamite are hidden here and will be exploded on orders of John F. Kasper, head of the Seaboard Council of Washington, D. C., "to prove that he and his followers mean business when it comes to preserving segregation."

There were no dissenting votes on Herrell's motion to probe into the activties of the white councils. Chairman Henry Land of Apopka said a decision would be made later on whether to subpoena members of the councils.

Also adopted was a resolution by Herrell condemning "the use of violence, cross-burning, coercion, fear, mob violence and threats as tools of solving problems."

Racial agitators are coming into Florida from other states, the resolution said.

Herrell said his motion called for investigation of "any organization disrupting the peace and tranquility of the state." Land indicated, however, that it is doubtful that a full-fledged investigation of other groups could be started at this tme.

Violence Hearing Ended In Miami

Daily world Fri. 3-1-57

BY BERT OKULEY

MIAMI — (INS) — A Florida legislative committee investigating racial unrest ended its Miami hearings Thursday and will "submit a report to the 1957 session of the legislature" giving lawmakers its recommendations for further action.

Two final witnesses called before the committee Thursday emphatically denied that Fred P. Hockett, member of a Washington, D. C., White Citizen Council advocated "any violence at all" in stirring up racial unrest in Miami.

Frank F. Foster, a Miami airlines mechanic arrested with Hockett and two other men in a cross burning attempt last Saturday night in front of a Negro's home, said Hockett "spoke against violence ,not for it."

Hockett is a member of the Seaboard White Citizens Council (SWCC) which had attempted to recruit members in Miami.

James M. McSweeney, 45-year-old Miami plumber also testified under oath that it was "completely untrue" Hockett said "some fire and dynamite" were needed in battling integration in Miami.

The remarks attributed to Hockett appeared Tuesday in a copyrighted story in the Miami Herald. Executive city editor Al Neuharth of the Herald refused Wednesday on the grounds of "newspaper ethics" to reveal the source of his information.

Daily World Fri. 3-1-57

Thursday, however, Hampton Shaver, also arrested in the cross burning, corroborated under oath much of the disputed story. Shaver admitted to the committee he told Neuharth about 100 boxes of dynamite being secreted in the Miami area.

P.6

He also substantiated quotes alleged to have been made by Hockett that Miami segregation leaders weren't "tough enough" and perhaps a "little fire and some dynamite" were needed.

Hockett has vigorously denied in sworn testimony that he made any of the remarks.

Rep. Cliff Herrell acting committee chairman, said in a statement at the conclusion of the hearings the group has "endeavored to testified honestly "and freely." The statement added:

"To those who may not have testified fully for reasons known only to them or stated in the record, the committee is confident that the information was withheld with the individual having full knowledge of his responsibilities to the committee and the state of Florida".

Herrell said a report would be submitted to the 1957 Florida legislature "without recommendations" as to further actions in the case. He said the committee also plans further hearings in Florida "at a later time."

An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People denied he had tried to influence Shaver's testimony.

G. E. Graves said he talked with Shaver last night but advised him only "to tell a straight story". Shaver told the committee Graves warned him that if "I didn't talk right up here some of the boys in colored town could get pretty rough with me"

William Knight, another witness, told the committee he confided to a friend he had "been requested" to obtain dynamite caps for the purpose of blowing up the foundations of a Negro housing development in Miami He added he didn't know why he made the statement and was "just shooting the breeze" least two more years to expose agitators, both for and against segregation.

The committee ended its interim hearings today. It will report its findings to the Legislature, along with recommended bills to give the state firmer legal backing over extremists on the racial question.

John Kasper, executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council, canceled a speaking engagement in Tallahassee after testifying that he accepted Negroes socially and danced with some of them, before he turned segregationist about a year and a half ago.

"This committee has uncovered Kasper, but others are going to come in and we should have someone responsible for finding out who's behind them," Land said in recommending another committee to be set up when the life of his group expires during the 1957 session.

"We feel, however, that the resulting expose of Kasper might tend to keep some agitators out," Land added.

The committee questioned both NAACP and white supremacy figures during its inquiry.

Land said its work showed a need for tighter laws regarding barratry—the stirring up of lawsuits. This would be aimed at the NAACP. He mentioned no specific laws regarding segregation extremists.

Future action against H. E. Shaver, Miami baker facing possible contempt proceedings, was left in doubt. The 46-year-old man remained under committee subpoena and Land said the legislative group may question him again before deciding whether to ask the legislature to cite him for contempt.

Just Ask Kasper: He's a Know-It-All

By JOHN L. MILLER and ALAN MacLEESE
Herald Staff Writers

John Kasper, a professional bigot in a grey-checked suit, arrived in Miami Wednesday with a hatful of ideas about a number of things.

The executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizen's Council, formerly of New York and Washington, explained his feelings to reporters:

ABOUT PRESIDENT Eisenhower: "You know they say Eisenhower is part Negro and they're probably right. Have you ever noticed his receding forehead and that flat nose?"

ABOUT VIOLENCE: "In fighting for our cause some people are bound to get hurt, and maybe one might get killed. I can't guarantee there won't be any violence in any area where the Supreme Court mandate on segregation is being enforced."

ON CROSS BURNINGS: "It's a good idea. It makes people know what we're driving at and that we mean business. It wakes them up to the forces that are trying to bring integration on us.

ABOUT JESUS CHRIST: "He hated people just like you and I do. I don't believe in this pacifistic type of Christianity . . . the idea that Christ was born a Jew is just Jewish propaganda."

ABOUT THE AMERICAN press: "Censorship of the press and penalties for misrepresentation would be part of the ideal American government."

ABOUT NEGROES: "I don't hate them . . . their big trouble is they just can't see plan into the future. It's against nature to have to live on an integrated basis with them."

ABOUT THE NAACP: "Any member of the NAACP has to be a Communist, since it's Communist money behind it. Jews are at the head of it, and are financing it."

ABOUT THE NEW YORK Herald Tribune series on Kasper, carried in The Herald: "Some of his (reporter Robert Bird's) facts were wrong, but by and large it was a good job of reporting. He dug it up all by himself."

ABOUT HIS CLOSE association in Greenwich Village with Negroes: "I was trying to help them. Besides, it's different in an 'integrated society.'"

Kasper at 27, is hard to figure. He claims he receives no salary, and lives a hand to mouth existence in his integration-battling career.

He said he is only interested in making America a "better place to live."

He gives the impression of a mixed-up, immature person on the run.

That "on the run" attitude probably comes from the fact he is under a one-year sentence for criminal contempt of court in connection with the Clinton racial disorders. He is now out on appeal bond, and faces re-arrest on a similar count when he returns to Tennessee.

"That's one of the reasons I'm here now — to keep away from the Tennessee judge," he said. "And I'm also here to see how Fred (Fred B. Hockett,) is doing."

Preacher Balks, But Judge Orders Sentence Lifted

Herald p. 2-A

The Rev. Ashton B. Jones, who tried to preach world brotherhood to a segregation meeting, was convicted Monday on three charges and given a 30-day suspended sentence.

The Quaker minister, fresh from a weekend in jail, said he would refuse to accept the suspended sentence.

"When you find a way of doing that, let me know," Municipal Judge Charles H. Snowden replied.

The preacher made no attempt to return to jail.

The Rev. Mr. Jones, known as the "Traveling Quaker," was found guilty of trespass, breach of the peace and resisting arrest. The 30-day suspended sentence was for the resistance charge.

The other two charges brought concurrent three-day sentences, but Judge Snowden said the weekend that the Rev. Mr. Jones spent in jail would cover them. The preacher had refused bail.

The verdict came after the judge had refused defense attorney Robert Deehl's request for a directed verdict of not guilty and after Jones himself had spoken long but not loud about the events that preceded his arrest.

The Rev. Mr. Jones was arrested Friday night at a meeting of the anti-integration Seaboard White Citizens' Council in the yard of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Roper, 1501 NW 55th St. He had gotten up from his front row seat to preach world brotherhood to the angry crowd.

He was carried bodily from the meeting by Police Sgt. S. W. Holland and Patrolman R. B. Lemmons after he refused to leave.

The Rev. Mr. Jones, 61, has preached world brotherhood in 19 countries during the past 25 years.

He said after his trial that he had wired President Eisenhower from jail, asking him "to speak out for law and order in the racial situation in the South."

Judge Says Crime Is "Heinous"

Daily Ward
Thurs. 3-7-57
Atlanta, Ga.

MIAMI — (INS) — Avowed segregationist Fred P. Hockett and three associates were handed stiff jail terms Wednesday in Miami municipal court for an attempted cross burning February 23 in front of a Negro's home.

p. 1

Judge Mitchell Goldman found Hockett, James McSwiney, Frank Foster and Hampton Shaver, who testified in behalf of the prosecution, guilty of unlawful assembly and intimidation in connection with the cross burning attempt.

Labeling the crime "Heinous," Goldman sentenced Hockett, McSwiney and Foster to 60 days in jail and a $500 fine or an additional 60 days on each of the two counts in lieu of the fine.

Shaver, the only defendent to testify, was given 30 days in jail and a $100 fine, but Goldman suspended his sentence.

The jurist told Hockett "you have struck at the very basis of our democracy . . . . . by taking the law into your own hands."

White Citizens Councils Plot TNT War Aaainst Nearoes in Florida

A direct challenge to Federal authority is being made in Miami, Fla., where members of the White Citizens Council are stacking up cases of dynamite in preparation for an all-out war against Negroes favoring de-segregation. At least 100 cases of explosives, which council members say will be fashioned into bombs, have been cached in a secret hideaway outside of Miami.

The rabid pro-segregationists have openly stated that they "won't stop at nothing" in their campaign to assure the maintenance of segregation and white supremacy. However, there was some indication that Negroes were not the only targets of the WCC.

denied a motion for a mistrial and the verdicts were read that he would appeal. Goldman set a new bond of $1,200 each for Hockett, Foster and McSwiney.

Hockett is a confederate of Frederick John Kasper, head of the Seaboard White Citizens Council of Washington, D. C. Kasper, who was present at the trial has a one year jail sentence hanging over his head for criminal contempt in trying to stir up racial trouble in Clinton, Tenn.

KASPER PRESENT

Kasper spoke last weekend in Chiefland, Fla., at Ku Klux Klan meeting and has another scheduled appearance on tap in Miami Friday night.

Kasper told newsmen before the trial he was setting up a Florida white youth organization as a subsidiary to the Seaboard White citizens council. He said:

"No federal ruling can stand up if the students are opposed to it."

Kasper did not stay for the whole trial Wednesday but before leaving the courtroom said he will be in Florida another two weeks. The segregationist said he would speak at rallies in Tallahassee and Iverness after his Miami speech.

The 51-year old Hockett, a tattooed part time carpenter from Missouri was arrested three weeks ago with his three companions erecting a kerosene soaked cross in front of a Negro's home. The Negro had moved into a white neighborhood prior to the incident.

Thurs. 3-7-57

Hockett had been living with his family in a trailer in suburban North Miami but was evicted by the trailer camp owner when the cross burning incident arose.

JOHN KASPER, who figured prominently in the disturbances over Clinton (Tenn.) school integration, addressed a mass meeting at a small town outside of Miami Saturday night, in which he levelled his sights on Jews, who form a considerable segment of this area's population.

Kasper told 200 listeners that means other than segregation will have to be found to deal with Jews for whom he (Kasper has "less respect" than he has for Negroes. Kasper cried, "Negroes can be handled by segregation, but Jews are another matter."

His statements were probably inspired by the declaration of State's Atty. Richard E. Gerstein, who said last week, "We don't want any trouble-makers or agitators down here to help us. We'll take every legal means to convince such people they are unwanted and unwelcome here."

WHITE CITIZENS Council activities in the Miami area are being fronted by Fred B. Hockett, one of the principals involved in the attempted cross-burning in front of the home of Frank Legree, which was halted by Miami police.

Hockett is said to be the "lieutenant-in-charge" of the Kasper forces which are invading Miami. When the "war" against Negroes will break into the open seems up to the will of the Citizens' Council because as yet none of the authorities have discovered where the dynamite is cached.

Gov. Collins Awaits Harmony Atmosphere

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 10 — Gov. Leroy Collins said Thursday he would order a resumption of city bus service here when he had determined that buses could operate in an atmosphere "of harmony, and peace and good will."

The governor indicated he had no present plans for an immediate resumption and said he would be guided by views of "a good many people."

Collins invoked his emergency powers to order a halt to Tallahassee bus service New Year's Day following the first acts of violence during the integrated seating campaign by Negroes.

Nullification Is A Nullity

Advertiser P. 2-B Sun. 4-21-57 Montgomery, Ala.

THE Governor of Florida, Leroy Collins, is, we believe, the last remaining Deep South governor who has not largely conformed to reigning public opinion about race mixing. Right or wrong, Collins is a stout man who is not afraid to cut against the grain of majority feeling. Collins is by no means a "social dream" race mixer, but he has nevertheless chided the Florida legislature for adopting a nullification resolution.

The Florida nullification resolution, similar to that adopted by Alabama in January, 1956 and other states thereafter, says that the U.S. Supreme Court has violated the state sovereignty of Florida with its school decision and, therefore, Florida declares the court opinion null and void and of no effect.

"This action stultifies our state," Collins said. "It can do no good whatever and those who say it can perpetrate a cruel hoax on the people . . . [Legislators] were under the pressure of desperation on the part of many citizens back home, while those citizens who opposed the action remained silent."

There is much merit in what Gov. Collins contends, but his statement does not blanket all considerations.

The Advertiser was friendly to the nullification act of the Alabama legislature. This was not because we had any illusions that it would accomplish nullification of the court decision.

But among other reasons, it seemed good for the ignoramuses in this country to be reminded by the attendant debate that we have indeed abandoned the state sovereignty arrangements without which the U.S. Constitution never could have been adopted; that Thomas Jefferson, author of the Bill of Rights, and James Madison, Father of the Constitution, and other Founders were nullificationists; that nullification of court decisions has been practiced by every region of this country from its infancy on.

Second, a nullification resolution informs the federal government of the gravity of Southern resistance to the abolitionist; suggesting that they can no more be sabred into submission permanently than the Hungarians and Poles.

Gov. Collins is not wrong, however, in saying that Florida's nullification won't deter any federal court nor dissolve the court order in the hand of the U.S. Marshal. Only nullification backed by state troops would accomplish that. This we have seen in Alabama since our nullification: Student Lucy was ordered admitted and the City Commission ceased to enforce bus segregation.

But Collins is remarkably wrong about one thing. He says the legislature was pressured into this action, that many people were afraid to speak out. That no doubt is true, but they would not have feared to speak out in normal fashion had they been in the majority or even half the population. The truth is that Florida segregation sentiment is overwhelmingly dominant and the votes of its legislators show it.

MIAMI — Regional winner in the high school Science Fair, Sara Williams was banned because of her race from entering the state competition at the University of Florida.

Sarah crossbred parakeets, using rare Lutinos and Albinos. She traced their characteristic through three generations to determine which are recessive and which are dominant traits. After intensive cross breeding over a period of time, she said she hopes to develop a new specimen of parakeet.

Banning from the state Science Fair also denies Sara the opportunity of entering the national fair, participated in by junior and senior high school students from all over the United States.

Florida Puts Segregation Bill on Shelf

Constitution P. 3 Fri. 4-26-57 Atlanta Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 25 (AP)—The "last resort" segregation bill allowing localities to suspend public schools rather than accept racial integration was dealt a major setback today when the Senate refused to lift it from committee.

By a vote of 22-16 the Senate voted to leave the measure in the Education Committee.

OPPOSED BY GOVERNOR

The public school suspension plan is backed by Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin but is opposed by Gov. Leroy Collins and the Florida Education Assn.

The bill won unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee last week, but yesterday Sen. Newman Brackin of Crestview moved to return the proposal to the Education Committee. Brackin referred to the bill only by number and there was no objection.

Sen. Charley E. Johns of Starke made the move today to reconsider the vote on Brackin's motion, saying members had not realized what the bill was.

PERMITS REFERENDUM

The bill permits residents of any locality upon petition of 15 per cent of the people to have a referendum on the question of suspending the schools.

If a school is suspended, pupils can be transferred to schools in another district or another county or the state can pay the parents money to send their children to a private school.

An identical bill in the House also has been transferred from the committee it was assigned to.

Florida Moves Interposition Bill

Post + Times Sat. 4-27-57 Herald P. 10-C

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 5 (AP)—The Florida House of Representatives adopted today an interposition resolution in a new move designed to block integration in the public schools.

Washington D.C.

The resolution which interposes state sovereignty in an effort to block effectiveness of the 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation won adoption by overwhelming voice vote. It now goes to the Senate.

Adoption came after a move to postpone it had been beaten down, 59 to 29. Firty-six of the 95 members of the house had signed the resolution on introduction.

Another interposition resolution was introduced in the Senate yesterday. It differs slightly in form from the one passed by the House.

Racial Suit Bill Undergoes Change

Miami, Fla. P. 14-a

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE—A prominent Miami claims attorney told a House Committee Monday that some proposals to curb groups stirring up lawsuits in racial disputes is like "throwing the baby out with the bathwater."

Perry Nichols said he was not "unsympathetic to your aims" to prevent the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and other organizations from soliciting clients for suits, but he asserted that proposed bills against barratry and unauthorized practice of law would interfere with legally recognized procedures in the handling of suits for property damage.

Nichols said one proposal would prevent him from advising somebody of their legal rights or advancing costs to a client subject to reimbursement.

The committee amended the anti-barratry bill — designed to stop instigation of law suits in segregation cases — to exempt civil damage suits and recommended its passage.

It also voted out favorably a bill to prevent the soliciting of funds to finance suits aimed at attacking Florida segregation laws.

The committee previously recommended passage and referred to the Appropriations Committee a bill calling for $75,000 to finance continuation of the probe of racial agitators for two years.

Rep. John B. Orr Jr., only legislator to vote against pro-segregations bills in a special session last summer, said he will vote against the committee's proposals, but probably will support its request to continue operations another year.

Orr said he opposed the bills, "not because they would interfere with the NAACP, but are so broad as to affect the American Civil Liberties Union who will help anybody who needs representation."

Florida Studies Bills To Curb Race Law Suits

Advertiser P. 1-b Wed. 4-17-57 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 16 (AP)—A package program aimed at preventing the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People from stirring up racial litigation started moving in the Florida Legislature today.

The Senate Judiciary Committee gave quick approval to the key measure which would strengthen laws inst encouraging lawsuits by providing fines and prison terms. No opposition developed.

Also approved was a companion bill which would prohibit an attorney employed by an association from representing individual members of the association solely because of his employment by the organization.

The committee approved in principle three other bills in the package, but sent them to a subcommittee to make sure they would not interfere with church organizations and business corporations.

The program was recommended by the Joint Interim Committee set up by the 1956 special Legislature to check on activities of the NAACP and white supremacy groups.

The bills in the package would require the keeping of membership and financial records by organizations like the NAACP, prevent their removal from the state and give the attorney general power to examine the records at will.

The bills also would tighten controls on outsiders financing or taking part in lawsuits.

City to Appeal On Integration

Herald P. 2-a Sat. 5-4-57 Miami, Fla.

Federal Judge Emett C. Choate's order opening the Miami Springs Golf Course to Negroes will be appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

The City of Miami, which owns the course, filed notice of the appeal in Federal Court here Friday. Choate ruled that the present regulation giving Negroes use of the course only on Monday is unconstitutional.

He had ordered the course to be open to Negroes at all times beginning Friday, but the city's appeal automatically stays integration action pending disposition of the case by the high court.

Integrationist Back in Jail

The Rev. Ashton Jones, Quaker preacher of world brotherhood, is in jail again, this time in Jacksonville.

Arrested for holding integration meeting in Jacksonville's Hemming Park without police permission, the Rev. Mr. Jones was sentenced to 30 days in the city jail.

It was the same sentence that he drew under similar circumstances in Miami last March, but he was charged here with causing a disturbance at a meeting of a segregation group.

Florida Interposition Backer Raps Rival Resolution To Accept Supreme Court Race Ruling As 'Surrender'

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 4-16-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 15 (AP)—Sumter Lowry today called for the adoption of a strong interposition resolution by the Florida Legislature and denounced as "abject surrender" a rival resolution which would recognize Florida is bound by the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation decisions.

Lowry told a state Senate committee that interposition "is the starting point in a legal fight against decisions of the Supreme Court."

Attorney Gen. Richard W. Ervin told the committee that interposition "Just raises the question of state sovereignity against the power of the federal courts to strike down" state regulations.

PUBLIC HEARINGS

The committee is holding public hearings on the interposition resolution, which was rammed through the House in the opening days of this session.

Lowry, Ervin, Sen. Belser of Bonifay and J. M. Sapp of Bay County all urged the committee to approve the interposition resolution. After they appeared, the meeting was recessed until tonight when other speakers for and against the resolution are to appear.

The hearing was conducted in the Senate chamber. Observers almost filled the spacious gallery but no Negroes were among them.

After Lowry spoke against the resolution to recognize that the Supreme Court decisions were binding on Florida, the committee chairman, Sen. Rawls of Marianna, ruled that the public hearing would be limited to the interposition resolution.

SOUTHERN STATES

The resolution would declare the Supreme Court's ruling that race cannot be a basis for public school segregation to be null and void in Florida. A handful of other Southern states have already taken that position.

Gov. Collins is opposing interposition. He said it would harm the prestige of the state.

Lowry said the interposition resolution would "give the little fellows in Florida the courage and some legal standing to continue to fight on" against desegregation.

Lowry ran for governor on a states' rights platform in the last party primaries and finished second to Collins.

Ervin, in his appearance, said he regarded interposition as simply an untested legal means for the state to register opposition to federal actions.

Sen. Belser told the committee he was "100 per cent in favor of this resolution" and added he regarded it as "disgraceful that we sit here debating an issue which other Southern states have already accepted."

Color Bar Is Voided On Links

Herald P.16-a Thurs. 5-23-57 Miami Fla.

West Palm Golf Ruling Is 2nd

WEST PALM BEACH—The West Palm Beach Golf Commission has no right to bar Negroes from using the municipal course, Federal Judge Emett C. Choate said Wednesday.

The judge delayed handing down a written opinion in the civil rights case until later but let his opinion be known following a pre-trial hearing. He also has said that the Miami Springs Golf Course segregation policy is illegal.

He said, "it is the court's opinion that regardless of any personal ideas no municipality may choose among its citizens and say one citizen can enjoy the benefits of municipal ownership and another cannot."

It was brought out at the hearing that the Golf Commission — not the city commission — has direct control of the golf course.

In regard to this Judge Choate stated, "as long as the city controls the golf course directly or indirectly it cannot distinguish between taxpayers."

The golf course integration action was brought against the city by four local Negroes who charge they were denied use of the course May 24, 1956.

The original plaintiffs are Warren H. Collie, Arthur Davis, Carney Green and G. J. Gaines.

Judge Choate denied a motion by the plaintiffs to issue an immediate summary judgment against the city and said he will prepare his written opinion later.

Referring to statements in the hearing that violence is feared if the course is integrated, the judge said, "try it out and see. I don't think there will be violence."

He said it probably will cause hardships on both sides and advised that an adjustment period probably will be necessary.

Attorneys C. H. Warwick III, a member of the Golf Commission, referred to fears of violence and loss of revenue as the reason the commission issued its orders not to permit Negroes to use the course.

He added that he also was told by about 50 per cent of the members that they would not play golf if Negroes used the course.

The plaintiffs asked Judge Choate to issue an injunction providing that if the city sells its golf course the new owner will be bound by the court's ruling.

STATES' RIGHTS BILL AWAITING COLLINS' OK

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn.

Would Permit Work Toward Federal Amendment

Sat 6-1-57

FLORIDA ACTION HAILED

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 31.—A bill creating an agency to defend the principle of states' rights in Florida and other states is now on Gov. Leroy Collins' desk awaiting action.

Governor Collins hasn't indicated his attitude on the legislation.

The agency, the Florida Commission on Constitutional Government, would be permitted to go into other states and seek support for an amendment to the Federal Constitution, spelling out the rights of the states guaranteed by Article 10.

Would Tell All

Sen. John Rawls of Marianna, one of the sponsors, said the commission also would tell all that the United States Supreme Court "is taking over this Government by judicial act."

The commission, which would be financed by a $100,000 appropriation, would include one member of the Florida House, one state senator and five members appointed by the Governor.

R. B. Snowden, chairman of the campaign for the 48 states, whose national headquarters are in Memphis, and whose objectives parallel those of the sponsors of the Florida Commission on Constitutional Government, wrote the following letter to Governor Collins:

"Please accept our heartiest congratulations to you and the members of the Florida Legislature for the creation of the Florida Commission on Constitutional Government.

Adoption Urged

"This forward step must be adopted by all other states—North, South, East and West—so that the people can be alerted to the unconstitutional usurpation of powers by the centralized Federal Government.

"Unless true state sovereignty can be regained, the people and the states will lose all semblance of freedom and will rapidly become abject slaves of an unmanageable, gargantuan, bankrupt bureaucracy.

"I know that you will take great personal pride in the fact that Florida is the first state to adopt this important action."

Racial Bars Cost Miami Millions in Caribbean Trade

Herald P.3-b

By PAT MURPHY
Herald Staff Writer

KINGSTON, Jamaica — Racial discrimination and practically nonexistent industrial promotion are costing Miami millions of dollars a year in direct business from the Caribbean.

Both points were tossed at the Miami Trade Mission as it swung into this picturesque British island on the last leg of a 14-day goodwill trip to eight Caribbean neighbors.

Trade Minister Wills Isaacs said wealthy Jamaican Negro businessmen are steering away from Miami to do their buying because of color barriers at hotels and restaurants.

Without such barriers, he said Miami's business with Jamaica would increase "400 to 500 per cent and that amounts to millions."

Later, the eight-man trade mission met with officers of the Jamaica Chamber of Commerce who were critical of Miami's neglect in publicizing its industrial growth.

The chamber men said that most average Jamaica businessmen still don't know that Miami has something besides tourist facilities.

Miami Mayor Randall N. Christmas, who has been plugging hard and convincingly for greater trade with Miami, said the way is being cleared to solve both problems.

"Miami is becoming more cosmopolitan and our area is the least discriminatory in all the South. I think you will find Miami leading the way in lowering barriers which are detrimental to inter-American trade and goodwill."

Mayor Christmas said he believes both the city and businessmen "will wake up some day and make a more dynamic and fuller presentation of our industrial picture."

The mayor commented to the Jamaican chamber officials that unless Miami sets its sight on selling in the Caribbean the city's young industrial economy will lose out to other cities who are beginning to court Latin businessmen.

The chamber men said Jamaicans are buying goods mostly in New York and Chicago.

Several suggested that Miami should also seek lower freight rates to Jamaica to make trade more attractive.

Mayor Christmas told the group that Miami soon will have a new port and then can force rate-setting agencies to lower rates.

In its tour to eight countries, the eight-man mission has found interest among Caribbean businessmen to do business with Miami.

But at each stop, Miami's lack of a large seaport, high freight rates, and narrow promotional campaigns were cited as reasons now blocking trade.

Harold A. Hayward, vice president of the First National Bank, has told businessmen that Miami industry has not launched a dynamic enough sales program to enter the Caribbean market.

However, Timothy J. Sullivan, of Florida Power and Light, said first signs of what he called "a persistent door-to-door" sales campaign in the Caribbean is being made by Miami businesses.

Florida's Lawmakers Ignore Collins' Plea to 'Hold Line'

New Legislation on Segregation Offered in Both Senate, House

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 13—The racial issue is flaring again in the Florida Legislature despite a plea by Gov. LeRoy Collins for the lawmakers to hold the line to the program enacted at last summer's special session.

An interposition resolution already has passed the House. The Senate has before it an almost identical resolution on interposition and another proposal, somewhat milder, that petitions the federal government to let Florida deal with the segregation problem in its own way.

And Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin has prepared a bill which provides for the suspension of the schools and any other public facilities such as beaches, parks, swimming pools and playgrounds upon a vote of the people as a "last-ditch" stand against integration.

petent counsel advise that going further might only destroy its integrity."

The special session enacted pupil and teacher assignment laws and gave the governor extraordinary police powers in order to keep the peace.

The interposition resolution approved by the House by a voice vote declared that the U.S. Supreme Court's segregation decisions were null and void.

One group of lawmakers believe that interposition isn't "worth the paper it is printed on," to quote Sen. Joe Eaton of Miami.

But one of the backers of the House resolution — Rep. Emory in the state would not warrant it.

Upon House passage of the interposition resolution, Collins declared his opposition anew.

He said it would not help Florida's resistance to integration in the least and might hurt.

"Interposition has been of no helpful effect anywhere," Collins declared. "Whether it will hurt us I do not know, but I do not see any point in taking a chance."

FLORIDA

To counteract the interposition resolution, Eaton has introduced a resolution which he said was a "moderate approach" to the segregation issue.

If Eaton's resolution is passed by the Legislature, copies will be sent to President Eisenhower, the Congress, the U.S. attorney general, the U.S. Supreme Court and other state governments.

The resolution says that the Supreme Court decisions have a "binding effect" on Florida, "notwithstanding that such decisions may be contrary to the

The suspension bill, written by Florida's attorney general, is similar to a law enacted by the North Carolina legislature.

"I don't want the day to come," said Ervin, "when people can point their fingers at me — the state's chief legal officer — and say I didn't do my part."

Ervin contends that legislation adopted at last summer's special session will prove to be inadequate in the long run.

Collins, the State Department of Education, and the Florida Education Assn., a strong teachers' organization, have been outspoken against abolishing the public school system as a last resort effort to retain segregation and are expected to take the same stand on Ervin's suspension proposal.

Ervin's plan provides that any municipality, county or district may suspend the operation of any public facility "as an emergency measure in the public interest when the standards, health, safety, welfare, peace or morals of residents of the area are threatened."

The municipality, county or district would be forced to call a referendum on the question of suspension of a facility upon a petition of 15 per cent of the qualified electors of the area affected.

If the institution suspended should be a public school, the county school board would provide for the education of pupils affected in one of three ways:

1. Transfer the pupils to another school in the county.

2. Enter into agreement for the attendance of pupils in a school of another county or of an adjoining state.

3. If it is impossible for the county board to provide for the attendance of the pupils in another public school, it may assist in the private school education of the pupils by paying to their parents an amount not to exceed the average current expense per student of annual cost

Race-Baiter, Brotherhood Advocate Make Up, Leave Court Arm in Arm

Segregation agitator Fred B. Hockett and the Rev. Ashton Jones, world brotherhood advocate, made up and walked out of court with arms around each other's waists Wednesday. At City Judge Mitchell Goldman's suggestion, Jones dropped a charge that Hockett broke a window in his truck. Hockett in turn agreed to pay for the window.

Governor's Stand

In his message to the Legislature on its opening day, Collins declared:

"Thus far the legislative program which you approved in the special session last year has proved entirely adequate in the field of race relations. I repeat my conviction that this legislation is the best that any Southern state has devised. I do not recommend that it be changed or that we go beyond it. Com-

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that Hawkins should be allowed to attend the law school, but the Florida court in effect has barred Hawkins from entering because, it said, conditions customs, mores, traditions and attitudes of its citizens."

Florida, the resolution continued, can "adjust racial problems without domination over its citizenry by the federal government."

In view of this the resolution said, the State of Florida should be allowed "to solve the difficult and complex problems of race relations without interference from the federal government."

of education in the said county.

Protects Teachers

Teachers affected by a suspension order would be transferred to another school in the county. They would be guaranteed against any salary loss for the year and their tenure rights would not be affected.

Any facility closed would be reopened by the same procedure as used in its suspension.

Ervin said that enactment of the law might "have a deterring effect upon those who prefer to move sensationally or who react violently in panic. At best, it cannot hurt Florida more than it has hurt North Carolina, which it has not hurt at all. Moreover, it will give assurance to many of our people that their views will be given opportunity for expression in determining local problems."

In another segregation action, Sen. W. Turner Davis of Madison has introduced a bill which would call for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. It would provide for the U.S. Senate to review states' rights decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court.

This bill has the support of Ervin.

To become a part of the Constitution, the plan would have to be approved by the Legislatures of 36 states.

and other organizations.

The committee bills would require organizations such as the NAACP to keep membership and financial records, give the attorney general authority to examine these records at any time and make it unlawful for the records to be removed from the state.

The measures also would make it unlawful for anyone not directly interested to instigate or finance a lawsuit and would prevent an attorney employed by an association to represent individual members of the organization

Collins calls Florida race act a 'lie'

News P. 2-B
Birmingham, Ala.
Sun. 4-21-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 20—(AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins Saturday branded the two-day-old legislative interposition resolution a "lie." He also condemned the "Last Resort" plan to close public schools if integration threatens.

"I feel the resolution is on its face a lie," Collins said at his weekly news conference. He added, "I can never attribute any moral value to a lie."

THE FLORIDA Legislature adopted Thursday a resolution on interposition saying Florida declares "null and void" the U. S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said the interposition action expressed the will of the majority of Floridians. This means, Ervin said, Florida does not want integration and the schools in this state will not be integrated.

Collins said:

"I would feel derelict in my duty if I did not publicly express my disfavor. I certainly can say we don't all feel that way in Florida.

"I WANT TO EXPRESS opposition of the governor and our people who feel the same way."

He was asked whether he knew of any plans to assign Negroes to white public schools under the school assignment law.

"I don't know of any plan. . . . I don't believe there will be any."

Of Ervin's "Last Resort" plan to hold local options in areas where integration is a likelihood, Collins said:

"I certainly never would approve it. I don't think it's needed.

"I would never approve a plan to abolish any public school anywhere."

Integration Block Bill Plots School

Florida cities and counties could suspend schools and other public services in their localities as a last stand against integration under a bill prepared by Atty. Gen Richard Ervin.

P. 7-B

The bill, if introduced and passed in the Legislature, would give public officials authority to close schools, beaches, parks, swimming pools and other services if integration crises developed.

But the plan — which is not a new one — would be used only as a last resort after all other measures had failed, and would be operative only by consent of the people in the area concerned.

Ervin first offered this plan as a remedy for integration more than 10 months ago. And he said Saturday he personally isn't advocating the bill and does not know who will introduce it.

The measure is designed to prevent desegregation from being forced on the people without their consent.

Reds Stir Racial Trouble, Florida Legislature Told

Constitution Tues. 4-16-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 6

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 15 (AP)—The Legislature was told today that the Communist Party is trying to stir up racial trouble in Florida.

The joint committee set up to look into the activities of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and white supremacy groups reported it had evidence "that the Communist party and other subversive organizations are seeking to agitate ill will between the races."

The committee asked that its life be extended two years so it can investigate the Communist racial activity as well as "organizations advocating violence."

The committee submitted a package of five bills, in addition to the measure to extend its life, designed to curb lawsuits aimed at breaking down segregation barriers and to give the state greater control over the NAACP and other organizations.

WASHINGTON (ANP)—Two more desegregation cases, one dealing with a municipal "spa pool" and beach in Florida, and the other with a courthouse cafeteria in Texas, were upheld last week by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The rulings to desegregate had been previously handed down by lower courts.

The high court, in upholding the lower courts, refused to review the case of a municipal spa pool and bathing beach of St. Petersburg, Fla., and a cafeteria in the Harris County Courthouse in Houston, Tex.

Florida Resolution 'Voids' '54 Ruling On Segregation

Tallahassee, Fla., April 18 (AP)—The Florida Legislature today adopted a strongly worded resolution of interposition, an action that Governor LeRoy Collins said "stultifies our state."

P. 1

But Attorney General Richard W. Ervin praised the resolution, saying it in effect says the majority of Floridians think the United States Supreme Court school-desegregation decision of 1954 was wrong, that the State does not want integration and will not integrate its schools.

The resolution says Florida considers the Supreme Court decision "null and void" and will not abide by it.

Collins said the resolution action, adopted by several other Southern states, "can do no good whatever, and those who say it can perpetrate a cruel hoax on the people. I am confident our legislators didn't want to do it."

GRATITUDE . . . The Melvin B. Ellises thank Florida Governor LeRoy Collins for refusing to extradite them to face Massachusetts charges of kidnaping foster child, Hildy.

Florida Will Let Jewish Couple Keep Adopted Catholic Child There

Courier-Journal Fri. 5-24-57 P. 1

Louisville, Ky.

Extradition Is Refused

From Wire Dispatches

Tallahassee, Fla., May 23.—Governor LeRoy Collins gave a Jewish couple asylum in Florida today with their adopted Catholic daughter, holding that the child's real mother had denied her "the right to be wanted and to be loved."

38a

Collins also denied on legal grounds the extradition request of the State of Massachusetts, where Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis had been charged with "kidnaping" blond Hildy McCoy, 6. The true mother started the action when she found out the foster parents were Jewish.

The Florida Governor, a Protestant ruling on a Jewish-Catholic custody contest, ruled that Massachusetts had built up a "synthetic" criminal case against the Ellises.

Fled State In 1955

It was because of a Massachusetts law keeping adoptions within religious faiths—where possible—that the Ellises were brought before Collins as fugitives.

They fled Massachusetts in 1955 when courts there ruled that Hildy, whom they adopted when she was 10 days old, should be put in a Catholic foundling home for adoption within the Catholic faith.

The child's natural mother, Marjorie McCoy Doherty, is a Catholic. After she learned Hildy went to a Jewish couple she tried to revoke her consent to the adoption.

'Respects Mother's Right'

Collins said that while he respects the right of a natural mother to have the child reared in her faith, "it must yield to more fundamental rights.

"The great and good God of all of us, regardless of faith, grants to every child to be born first the right to be wanted and secondly the right to be loved. Hildy's mother denied both of these rights to her. . . .

"It was the Ellises in truth and in fact who have been the persons through whom God has assured to Hildy these first two rights as one of His children."

Silently Hold Hands

When the Governor announced his decision in a packed hearing room, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis stood silently holding hands. Both were crying and neither could answer reporters' questions.

"We're very, very happy," was all Ellis could say. His wife sat in a chair beside him and muttered, "Thank God, thank God."

Collins read his three-page decision, which he said he had included in a letter sent this afternoon to Massachusetts Governor Foster Furcolo, who had requested that the Ellises be sent back to Boston. There, the Ellises adopted Hildy 10 days after she was born out of wedlock to a Catholic mother.

It was a dramatic end to the Ellises' six-year fight for custody of the little freckle-faced Hildy.

Courier-Journal

Collins rejected the extradition request on two legal points.

First, he said the indictments on which the extradition request was based "are insufficient to substantially charge the alleged fugitives with crimes against the laws of Massachusetts."

P. 16

He said that under Massachusetts law, "intent" must be shown in an indictment but the Massachusetts indictment against the Ellises failed to show this.

'Not Physically Present'

Second, Collins said, "it is objected that the alleged fugitives are not fugitives as a matter of law."

He said the indictments charged the Ellises violated the law by taking Hildy away from Massachusetts in September, 1956. But he said:

"The proof before me shows that the alleged fugitives were not physically present in the state of Massachusetts at any time after July, 1955, which was something like 14 months prior to the times alleged in the indictments."

'Not In Proper Form'

Collins said that under Florida law a person is not a fugitive unless he is present "at or about" the time the alleged crime he is accused of was committed.

"The request of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is therefore not in proper form and is denied," said the Governor.

There is no appeal from the Governor's decision and Collins said he saw "no useful purpose" in allowing Massachusetts authorities to file a brief further clarifying their stand in the case.

"It is clear to me that the criminal proceedings against Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are synthetic," Collins said. "No crime of kidnaping in a proper sense is involved. The real issue is simply whether or not the custody of Hildy McCoy should continue with the Ellises or be put under institutional control and direction."

Will Sell Links For Half Price To Avoid Integration

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. June 7, 1957

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.—(INS) The Ft. Lauderdale city council faced with integrating its million dollar Municipal Golf Course, voted Wednesday to sell it to an association" especially established to meet such an emergency.

The 194-Acre course will be sold for $562,400 slightly more than half of its appraised value.

38a

Mayor John V. Russell, who cast one of the two votes against the proposal--which passed by a slim 3-2 margin--denounced the decision as a "step backward."

The commissioners also discussed selling other public facilities to avoid integrating them. Specifially mentioned was the $3-million Bacia Mar Yacht Basin, one of the largest in the nation and the city swimming pool.

The successful bidder on the golf course was the Fort Lauderdale Men's Golf Association, organizaed about a year ago for the purpose of operating the course in the event the city was forced to admit Negroes.

The Association must be registered as a corporation within ten days before the sale can become final.

Florida's Governor Allows Jewish Pair To Keep Hildy

Fri. 5-24-57 Memphis Tenn.

By The United Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 23.—Gov. Leroy Collins gave a Jewish couple asylum in Florida Thursday with their adopted Catholic daughter, holding the child's real mother had denied her "the right to be wanted and to be loved."

Governor Collins also denied on legal grounds the extradition request of the State of Massachusetts where Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis had been charged with "kidnaping" blond Hildy McCoy, 6.

The true mother started the action when she found out the foster parents were Jewish.

Governor Collins' decision crowned with success the Ellises' six-year fight to keep custody of Hildy, a struggle that saw them exhaust most of their resources. Since 1955 they had been in flight, living in seven cities before they moved to Miami Beach.

Calls Case 'Synthetic'

The Florida Governor, a Protestant ruling on a Jewish-Catholic custody contest, ruled Massachusetts had built up a "synthetic" criminal case against Mr. and Mrs. Ellis.

But, he said as the couple stood before him holding hands, it had been argued Hildy's natural mother had the right to have the child reared in her own Catholic faith. This right, he said, must yield "to more fundamental rights."

"The great and good God of all of us," Governor Collins said, "regardless of faith, grants to every child first the right to be wanted and secondly the right to be loved. Hildy's mother has denied both these rights to her.

"It was the Ellises in truth and in fact, who have been the persons through whom God has assured to Hildy, these first two rights as one of His children."

When the Governor announced his decision at a jam-packed hearing room, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were crying and neither could answer the questions of reporters.

"We're very, very happy," was all Mr. Ellis could say. His wife sat in a chair beside him and muttered, "Thank God, thank God."

Three-Page Decision

Governor Collins read his three-page decision which he said he included in a letter sent Thursday afternoon to Massachusetts. Gov. Foster Furcolo, who had requested Mr. and Mrs. Ellis be sent back to Boston.

There, they adopted Hildy 10 days after she was born out of wedlock to the Roman Catholic mother.

Governor Collins rejected the extradition request on two legal points: First, that the indictments on which the extradition request was based "are insufficient to substantially charge the alleged fugitives with crimes against laws of Massachusetts."

He said that under Massachusetts law, "intent must be shown in an indictment but the Massachusetts indictment against the Ellises failed to show this.

Secondly, Governor Colling said, "it is objected that the alleged fugitives are not fugitives as a matter of law."

He said the indictments charged the Ellises violated the law by taking Hildy away from Massachusetts in September, 1956. But he said "the proof before me shows that the alleged fugitives were not physically present in the State of Massachusetts at any time after July, 1955, which was something like 14 months prior to the times alleged in the indictments."

Hildy 'To Graduate'

After Governor Collins finished his statement, the happy Ellises caught a plane for Miami and Miami Beach where Hildy was waiting for them.

The little girl had stayed home to prepare for "graduation" from the first grade and rehearse her class play.

"The Governor certainly was wonderful in his decision," Mr. Ellis said en route to the airport. He added he would have abided by any decision Governor Collins made.

In Hingham, Mass., Mrs. Marjorie McCoy Doherty, Hildy's real mother, said: "I don't want to discuss the decision."

Report Backs Ellises

Hildy Adoption Clear

Herald P.1-2
Wed. 7-3-57 Miami Fla.

By JOHN B. McDERMOTT
Herald Staff Writer

Legal adoption of freckle-faced Hildy McCoy by her Miami Beach Jewish foster parents has been recommended here by welfare investigators, The Herald learned Tuesday.

The recommendation is expected to play an important role in the final disposition of the nationally-spotlighted case which is set for hearing in Miami Circuit Court next Monday.

A sealed report of the welfare investigation has been sent to state headquarters in Jacksonville and been given a stamp of approval there, it was learned.

Attorney Tom Duff, chairman of the District Welfare Board here, said he is not at liberty to divulge the contents of the sealed report.

"All I can say is that we have made a fact-finding report to the state board based on the information compiled by our investigators," he said.

"This case was handled just as are all other adoption cases and we were not swayed by sympathies, emotions or the hysteria which this case has caused in many parts of the nation."

A two-state fight over the honey-blonde child had been settled six weeks ago when Gov. LeRoy Collins refused an extradition order from Massachusetts. The foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Ellis, were being sought by Massachusetts authorities on a technical charge of kidnapping the six-year-old girl.

Hildy was born to a Catholic mother. Her mother, now Mrs. Marjorie McCoy Doherty, has been trying to have the child given for adoption to a Catholic couple.

Ben Cohen, attorney for the Ellises, said he plans to bring Hildy into court for the hearing Monday.

"I talked with Judge (John) Prunty this afternoon," he said. "He said it is always his policy to have the child present during an adoption hearing. So, I guess we'll have Hildy there."

Cohen said he will go into court prepared for a showdown fight should Mrs. Doherty try to block the adoption.

However, he has had no indication from the mother as to whether she or her attorney will show up.

Judge Indicates He Can End Miami Bus Segregation

Herald Tribune
Miami, Fla.
Wed. 7-3-57

MIAMI — (INS) — A Miam Federal judge who has made several rulings in the past upholding U. S. Supreme Court integration decrees, indicated Wednesday he will put an end to the city's bus segregation laws.

Judge Emmett C. Choate had earlier given attorneys for four Negro women seeking to test the ordinances in court and city attorneys fighting the move 15 days in which to file formal briefs.

BUS LAW INVALID

The jurist pointed out after the hearing he has publicly expressed himself as believing Miami's bus segregation laws are invalid because of Supreme Court decisions.

The Negroes testified of several occasions when they had been forced to obey local segregation ordinances.

Thomas G. O'Connell, former city attorney, told the court he had handled some 40,000 cases for the city and could not remember a single case in which a Negro was charged with violating bus segregation laws. O'Connell is now an assistant state attorney.

PAST CASES

G. E. Graves an attorney who has handled past cases for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, argued the plaintiffs' civil rights are being violated by local segregation laws.

The Negro women told Judge Choate they had been ordered to move to the rear of city buses on several occasions and had gotten off the vehicles rather than comply with orders issued by bus drivers.

Sell Golf Course To Bar Negroes

Pittsburgh Pa.

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—Prejudice is affecting this Southern resort town where it hurts most this week . . . in the pocket book.

Rather than follow a District Court ruling that the city cannot deny Negroes the right to play on the municipal course, the city commission voted 3-2 to sell the course to the Fort Lauderdale Men's Golf Association, for $562,400. Since the course is valued at $1 million, the city loses a half-million on the deal.

Inter Civic Council awaits test on law

Afro American Sat. 2-16-57

Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Tallahassee's Inter Civic Council's news letter last week voiced the organization's intention of testing the city's new reserve seating arrangement on city buses in the courts.

The court test, due in the next few days, will involve the trial of six students arrested on Jan. 19 after three of the occupied seats other than those assigned them by the driver.

The council's news letter cited local press comment which labeled the ordinance under which the students were arrested as "an absurdity" and said that the city had "fallen into a trap" in making the arrests.

THE NEWS LETTER pointed out also that increased registration activity indicated growing support for the candidacy of the Rev. King Solomin Dupont for City Commissioner on an anti-segregation platform.

It concluded:

"Ours in addition to being a spiritual crusade, is a constitutional and lawful fight. We are seeking justice and it takes money, to keep the wheels of justice oiled and running.

"We, on the scene, are giving to the cause until it hurts, and we are imploring you to do the same.

"Mail your contributions to the Inter Civic Council of Tallahassee, 803 Floral St., Tallahassee, Fla."

Florida Golf Links Opened to Negroes

Star 2-4-a Fri. 2-22-57

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., Feb. 22 (AP). — Federal Judge Emmett Choate yesterday handed down an order opening the Fort Lauderdale municipal golf course to Negroes.

Julien E. Ross, city attorney, was advised of the action which came in the prolonged litigation started by the Northwest Golfers Association of Fort Lauderdale. Judge Choate signed his order in Miami, effective in 20 days.

Under the ruling, Negroes must be admitted to the Fort Lauderdale Golf and Country Club and have full rights to use of the clubhouse, locker rooms, bar and other facilities.

The city attorney filed a request for stay of judgement which will be heard Feb. 26.

Jailed Clergyman Turns Down Help

Sun. 3-3-57 P. 1

Miami, Fla.

By AL CHICCKINE
Herald Staff Writer

A minister arrested for interrupting a segregationist meeting refused offers of bail or legal counsel Saturday and remained in a Miami jail.

The Rev. Ashton Jones, a Quaker clergyman from Atlanta, spent his time reading a book, "Peaceable Kingdom," loaned by one of his jailers.

"I am enjoying every minute," said the 61-year-old minister who has been kidnaped, beaten and shot at for his beliefs in the brotherhood of man.

"I got some sleep and I have been talking to other prisoners."

Several persons called on the minister and offered to provide bail. An attorney, Robert Diehl, said he would represent him without charge when he faces trial Monday in Miami City Court on charges of trespassing, provoking a breach of the peace and resisting an officer. The offer was declined.

"I would be glad to have any legal advice, but I expect to represent myself," the Rev. Mr. Jones said. "This is a question of civil liberties. I believe I know as much about that as anybody."

The Rev. Mr. Jones was carried bodily from a meeting of the Seaboard White Citizens Council Friday night at the home of W. H. Roper, 1501 NW 55th St. The minister interrupted Fred B. Hockett, top lieutenant of John Kasper, head of the SWCC.

The minister said he interrupted a similar meeting of the Dade County Property Owners Assn. Thursday night, contradicting statements by David I. Hawthorne, the association's head.

A group of persons at that meeting "acted as a mob" and threw him out, the Rev. Mr. Jones declared. Police took no hand in that incident.

The Rev. and Mrs. Jones have spent the last 26 years touring the world in a "Brotherhood Car," a trailer mounted on a truck chassis and painted with symbols of friendship between races.

The minister speaks at every opportunity against war and racial prejudice. He earns a living by working on farms, helping with carpenter jobs and other manual chores.

A frequent visitor to Miami, he came here a few days ago for Brotherhood Week and has been speaking in churches and at community rallies.

The clergyman said he was not guilty of any wrongdoing Friday night. He explained he was present at a meeting advertised as open to all, and made no effort to create a disturbance or resist officers.

"I told them they would have to remove me bodily. They were only doing their duty."

"That's my training — non-violence and non-cooperation with things I believe are unjust.

Rev. Ashton Jones
. . . smiling in jail

"I have been arrested 14 times in five states — most of them in the South—as a method of intimidation."

Asked if he had been a conscientious objector and whether he had been arrested for this belief, he replied quickly and forcefully:

"Yes! I feel that it is constitutional for a man to be a conscientious objector to taking lives of other men. I served seven months in the Ashland (Ky.) federal prison for not registering for the draft during World War II."

Claim 100 Boxes Dynamite Hid

Defender Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 3-9-57

By MARTIN MURPHY

MIAMI — (INS) — Al Neuharth, executive city editor of the Miami Herald, refused, on grounds of "newspaper ethics" yesterday to answer questions put to him by a Florida legislative committee regarding a copyrighted segregation story the Herold carried Tuesday morning.

The story, without naming the source of its information, said some 100 boxes of dynamite were secreted in the Miami area for future use in racial violence.

The story, which committee counsel Mark Hawes went over paragraph by paragraph, linked Fred P. Hockett, one of four men arrested in a recent cross burning attempt, and the Seaboard White Citizens Council to the dynamite.

Hockett preceded Neuharth to the stand and labeled the story "contemptible fiction."

The admitted pro-segregationist was the first witness Wednesday as the committee shifted its investigation from the NAACP to white supremacy grounds.

Neuharth said both he and the Herald wanted to help the investigators "in every way possible" and had suggested other means by which the committee could probably get the information it wanted.

When pinned down on where the Herald got the information for its copyrighted story, however, Neuharth stated time and again: "I am unable as a matter of professional ethics . . . to divulge our source." Neuharth said he and his newspaper had done everything but lead the investigator "by the hand" to the Herald source, but would not outrightly violate a confidence.

The Herald story said, in effect, that Hockett had been sent to Miami by Frederick John Kasper, of Washington, D. C., secretary-treasurer of the SWCC, to stir up racial discontent.

It said the dynamite would be touched off "at the place" the "brooding convict. . .chooses."

Hockett, cautioned by committee counsel that perjury carries a 20-year sentence in Florida, flatly denied he was sent to Miami by Kasper.

Hockett said he believes the Herald got its information from Hampton E. Shaver, 47, one of the men arrested along with Hockett in the attempted cross burning case.

The committee immediately subpoenaed Shaver and Herald attorney, John G. Thompson, requested, and was granted, the right to cross-examine future witnesses.

The Seaboard White Citizen Council which Kasper heads has been blamed for stirring up riots in Clinton, Tenn.

Racial Row Stirs Plea To Mayor

Miami Mayor Randall N. Christmas was asked Saturday to appoint a committee of strong community leaders to head off racial violence.

The Dade County Council on Human Relations said the group should work with city officials and the police to "protect the economy and security of our people and business interests."

Miss Alice MacVicar, council chairman, wrote to Christmas after a series of incidents, including attempted cross burnings, meetings of segregationist groups in troubled areas, and threats to a Negro family which moved into a white neighborhood.

Miss MacVicar complimented the police on the "prompt and efficient manner in which the cross-burning incident was broken up.

Four persons, including Fred B. Hockett, henchman of rabble-rousing John Kasper, were arrested.

"Your insistence on keeping order has forestalled in Miami the unfavorable situations now existing in Clinton, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee," Miss MacVicar wrote.

"Violence in racial relations is a threat to the security of all. Whatever may be their views on segregation, good citizens certainly despise and abhor such actions."

Newspapers have taken a positive stand in these matters, Miss MacVicar said, in expressing the majority view against creation of race tensions.

Mayor Christmas was out of the city Saturday and could not be reached for comment.

City Commissioner B. E. Hearn said "a committee of this type might be very helpful. It's certainly worth trying."

Hollis Rinehart, past president of the Dade County Council on Community Relations, said a strong civic leadership in the fight against racial agitators would be of permanent value.

Police Chief Walter E. Headley was unavailable for comment Saturday, but Assistant Chief J. A. Youell said the suggestion was a good one, so far as the police are concerned.

Racial Unit Bill Passed

Herald Miami Fla.

TALLAHASSEE (UP) — The Legislature completed action Friday on the governor's bill creating a racial advisory commission. 5-25-57

The Senate concurred in minor House amendments to the measure and sent it to the governor for approval. It authorizes appointment of a three-to-five member commission to advise the governor on racial matters.

The bill passed the House amidst rumblings that Gov. LeRoy Collins plans to appoint Negro members to the commission and charges that he favors gradual racial integration.

There was no debate in the Senate.

Hildy Awarded to Ellises By Florida Governor

Star Fri. 5-24-57 P. 6-a Washington D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 24 (AP).—"Simple right and justice require that Hildy McCoy's present home life should not be disturbed."

With those words, Gov. Leroy Collins yesterday granted sanctuary in Florida to Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis, the Jewish foster parents of 6-year-old Hildy, who was born of an unwed Catholic mother.

Massachusetts — which has tried for four years to take the child away from the Ellises under a law requiring adoptions within religious faiths where possible—charged the Ellises with kidnaping Hildy.

Gov. Collins called the charge "synthetic" and said "the real issue is simply whether or not the custody of Hildy McCoy should continue with the Ellises or be placed under institutional control and direction."

Fundamental Rights

The Governor said that while he respected the right of the natural mother to have the child reared in her faith "it must yield to more fundamental rights.

"God . . . grants to every child . . . first the right to be wanted and secondly the right to be loved.

"Hildy's mother has denied both of these rights to her. Admittedly she did not want Hildy in the first place . . . the mother claims that she now loves the child, but this cannot be true in a real sense. She may want to love the child, but love can only result from the giving of one's sell to another.

"It was the Ellises in truth and in fact who have been the persons through whom God has assured to Hildy these first two rights as one of his children. . . . It was the Ellises also who have given of themselves to Hildy, as only parents can understand."

Gov. Collins is a Protestant and the father of four children.

Tears in Many Eyes

A crowded hearing room applauded. There were tears in many eyes. One of Mr. Ellis' attorneys, Ben Cohen, wiped a handkerchief across his face.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis thanked the Governor, newspapers, radio and television stations who helped carry their story to the public and the thousands who wrote letters of encouragement to the Ellises and appealed to Gov. Collins.

The ordeal has cost the Ellises a home and a successful dry cleaning business in Massachusetts. They will never be able to visit friends and relatives there, Mr. Ellis said, nor will he see his father's grave again.

They rushed from the hearing directly to an airliner taking them back to Miami Beach and a reunion with Hildy. Today the child graduates from the first grade at Lear School there. Her mother announced proudly she is first in her class.

RACES

Backward Step

Fort Lauderdale's 18-hole municipal golf course, a choice piece of Florida real estate, has been appraised at a cool million dollars. But last week the city commissioners, by a 3-to-2 vote, knocked down the course for $562,400 to the Fort Lauderdale Men's Golf Association, which will henceforth run it as a restricted private club. Reason: a Negro foursome, denied permission to play, had won a Federal Court order to open the course to Negroes.

Mon 7-22-57

After the sale Fort Lauderdale golfers heard unhappily that greens fees ($1.50 in summer, $3 in winter) will soon be raised to cover taxes, improvements, and a ten-year $373,400 mortgage. Unhappy also was the city's young (30) Mayor John V. Russell, who voted against the sale, pointed to other Southern cities where Negroes seldom appear on integrated courses. Outspoken Mayor Russell outlined a problem worrying many another Dixie city official: "A handful of Negroes can put us out of the recreation business entirely. We have miles of public beaches, a swimming pool, and the finest marina anywhere in the world. The same thing can happen to those facilities that happened to the golf course. The decision to sell is a step backwards in solving our problem."

Links Sale Ban Sought By Negroes

MIAMI, Sept. 13 (AP)—Four Negroes filed suit in federal court yesterday seeking to halt Fort Lauderdale's proposed sale of that city's golf course to a private group.

The suit alleged the city commissioners "fraudulently contracted" with the Fort Lauderdale Men's Golf Assn. "for the sole purpose" of evading the Miami court's order ending racial segregation at the golf course.

The city commissioners, the suit said, are willing to sell public property worth "in excess of $1,000,000" for "a paltry down payment of $189,000" and an additional $378,400 within 10 years.

It asked the court to decide if a municipal corporation lawfully can sell its public golf course to a non-profit corporation made up entirely of white golfers.

The suit claimed the city did not consider selling the course until desegregation was ordered. Federal Judge Emett C. Choate on Feb. 20 ordered an end to segregation practices at the golf course but stayed his order pending an appeal.

Florida University Ousts Student For Violating Racial Regulations

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C. Sun. 1-27-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 26 (UP)—Florida State University today asked a graduate student to withdraw from the all-white institution for bringing three Negro students to a Christmas party on the campus in violation of university regulations.

The student, John Boardman of Fort Dodge, Iowa, who regularly attends mass Negro integration meetings in this racially-troubled Florida capital, charged that the action amounted to "suspension" and said he would fight it.

Violated Regulations.

University President Doak S. Campbell said the principal reason for the school's move was his action in bringing the Negroes to a holiday party. Boardman had been told it "would be in violation of university regulations."

"When asked specifically whether in the future he would be willing to abide by regulations, Mr. Boardman said he had no intention of abiding by any regulations concerning racial tension," Campbell said.

"After full investigation, the university came to the conclusion it had no alternative but to ask him to withdraw at the end of the present semester.

"He was permitted to finish out this semester merely as a concession so that he might secure his credits," Campbell added.

Boardman told newsmen earlier that he was asked not to enroll for the second semester beginning Feb. 6 for violating the rules barring racial mixing and also for publicly advocating election of a Negro to a city post.

Retains Counsel.

He said he retained Francisco Rodriguez, Tampa attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as his counsel.

Dean of Students R. R. Oglesby confirmed Boardman's statement that the student was told not to enroll next month, but added that Boardman broke faith by talking to newsmen without advising him first and "I intend to recommend immediate suspension."

Boardman said Oglesby called him to his office this morning and advised him that he was not wanted at the university. He said Oglesby stated he could complete the present semester, but would not be accepted next semester.

The graduate student, who attends Florida State on a $150 per month assistantship from the National Research Council, said Oglesby gave him two reasons, including Boardman's statement at a Negro Inter-Civic Council mass meeting Wednesday night urging white Tallahasseans to vote for the Rev. K. S. DuPont in next month's city elections.

The second reason, Boardman said, dates back to December, when he brought three Negroes from Florida A&M University to a Christmas party of the International Club on the Florida State campus.

Boardman said the International Club has many foreign members and the three Negroes he brought were from the Bahamas and Panama. He admitted he knew of a board of control regulation prohibiting mixing of Florida State and A&M students on the campus.

Boardman is working for a doctorate in physics. He got his master's from Iowa College and his parents live at Fort Dodge. He said he chose Florida State because of its excellent physics department.

He said, "Dean Oglesby claimed my support of DuPont was a violation of a board of control policy" warning students of both universities here to stay out of the racial dispute.

Mr. Boardman, from Ames, Iowa, said Dean R. R. Oglesby had told him that the action resulted from a speech he had made in behalf of the Rev. K. S. DuPont Wednesday night. He also said he had been barred for having invited three foreign students enrolled at Florida A. & M. for Negroes to a Christmas party on the F. S. U. campus.

Mr. Boardman declared that he would fight the order on the ground that it deprived him the right of free speech and the right of free assembly.

Reveal Plan To Bomb Miami Negroes' Homes

Call Fri. 3-8-57 P. 1

Kansas City, Mo.

MIAMI, Fla. — (NS) — A committee of the Florida legislature resumed hearings yesterday on racial strife in the Miami area with main interest focused on a reported cache of 100 boxes of dynamite for use against Negroes and their property.

The committee Wednesday extended hearings at least another day when subpoena-servers were unable to locate two key witnesses.

At least one of the witnesses, Hampton E. Shaver, was located Wednesday night and said he had been a "round-robin spy for everybody concerned."

The investigation, up until Wednesday was directed against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People when the committee decided to launch a probe of white supremacy groups.

The reported dynamite cache was first revealed by the Miami Herald, which linked Fred P. Hochett to the explosives. Hochett was arrested Saturday along with three other men for attempting to burn a cross in front of a Miami Negro's home.

Hochett, who admitted being a member of the Seaboard White Citizens Council denied any knowledge of dynamite.

Executive City Editor Al Neuharth of the Herald testified that to reveal the source of the paper's story would be a violation of a confidence but offered to cooperate in every other way possible.

Hockett named Shaver who was also one of the men arrested Saturday, as the likely source of the Herald's information.

Reached early Thursday morning Shaver said he had been subpoenaed to testify Thursday and would tell a real hair-raising story righted story in the Miami Herald. Executive City Editor Al Neuharth of the Herald refused Wednesday on the grounds of "newspaper ethics" to reveal the source of his information.

Thursday, however, Hampton Shaver, also arrested in the cross burning, corroborated under oath much of the disputed story. Shaver admitted to the committee he told Neuharth about 100 boxes of dynamite being secreted in the Miami area.

He also substantiated quotes alleged to have been made by Hockett that Miami segregation leaders weren't "tough enough" and perhaps a "little fire and some dynamite" were needed.

Hockett has vigorously denied in sworn testimony that he made many of the remarks.

Rep. Cliff Herrell, acting committee chairman, said in a statement at the conclusion of the hearings the group has "endeavored to be diligent in...efforts to secure the whole truth regarding matters under consideration."

Herrell said the committee "wishes to commend" witnesses who have testified honestly "and freely." The statement added:

"To those who may not have testified fully for reasons known only to them or stated in the record, the committee is confident that the information was withheld with the individual having full knowledge of his responsibilities to the committee and the state of Florida."

Herrell said a report would be submitted to the 1957 Florida legislature "with our recommendations" as to further actions in the case. He said the committee also plans further hearings in Florida "at a later time."

An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People denied he had tried to influence Shaver's testimony.

G. E. Graves said he talked with Shaver Wednesday night but advised him only "to tell a straight story." Shaver told the committee Graves warned him that if "I didn't talk right up here some of the boys in colored town could get pretty rough with me."

William Knight, another witness, told the committee he confided to a friend he had "been requested" to obtain dynamite caps for the purpose of blowing up the foundations of a Negro housing development in

Police Are Asked To Bar Negroes

Herald Miami Fla.

Tues. 1-29-57 P. 5C

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— Police were asked Monday to help a landlord keep Negroes out of an apartment occupied by a white Florida State University student.

Pat Patterson, apartment house owner, told police a "bunch of Negroes" went in and out of the apartment rented by Jon Folsom of Miami "from 10:30 p.m. to 3 a.m. and created a disturbance."

Folsom was one of a group of six youths, three of them Negro students from Florida A&M University, arrested Jan. 19 for violating the city's new bus seat assignment ordinance. Folsom was released as a material witness.

Joe Spagna of St. Petersburg, an FSU student, and two of the Negroes were charged.

Folsom could not be reached for comment on his landlord's complaint to police. He had said earlier that he was asked to vacate the apartment following his arrest.

Folsom attended a Negro mass meeting Sunday night at which an FSU graduate student, who has been barred from reenrolling because of a race-mixing incident, said the integration campaign would continue on the FSU campus.

John Boardman told the Negro meeting he would fight his ouster from FSU.

"Even if I were to leave Tallahassee there would still be other students who will carry on," he said.

Dr. Doak S. Campbell, FSU president, said Saturday Boardman would not be allowed to enroll for the spring semester because he took three foreign students from A&M to a Christmas party on the FSU campus after being warned it would violate university regulations.

NEGRO IN NORTH FINDS BARRIERS

Atlanta Georgian

New Orleans La.

But Far Greater Advance Made, Says Life

Times 3-7-57

NEW YORK, March 6 (AP)—Life magazine said Wednesday that while Negroes have made far greater social progress in the North than in the South, they are still plagued by countless forms of discrimination in the North.

The magazine published results of a survey of Northern Negro life in an article titled "The Negro and the North." It was a follow-up to a survey of Southern segregation published last September.

"The North has done far more for Negro dignity than the South," said the magazine. "In the past 15 years, Negroes have advanced faster there than in any previous time and their political equality is now assured.

"Thousands of Northern Negroes hold excellent jobs, some with white employes under them. Hundreds of thousands of Northern Negroes have social contacts with their white friends.

Fare Better, Earn More

"In general they fare better and earn more than in the South. This is why Negroes in the North have roughly quadrupled since 1920 while the number in the South has risen a mere 30 per cent.

"Yet Northern Negroes keep encountering walls of exclusion which result from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox and hypocrisy.

"Some Negroes are jammed into ghettos more rigid and more squalid than many of those in the South. The Northern white violence against Negroes at Trumbull Park in Chicago since 1953 has been as bad as any Southern white violence in Montgomery, Ala.—and has drawn a peaceable Negro response modeled on Montgomery."

Describes Difference

Life described the difference in this way:

"In the South resistance to desegregation is open and blatant. In the North, it is covert. In most of the South, segregation is still a way of life to be defended. In more and more of the North, discrimination is coming to be recognized as a wrong to be corrected."

Some of the problems encountered by Negroes in the North at present were listed as:

"Negro real estate men find few attractive houses anywhere for their clients, and seek to open new areas for Negroes. They face many obstacles.

"Dozens of Midwestern towns refuse to let Negroes work as clerks.

"Some large unions (e.g.) Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the National Postal Transport Association) still have bars up against Negroes.

On the other hand, the magazine listed these points of advancement for Northern Negroes:

"Today qualified Negro engineers find a readier acceptance in the North than any other professional group. The whole 1956 and 1957 classes of engineers at Howard, a Negro university, had fine job offers long before graduation.

"In the North, 15 states and 36 cities have laws which forbid discrimination against Negroes. Negroes can now frequent most leading Northern hotels, restaurants and theaters, although they still feel a little uneasy about it because pretexts are found to turn them away."

MIAMI— An attorney for the NAACP denied before a legislative committee last week that he had threatened a star witness, a white man, in an attempt to influence his testimony.

The attorney, G. E. Graves, admitted talking with the witness, Hampton Shaver, but said he only "advised Shaver to tell a straight story."

However, Shaver, who preceded Graves to the witness stand, told the committee Graves had warned him that if he didn't "talk right up here some of the boys in colored town could get pretty rough with me."

BACKS UP STORY

Shaver, sought for two days by committee subpoena servers, corroborated from the stand much of the Miami Herald's disputed copyrighted story which appeared in Tuesday morning's editions.

He admitted telling Executive City Editor Al Neuharth about reports he had heard of 100 boxes of dynamite being secreted in the area.

He further substantiated quotes attributed to Fred P. Hockett regarding alleged statements that Miami segregation leaders weren't "tough enough" and perhaps a little "fire and some dynamite" were needed.

FOUR ARRESTED

Hockett was arrested along with Shaver and two other men in a cross burning attempt in Miami last Saturday night.

Hockett was called to the stand earlier and denied a Herald story printed following the Saturday night incident saying, in effect, that Hockett had been sent here by the Seaboard White Citizens council of Washington, D. C., to stir up racial unrest.

SOUGHT EXPLOSIVES

The other witness which the committee held over its hearings to question, William Knight, appeared only briefly.

He admitted having told a friend that he had "been requested" to obtain dynamite caps for the purpose of blowing up the foundations of a Negro housing development. He said he didn't know why he made the statement and was "just shooting the breeze."

The committee then recalled Graves, the attorney for the Miami he had with Shaver on grounds he, too, would be violating a confidence. One of the questions Graves refused to answer was whether Shaver had been operating in pro-segregationist circles as an informant for the NAACP.

The committee then heard a young Miami draftsman, John G. Adams, testify that a William Knight, who he identified as a "friend of a friend" had called him last Sunday and said he had been requested to obtain some dynamite caps, reportedly for the purpose of blowing up a Negro housing development.

Adams said he did not know who made the request or any other details beyond the statement he said Knight made on the phone. arm of NAACP, and drew from him the admission that he had known Shaver for some three months and had accompanied him to one Miami newspaper, but not the Herald.

REFUSES TO ANSWER

Graves refused to answer many questions regarding conversations

Miami Fla.

The council urged last Saturday that a committee of community leaders be established to work with city officials and police to avert possible violence stemming from the segregation question.

Miami Police Sgt. Robert Adair reported Tuesday that vandals had smashed windows in the home of Frank Legree, Negro, of 1455 NW 55th St., in the latest of a series of incidents.

Wed. 3-6-57

Sgt. Adair said they had broken jalousie windows on the porch of the Legree home with rocks. The house is in a white neighborhood. Adair also said the lawn was littered with trash, papers and broken glass.

Legree, a former nightclub entertainer, and his family were not in the house when it was stoned, police said. They have been living with friends in another part of town.

Meanwhile, Fred B. Hockett, pitch-man for professional segregationist John Kasper, will go on trial at 8 a.m. today in Municipal Court, facing charges filed after he attempted to burn a cross on the Legree lawn.

Hockett and three companions, Frank L. Foster Jr., Frank McSwiney and Hampton E. Shaver — the last now denounced by Hockett as a "turncoat" — are accused of unlawful assembly in the unsuccessful cross-burning.

Kasper, executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council, was reported to have arrived in Miami Tuesday night.

He was not accompanied by an armed guard, as his supporters had promised earlier in the week.

Florida Re-Writes Segregation Laws

Daily Pelican Sta. p. 1 — Thurs. 10-15-57

BY UNITED PRESS

Florida's constitution was in its final form Thursday, containing a mild anti-integration measure, but the charter now must meet with approval of the voters.

The Legislature fought all day Wednesday on the racial question, and one legislator angrily resigned in protest of the body's failure to take stiffer action toward preserving segregation.

Sen. Harvie Belser lashed out at Gov. LeRoy Collins and his fellow legislators for ignoring "southern traditions" in defeating a "last resort" segregation measure, then stalked out. His absence, ironically, caused a tie vote on a motion to reconsider the bill, which provided for closing the schools rather than allow them to be integrated.

A host of racial measures were introduced, but the only one to pass was a provision for closing schools in the event federal troops are sent in to enforce integration.

The new constitution is expected to draw opposition from voters in some sections because of a section devoted to reapportionment.

NORTH CAROLINA

In North Carolina, meanwhile, state officials expected to sound out reaction to the new limited integration program during a convention of the state chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People which starts today.

The NAACP's state president, Kelly M. Alexander, gave a hint Wednesday of what that reaction may be; he termed the program "desegregation on a token basis."

The convention will concentrate "on plans for expanding present school desegregation programs," according to Alexander. He said leaders also will discuss implementation of all civil rights for Negroes.

About 300 delegates are expected at the meeting, which closes Sunday.

Mayor to Ask for Watchdog Committee to Avert Racial Violence

Mayor Randall N. Christmas said Tuesday he will ask the Miami City Commission to appoint a watchdog committee to help curb racial violence.

Mayor Christmas said the request, which will be submitted to the Commission today, will be in line with a suggestion of the Dade County Council of Community Relations

'Victim Of Jeers' Sues Florida City

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., (AP) — The city of Fort Lauderdale is being sued for damages by a man who says his arrest by a Negro patrolman made him the victim of "jeers and scorn."

Robert Harold Bolden Jr., 23, filed the suit Monday, charging that Negro Patrolman Dixie Hankerson "wrongfully, wrefully and maliciously and with intention to harass the police duties and authorities of said city did lay hands on the plaintiff" in arresting him in October 1956.

When the plaintiff seeks solace and quietude in the immediate vicinity of his birth, said environs being Lakeland and Lake Wales, his friends and kinfolk jeer him and scorn him because he called a Negro police officer of Lauderdale to arrest him," he said.

MENTEN ANGUISH

He also contended that Bolden suffered "great mental anguish" as a result of his arrest by Hankerson for driving 45 miles an hour in a zone.

Bolden, who paid a $5 fine and filed appeal to circuit court in suing the city, Hankerson, Patrolman John Burns, Police Chief J. Lester Holt, Municipal Judge John Douglass, and City Attorney Robert O'Connor "in excess of $500" each.

He said that he was paraded after his arrest "before his constituents and constituents as a manacled by force of the grasp of a Negro officer."

Hankerson stated at the time he had called for help when Bolden and a companion "became belligerent" and that Burns answered the call.

He contended that Burns spoke "loud and long" and called the white officer as saying "Yankees have moved into South Florida and the days of the Civil War are over."

Bolden said he would not have minded being arrested by a white policeman.

It's Up to People, Governor Declares

Gov. LeRoy Collins said in Miami Thursday that "someday, somewhere, somehow we will have some integration of schools in Florida—but not in the near future."

He then added, "I don't think that will come until it comes in the minds and hearts of people who must accept integration."

Collins, who is being hailed throughout the nation as the leader of the southern moderates, declared that Florida's growth could be jeopardized by racial violence.

"But as long as I am governor I will see that we do not have riots and disorders. More than anything, we do not want to develop hate among our people," he said earnestly.

The governor arrived here late Thursday from a New York City visit to welcome officially the Presbyterian Men's Convention at Dinner Key Auditorium.

In a press conference at the Hotel McAllister he:

PRAISED the special session of the Legislature for doing an "outstanding job" in drafting a proposed state constitution. "Although the document did not come up to my hopes I will support it very enthusiastically."

INDICATED — but did not guarantee — he will veto as unnecessary a segregation bill which empowers him to close public schools if federal troops are used to enforce integration.

DECLARED he is not ambitious at this time to become a vice presidential candidate — as mentioned with increasing frequency. "All I want is to make this state the best possible state during the next three years."

Despite a long train ride, Collins appeared fresh and relaxed. Dressed in a blue suit and shirt, he might have been mistaken for a collar aid.

Collins was especially articulate in discussing segregation.

At one point, he said thoughtfully:

"I have been asked what is a moderate? First, I believe in law and order. I have said I felt the decisions of the Supreme Court is the law of the land. Ours must be the law of the land.

"I have consistently said we must improve the welfare of our Negro citizens — their education, their health. We must not allow our feelings to prevent us from carrying out a progressive program to improve their welfare."

The Revolt Of Florida

William Bradford Huie, the Alabama author, has obtained leave from Florida authorities to pay a $750 fine instead of serving a six-month sentence for contempt of a Florida court.

Huie's difficulties, if such they were, erupted from his activities in the case of Ruby McCollum, a Negro woman charged with the murder of Dr. C. LeRoy Adams, a white physician and senator-elect, in his office at Live Oak.

Huie was given a choice of paying a $750 fine or six months for contempt of court, the conviction growing out of his attempt to influence a psychiatrist appointed by the court to adjudge the woman's sanity. Huie, who once told us he is making more money than he knows what to do with, went to jail instead of paying the fine. The publicity was good for his business.

After two days he got out on bond on appeal, forfeited the $2,500 bond and left the state to write the Ruby McCollum story in book form, which book has left the judge and many Floridians angry.

Huie is a strange one. There is a gleam in his eye and a smirk that leaves one uncomfortable, although we found him pleasant enough when he dropped by the shop a few months ago to get our view of the bus boycott and the resultant sainthood.

There is no phony modesty about Huie such as most of us feel compelled to practice with timorous hypocrisy. Huie is fascinated with his success and riches, and aggressively rendered large chunks of his life's story. He devides his time between New York, Hollywood and what he described as a magnificent estate in his native Tennessee Valley, to which he fraternally invited us for a visit.

At first he appeared skeptical that his life and works were known to us, but as soon as he learned that we had read his novel Mud On The Stars in England during the war he looked relieved. When it was added that we had subsequently read and developed admiration for The Revolt Of Mamie Stover, he purred. With these types in their ferociously competitive business it is no matter how much notoriety or fame and acceptance they win—recognition by the next person they meet presents a crisis.

Huie went to the University of Alabama, did newspaper reporting in Birmingham and then threw in with Hubert Baughn to found Alabama Magazine. They fell out, but until this day and after all these years, Huie fascinates Uncle Hubert like a snake.

Huie years ago did a famous piece in Collier's, God rest its departed masthead, on the fact that the Tide bought football talent like a sack of potatoes. Collier's retracted, but we believe Huie's version that unbearable pressure was put on Collier's so the Tide's Rose Bowl invitation would not be imperiled.

Huie wrote The Revolt Of The Admirals and tried to revive the old American Mercury with himself in the stead of H. L. Mencken. That was a preposterous impersonation in which imitation conferred no flattery, but Huie has a superb gift for reportorial narrative.

We've always been skeptical of the accuracy of his reporting, but he is a generously endowed reporter — keen on the scent of the story, ingenious in adopting an angle and bold as a bandit in lunging for it. Consider, for example, his Emmett Till murder revelations. Not one reporter in a thousand would have thought of Huie's approach, nor have had the gall to employ it.

The fellow strikes us as one for whom there is no corresponding type in our card index file, but there is no question that his audacity, imagination, and craftsmanship would have permitted him to hold his own in any era in any galaxy of reporters.

Segregation May Be Put to Vote

By DORIS McABEE
Herald Education Writer

Where is Dade County headed in the Integration vs. Segregation issue?

School Board members may be called upon to make some sort of decision when they meet at 2 p.m. Wednesday.

Phillips

Segregation again will be the top item of business.

Discussion will center around a controversial resolution which would put the board on record as being opposed to "the education of white and colored children in the same school."

When S. D. (Shep) Phillips Jr., author of the resolution, tried to present it to the board Nov. 8, members prevented its reading and tabled it by a 6-to-1 vote.

Chances are good that the same thing will happen again Wednesday if Phillips sticks to his decision to offer the resolution again.

Only two members of the seven-member board, Mrs. Lyle Roberts and Mrs. Helene J. Vosloh, have said positively they will vote against the resolution.

Four others — Chairman C. Raymond VanDusen, Mrs. Anna Brenner Meyers, Dr. Robert S. Butler and E. L. Allsworth — decline to give a definite answer on the position they will take.

However, indications are that they prefer not to be forced to cast a "yes" or "no" vote.

Primary concern of the board is the effect the resolution might have on a local integration suit now pending in Federal Court.

The suit has been filed against the board by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and parents of six Negro children.

They are asking that the board present immediate plans for desegregation and be enjoined from enforcing state segregation laws.

School Attorney Edward F. Boardman would not comment Sunday on Phillips' resolution. But he said he will be ready to give an opinion Wednesday if he is so requested by the board.

The board's defense rests on the premise that current school operation is not actually contrary to the Supreme Court mandate.

In 1956 the board adopted a policy of following and implementing the state Pupil Assignment Law. The law requires school boards to assign each pupil to a specific school, but makes no mention of race as a criterion for assignment.

Mrs. Meyers is the only board member on record as favoring integration and opposing the Pupil Assignment Law.

Following are comments of board members on Phillips proposed resolution:

S. D. (SHEP) PHILLIPS JR. — "I'm just saying that until the Supreme Court or the State Legislature tells us we must integrate schools, we will maintain segregation."

"The resolution doesn't say anything new. It would just put the board's stand on record. Nobody knows the board's stand, except for the one taken by Mrs. Meyers.

"I think that integration will come eventually, but I'm not going to help it along."

MRS. LYLE ROBERTS — "I would have to refuse to vote for the resolution. I don't see how I could vote for it. It goes against the Pupil Assignment Law, and in light of pending litigation, I don't think it is a wise move."

Mrs. Roberts

Mrs. Meyers

MRS. ANNA BRENNER MEYERS — "I am still studying the resolution. I don't know yet what I am going to do. Everyone knows how I feel, but I haven't yet made up my mind on this particular issue.

DR. ROBERT S. BUTLER — "Right now I don't care to make any comment about the resolution."

E. L. ALLSWORTH — "I haven't made up my mind yet. I just don't know. I'll do whatever I think best when the time comes."

Butler

Allsworth

Mrs. Vosloh

Van Dusen

DR. C. RAYMOND VAN DUSEN — "I would prefer not to comment on my vote right now. I might decline to vote at all, although I have never done that before."

MRS. HELENE VOSLOH — "I could not vote to accept the resolution. I don't believe we could say that we will never vote for integration as long as state laws are against it. The only thing we would accomplish would be to kill our court case."

Florida's Governor In His Inaugural Address For An Unprecedented Second Term Urges End Race Tension

See No School Integration But Speech Devoted Mainly To Discussion Of Race Relations Favor End Of Bus Segregation

Advocate

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 8—Florida Gov. Leroy Collins was inaugurated for an unprecedented second term today and declared that while U. S. Supreme Court decisions "are the law of the land," Florida schools will continue to be segregated for "the foreseeable future."

The popular, 47-year-old chief executive, in a speech before thousands from all parts of the Sunshine State, devoted almost his entire address to the segregation problem in the South.

No Ultimate Answer

Collins said he does, "not know the ultimate answer," declaring that "I do not believe anyone else does."

But, he added, "I am convinced that we will not find the answer in some attitudes that are being reflected in some quarters today."

The governor, sworn into office by Justice Campbell Thornal, said it is "little short of rebellion and anarchy to suggest that any state can isolate and quarantine itself against the effect of a decision of the United States Supreme Court."

Doesn't Object

Collins, speaking of segregation problems on buses, said he was convinced the average white person does not object to integrated seating "anymore than he objects to riding the same elevators with Negroes or patronizing the same stores."

Advocate

Turning to segregation in Florida schools, the governor declared:

P. 8

"Because of these (Supreme Court) laws and because of conditions in communities throughout Florida, I continue to say that our traditions and customs of segregation in the public schools can be expected to prevail for the foreseeable future."

Gov. Collins said the South is "upset, bewildered and confused" by mounting racial tensions, adding "it is folly for anyone to expect judicial dictations to compel social adjustment."

He said that "despite the court's great power, the hearts and minds of the people are beyond its reach and control."

Calling on both Negroes and whites to cooperate in easing tensions, Collins said: "We have a state to build a South to save—a nation to convince and a God to serve."

Miami Whites Want Negroes To Move Away

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Fri. 1-18-57

MIAMI, Fla. Jan. 17 (AP)—White residents have held a mass meeting to protest against a Negro family's moving into their neighborhood.

P. 8-B

Some 200 persons gathered on the lawn of a house a few doors from the newly-purchased home of the Negro, Frank Legree, and heard several speakers denounce the move. The Negro family moved in four days ago.

One of the most outspoken was David I. Hawthrone, an integration foe, who said "It's time we called a halt and drew a line to this."

He told the crowd, "This is the first time that a colored family has moved deep into a white section in Miami. We've got to defend our rights or lose our homes and everything else we've worked for all our lives."

WARY INTERVIEW GRANTED

At the Negro house, Mrs. Bessie Veal, Legree's mother, had talked warily with reporters earlier.

She said a postcard written in red and signed "KKK" was received at the house. She said the card read: "Nigger—don't move in this neighborhood."

She said the real estate agent who sold them the house assured the family "This is going to be a colored neighborhood."

Hawthorne said the movement of the Negro family was a plan of integrationists called "blockbusting."

But he declared, "This is more than blockbusting. This is section busting."

He advised the group to bring legal action against the real estate agent and also suggested trying to buy the Legree house.

RACIAL HARMONY URGED IN FLORIDA

Collins Starts Second Term With Plea—Cites State Laws Delaying Integration

Wed. 1-9-57

New York

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8—Gov. Leroy Collins began his second term today with an appeal for mutual understanding to solve segregation problems.

When he took the oath of office, Mr. Collins became the first Florida Governor to succeed himself. He has just completed the final two years of Dan McCarthy's term. Mr. McCarthy died in office.

The Governor devoted half of his inaugural to a plea for harmonious race relations. Although the South was not prepared for the Supreme Court's rulings agains school separation, he said, the court's decisions are "the law of the land" and must not be defied.

However, he added:

"It's folly for anyone to expect judicial dictation to compel social adjustments. We must be constructive and practical. White and colored citizens alike must see wrong on their side as well as right. Our strength to support the right is weakened if we arbitrarily refuse to admit the wrong."

Notes Assurance by Law

Noting that the rulings had recognized local conditions and problems, the Governor said Florida had enacted laws that "give us assurance that there will be no integration in our public schools so long as it is not wise in the light of social, economic and health facts of life as they exist in the various localities of our state."

He closed his speech with these words:

"We have a state to build, a South to save, a nation to convince and a God to serve."

Only a week ago, Governor Collins suspended bus service because of violence that occurred when Negroes rode in front seats.

The City Commission adopted a new bus franchise ordinance yesterday providing a system of reserved seats. Negroes denounced this today as an "iniquitous scheme" to delay integration. Buses still are not running.

Mr. Collins will serve four years. State law prohibits a Governor from succeeding himself, but the State Supreme Court ruled that the prohibition did not apply to the part-term that Mr. Collins had completed.

Montgomery Curfew Off

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 8 (AP)—An eleven-day curfew on bus service after 5 P. M. expired today when the City Commission took no action to extend it.

The curfew was imposed after integrated buses had been fired on four times and a Negro woman passenger wounded. There have been no reports of violence on buses since Dec. 31.

Fire Set on Georgia Farm

ROSSVILLE, Ga., Jan. 8 (AP)—A mysterious fire last night destroyed a small building on the form of John Crane. It broke out several hours after a group of more than 200 white persons had protected Mr. Crane's plan to allow a Negro worker to live on the farm.

Bold Approach Is Predicted

TALLAH SEE — A bold, realistic ap ch to racial segregation pr ns is expected to be championed by Gov. LeRoy Collins Tuesday in an inaugural address before thousands of fellow Floridians.

A frank discussion of tensions gripping the capital city and other parts of the state as a result of determined moves by Negro groups to achieve integration may bring out the governor's boldest statements on the segregation issue since the special legislative session last summer.

Gov. Collins is expected to expand on the course he followed when he asked the Legislature to enact four laws to meet school segregation problems.

The governor, placing special emphasis on a need for emotional stability on the part of both white and Negro citizens, is expected to reaffirm his confidence in those laws—generally known as the Fabisinski committee bills. These were designed to delay integration in the public schools.

In the main it is believed the governor will point to those bills as his hope for maintaining to a major degree Florida's traditions and customs.

At the same time the governor no doubt will repeat his objectives to improve the lot of the Negro citizen in his health, living, economic and educational standards.

Suits seeking court rulings on constitutionality of city and state bus segregation laws were dismissed in state and federal courts here Monday on the eve of the governor's second inauguration to "clear the air."

But the buses are not operating now. Gov. Collins invoked emergency police powers New Year's Day and ordered suspension of bus service after the stoning of a Negro leader's home and the firing of a shotgun blast into a Negro grocery store.

Meanwhile, the Tallahalssee City Commission passed a new ordinance which, in effect, makes bus drivers responsible for enforcing segregated seating on city buses but with a different approach.

The ordinance was passed in a hurried meeting Monday.

It makes no mention at all of race or of the traditional custom of requiring Negro passengers to take seats from the rear toward the front while whites sit from the front toward the rear. Instead, each driver will assign seats to "distribute the weight of the passengers" equally and to preserve "peace, tranquility and good order among said passengers being so transported and of society generally."

Negroes had started riding Tallahassee buses on a limited integrated basis after they ended a seven-month bus boycott Christmas Eve.

Collins has said he will lift the suspension when he believes the attitudes of all citizens warrants it.

Roy Jr. Pops In From Japan Base

Defiance No Help To Negro

Herald P. 3-B

Sun. 1-6-57

Miami, Fla.

Editor The Herald: As a member of the same race, I can understand the feelings of Trinette Robinson, who in a Voice of the People letter reported there were no facilities for Negroes in some first-run Miami area theaters.

May I point out that there are two sides to the story.

I feel that this woman should have known better than to call the theater and ask in the first place. Even if she would have been admitted—and the call makes it evident that she knew she would not be—the climax would have been so unpleasant as to be unworth the effort for all concerned.

With all this defiance being encouraged by Negro ministers today, the Negro people will find themselves less welcome than ever and we might as well face it. It is much more than a dark skin that makes the Negro unwelcome in white society. Among other factors are the moral, mental, physical and academic aspects.

For a Negro to even suggest that integration of the races will come about any time soon is very foolish. There is a certain type Negro and a certain type of white person that desire this, but the intelligent, higher class people of both races would find it repugnant.

This does not mean that we cannot have goodwill toward the other. After all, who separated the races in the first place, giving each his own coloring, his own language and leader? Chapter 10 and 11 of Genesis makes it clear to us all that the races were intended to live separately.

I suggest that our leaders put their efforts not to encouraging mass defiance of the laws, but to helping the Negro gain his own theaters, parks and schools.

If the white man is too good for the Negro, then the Negro is too proud to force himself bodily on the white man and should make a better world for himself in his own circle.

MAUDE CLEMENTS

Floridians Cheer Governor's Approach On Integration Problems

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 21.—Gov. LeRoy Collins has set Florida on the path of what many consider a realistic approach to the problems of segregation and by doing so has projected himself on the national political scene.

The personable, soft-spoken Governor chose his inauguration address to declare that the Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land and to defy them is anarchy.

But he also said Florida, alone of all Southern states, has adopted laws that allow living "honestly, honorably, and peacefully with the two great realities facing us: the court decisions and the social and economic conditions existing in the South."

These laws, Mr. Collins said, "give us assurance that there will be no integration in our public schools so long as it is not wise in the light of social, economic, and health facts of life."

Reaction in Florida was tremendous. It was summed up by the Tampa Tribune which said:

"Governor Collins made it clear he will not abdicate his responsibility, leaving a vacuum for the exploitation of the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Councils.

"He offered Florida moral leadership tempered by perspective and social realities."

Florida has not yet admitted a single Negro child to an integrated public school, and seems little likely to do so in the near future. Only one suit is pending in federal court, attacking the pupil assignment law passed at the special legislative session last summer.

The only other suit, a general attack of segregated schools, was thrown out of the district court a few days ago.

While Governor Collins' remarks on school segregation got headlines, his comments on bus segregation were more to the immediate point. Tallahassee has been in the throes of a bus boycott by Negroes that recently threatened to erupt into violence.

Just before his inauguration, Mr. Collins used emergency powers granted by the Legislature to suspend bus service entirely.

On this point, the Governor said: "I am convinced that the average white citizen does not object to non-segregated seating in busses any more than he objects to riding in the same elevators with Negroes, or patronizing the same stores.

"He does resent certain methods used to achieve certain ends. Boycotts, ultimatums, and preemptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petitions, and normal judicial procedures can do for the Negro race."

This is radical talk for a Southern Governor, particularly one who called the Legislature last summer to enact strong laws to preserve segregation at all costs.

Drastic bills, including pupil and teacher assignment laws, and almost unlimited powers for the Governor to act in racial emergencies, breezed through almost unanimously, at the Governor's request.

However, Governor Collins summarily ended the session when extreme segregationists attempted to take over and go beyond his recommended program.

These same legislators almost unanimously approved Mr. Collins' latest stand.

Representative John B. Orr, Miami, who singlehandedly attempted to oppose Mr. Collins' segregation policies last summer, said the new stand was "great."

"It will create an atmosphere of good will while people of good will work out a solution," he said.

President-elect W. A. Shands of the Senate said: "He is 100 per cent correct in his presentation of the segregation issue."

Others legislators called the stand "comprehensive," "courageous," and "honest." One objector, Senator Harry O. Stratton, Callahan, said: "I guess this means we are now integrated."

Governor Collins' strong leadership on segregation and his nationwide tours to sell Florida industrially have led to his name being mentioned for a place on the national Democratic ticket in 1960. He was suggested for the vice-presidential nomination last year.

Mr. Collins came to his segregation position after long and careful study. When the Supreme Court outlawed school segregation in its historic decision and asked the states to suggest ways and means, Florida entered the case as a friend of the court.

Attorney General Richard W. Ervin, with Mr. Collins' approval presented his famous theory of "gradualism" in his amicus curiae brief. It was credited with influencing greatly the court's mandate to proceed with "all deliberate speed."

Integrationists praised Florida's attitude and supposed it would be the first state of the Deep South to solve school integration smoothly and rapidly.

Mr. Collins was filling out the unexpired term of the late Gov. McCarty and thus became the first Florida Governor eligible to succeed himself.

In the election, his segregation stand came under heavy fire. One opponent, retired Gen. Sumter Lowry, of Tampa, made this his sole plank, pushed it with fervor. Mr. Collins, while deploring the emphasis, which he called disruptive, was forced to take a firm stand for continued segregation.

He appointed a commission of retired jurists and constitutional attorneys to work out a plan to prevent mixed schools and promised to call the Legislature to enact it as quickly as possible.

Results of the election were interesting. The segregation candidate, though a political unknown, ran second in a four man race. He bested two strong contenders, including ex-Gov. Fuller Warren.

But Mr. Collins obtained a clear majority in the first primary, the first gubernatorial candidate ever to do so.

The elated Mr. Collins considered it a decisive victory for his moderate stand to maintain segregation by all 'lawful" means. He carried out his campaign pledge, called the Legislature and had his commission's plan enacted.

But in his inaugural address, he said:

"There must be change, and change usually comes hard. Change is always resisted by those who do not understand and by those who stand to lose special advantages.

"We must clear out the road blocks . . . we must do substantial remodeling to prepare for the limitless years ahead."

Interposition Not Helpful, But Lets Pass It

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— (INS) — An interposition resolution, contrary to Gov. Leroy Collins' recommendations, was shouted to passage Friday in a noisy voice vote by the Florida house of representatives.

Collins immediately reaffirmed his stand against the resolution, which was co-introduced only this morning by 56 of the 95 house members.

"I have made my position clear," the governor declared. "I think we should let well enough alone (on segregation). Interposition has been of no helpful effect anywhere whether it will hurt us I do not know, but I cannot see any point in taking a chance."

The resolution was brought in by Rep. Welborn Daniel of Lake county, who steered it to passage after the house, by a 59 to 29 margin, voted down a move to postpone action on the measure.

Daniel said the resolution was identical with one being considered by the house during a special session last summer when Collins invoked a seldom-used power and adjourned the lawmakers.

"If sate officials back up interposition," Daniel said. "No power can force integration."

The house measure differs only slightly from one introducted in the senate Thursday calling on the state to assert its soverignty and ignore U. S. Supreme Court segregation rulings."

Legislature May Snag On Segregation Issue

Florida's Legislature, which opens its 60-day biennial session on April 2, stands a good chance to bog down on the touchy question of segregation.

First Of a Series

A move is gaining force to pass a series of bills and resolutions designed to retain the state's traditional separation of the races. It will not be easy.

Gov. LeRoy Collins says Florida needs no further legislation on the subject. He dissolved the extra session of the legislature last summer when it threatened to get out of hand on the issue after adopting the governor's program.

Collins' position is certain to receive strong support.

But the new legislature is not too different in make-up and sentiment from the body which was stunned when Collins sent it home last summer to prevent passage of defiant segregation measures.

If some leaders have their way, the new session will start off where the extra session finished — and this time the governor has no power to interfere except by veto.

Some segregation measures may be introduced on the first day.

The first probably will be an interposition resolution signed by enough members to insure adoption.

Other race measures will seek to:

CURB OR ABOLISH the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in the state.

ALLOW counties to abolish public schools by local action to preserve segregation.

ALLOW counties and municipalities to lease public facilities, such as swimming pools and golf courses, to private operators.

FORBID athletic contests between white and Negro players.

The athletic contest bill probably has little chance because Florida is the baseball training camp center of the country. Most major league teams have Negro players.

The race issue also will crop up in debate on the proposed new state constitution. As now drawn, the document forbids mixed schools.

Even though some legislators consider this to be meaningless, the clause probably will remain in.

They reason that the constitutional provision is of no effect if it is counter to the U.S. Supreme Court mandate on mixed schools. But they see little chance to get the new constitution through the Legislature without the forbidding clause.

"A vote for the new constitution doesn't necessarily mean a vote to defy the Supreme Court," said one legislator. "It is a practical matter because we need a new constitution so badly."

Many legislators agree with Collins that the state has enough laws to stall school integration for the foreseeable future. But they don't want to be put on the spot with their constituents by appearing to vote against segregation.

Bills with local option provisions, like the abolishing of schools and leasing of public facilities, may get by because the final decision is passed on to the voters.

The big fights will be on the interposition resolution and the NAACP bill

Racial Foes Tangle Again

Herald P. 8-A

Fred B. Hockett and the Rev. Ashton Jones, who hold opposite segregation views, clashed again in Miami Sunday—this time at a racial trouble spot.

Mon. 3-18-57

Hockett claims the Rev. Mr. Jones tried to run him down about 4:30 p.m. in front of the home of Frank Legree, Negro who moved into a white neighborhood at 1455 NW 55th St.

Miami Fla.

Hockett swore out a warrant, charging the clergyman with assault with a truck. Rev. Mr. Jones was released under his own recognizance.

The Rev. Mr. Jones, zealous brotherhood preacher, said he had no intention of running over Hockett. "He tried to prevent me from parking on the grass parkway in front of Legree's home, so I merely eased him out," the Rev. Mr. Jones said.

The clergyman, who drew a 30-day suspended sentence several days ago after heckling a Hockett segregation meeting, will make another appearance in city court at 8 a.m. Wednesday to answer the assault charge.

Legree said after the incident that the Rev. Mr. Jones previously had been requested "in a nice way" to stay away from his home, where he had been an occasional visitor.

"We're trying to quiet this thing down as much as possible. We don't want any trouble or violence," Legree said. "I'm afraid if it keeps up there is gonna be some trouble," the Negro entertainer added.

Several pickets, including Hockett's wife, paced the sidewalk in front of the Legree home Sunday. Police officers urged the Rev. Mr. Jones to stay inside the home so as not to antagonize them.

Old JC arguments useless, Miami told

Baltimore Md.

MIAMI, Fla. — Judging from first-day developments, the city of Miami is going to have to build virtually an entirely new defense when it goes to trial to preserve segregation on local golf courses.

Sat. 3-23-57

At a preliminary hearing on Thursday morning, federal judge Emett C. Choate warned corporation council attorneys against the use of old and ineffective arguments such as were hinted in the four-hour jurist said he would take the proceedings.

When both sides rested, the jurist said he would take the case under advisement and render a decision later.

THE HEARING is on a suit filed by four colored Miamians against the city-owned Miami Springs golf course.

Redress was sought in the court when a party, headed by Dr. Elmer A. Ward, was denied use of the course on January 26, 1956.

On the witness stand, Dr. Ward was questioned as to his good faith in bringing the action the defense drawing from him the admission that he did not have clubs with him when he was denied permission to play.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

"I HAD no clubs," said the elderly witness, "because I had a fixed purpose in going to the course.

"Clubs are of no use when you don't know how to play the game," Dr. Ward continued. "But I am interested in learning to play, and I know that would be next to impossible under the limitations imposed by the city —limitations that say I must learn by playing once a week."

When there was no interruption, Dr. Ward went on:

"I expected to be refused and I also anticipated this litigation. My purpose was, and is, to establish my rights as a citizen.

Sat. 3-23-57

"I WANTED then, and I hope now, to have the courts render null and void, once and for all time, the arbitrary city provision that says colored players may use the municipal course only on Mondays."

Defense lawyers sought to link the NAACP with the case as instigator of the suit, when NAACP counsel G. E. Graves appeared as attorney for the plaintiffs.

"Are you a member of the NAACP?" Dr. Ward was asked.

"I am," was the reply.

"Do you pay money to the NAACP?"

"I do," the witness answered.

AT THIS POINT, Dr. Ward was asked whether the NAACP paid for the filing of this action.

He answered by producing a cancelled check, paid by the Cosmopolitan Golf Association in whose name the suit was launched.

Corporation lawyers then offered testimony and affidavits which purported to prove that integration of the Miami Springs course would:

(1) Antagonize the residents of a peaceful, all-white community (Miami Springs);

(2) Cause loss of white patronage and reduce the revenue at the course to such degree as would lead to its closing;

(3) Bring about the collapse of a program designed to schedule playing days in proportion to the population, and

(4) Break with the tradition and customs of the region.

ALL THESE contentions are old and worn out, Judge Choate said in effect.

"It would serve no purpose in the trial to offer them again. They are repetitious and irrelevant. I hope all parties concerned will bear that in mind."

Dr. Ward, a retired pharmacist, is a native of Virginia.

He has been living in Miami for 30 years, he told the AFRO.

Witness Told To Tell "Straight Story"—Graves

P. 14

By MARTIN MURPHY

MIAMI—(INS) — An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People denied before a Florida legislative committee last week that he had attempted to influence the testimony of a star witness.

The attorney, G. E. Graves, admitted talking with witness Hampton Shaver, but he said he advised Shaver to tell "a straight story."

SHAVER, WHO preceded Graves to the stand, told the committee Graves warned him that if he didn't "talk right up here some of the boys in colored town could get pretty rough with me."

Shaver, sought for the past two days by committee subpoena servers, corroborated from the stand much of the Miami Herald's disputed copyrighted story which appeared in Tuesday morning's editions.

HE ADMITTED telling Executive City Editor Al Neuharth about reports he had heard of 100 boxes of dynamite being secreted in the area.

He further substantiated quotes attributed to Fred P. Hockett regarding alleged statements that Miami segregation leaders weren't 'tough enough" and perhaps a little "fire and some dynamite" were needed.

HOCKETT WAS arrested along with Shaver and two other men in a cross burning attempt in Miami last Saturday night.

Hockett was called to the stand and denied a Herald story printed following the Saturday night incident saying, in effect, that Hockett had been sent here by the Seaboard White Citizens Council of Washington, D. C., to stir up racial unrest.

NEUHARTH refused on the grounds of "professional ethics" to divulge the Herald source for the story at the hearing.

Hockett denied under oath many of the statements attributed to him by the Herald and sworn to by Shaver.

THE OTHER witness which the committee held over its hearings to question, William Knight, auueared only briefly at the hearing.

He admitted having told a friend that he had "been requested" to obtain dynamite caps for the purpose of blowing up the foundations of a Negro housing development. He said he didn't know why he made the statement and was "just shooting the breeze."

Cameraman Sentenced In Court Picture Case

Post & Times Herald Tues. 3-12-57

Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 11 (AP)—A television cameraman sentenced to jail today for contempt of court, won release on a writ of habeas corpus.

The action set the stage for a court test of a judge's authority to order destruction of pictures taken outside his courtroom.

A hearing on the issue will be held in Leon County Circuit Court March 20.

City Judge John Rudd held Jack Murphy, cameraman for Tampa Television Station WTVT in contempt because he failed to destroy movie film he had taken of witnesses in a corridor outside the municipal courtroom.

Murphy was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 or serve a 30-day jail sentence. Rudd also imposed a mandatory one hour jail sentence to permit Murphy's attorney, former Gov. Doyle E. Carlton of Tampa, to seek a writ of habeas corpus to set up a test of the City Judge's power to curb picture taking outside his courtroom.

Neither of the two circuit judges here were in the city, and Rudd extended the mandatory sentence to five hours to permit Carlton time to obtain the writ.

Circuit Judge W. May Walker signed the writ of habeas corpus at Crawfordville where he was holding court.

Walker fixed March 20 for a hearing.

Murphy actually was in custody 3½ hours. He was not put behind bars, however, but remained at the police station in technical custody of Police Chief Frank Stoutamire.

Rudd contended that his jurisdiction extends to the corridor outside his courtroom, because he uses it as a witness room.

The witnesses, whom Murphy said consented to having their pictures taken, were to testify in the City Court trial of three university students, one white and two Negro, for violation of Tallahassee's bus seat assignment ordinance.

sentenced to 30 days on each count, but sentence was suspended because he had turned police informer.

9 in Miami to Stand Trial For Racial Disorders

Evening Star Mon. 3-25-57

Washington, D.C.

MIAMI, Fla., Mar. 25 (AP).—Three persons will appear in City Court today and six others were ordered to report Thursday as a result of flareups in front of the home which a Negro entertainer recently bought in an all-white section.

Three men and three women, all white, were booked at City Jail and released on their own recognizance for trial Thursday on charges of disorderly conduct in front of the home of Frank Legree yesterday.

Mr. Legree, who bought the house four blocks from a Negro section and moved into it in January with his mother, his wife and two sons, swore out the warrant on which the six were booked.

Police Lt. C. Buddy Kindred and Sergt. K. E. Fox drove to the Legree home here the six were marching up and down, carrying neatly lettered signs of protest.

Surrender at Jail

Police told the men and women to surrender at City Jail, where they were booked and released.

They were identified as Mrs. Rosa Lee Campbell, 45; Mrs. Elsie Foster, 28; Mrs. Willa W. Chaple, 51; Cornelius B. Willard, 34; Russell W. Brown, 50, and Jerry E. Sollenberger, 29.

Mrs. Campbell and Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Hockett were charged Wednesday with disorderly conduct and ordered to report in City Court today. Police said Mr. Legree signed the complaint against them, also.

Picketed Last Month

Mr. Legree's house was picketed last month and four men were arrested February 23 when they attempted to erect a 7-foot kerosene-soaked cross on Mr. Legree's lawn. Hockett, one of the men arrested, told police he was an official of the Seaboard White Citizen's Council at Clinton, Tenn.

Hocket and two others—Frank L. Foster, jr., and James N. McSwiney—were fined $1,000 each and given 120 days in City Jail on charges of unlawful assembly and breach of the peace. They appealed and are at liberty under $1,200 bonds.

The fourth defendant, Hamp-E. Shaver, was fined $100 and Florida House Passes Racial Interposition

Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 4-6-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 5 (AP)—Segregation forces, in a surprise move, pushed through an interposition resolution in the Florida House today, temporarily shoving the teacher pay raise issue into the background.

Adoption of the resolution by voice vote brought from Gov. LeRoy Collins a new declaration of opposition to the proposal. He said it would not help Florida's resistance to integration "in the least" and might hurt.

The resolution, which now goes to the Senate, says in effect that the State of Florida does not recognize the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

WORDED SAME

It is worded the same as the one put in by former Rep. Farris Bryant of Marion, which was being debated during the 1956 special session when Gov. Collins invoked his executive powers to dissolve the Legislature.

"Interposition has been of no helpful effect anywhere," Collins said. "It would not help our position in the least. Whether it will hurts us I do not know but I do not see any point in taking a chance."

In his opening address to the Legislature, Collins said Florida already had the best legislation on the subject of any Southern state and "I do not recommend that it be changed or that we go beyond it."

The Senate never got a chance to vote on an interposition resolution during the 1956 special session. Some formidable opposition to the proposal was indicated on the Senate side then, but whether it will reassert itself remains to be seen.

INTRODUCED BY 56

The House resolution, introduced by 56 of the 95 members, was approved after a move to postpone action on it was defeated 59-29. It was steered to passage by Rep. Daniel of Lake County.

Daniel declared that the resolution "if backed up by state officers" would "prevent school integration completely." Rep. Herrell of Dade, opposing it, said it had been ineffective in Virginia in blocking integration.

A new move to slow down integration also was started in the Senate. Sen. Eaton of Miami, introduced a resolution recognizing that the Supreme Court's desegregation rulings are binding on the state but asking time to permit lems without interference.

MEMORIAL TO CONGRESS

Sen. Davis of Madison, offered a proposed memorial to Congress urging a constitutional amendment which would make the U.S. Senate final arbiter of court decisions dealing with states rights.

A showdown fight on the Florida Education Assn.'s $1,100 teacher pay bill was put off by the House Public Schools Committee until it gets a look at Gov. Collins' salary increase bill.

The governor's office said Collin's bill was expected to be put in Monday. It would provide state money for a $300 across the board increase and $400 extra in state-county funds for merit increases.

Man On the Spot In Segregation Controversy

News + Observer
Nov. 6-25-57
Raleigh, N.C.
P. 16

By BEM PRICE

ATLANTA (AP) — Harold C. Fleming slid an inch lower in the overstuffed chair. Somehow he managed the appearance of a harassed, slightly wistful schoolteacher—which was misleading.

"I am a real conformist at heart," he said. "It's just that there are some things in the South with which I can't conform."

As director of the Interracial Southern Regional Council he is a shrewd, sharp and tough advocate of the modern approach to the South's ancient racial problem. He has become one of the men most deeply hated, and perhaps feared, by the South's more rabid prosegregation groups.

To the "professional southerner," the 35-year-old Fleming is a most perplexing, obnoxious and possibly subversive person.

Native Southerner.

He is a native Southerner with an ancestry reaching back into rural Georgia, where he himself once lived. But he goes around saying such things as:

"It is no longer a matter of whether the South must solve its racial problem, but when, how and at what cost, or damage to the economy and the human beings involved."

Among the prosegregation groups this sentiment amounts to subversion of "the southern way of life." Some equate such an opinion with communism.

"In 10 years in this kind of work," Fleming said, "you get pretty callous about attacks. There is one thing though, that really does rile me, and that's this Communist business.

"It is hard to swallow. I see this job as one of the most important anybody can do in the battle between communism and democracy."

In light of the times and the current emotions over segregation in the South, Fleming must be put down as a man of considerable moral courage regardless of how you may feel about his views.

Social Ostracism.

For a time he and his family nearly suffered a form of social ostracism in the neighborhood. There were rumors floating about that possibly he really was a Communist.

Finally, an exasperated neighbor who had known Fleming from early high school days angrily told a community citizens meeting that they were all nuts, that Fleming was about as Communist as a hot dog.

As much as any man, Fleming is emerging as a skilled leader for those Southerners, who believe, however reluctantly, that the time of "white supremacy" is drawing to a close.

He believes — and says so — that the U.S. Supreme Court decision holding racial discrimination in the public schools unconstitutional is the law of the land.

Whenever U. S. government agencies want the South's racial problems explained to foreigners, it sends them to Fleming. So far he has talked to hundreds of students, editors, labor leaders and businessmen from about 40 nations.

Fleming lives in suburban Atlanta with his wife and two sons, Gary, 6, and Anthony, 13 months, a three-bedroom, den and two-bath home which looks like about 50 others.

On weekdays he dons a conservative suit, picks up a tan briefcase and drives a 1954 car to work, arriving at 9 a.m.

To all outward appearances, Fleming blends into the southern scene. He leads the life of thousands of other young husbands who receive last-minute calls from home to pick up the dry cleaning.

He works 12 to 16 hours day, keeping in touch with council affiliates in 15 Southern states and answering his enormous volume of mail from information seekers. He coordinates an interacial staff of 12. He even keeps a dictating machine at home.

"He's working," said his wife Jane, "when he isn't sleeping."

Fleming was born in Atlanta, July 27, 1922, the son of Lorraine Hulme Fleming and the late Howard Hughes Fleming, vice president of one of Atlanta's largest building material firms.

A large part of his early life was spent in Elberton, Ga., where the Hulmes are known as real Old South folk. The Fleming side of the family came from Oglethorpe County, Ga.

How It Happened

He did not start out to be, as he puts it, "a professional do-gooder." In fact, he said, "I wanted to be a newspaperman, or a writer of some sort."

So why did he wind up where he is?

"I don't know. I guess it goes back to college. I started to college, Harvard, on a scholarship back in 1940.

"In those days Harvard was anxious to pull in people from the provinces. It was easy. As a measure of the South's second-class station it was just assumed that Southerners couldn't compete with students from other sections."

While he was at Harvard the war broke out and Fleming joined the field artillery ROTC. He remained at school until 1943, when he was sent to Ft. Bragg, N. C., and ultimately to officer candidate school.

He wound up on Okinawa after the fighting as a captain in charge of a Negro quartermaster company.

"I would say that going out of the South made me aware of the racial problem and I would say that my Army experience made me think about it deeply for the first time. I lived, ate and slept with it every day. You were not only an officer, but above everything else you were the boss white man.

"You couldn't duck the responsibilities. Trying to get a decent shake for your men from the brass above was rough. These men felt keenly the segregation and the fact that they got the short end of the stick.

"On the ship going over our men had the lousiest quarters. They were last in the chow line and this meant they got there after all the good things had run out."

On Okinawa, Fleming went on, the ammunition was taken from his company, though the white units retained theirs and even though Japanese guerillas still roamed the island.

"Among the good things that happened to me, though," said Fleming, "was the deep admiration I developed for some of the men who, despite everything, were good soldiers and loyal right down to the core."

McGill's Protege.

After the war Fleming returned to Harvard, where he was graduated in English and the social sciences magna cum laude.

He got back to Atlanta in 1947 and heard of a special writing job with the SRC through Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution and one of the founders of the SRC in 1944.

"I took the writing job for the summer. I had planned to go to New York in September, possibly to work for a publishing company, but then I got interested."

The council's announced aims are to provide equal opportunity for all in the south.

How does he view his new job?

"In this field of human relations the big weakness has been the highly emotional good will aspects often of amateurs do-gooders.

"I think we are moving in the direction of professional-agency type of work, a consulting service for community leaders and a source of factual information."

How does he feel about the Southern racial situation and its future?

"I think," said Fleming, "you have to start with an appraisal of what the situation is. The situation is not longer one of whether, but how, when and at what cast to the economy and the human beings involved.

"There are historical forces at work. Therefore the job of a group of white and Negro Southerners is to try and assist in the inevitable transition and make it as orderly as possible. After all, the South dashed itself to pieces once before on these same historical forces.

"The council is conceived as a very practical movement. We've never felt we had the final answers, but we do not believe the answer lies on the level of mud-slinging.

"The hidden strength of this movement, though, is the fact that it is made up of Southerners, people who have been there. They grew up with the conventional views and yet have come to accept people as human beings."

Baiting The South Popular Pastime

By NICHOLAS STANFORD
NEW YORK.

A lady reporter for one of the "liberal" New York newspapers, sent to Florida on a "race angle" assignment, came back pleased as Punch. She had been attacked by the local newspaper in a front-page editorial.

The lady scribe quoted one sentence from the editorial with special relish: "When she encountered anything which was uniquely and charmingly Southern, her pencil was silent."

The lady thought this a huge joke on the crackers, and vowed on the strength of it to ask for a raise.

Actually, this is the smear-journalism technique in a nutshell. Print only the bad, not the good. Let the facts speak for themselves, but be sure all the facts are unfavorable. Do the hatchet work with an air of fine judicial impartiality, or, as they say in the trade, "appear to be fair."

The South is on the receiving end of this treatment, as The American Mercury points out in its lead article for July, because the South's ingrained conservatism and its Anglo-Saxon traditions are an obstacle to those seeking to overthrow the American system of government in the name of "progress."

The Saturday Evening Post on June 15 began a series on integration, "The Deep South Says Never."

The series is by John Bartlow Martin, an old pro adept at the supercharged prose of the women's magazines. An editorial blurb promises that the series will be free from slant or bias, Martin's instructions having been merely to report the facts.

One needs read only to the end of the first paragraph to find out what kind of unbiased report this is going to be:

"'You mean I have to send my grandchildren to school with niggers after we built that good nigger high school?"

One might as well stop reading right there. This is the Time-Life-Look school of smear-the-South-but-make-it-look-good "unbiased reporting."

In resisting integration, says Martin, the South has "uncompromisingly set its face against the mainstream of American thought." If Post editor Ben Hibbs lived in an area of Philadelphia which is "going colored" rather than in an all-white segregated suburb on the Main Line, he would never have let that sentence go through, knowing that white Philadelphians' feelings about the race problem are identical with those of white Southerners.

Author Martin has some quiet fun with the "Black Monday" speech of Judge Tom P. Brady. But "the Communist plot . . . to establish a 'black empire' in the South, ruled by Negroes," is no figment of Judge Brady's imagination.

Anyone with sufficient initiative to look up back issues of The Crisis, official publication of the NAACP, will find this plan outlined — and frankly identified as a Communist project — in the May, 1935 number. (P. 136).

That full and complete racial amalgamation is the NAACP's ultimate goal is also a matter of record, not a personal opinion of Judge Brady. The late Walter White and other NAACP spokesmen have left no doubt on this point.

Citizens' Councils publications, writes Martin, " 'proved' statistically that venereal disease, illegitimate births and crime were more prevalent among Negroes than whites." These are depressing matters, but statistics are official and it was hardly necessary to put quotation marks around the word "proved."

Altogether the first article of the Post series is of a piece with "The South Will Like Integration," a 1955 Post article by a lady author living in Charlottesville, Va. A dozen Southern editors asked for equal space to refutre the article's free-wheeling assumptions and mis-statements of fact. The Post declined with thanks.

But the Post apparently has not reformed. There appears in fact to exist a Northern editorial mentality, by no means confined to The Post, which says: "The South is living in a dream world, sipping mint juleps and talking about days befo' de wah. Whatever we say about them is O. K., these crackers are too dumb to understand it and too indolent to do anything about it if they did."

Dr. Reid speaks of need for intelligent citizenry

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — Dr. Ira DeA. Reid, chairman of the department of sociology at Haverford (Pa.) College, told 141 Central State College graduates:

"Leadership may not be so important if we can get an intelligent citizenry."

Addressing an over-flow audience in the McPherson Memorial Stadium, Dr. Reid told the graduates that "skills are not enough to build a world," pointing out that "freedom comes only when men begin to use their minds."

"The world is always changing, ceaselessly changing," he said, adding: "The changing is never orderly, but it is always ceaseless and only some things are important."

He explained that beauty cannot be taught, laughter is a give and take situation, love is something that few people understand, and truth is empirical.

In addition to his many activities, Dr. Reid is an author and member of the Pennsylvania Commission on Higher Education.

Worldwide integration plan ok'd

HAMPTON, Va. — The proposal for an academic center to study worldwide integration made here last week by Thomas K. Finletter, former secretary of the Air Force, in the commencement address at Hampton Institute was accepted by the college president, Alonzo G. Moron.

Dr. Moron regards Finletter's proposal as "a challenge and a step that can be taken by our country towards the solution of the twin problems: Peace and the achievement of human equality."

In reviewing Finletter's suggestion that a group of distinguished social scientists be brought together to conduct research into the problem of world-wide integration, President Moron underlined the importance of the address.

IN EVALUATING the speech, Moron compared it to that made by Gen. George C. Marshall at Harvard, in which he outlined the Marshall Plan. Two other commencement addresses were ranked by Moron with Finletter's today:

Winston Churchill's speech at Fulton, Mo., and President Eisenhower's speech last year at Baylor, Texas. The President's Texas address was the occasion for the unveiling of his People-to-People program.

"Hampton stands ready to accept this challenge," Moron stated. "Because of our 90 years of history as an interracial facility for education," the college president explained, "we seem to qualify for consideration as a location for the kind of center proposed by Mr. Finletter."

He pointed out that the school's success has been achieved in spite of its operating in what is regarded as an unfavorable situation for the prospect of integration.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ANP)— "It is not enough for a man to be dependent on jobs made by other people."

"The colored man must become interested in creating jobs and the source of economic wealth," according to Dr. Vernon Johns, director of Maryland Baptist Center in Baltimore, who was commencement speaker at Simmons University last week.

Speaking to 12 graduates of the 78th class at the university, Dr. Johns said colored people are academically literate, but "are socially illiterate."

"WE ARE steak conscious, but not steer conscious; we are bread conscious, but not grain conscious," he stated.

He added, "I have a suspicion that the power and force of the colored citizen is not keeping pace with his literary and academic achievements."

The Baptist Center director concluded that the group is advancing greatly in civics courses, but only mediocre in citizenship.

Patterns Of Racial Etiquette Finished, Educator Says

Deep South Says Never, Article Tells

PHILADELPHIA, (ANP) — In the face of apathy and meager financial resources, a handful of dedicated segregationists have organized the Deep South's opposition to the Supreme Court's integration order.

Often involved in anti-Semitic activities, an organizer of White Citizens' Councils stated that ". . . this is basically a battle between Christianity and atheistic Communism." Another organizer States, "We want trouble and we want it everywhere we can get it—and someone will have to die before this is over because the Federal Government means death to us all!"

Reporting in the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post, author John Bartlow Martin states that such is the spirit in which the White Citizens Councils have been regenerated in recent months, and particularly since the movement was given a shot in the arm when Autherine Lucy was suspended from classes after four days of rioting at the University of Alabama.

For the first time, writer John Bartlow Martin has probed into the backgrounds of the men who are behind the current "White Supremacy" drive. This installment covering discomforting developments in the "Deep South Says Never," is now appearing in the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post.

Ex-AF Head Seeks Study Of Integration

Montgomery, Ala.

HAMPTON, Va., June 4 (AP)—A former Air Force Secretary has proposed that an academic center be created for the study of integration "on a world-wide basis" and was told Virginia's Hampton Institute might be a suitable site for such a center. P. 2-A

The proposal by Thomas K. Finletter, Air Force secretary from 1950 to 1953, in a speech to Hampton Institute graduates was promptly accepted as a "challenge" by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of the college.

Dr. Moron said Hampton Institute "seems to qualify for consideration as a location for the kind of center proposed by Mr. Finletter."

"Hampton stands ready to accept this challenge because of our 90 years of history as an interracial facility for education," the college president told the audience attending the commencement exercises at the Institute.

Finletter had told the graduates that such a research and study center ideally should be located at some Southern college or university. A center of the type suggested, he said, would be in a position to cope with a major foreign policy problem facing the United States—its position with the peoples of Asia, Africa and the Near East.

"I envision this center, too, as an integrated microcosm of those societies in which our young people will be working. I believe that living in such a setting will better equip Americans to divest themselves of those preconceived stereotypes that will bar them from their new assignments abroad from communicating our essense—our policy—to the new free people of the world," he told approximately 190 seniors at the Institute, a predominantly Negro institution overlooking Hampton Roads.

Race Tensions Here Shock Lady Lawmaker From Japan

Defender Chicago Ill. Oct 19-25 1957 P2

A 57-year-old woman member of Japan's Upper House of Parliament during a visit to the Chicago Urban league 2410 S. Michigan ave. expressed "deep concern" over the existing pattern of "practiced segregation" in the city of Chicago and added that "poor race relations" is one of the major problems affecting the United States international relations.

The observations were made by Mrs. Michiko Fujiwara a member of Japan's policy making House of Councillors as she turned the league's offices with Community Services Director Ted Cobb and his assistant Howard D. Roberts.

"People in other countries are quick to discern even the smallest examples of America's injustice and intolerance of minority groups," stated Mrs. Fujiwara thru Sadako Nakamura, a graduate student at the University of California.

Confirming her suspicions, Edwin C. Berry, the league's executive director, told Mrs. Fujiwara that news of the recent Calumet Park racial disorders had received wide coverage throughout Europe and even behind the "Iron Curtain".

Berry produced a letter from National Urban League Director Lester B. Granger, visiting in Vienna during the park rioting, in which he quoted news stories on the disorders from the local press.

The agile Japanese diplomat said she had also heard about the riots which inflicted severe personal and property damage on scores of innocent Negro picnickers, and was curious to know if there is any relationship between the racial clashes and the kind of "practiced segregation" she had found in her travels through the city.

Mrs. Fujiwara is making a cross country tour to observe race relations and social welfare services in the U. S. under the auspices of the International Exchange Project, National Social Welfare assembly. Her trip, which began June 8 and ends Sept. 5, is financed by a grant from the Asia foundation.

Other key aims of Mrs. Fujiwara during her visit is to meet outstanding U. S. business and professional women to stay or visit in typical American homes, including homes of farmers and laborers, and to meet Japanese and other minority groups living in the communities she visits.

"I think of myself as one of color," she stated, "and therefore I am vitally interested in all problems affecting persons of color in a democratic nation like the U. S."

NEWSMEN VOTE RACIAL VIOLENCE NO. 1

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The violence - marked conflict over racial segregation was unanimously voted Alabama's biggest story of 1957 by Associated Press member newspapers.

Bombings of Negro homes and churches in Montgomery, Mobile and Birmingham, other violence and the Negro boycott of white merchants at Tuskegee made the story an unchallenged first.

Ten points were awarded for first place votes, nine for second and so on.

Auburn's capture of the Southeastern Conference and national football championships following an unbeaten season was a clear favorite for second place with 77 points. The segregation total was 120.

Multi-million-dollar damage to state crops from heavy rains and the devastation of 48 tornadoes made the weather Alabama's third most important story with 69 points. A rare earthquake also shook the state in a year of extremes.

The courtmartial of Col. John C. Nickerson for leaking secret information in his fight to save the army's Jupiter intermediate range ballistic missile program was ranked fourth.

The Nickerson story received 62 points, eight more than the fifth place story of the long, deadlocked session of the state legislature. Appropriations required to operate the state government weren't approved until the final hours of the session.

Alabama industrial growth with 50 points was given sixth place. Approval of Alabama Power Co.'s plans for a $100 million hydroelectric program on the Coosa and Alabama rivers highlighted a year of major industrial strides.

The Dec. 17 vote to authorize the legislature to abolish Macon County if necessary to prevent Negroes from gaining political control was tied with the selection of a new football coach at the University of Alabama.

The Macon County story and the selection of Paul (Bear) Bryant as the Tide coach and athletic director shared seventh and eighth places with 48 points each.

The resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan in the face of continuing Negro pressure for racial integration of public facilities was in ninth place with 30 points.

The electrocution of poison murderer Mrs. Rhonda Belle Martin was ranked 10th with 22 points and the insurance poison murders charged to a Selma Negro woman, Mary Perkins, was in 11th place with 13 points.

A three-way tie developed for 12th place. Deadlocked with 17 points each were: Appointment of Dr. Frank Rose as University of Alabama president; approval of a state purchasing bill, and the Guntersville picket line gun battle in which two men were killed.

Real Reconstruction History

Globe, Nashville, Tenn. p. 4

Alert students of History get a big "kick" out of reading and informing themselves about the part which Negroes played in making the United States the great Republic it is.

What they learn from diligent research is that the persistent enemies of the Negro have deliberately falsefied that part of the nation's history which if truthfully told in the school books that are required study for young people, would do much to ameliorate many of the harsh conditions under which Negroes suffer. Tri. 10-11-57

Far more that is published as history dealing with the Negro, is sheer false propaganda. This is especially true of most of what has been put out about the Reconstruction Era in the South.

What many of the writers in newspapers and magazines do not realize that they have been victimized by the kinds of history they have studied about the Reconstruction Era. They could, if they actually desired to know the truth about Reconstruction, study some of the scholarly treatises on the part Negroes played in the era as published by eminent Negroes who have specialized in research for facts about the Negro during Reconstruction. Scholars like Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, one of the early graduates of Fisk University; Dr. A. A. Taylor, long time Dean of Fisk; J. A. Rogers, columnist of the Pittsburgh Courier, who has traveled far and wide in the world gathering facts about the Negro, and several other scholars. They can add much to the sum total of knowledge that present day editors and writers possess.

In one of Dr. Woodson's enlightening books is the following paragraph:

"On the whole, the reconstruction was a success. Unfortunately it tended to intensify the feelings of the races against each other, but much good was accomplished. Social reforms which the conservative element had frowned upon were inaugurated. The whipping post was abolished, branding with irons was discontinued, land monopoly was attacked, education at public expense was provided for, suffrage was extended to "poor whites" and representation in the government was based on population rather than on interests. More consideration was given the laboring man. The good things of life under the new regime were treated as belonging to the many rather than to the few. The Negro was later eliminated from the equation, but the good which he helped to accomplish has been retained."

There were frauds committed under the reconstruction governments, Dr. Woodson concedes. But about these he says:

"Negroes concerned in frauds were merely used as a means to an end. In most of the state, local and national officers were honest men like Cardozo, State treasurer of South Carolina, and Dubuclet, State Terasurer of Louisiana. The former ruling class however would not have it so and organized the Ku Klux Klan, and extra legal body, a hooded order, which instituted a regime of terroism and drove the Negroes and their sympathizers out of office—in fact, out of the South, for large numbers of white and black reconstructionists had to flee for their lives."

Further the Carter Woodson history says:

Whites handled most of these funds and committed most of the abuses. After the restoration of the former white ruling class to office, moreover, there was as much fraud in two of these states as that under the Negroes and the carpet-baggers, but writers fail to refer to these later abuses."

According to DuBois, many Southern scholars went North after the Civil War, got jobs as history teachers in the big universities and worked at giving a false impression of Reconstruction. In addition, the returning element that got back into the court houses Down South busied themselves in destroying the records which showed the truth as to how the state governments were run by the white and Negro office holders. Many of the Negro office holders, it is said, had been educated in Northern colleges but came back to their home Southern States after the war and were elected to office. False historians find it convenient to omit mentioning that fact.

Another Calhoun

It is fair to say that South Carolina Politicians of the Democrat persuasion haven't learned anything good for their own temporal salvation in one hundred years or more. They are just as big bullies as they were back in 1850.

If "Old Hickory" just had carried out his threat to hang John C. Calhoun for his talks about "secession" generations even of the present would be enjoying greater peace and prosperity.

Even as of Tuesday, September 24, 1957, spiritual descendants of Calhoun were mouthing their maledictions against the Federal Government without which South Carolina would be an even more backward state than it is.

In the place of a Senator John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, they now have a small bore politician named Olin Johnson as a U. S. Senator. Johnson, of course is against desegregation and anything else that is civilized for the Negroes of this country. He is quoted as follows with reference to his fellow Democrat politician from Arkansas, Gov. Orvall Faubus.

"If I were governor and he (President Eisenhower) came in, I'd give him a fight such as he's never been in before.

"I'd proclaim a state of insurrection and I'd call out the national guard and then we'd find out who's going to run things in my state."

Well we are quite sure that when Johnson sounded off in the words above quoted, Ike would say "You and who else," before he let Johnson and Co. have it.

Paris Journals Pity U. S. 'Poor Whites'

Sat. 11-2-57

Pittsburgh Pa.

PARIS, France — The Paris satirical journal, "The Enchained Duck," has, with tongue-in-cheek, put its finger on the root of all evil down in Dixieland.

In a recent commentary, inspired by photographs showing the dignified forebearance of Negro students being tormented by Little Rock mobs, "The Enchained Duck" declared:

"The real victims of the jim-crow race segregation laws in America are the Southern poor whites, who are forced by these laws, under penalty of imprisonment, to always occupy superior places. This prevents them from practicing their Christian humility."

Another Paris journal, musing over the events of Little Rock, remarks:

"How ridiculous it is to bar Negroes from white schools, when all the world knows the major contribution the Negro has made to American folklore, music, literature and life!"

South's Resistance No 'Lost Cause'; Tide May Turn To Rescue Country

News & Courier Charleston S.C.
Tue. 7-3-57

Why do we Southerners keep on fighting a rear guard action? Progressive "integration" of the races is inevitable in the United States, some persons believe. Should we not relax and let it come to pass?

These thoughts, expressed in many different ways, often come to our attention from other Southerners—many of them just as deeply opposed as we are to the present trend of racial propaganda.

The News and Courier cannot speak for everyone in the South. Speaking for ourselves, we continue to oppose a breakdown of racial separation because we believe that separation is right. We believe it is better for Negroes as well as for white people.

We defend separation on moral grounds. We do not accept the statement that all kinds of racial separation is morally wrong. We believe that amalgamation of the races would be ruinous for both races and a calamity for the United States. While not all lifting of racial bars would lead to amalgamation, we insist on Southern rights to choose which bars shall be retained.

We of course recognize that the pattern of separation is subject to change. It has changed considerably on a voluntary basis in the South. The change has come about, we are convinced, not because of the pressure from outside but in spite of it. What changes have occurred are acceptable to both white and colored people. If they were not acceptable they wouldn't be tolerated.

The changes in large measure are on an economic level. Negro customers are welcome now in stores where a few years ago they might not have been received with appreciation. The reason? They have more money and they have become more accustomed to shopping practices. Also they are finding additional opportunities for employment. These fields will expand as they demonstrate greater skills and win acceptance.

White Southerners are not willing to accept Negro children into their schools. Many Negroes realize their children as a group are not qualified for mixed schools. Attempts to force mixture will only wreck the school system and create ill feeling.

These are only some of the reasons—we shall make no effort to catalog them with any completeness—why Southerners continue to resist pressure from outside.

What happens if the South no longer can resist?

There is no need now to try to answer that question. Many things can come to pass before all our resources are exhausted. For one thing, public opinion elsewhere may change. We see occasional signs of enlightenment in the North.

If there is a depression, many people will be too busy trying to make ends meet to bother much with the South's racial problems. Continued migration may reduce further the Negro population of the South and increase it in the North to the point where white Northerners will demand new patterns of separation. Other, possibly unforeseen, developments may occur.

Meanwhile, life in the South goes on. White and colored people continue to have friendly day-to-day relationships. Some tension exists, but the lack of explosive incidents is a tribute to the underlying good will of many years.

The High Cost Of Scapegoats

SCAPEGOATISM dates from ancient days. It consists of trying to find someone upon whom to lay our sins and shortcomings. Man is ever looking for someone to bear his sins away. It has come about that whenever something unsavory is laid at the door of the South, Southerners begin at once to look for a scapegoat and they always find a suitable one in the Negro.

If the incidence of crime is highest in the South, it is attributed to the Negro, and if it is a high incidence of illiteracy, it is likewise attributed to the presence of the Negro. It is the same with poverty and backwardness in general.

A "satisfactory" explanation can always be found in the Negro, especially if something unsavory is to be explained. The Negro has served the Southern whites well, not only as an underprivileged citizen, but as a scapegoat.

What He Made Him

It seems never to occur to the Negrophobes that the Negro in the South is just what the Southern white man made him. The Negro is the creature and the Southern white man is the creator and the Negro would be better, if he had been made better.

Like begets like is an old maxim and the Negro is like his creator in the South. Sight is too often lost of the fact that Negroes are a part of the South and the Southerners and cannot be divorced in the matter of crime and illiteracy.

Every bad Negro is a bad Southerners and every Negro illiterate is an illiterate Southerner and the South can never rise unless it lets the Negro rise. Back to the Booker T. Washington axiom, you cannot hold a man down in the ditch unless you stay there with him, and when you get up, he gets up also.

A Real Untruth

The current rise of the South is due in large part to the rise of the Negro of the South. Too often mention is made that most of the taxes are paid in the South by the white South and therefore taxes paid for Negro education is a donation to charity. This is not true, for taxes are derived from capital and Negroes make capital possible and are therefore indirectly responsible for the taxes that are paid. You do not have to pay large taxes to be a respectable and profitable citizen.

The ends of citizenship are equally served by making taxes possible. In other words, in the general scheme of things, the fellow who makes taxes possible is just as important as the fellow who pays them!

The foregoing observation was inspired by the shibboleth that things are high-priced today because of the high cost of labor. If its an automobile or a lollypop, the sellers always tells us that the price is high because labor is high.

Fallacies Revealed

Whether its groceries or clothing, the price is marked high, and the overall explanation is that labor cost is high. We never stop and take time to analyze the matter and see the fallacies in the labor-is-high argument.

That is a slogan that is passed along to prejudice the public against the cause of labor and labor advancement. Nothing is ever said about the high cost of material or the high cost of machinery and about the high profits.

Everything is put on the high cost of labor. It has come about that the public is generally prejudiced against labor because of the slogan "Labor is high." We just pay the high prices asked, but away down in our hearts we blame labor and leave absolved in our hearts and minds the recipients of great profits.

The Other Factors

It is well for even the humblest creatures of our economic order to know that there are other factors beside the high cost of labor that must be considered if we are to arrive at the real explanation of the high price of necessities and luxuries.

To explain everything by the high cost of labor is like the South explaining everything unsavory in the Southern situation by the presence of the Negro. It is simply an "explanation" that does not explain.

It must not be forgotten that in those sections with supplies of cheapest labor, the same cry is raised about the high cost of labor. It has become a habit to blame all price rises on labor just as it is a habit to explain all of the South's shortcomings by the Negro.—ANP.

Finletter's Sound Integration Plan

Chicago Ill.

In his commencement address to the graduating class at Hampton Institute, Thomas K. Finletter, former secretary of the Air Force, advanced the most attractive proposal that has yet been made on the issue of integration.

Mr. Finletter suggested that U. S. foreign policy should first concern itself with evolving a workable equation incidental to America's relationship with the peoples of Asia, the Near East and Africa. He then defined integration as "the necessity for making those changes in status which will guarantee legal, political and psychological equality and equal opportunity to people who previously were in a lower status position."

He said this is a challenge we are facing within our own country in the struggle to create the proper status for all Americans regardless of their race or color. It is the same question which we are facing in the foreign field. For the great obstacle which is tormenting the peoples of Asia, the Near East and Africa and is making them hesitate to work in the cause of freedom, is their feeling that the countries of the West still continue, if not the practices of colonialism, the colonialist attitude which looks down upon them because of their race and their color.

He declared that this day has changed and any foreign policy or any national policy "of our country which fails to understand that this change has taken place for good is a policy which is doomed to failure."

He contended that the day of colonialism, of the domination of all this part of the world by the white man, has come to an end. The peoples of Asia, the Near East and Africa who comprise two-thirds of the world population are determined to be independent and to follow their own destiny, and their determination is not to be denied.

Mr. Finletter argued that America was doing well in the application of technical skills and knowledge to the furtherance of atomic energy for both war and peace purposes. But in the field of race relations we are not doing so well. "The world," he said, "has been through a period of so-called white supremacy, when the man with the white skin has had a rule over those of different race and different color far beyond that to which his culture or his numbers entitle him. This day has changed."

In Finletter's view there remain huge chasms of lack of understanding between the United States and the peoples of the formerly colonized areas. Of all the factors which make up this lack of understanding, the most powerful one is the difference of race and color. The most powerful force making for racial misunderstanding is the survival of the notion of racial superiority or inferiority, the persistence of the horrid thought that men are to be treated differently because of their race or their color is different.

To prove his point, he quoted fom a recent speech by Carlos Romulo, the delegate from the Philippines in his opening statement to the Bandung Conference. This is what General Romulo said:

"I have said that besides the issues of colonialism and political freedom, all of us here are concerned with the matter of racial equality. This is a touchstone, I think, for most of us assembled here and the peoples we represent. The systems and manners of if have varied, but there has not been and there is not a Western colonial regime which has not imposed, to a greater or lesser degree, on the people it ruled, the doctrine of their own racial inferiority.

"We have known, and some of us still know, the searing experience of being demeaned in our own lands, of being systematically relegated to subject status not only politically and economically and militarily — but racially as well. Here was a stigma that could be applied to rich and poor alike, to prince and slave, boss man and workingman, landlord and peasant, scholar and ignoramus. To bolster his rule, to justify his own power to himself, the Western white man assumed that his superiority lay in his very genes, in the color of his skin . ."

Finletter stated that it is obvious, therefore, "that it is of the highest importance to us that we get to work on this problem." He suggested that the best aproach to this solution is an intensive and dispassionate search for the truth. Knowledge applied to this process of integration will produce significant results. If the full light of science, he contended, is brought to bear on it, the barriers to full integration, world-wide and within these United States, will yield much more quickly than "you may think."

He would create a study center, preferably in a Southern university, which would be a focal point for research into the facts and emotions of integration on a world-wide basis.

This is the most positive suggestion that has been made to date on the ways and means of hastening the processes of integration. It is an approach that should command the attention of thoughtful leaders of both races. We believe Mr. Finletter's plan to be both sound and practicable. Now, let us see how quickly his suggestion is carried out!

Cannot Back Segregation, Vatican Reveals In Letter

Herald P. 1 Atlanta, Ga.

ROME — The Vatican has taken a dim view of the letter sent to Pope Pius XII urging him to put an end to "the strange new doctrine" of racial integration by the Association of Catholic Laymen in New Orleans.

Herald 8-10-57

In a copyrighted article from Rome, the New York Times said Friday the Holy See cannot declare itself against integration "because the church is concerned with souls and all souls are equally dear to her'. It follows she is completely and unalterably opposed to all forms of discrimination - in New Orleans as much as in the Union of South Africa.

The article charged "the New Orleans group compounded their doctrinal error with an error of form and offense against church discipline" in that "they should have addressed their appeal not to the pope but to the sacred congregation of the council" and that "they let it be publicly known that they had appealed to the Pope against their ecclesiastical superior".

Skipping their archbishop, the New Orleans Catholics wrote directly to the supreme pontiff in Rome asking that he declare segregation not morally wrong as has been charged by Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel and that Rummel be requested to cease integration of Catholics pending word from the Pope.

The letter said: "For over two years now conscientious and sincere Catholics in the archdiocese of New Orleans have been confronted with the strange new doctrine, propounded by our archbishop, his excellency, Joseph Francis Rummel, that the segregation of the white and Negro races is 'morally wrong and sinful."

The letter charged the clergy and church with participating in and perpetuating segregation by "sanctioning the establishment and maintenance of separate churches and schools."

Archbishop Rummel has promised to make a statement concerning the letter, its requests and allegations.

Southerners Are Entitled To Truth About Integration

Constitution. p. 4 Atlanta, Ga.

In his grief one Southern politician moaned that President Eisenhower has forced the South to fit the mold of the critical Southern caricature. He must have seen in his mind's eye the impetus given the Ku Klux Klan, the hate-mongers and the passers of obscene pamphlets.

He must have seen wise and temperate Southern leaders being forced into the fire of political opportunists eager to capitalize on fear, unrest and resentment. He must have seen all the large and small monuments to racial harmony shaking on their pedestals. He must have seen communities which have taken small steps toward compliance with unwanted law turning backward in their tracks.

Wed 10-2-57

All this was easy to see in reaction to the President's harsh and unwise action — or if not to see, to feel. For anyone with a sense of the Southerner's still fierce individualism and regional pride and his determination not to be pushed one step knew instinctively the enormity of the President's error.

It is a great pity that among the President's advisers there is no one with this Southern sense of what is tolerable and what is intolerable. Had there been, the President's decision might have been avoided.

The point is, however, that the step was taken and the furies have been loosed. The almost fallow fields of violence that for so long disfigured the Southern landscape and bruised the Southern conscience have been re-seeded. Open minds are snapping shut.

It is an old, old story—history repeats itself.

But the story must have a new ending and it is up to the South to write it.

The South has been victimized in a process initiated by Gov. Faubus and executed by President Eisenhower. That is a fact.

The chief danger now is that the South will add to its burden by replying in kind to the offenses against it, by turning to violence, smug self-righteousness and false prophets.

The chief hope is that it will cleave to its proved leaders — those who do have a sense of what is tolerable and intolerable to the South, who have both state, regional and national standing and who are best equipped by this to carry and drive home to the rest of the nation some blunt truths, the chiefest of which is that the theory of "forced integration" inevitably will prove to be a fallacy. These leaders must also be able to state some truths to the South, namely that ways must be found to live with the law.

Even as disaster fell last week, this kind of leader came to the forefront in the South—Hodges of North Carolina, Collins of Florida, Clement of Tennessee—with plans to bind rather than belabor the wound.

The South, in its own best interests, must keep them out front and concede them the latitude they will require for constructive leadership.

Hobson City Is Showing The Way

The Anniston Star

REGARDLESS as to his standing among his own people, of which this paper is not informed, the fact remains that the Negro minister, C. C. Addison, who gave Harlem, New York City, as his address, talked a lot of common sense to a congregation near Baton Rouge, La., last week, an account of which was given in this paper last Wednesday.

He was right when he said that "no laws and no group of lawmakers can give the Negro or anyone else civil rights." Those rights should be won on a basis of character, education, upright conduct and self-reliance. We condition "foreigners" for citizenship, so why not our own people?

P 4 A

Yet, when a person, regardless of race, proves his justification for citizenship, he should be guaranteed that right by law.

Advertiser

There are thousands of Negroes throughout the South who have won the right to citizenship by right living, and by thrift and economy they have acquired property, many of them now owning business enterprises that rate recognition in Dun & Bradstreet.

But there are few, if any, according to the Archbishop Addison, who attain that position in Harlem, although there are some banks and insurance companies there that are managed by Negroes. But the ban against them in New York is just as strong as in Detroit, Chicago or elsewhere in the North.

Montgomery

THIS paper has believed for many years that the best way the Negro people, or any other people, can gain recognition is by proving what they can do for themselves. That is what the citizens of Hobson City, our wholly Negro neighbor town, is now attempting to do, and their efforts should not only be applauded, but aided.

As a matter of fact, differences between, or among, races more often than not are rooted in economic bases. The riots in Boston developed first among the Americans and the Irish, then among the Poles and later among the Negroes. And most of the friction in Chicago today is among the Irish and the Poles, who resent Negro penetration into their communities.

That was the principal cause of the latest riots in the Windy City. There are said to be more than 2,000 Negroes coming into Chicago every month. The city is desperately overcrowded, and when the new immigrants, few of whom have any means, overtax the Negro settlements and overflow into white districts friction becomes inevitable.

In spite of the breast-beating on the part of Sen. Douglas of Illinois about the status of the Negro in the South, conditions in Chicago are much worse than in any Southern city. Rioting is continuous and there are as many police mobilized there as were necessitated during the rioting around Trumbull Park, where the first big Chicago riots started a few years ago.

BUT Chicago is by no means the only Northern city that is up in arms against forced integration of the races. There is a city law pending in New York that would compel owners of private apartment houses "to rent apartments to tenants without regard to color or race or national origin." And that law is being bitterly opposed.

That proposed law has caused the city's leading newspaper and New York representatives in Congress to do an about face and to make a plea for "moderation" in dealing with the racial issue.

Jr. 8-23-57

In fact, in a recent advertisement in The New York Times strong protest was made against the measure in question by incorporated real estate boards in the city of New York, Brooklyn, the Bronx, Long Island and Staten Island, all stating that integration "would depress real estate values."

Moreover, the protests against integration in the schools of New York City are just as violent as are the protests against compulsion as applied to the owners of realty property. The proposed carting of school children from one end of the city to another merely that the different races might be mixed up has all but been abandoned.

City Superintendent William Jansen, who has been struggling with the racial problem for two years or more, is hastening his retirement, which will take effect just as soon as a successor can be appointed. He is accused of being faint-hearted in his efforts to make integration work.

But just as he has reached what he believed would be a logical solution, the opposition has been so strong that he has been compelled to go slow in his efforts to comply with the sociological law as laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court.

And the opposition to school mixing has not come from white people alone. Negroes and Puerto Ricans, as well as the whites, feel more comfortable when they, too, resent compulsion.

Playing It Up

EDITOR'S NOTE: It's our faces that are red.

We Can Be Saved By The Voice Of The North

"Princeton Analyzes South's Bias Stand," says the caption to a story in The New York Times, and here's what we learn about ourselves from the scholars:

PRINCETON, N.J., Aug. 14—Exposure to mass information media originating in other parts of the nation tends to diminish Southern opposition to desegregation, it was reported today.

A survey conducted by Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School Of Public & International Affairs found that whites who read newspapers and magazines, listened to the radio and watched television were more sympathetic to the northern point of view than persons who lived in isolation.

This interesting conclusion was based on interviews with "some 300 whites," Princeton apparently considering this a fair cross section of Southern opinion. The survey, we suppose, was predicated on the gracious assumption that Southerners are not beyond salvation, that they can be saved by northern news and commentary.

This Voice of the North hypothesis hardly squares with the facts as seen by sensible Southerners. Much of the South's current bitterness is directed, not at the Negro, but at northern generalizations, sermons, half-truths, oversimplifications, and misrepresentation of the situation in this section of the country.

Princeton could perform a service by conducting a really comprehensive survey—not of hundreds but of many thousands—to determine the destructive effects of biased, superficial and stereotyped articles, stories and broadcasts about the South

The Princeton survey notwithstanding, it is our belief that the pre-judgments and incompetent, cub reporting by northern media—there have been some notable exceptions—figure highly in the recent Gallup poll which revealed a substantial drop in the percentage of Southerners who believe that integration is inevitable. In February of 1956, Gallup found that a majority of Southern whites (55%) accepted the certainty of integration some day.

Last week, the percentage had dropped to 43%. There are many factors involved, but as writers like Robert Penn Warren and William Faulkner have revealed, bad reporting by the North has alienated many Southerners who had called themselves "moderates," forcing them in indignation and disgust back into the camp of the extremists.

That this has been a contributory factor in the hardening of Southern resistance seems—Princeton survey or not—indisputable.

Supreme Court May Have Changed The Law, But Not The South's Views On Segregation

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14. — The Supreme Court's school desegregation decision presumes that state and local political leaders in the South will follow it—even if it means an abrupt end to their political careers.

This is one of the decision's most unrealistic features, and, unfortunately, is one that is not fully understood outside the South.

For instance, integration-bent Eastern newspapers are constantly seeking heroes and villains among Southern political leaders and office-holders.

Any Southern political figure who agrees with the decision, or makes any move toward its implementation, automatically is assured of favorable treatment in the press outside the South.

Mr. Cunningham

Likewise, those Dixie leaders who take a contrary view—even though they conscientiously are reflecting the views of a majority of their constituents—are promptly denounced.

This week, for instance, Mayor Woodrow Mann of Little Rock was praised by the Eastern press for differing with Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus.

Few newspapers in this area went to the trouble to point out that the Mayor involuntarily is retiring from public life, by virtue of the returns in the last Little Rock city election.

He was held up as an example of the "true" sentiments of citizens of Little Rock on the segregation-integration question.

Easy For Justices

Likewise, the senators from Tennessee and Texas have been praised for their statesmanship in voting for the newly enacted Civil Rights Bill.

The court's decision seems to be productive of this type of political naivete. No one ever seems to appreciate even the possibility that a public official in the South is trying to reflect the views of a majority of the people who elected him.

Instead, he is repeatedly urged to forsake his constituents, even though he may run the risk of committing political suicide.

It was a comparatively easy task for the nine members of the Supreme Court—appointed for life at salaries of $35,000 a year—to draft the desegregation opinion.

It's a vastly more difficult task for state and local officials in the South—subject to re-election at periodic intervals—to carry out the ruling.

And yet the court's decision—and its supporters outside the South—presume that Southern public officials will abide strictly by its terms.

If the ruling itself suddenly had changed people's minds, this might have come about. But it did nothing of the sort. With all of the difficulties that have occurred even in the border states, that fact should be clear by now. Most people seem to have gone right along thinking as they did before.

It seems doubtful now that even a candidate for constable could be elected in the South if he urged school integration.

Search Goes On

Yet despite these hard political facts-of-life, the search for a Southern statesman who favors integration and who can command a great popular following goes on and on.

However, Southern office-seekers, to paraphrase an old saying, seem to prefer to be live politicians, rather than retired statesmen.

That's the way truly representative government works. It's been that way since the founding of the republic. It's a basic concept of democrracy.

It is followed not only in the South, but in all sections of the country. Successful public officials represent the views of a majority of their constituents.

When all of this is understood outside the South, the race problem can be approached more realistically.

"We are Americans and as Americans, we would speak to America."—FREDERICK DOUGLASS

"... No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States ..."
14TH AMENDMENT
U.S. CONSTITUTION

First Principles Of Integration

The United States Census for 1950 gives 483,927 as the number of colored people in Philadelphia.

James R. Smith, executive secretary of the Wissahickon Boys' Club, laments the fact that 6,460 colored juveniles were arrested last year and that more than one half of the inmates of the Eastern Penitentiary in Pennsylvania are colored.

With a colored population growing at the rate of 250 a week, mostly by immigration from the South, he finds the situation intolerable and says the danger of racial animosity is growing steadily.

Then he adds "there are hundreds and hundreds of good colored citizens in every part of Philadelphia who feel the responsibility to solve the problem in a mixed society."

* * *

MR. SMITH'S comments were published in the Philadelphia Bulletin and gleefull utilized by David Lawrence's rabidly segregationist U.S. News and World Report to sound an alarm to the effect:

1. That colored migrants are flooding into Northern cities from the South;

2. Northern cities have race problems as serious as any of those in the South.

Neither of these statements is true.

If only 13,000 Southern colored people migrated to Philadelphia in a year, how can any reasonable person describe that as a flood?

Since 1820, some 40 millions of immigrants have come to this country, during some years at the rate of a million annually, and this nation absorbed them without a ripple.

Why should Mr. Smith complain about the fact that during a year 13,000 American citizens decide to leave one section of the United States to come to Philadelphia?

As to his belief that "explosive racial animosities" are growing steadily in the North, that's an opinion and not a very experienced one at that.

Where are his facts to back it up?

ANYONE WHO says that Philadelphia's racial problems are as serious as those in the South is simply out of his mind.

When Mr. Smith says that only "hundreds and hundreds" of good colored citizens feel their responsibility, stupidly he would place blame for the crimes and misdemeanors of two per cent of the population on the 98 per cent which have observed the law.

Instead of saying "hundreds and hundreds" he correctly should have said hundreds of thousands of good, decent, hard-working, law abiding Americans.

Crime in any city is the responsibility of the whole city and not merely of the minority group whose members chance to break the law.

Crime is a community problem, not a racial problem.

In raising the racial question in Philadelphia, Mr. Smith himself charges:

1. Philadelphia's probation system is a joke;

2. The courts make little effort to require fathers to assume their responsibility. If fathers desert a family, he says, they should be held responsible for their son's behavior;

3. That as fast as families advance financially, they are automatically forced out of public housing projects, and

4. As she didn't know, Mr. Smith asks why so many colored families are on relief.

FOR ALL these problems Mr. Smith has harsh words to say about those he labels "self-appointed colored leaders" including the politicians and ministers.

Instead of challenging the colored leadership in Philadelphia to seek a solution to the crime problem, Mr. Smith, and we assume he calls himself a responsible leader, should challenge the leadership of both races in Philadelphia to seek a solution of their crime problems.

In an integrated city first principles require all people of that city to work together to solve common problems.

Philadelphia has no colored and white crime.

It has crime.

Even a secretary of a boys' club should be aware of first principles.

Not So Solid South

There were some disconcerting statistics in the Gallup Poll report on Southern attitudes regarding race relations in this newspaper last Sunday. "The white South," says John M. Fenton, a Gallup Poll staff representative, "has stiffened its resistance to integration with the Negro. Southern Negroes, on the other hand, have closed ranks tighter than ever." This hardening of lines was, of course, foreseeable and, no doubt, inevitable. More troublesome, perhaps, is the observation that, while there has been little change in attitude toward the Supreme Court's school decision in the "border states," there has been a definite stiffening of resistance in what Mr. Fenton calls the "Middle South"—Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina and Virginia. Like the white people of the Deep South, more than nine out of ten of those living in the Middle South now express disapproval of the decision.

Nevertheless, as James M. Nabrit, secretary of Howard University, said recently, the solid South is no longer solid on the issue of keeping Negro children out of white schools. Indeed, it is a fundamental error, we think, to regard the South as monolithic. There are important differences among Southern regions in education, culture, economics and racial composition which produce significant differences in the patterns of racial relations and in attitudes toward school integration.

While it is undoubtedly true that the white population of the South continues overwhelmingly to prefer segregated schools and that among many that preference has hardened of late into a passion, it is also true that it is tempered in many places by respect for law and for Christian ethics. There has been desegregation in a number of border state school districts; and where it has been tried, it has generally been accomplished without serious difficulty or disorder. The lesson of experience is likely to spread. Here and there the sober voices of moderation and tolerance and good will are heard above the raucous nonsense of the demagogues and, in the end, can be counted on to prevail. Here is an example from The Cheraw Chronicle published weekly in Cheraw, S. C.:

The voice of the moderate in the South must be raised in this troubled hour, lest the region suffer a painful hangover occasioned by the emotional jag to which so many of us have succumbed in the backwash of the Little Rock integration row . . . Ambitious politicians have stirred the banked fires of racial hatred in order to serve their own selfish aims. Newspapers have fanned the flames with wild and unsubstantiated charges, while extremists have exhorted the mobs to take matters into their own hands. When the tumult and the shouting have died away, it will be up to the moderates to pick up the pieces and arrive at some reasonable solution . . . The extremists are making mountains out of molehills, and worse, are threatening to turn their own beloved states into ugly imitations of foreign dictatorships, where repressive state legislation interferes with freedom of speech, of thought, of expression and of conscience. When that happens the South will have destroyed itself, without any help from the Federal Government.

A South in which a country editor can speak with such vigor, sense and courage against popular prejudice is not indissolubly solid nor impervious to rational progress.

Race issue is family affair, publisher tells B'nai B'rith

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Dec. 16—(AP)—A Pulitzer prize-winning publisher from Tuscaloosa, Ala., views the Negro's place in the South's social pattern as a problem "in the nature of a family affair."

"It is going to have to be worked out by members of the family — meaning Southern people, unidentifiable otherwise," Buford Boone told the Anti-Defamation League yesterday.

Boone said it would be a mistake for the league, a subsidiary of the Jewish B'nai B'rith organization, to become actively involved in trying to end racial segregation in the South.

BOONE, publisher of the Tuscaloosa News, told 400 Jewish community leaders that opposition to "change in the pattern of school segregation in my area of the South is stronger now than it was last year.

If pressure for integration is applied in Alabama, and if opposition cannot be successful by some other method, the school system will be sacrificed."

BOONE SAID the principal objection to school integration was based on fear of intermarriage.

"Not an inconsequential number of Southerners will tell anyone they prefer to spill their blood rather than mix it," he said.

Discussing organized opposition to integration, Boone said he was informed a few Alabama Jews have joined Ku Klux Klan groups and in doing so have joined an organization with past records of anti-Semitism.

THE TUSCALOOSAN said that citizens councils have more than 160,000 members in Alabama and Mississippi, representing half the council membership in the South. He estimated that dues poured about a $1 million a year into the councils and perhaps another $1 million is realized from contributions and fund drives.

"Tennessee and Florida are less dominated by the council and related organizations than the other Deep South states," Boone said. "The big strength is in the nine Southern states beginning with Virginia, coming down across the seaboard, across the Gulf area and in the Mississippi Delta."

THE PUBLISHER said Tuscaloosa had been shaken severely by unrest which attended efforts of Authorine Lucy, a Negro, to enter the University of Alabama.

"Many of us reached the terrible conclusion that our community was about to have a murder on its conscience for I believe that if the Negro girl had returned to the campus she would have been killed," he said.

BOONE SAID immediate school integration at all levels would produce down-grading in the education of almost a whole generation of white students, while Negroes were swiftly up-graded.

"In my part of the South," he said, "they are operating on the premise that integration will not become a reality with them. And I do not think it will any time in the near future."

7 in 10 Negroes in South Now Favor Court Rule

Study Finds Race Loyalty, Desire For Status Are Major Motives

This is the second of a series by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 1.—One of the most frequently advanced arguments from Southern whites is that "the Negro doesn't want integration." But how does the typical Southern Negro feel about the issue?

Nearly two years ago—when the Institute first made a study of the Negroes in the South—it found a slight majority of them approved of the Supreme Court decision, while a substantial minority opposed it—chiefly on the grounds that too much trouble would result when the schools were integrated.

Since that time, attempts at integrating the schools have been made. Some have been peaceful; others, such as Little Rock, have focused world attention on the trouble that resulted.

69% Favor It

Today, nearly 7 out of 10 Southern Negroes are in favor of the Supreme Court ruling—a substantial majority of 69 per cent.

In a special study of the South and segregation, Negro interviewers from the Institute's field staff asked a carefully drawn cross-section of members of their own race in the South the same question that was put to them in the earlier study twenty-two months ago:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

The results today, compared with those reported in February, 1956:

SOUTHERN NEGROES

	Today	Feb., '56
Approve	69%	53%
Disapprove ...	13	36
No opinion	18	11

Considering the Negro's misgivings about possible trouble in the study two years ago, it may at first seem a paradox that there has been this sharp increase in the approval vote during a period marked by racial troubles.

Reasons for Increase

But after an extensive tour of the South, from his own interviewing experience and interpretation of results gathered by the special Negro staff, this reporter sees the answer behind the increase as follows:

Despite the troubles over school integration that have occurred in the last two years, the Southern Negro is more inclined to feel that the integration dispute has helped rather than hurt him.

Although many Negroes who were interviewed said that they were not sure whether the dispute had helped or hurt, the vote among those who expressed an opinion was 5-to-1 that it had helped.

Race Loyalty

The second major reason behind the increase in the approval vote is that the Southern Negro has come to feel today that it would almost be disloyal to his race if he were not to approve.

This is evidenced in part by the fact that in all segments of the Southern Negro population—young and old, college-trained as well as those with grade-school education in cities and on farms, in the Deep South and the border states—a substantial majority is found approving of the decision.

In short, the court's ruling has become a sort of symbol for the Negro today—a way of expressing his dissatisfaction with other treatment which he resents bitterly.

Attitude of Whites

Actually, the Negro places separate schools far down the list of things which irritate him in his dealings with the Southern whites. The chief irritants, in fact, have little or nothing to do with legal segregation.

Most irritating to the Southern Negro is the general attitude of the whites—the use of distasteful nicknames when referring to him and what he considers to be a feeling of natural and marked superiority on the part of the whites.

Another area in which the Southern Negro is irritated is that of salaries and pay scales. He resents being paid less in wages for doing what he feels is the same kind of work as the whites.

Only after these major irritants does the Negro mention such things as sitting in the rear of a bus, segregated restrooms, being unable to eat in white restaurants and—the ner cause of all the trouble so far—segregated schools.

This is not to say that the Negro does not want an end to segregated schools—on the contrary, when our Negro reporters asked them if they would prefer to keep their children in an all-Negro school, 2 out of 3 (64 per cent) said they would not. Only 1 Negro in 8 (12 per cent) indicated that he preferred his children in an all-Negro school.

What about the relatively small, but important, minority of Southern Negroes today who do not approve of the Court's decision? Why do they feel the what kind of education they way they do? would get from white teachers.

Almost without exception, the reason they offer is that mixing have caused some Southern Negroes to think about moving the schools will result in too much trouble. They fear what away from the South to their children Figures indicate that about 1,500,000 Negroes out of the school with white children—or wonder just Southern Negro population are

Truman Urges Worry Over U. S. Civil Rights Rather Than Sputniks

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (AP).—Former President Harry S. Truman tonight advised the Nation not to worry about Russia's Sputnik. But he said we ought to worry about Little Rock and civil rights.

In an address on civil rights, Mr. Truman told the Joint Defense Appeal of the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith;

"Our attitude on this vital struggle for equal opportunity and human liberty is being watched by the world.

STRESSES LIBERTIES

"Don't worry about the Sputniks. We can take care of that situation.

"Let's make sure we preserve the greatest inspiration we can give the world, the liberties and the rights we profess through one of the most wonderful documents in the world—the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. Truman was said little previously about the Little Rock school integration crisis.

TACITURN PREVIOUSLY

When Gov. Orval Faubus used the National Guard to keep nine Negroes out of Central High School, Mr. Truman declined comment except to remark that Faubus "is a wonderful fellow and a very good friend of mine."

But tonight he said:

"I was shocked to see the Governor of Arkansas take it upon himself to obstruct the enforcement of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court decision expressed the stated purpose and intent of the Constitution of the United States which extends equal educational privileges as well as civic and economic rights to every member of our population, regardless of race, creed or color."

The South Won't Tolerate Violent Acts of Mobsters

In attacking this problem of segregation-vs-integration, two avenues are open to individuals and groups. They can, on either side of the question, employ the rules of fair play or mobism, with all of its chicanery, meanness and brutality. We think it is time to put the South on record with its true feelings.

The section is very strong—and emotionally so—on the principle of maintaining a separation of the races while giving each its own equal rights and opportunities. The South is almost solidly opposed to President Eisenhower's use of federal troops in Arkansas as a tragedy which threatens the very foundation of the nation and the inherent right of states to self-government. Yet, in order that the world might know, the South is just as strongly opposed to destruction and mobism as it is to the ill-advised efforts to force integration upon the territory.

The opposition to integration does not, as some characters would like to believe, give anyone or any group a license to destroy and terrorize. The people of the South have been among this country's most patriotic and loyal citizens and the South has certainly produced some of the nation's most independent thinkers. They are determined, however, that their way of life shall be preserved without violence.

Persons who, by hate and prejudice or in the hope of setting off racial outbreaks, would burn or dynamite a school are not worthy of the true South and its traditions. The South has been angered by insinuations that everybody is an "extremist" or member of a "mob." It does not intend to sit idly by and permit irresponsible roughnecks to bring about a reign of terror or take into their own hands the authority which belongs to duly elected officials.

The roads are but two: Fair and foul. Real Southerners will take the former route and they will help hunt down those who take the detour.

Tuscaloosa publisher says:—

South's racial troubles caused by extremists

WATERVILLE, Me., Nov. 9—(AP)—Most of the South's racial trouble "has come and will come from extremists," an Alabama newspaper publisher said here Friday night.

Buford Boone, publisher of the Tuscaloosa (Ala.) News, predicted that racial peace with equal justice will come to the South, although some white Southerners resort to violence.

Boone was presented the Elijah Parish Lovejoy award in ceremonies at Colby College.

Boone described himself as a moderate in the school segregation controversy, and said the Alabama Legislature had readied the machinery to dissolve the public school system to prevent classroom integration.

He said he believes "our school system will be destroyed if pressure for integration is applied, and if the opposition to integration cannot be applied successfully in any other way."

BOONE, WHO CRUSADED against violence at Tuscaloosa when Autherine Lucy was enrolled as the first Negro student at the University of Alabama, said "opposition is more solidified now than it was a year ago."

The Negro student was driven from the University campus by an angry mob early in 1956, and later was expelled for unproven charges that University officials conspired in the violence.

"Many people have accepted the inevitability of integration. But those who haven't are many more, and they are ready to defend their customs and traditions," Boone said.

"Some will even resort to violence, as was demonstrated in Nashville with the bombing of a school, in Montgomery with the bombing of Negro churches, in Birmingham with the dynamiting of Negro homes," he added.

"MOST OF OUR TROUBLE has come, and will come, from extremists. A majority of the white people of the South, I believe, will in the final analysis oppose violence and stand for adherence to law even if they have to make painful adjustments," Boone declared.

He added that "a majority of the Negro people — I believe nearly all of them—are more interested in the equality of education provided for their children than in whether whites and colored youngsters attend the same classes.

He proposed as a compromise that Southern graduate and professional schools admit Negro students, "particularly those who are unable to get such courses in institutions in our state for Negroes."

He said such a proposal would be in return for the Negro group to refrain from "pushing for every right granted under recent court decisions, and with the understanding that improvement of facilities and upgrading of education would be advanced at all possible speed."

He said this is a proposal by a moderate, but "so radical right now that few others will talk about it openly."

Negroes Patience Running Out, Senate Committee Told

Wells New Orleans La. Sat. 3-2-57

WASHINGTON (ANP) -- The Negro's long patience in the face of "continuous violence" may be nearing an end, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, told a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee here last week.

Supplementing his testimony before the committee on behalf of 25 national organizations, Wilkins, on Feb. 19, warned the committee members that he could not "predict what mood would be engendered" among Negro citizens if Congress failed to pass legislation assuring them "a minimum safeguard of the constitutional rights which have been so long denied them."

Mr. Wilkins testified on behalf of pending civil rights measures which would provide civil remedies against interference with the right to vote, authorize the Department of Justice to initiate civil suits on behalf of persons deprived of their civil rights, set up a special civil rights division in the Justice Department, and establish a bipartisan commission to investigate violations of civil rights.

Queried by Senator Sam J. Ervin (D. N.C.), the NAACP leader agreed that the voting rights of Negro citizens in No. Carolina are more secure than in Mississippi or Alabama. However, he pointed out, there are only about 145,000 registered Negro voters in the state out of a potential of 550,000. This is far below the national average, Wilkins said, and would seem to indicate restraining factors which keep nearly three-fourths of Negro citizens of voting age away from the polls.

OUTRAGED BUT PATIENT

Recalling that "the period from last September up until last week has been marked by almost continuous violence directed at Negro citizens and groups in the South who seek the elimination of discrimination and segregation," Wilkins told the senators that "Negro citizens have been outraged but they have been patient."

Thus far, he said, "our people have maintained their hope in spite of specious talk, rebuffs and violence. Under advice of some dedicated men they have followed a non-violent course in the face of extreme provocation. Under advice of others, notably the NAACP, they have placed their trust in the law, the courts, in legislative bodies, and in the orderly processes of government.

Racial Segregation Must Go Former Sen. Lehman Says

NEW YORK—(NNPA)— All racial segregation must go, former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat of New York, declared Tuesday.

Speaking at the luncheon meeting of the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing at the Hotel New Yorker, Mr Lehman outlined a program of Federal action in the field of civil rights. He proposed.

TRAVEL, EMPLOYMENT

1. That Congress enact legislation in statutory support of the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in education.

2. That Congress bar discrimination in education, travel employment and use of public and publicly-supported facilities.

3. That Congress act to protect such organizations as the NAACP and the National Urban League from harassment and prosecution by state governments.

4. That the Senate amend its rules to outlaw the filibuster.

Phila. 10-24-57

5. That the President exercises moral leadership and rally all men of good will in the north and South for the tasks ahead.

Integration in housing is the most urgent target for efforts in New York, Mr. Lehman said.

LOCAL ORDINANCES

"Integration in housing is the key to integration in the schools," he added.

The former Senator called for a local ordinance outlawing dischimination in housing. Such a law, he said, would result "in comprehensive fiscal savings to the city and the community."

Mr. Leham praised as "the truly heoric folk of America" patient colored man and women, who have "endured the degradition of segregation, and still work with restraint and reason to achieve their goal of simple equality of treatment as American citizens."

"But in my jurgment," he added "the greatest heroes of all must be written down as those little school children, in Little Rock and in many other places less renowned, who walked the gauntlet of hate and prejudice to break the trial for the ownward march of the brotherhood."

Study Finds Racial Gap Is Wider in South Today

Herald Tribune p 32
New York Sun 12-1-57

Survey After 22 Months Shows White, Negroes More Determined

This is the first of a series reported by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 30.—Events of the last two years have served to widen the gap existing between the white and Negro races in the South.

The white South, in the last twenty-two months, has stiffened its resistance to the idea of integration with the Negro. Southern Negroes, on the other hand, have closed ranks tighter than ever.

In an "exact repeat" of a study made twenty-two months ago, the Institute recently assigned its Southern staff of white and Negro interviewers to return to virtually the same areas and ask the same questions that they covered in the earlier study.

Just how far apart the races are today is evidenced by the following comments from interviews made in the same city with whites and Negroes—in areas not too far distant.

In Mobile, Ala., a white woman, the wife of a spray painter, said: "I just think that God intended no mixing of the races. The Negroes around here are pushing themselves in with the whites—I just don't know how we're going to work this thing out."

A Negro store owner from the Gulf seaport city commented: "The Negro schools just don't have the equipment that white schools have. And the white people here think Negroes are not up to par with them. It makes me mad. I just don't know how we're going to do this thing. I hope the people here will obey the Supreme Court decision."

When the views of Southern whites—in all of the thirteen states of the South—border states, mid-South and deep South—are added up, attitudes about the Supreme Court decision are virtually unchanged. The results today on the question, compared with those reported in February, 1956:

"The United States Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN WHITES

	Today	Feb. '56
Approve	15%	16%
Disapprove	83	80
No opinion.....	2	4

The reasons why Southerners hold to their views about the Court's ruling are also virtually the same—it's against Southern tradition, the races just weren't meant to mix, separate but equal schools work better.

If anything, this reporter noted that in the South today there is an even greater determination in the typical white person's voice when he tells you that "white and colored just shouldn't mix" or that "if God meant for the races to mix, He would have mixed them."

A seventy-one-year-old retired farmer from the town of Bronwell in Terrell County, Ga. (Negroes make up 67 per cent of the county's population), was typical in his feeling and determination.

"Why don't I want integration?" he asked. "'Cause it's just not right and it's just not constitutional. It never has been the way of life here and it never will be. We won't have it here in the South. I wouldn't say what we would do if it were forced on us—we don't know ourselves."

One interesting thing that we noted was that while there has been little change in attitude toward the Court's devision in the "Border states" of the South —Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma—there has been a definite stiffening in resistance in the states of the Middle South — Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina and Virginia.

Two years ago, the Mid-South states were approximately midway between the Border and Deep South states (South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi) in their vote on the school ruling.

Today, the people of the Middle South vote virtualy the same way as do those in the sister states of the Deep South—where over nine out of ten express disapproval of the ruling.

Less Talk

In the report on our 1956 study I wrote that "everybody is talking about segregation." Today, it is certainly uppermost in people's minds—but there is greater reluctance to discuss it openly.

As a well-to-do Atlanta matron, whose home is on fashionable Peachtree St. told us: "It's just not something that 'the girls' talk about over bridge." The prevalent attitude today seems to be one of "if we don't talk about it, maybe it will go away."

There is also evidence from the study that there has been a definite break-down in communication between whites and Negroes on the subject of integration.

This is not to say that whites and Negroes do not talk about the issue together. But when whites tell you they discussed it with Negroes, the conversation they mention is generally like that reported by a sixty-nine-year-old Dawson, Ga., farm housewife:

"I've talked with them about it—we talked about whether they'd be better off or worse in mixing. They don't want a change. They say please let them alone."

On the other hand, the discussions that Negroes reported having with whites usually run along the lines of that cited by a Negro school teacher from Lenoir, N. C.:

"They (the whites) said they think integration can work. We talked about the way we thought it should happen."

In brief, the evidence is that both the white and Negro South is hearing only what it would like to hear about the topic from the other race.

Despite the breakdown in communications, both Negro and whites are agreed on one basic issue, namely, that the Southern Negro has made great progress in the last year and has more privileges now than in the past.

But even on this question here is little more than a "surface agreement"—a report on something that is a matter of record.

Throughout the thirteen states of the South, our white and Negro interviewers constantly met with this difference in viewpoint from Negroes and whites. It is a difference that stems from a lack of communication and an uncertainty over just what the future will bring. In back of it are the views of two races sincerely convinced that their goals are good ones. Unfortunately, for both races in the South, these goals today would seem to be light years apart.

Robinson Says Whites Need Integration

Washington, D. C. — (ANP) — White people need integration as much, if not more than Negroes, fromer Brooklyn Dodger's baseball star Jackie Robinson told a youthful television panel last week, and those who learn to get along with Negroes in school will be better equipped to do so in later life.

Appearing on the WRC-TV program, "Teen Talk" with five Negro students Robinson said that all businesses and professions will become integrated "sooner or later," and that it would be to the advantage of whites to get adjusted now.

Robinson, who is presently an executive with a New York food chain, appeared as guest on a program with five Negro teenagers to discuss integrated schools.

Joyce Clarke, a pupil at Washington's McKinley High School, told the panel the capital's desegregated school system is "not what it is played up to be." White and Negro students sit separately at school meetings. "There might be integration on the surface," she added, "but as far as I can see it's just as segregated."

Marion Rose, a student from a Montclair, N. J. high school told the panel that in the North there was segregation underneath, but "they just don't bring it out as much."

Students from two Southern high schools Ernestine Dees of Chadbourn, N. C., and Marie Giles of Danvile, Virginia told the group that their schools were both short of books and space. Miss Giles said that her school had no specific room assigned for classes, that there was no special place for students to go when they become ill.

Joyce Boley, another Montclair, N. J. student told the panel that Negro children want to attend integrated schools because they are better equipped than the segregated ones. Integrated schools, she said is a right, and not a privilege.

Country Relieved As Brownell Quits

Resignation of Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. will bring a sigh of relief from many parts of the country, especially from the South. An original member of the Eisenhower "team," Brownell's manipulation of the attorney general's office for obvious political purposes long ago made his usefulness to the country and to the administration a doubtful matter.

Although publicly the President expressed deep regret over the resignation, he, too, must have been relieved. Regardless of one's personal views about the Little Rock situation, Brownell was the chief architect of the policies for which the President must answer to Congress—a Congress which has demonstrated it can wreck the President's programs.

Brownell gets much of the credit, too, for the whole desegregation muddle which has so divided the country and diverted its energies into negative channels destructive of the common good. While his resignation will not change the Supreme Court decision, it is hoped that his successor, Wiliam P. Rogers, will not be so intent on politics and will be more concerned with sensible approaches other than force.

Brownell was responsible for misleading the President on the explosive and dangerous Civil Rights Bill in the last Congress. Until its real purposes were explained to him by Sen. Russell and others, Mr. Eisenhower had only a vague understanding of its real scope.

There may be some significance in the fact the resignation comes only a few months before the New York gubernatorial race. Although Brownell has denied any ambitions to seek the GOP nomination, he will be in a good position to do so.

Whatever may be Brownell's future, the Eisenhower administration will be stronger without him, especially with a Democratic Congress dominated by Southerners and others whom the attorney general so recklessly daubed with the "treason" smear in two campaigns.

GENERAL

In naming Rogers, let's hope that the President has chosen a man who not only can establish better relations with Congress but one who will not add to the divisive trend which threatens to wreck Eisenhower's second term.

Negro Support of Integration Increasing

Second of a Series

By JOHN M. DENTON
Of The Gallup Poll Staff

PRINCETON, N. J. — One of the most frequently advanced arguments from Southern whites is that "the Negro doesn't want integration." But how does the typical Southern Negro feel about the issue?

The Gallup Poll

Nearly two years ago — when the American Institute of Public Opinion first made a study of the Negroes in the South—it found a slight majority of them approved of the Supreme Court decision while a substantial minority opposed it — chiefly on the ground that too much trouble would result when the schools were integrated.

Since that time, attempts at integrating the schools have been made. Some have been peaceful — others, such as Little Rock, have focused world attention on the trouble that resulted.

Today, nearly seven out of 10 Southern Negroes are in favor of the Supreme Court ruling — a substantial majority of 69 per cent.

In a special study of the South and segregation, Negro interviewers from the institute's field staff asked a carefully drawn cross-section of members of their own race in the South the same question that was put to them in the earlier study 22 months ago:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

The results today, compared with those reported in February, 1956:

SOUTHERN NEGROES

	Today	Feb., '56
Approve	69%	53%
Disapprove	13	36
No opinion	18	11

Considering the Negro's misgivings about possible trouble, in the study two years ago, it may at first seem a paradox that there has been this sharp increase in the approval vote during a period marked by racial troubles.

But after an extensive tour of the South, from his own interviewing experience and interpretation of results gathered by the special Negro staff, this reporter sees the answer behind the increase as follows:

1—Despite the troubles over school integration that have occurred in the last two years, the Southern Negro is more inclined to feel that the integration dispute has helped rather than hurt him.

Although many Negroes who were interviewed said that they were not sure whether the dispute had helped or hurt, the vote among those who expressed an opinion was 5-to-1 that it had helped.

2—The second major reason behind the increase in the approval vote is that the Southern Negro has come to feel today that it would almost be disloyal to his race if he were not to approve.

The court's ruling has become a sort of symbol for the Negro today — a way of expressing his dissatisfaction with other treatment which he resents bitterly.

Actually, the Negro places separate schools far down the list of things which irritate him in his dealings with the Southern whites. The chief irritants, in fact, have little or nothing to do with legal segregation.

Most irritating to the Southern Negro is the general attitude of the whites—the use of distasteful nicknames when referring to him and what he considers to be a feeling of natural and marked superiority on the part of the whites.

Another area in which the Southern Negro is irritated is that of salaries and pay scales. He resents being paid less in wages for doing what he feels is the same kind of work as the whites.

Only after these major irritants does the Negro mention such things as sitting in the rear of a bus, segregated rest-rooms, being unable to eat in white restaurants and — the chief cause of all the trouble so far — segregated schools.

This is not to say that the Negro does not want an end to segregated schools — on the contrary, when our Negro reporters asked them if they would prefer to keep their children in an all-Negro school, two out of three (64 per cent) said they would not. Only one Negro in eight (12 per cent) indicated that he preferred his children in an all-Negro school.

But it is perhaps most revealing that the reason why the Negro approves of the Supreme Court decision is more likely to be a generalized argument about the benefit to his race, i.e., "all men are created equal," "this is a democracy," than it is a specific reason why it would benefit him or his children personally, i.e., "because the white school is closer for my children," "our schools here are not as well-equipped as the white schools."

What about the relatively small, but important, minority of Southern Negroes today who do not approve of the Court's decision? Why do they feel the way they do?

Almost without exception, the reason they offer is that mixing the schools will result in too much trouble. They fear what might happen to their children if they went to school with white children — or wonder just what kind of education they would get from white teachers.

Thoughts of racial trouble have caused some Southern Negroes to think about moving away from the South. The study indicates that at the present time about one Negro in six (17 per cent) has considered the possibility of moving. Another 13 per cent said they might move if the situation between the races gets any worse.

Being treated "just like I was white" is the important goal of the Southern Negro at present. The issue of integrating the schools is a symbol to him only because it seems a means to achieve this end. He will doubtless support that symbol so long as he feels that he is not being treated equally — and so long as he can see the goal some day in sight.

Racial issue again in United Nations

By ESLANDA ROBINSON

NEW YORK — For a second time within a fortnight the unfree situation of the 16 million Afro - Americans in the country leading the "Free World" has been discussed in the United Nations.

On the morning of Sept. 19, Ghana delegate Ako Adjei told the General Assembly that his Government considered that it had a special responsibility and obligation.

This responsibility and obligation, he explained, was to help all Africans in Africa to achieve independence, and to help all peoples of African descent, wherever they may be, to achieve the full rights guaranteed them by the Constitution of the country in which they live.

Since that time, the revealing and disgraceful situation in Little Rock has become the subject for discussion throughout the world and in the corridors of the United Nations.

THE EPISODE at Little Rock has caused consternation in the ranks of the United States mission to the United Nations where Mr. Lodge has been screaming about oppression, suppression, aggression and lawlessness in Hungary.

And Mr. Dulles has informed the world that an important part of our foreign policy is the "liberation" of peoples whose Governments we do not approve.

Governor Faubus and mobsters have clearly shown the nation and an interested world that some "liberation" needs to be done in Arkansas and other unreconstructed parts of these United States.

The position of the United States at the United Nations became so embarrassing that the delegation decided to "explain" the episode at Little Rock.

THEY ASSIGNED this difficult (impossible) tast to George Meany, president of the AFL - CIO and a member of the U.S. delegation to the current General Assembly.

Mr. Meany tried valiantly to salvage some prestige for the leaders of the "Free World" by echoing the Administration's line on race relations, which in effect states in so many words:

"Yes we do have segregation and discrimination in the United States, but we think the important thing is that we are making progress toward its elimination."

Sen. Hill Declares—

South Must Sell Story To Rest Of Nation

MONTGOMERY, Dec. 5 (AP)— If the South can sell its story to the rest of the nation, says Sen. Lister Hill (D., Ala.), there is a good chance the Supreme Court will "back down" on racial integration.

But, Hill warned in an interview today, it cannot be done by "deserting the Democratic Party in favor of a third party revolt.

"We desperately need the help, the support, the understanding and the friendship of Congress and people outside the South," he explained. "We will lose all that if we go out into the wilderness and leave the Democratic Party."

On the other hand, the senator said, "if we can get public opinion with us, we will win our fight. If public opinion is strong enough, the Supreme Court will most properly react to that opinion.

What the South needs to do, he continued, is to "take our message to other parts of the country. We have got to make them realize the principles involved. We have got to show them that they may suffer tomorrow from the loss of those principles."

Like other Southerners, Hill contends the Supreme Court disregarded the Constitution in outlawing school segregation.

He said the time may come when the Supreme Court is willing to take "a more favorable look" at some of the laws enacted in Southern States to preserve segregated schools.

Alabama, for instance, has an untested pupil placement law which, without mentioning race or color, gives local school boards almost unlimited authority to say where individual students attend schools.

South Only Area Predicting A Rise In Racial Disorders

Commercial Appeal P. 1 Memphis, Tenn. 1-13-57

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 12.—The number of Americans who approve the Supreme Court's historic decision on segregation has increased in the last year.

As of today, 63 per cent of all adults in a nationwide survey by the Institute are in favor of the action taken by the Supreme Court nearly three years ago. Three adults in 10 oppose the measure.

In February of last year, 57 per cent of all adults in an Institute survey approved of the decision and 38 per cent disapproved.

Sentiment in the 13 Southern states—where the problems of integrating public transportation are presently plaguing local officials—continues to run strongly against the outlawing of segregated public schools.

Two out of three Southern adults today disapprove of the court's decision.

It May Get Worse

Furthermore, Southerners are looking for the situation in Dixie between the races to get worse during the coming year.

Nationwide, the weight of sentiment is that things will get better in the South.

Even a majority of those adults who approve in principle of the Supreme Court decision adopt the viewpoint of "gradualism" when it comes to setting a schedule for putting integration into effect.

Institute reporters in all parts of the country, from Boston to Los Angeles and from Minneapolis to Mobile, put the following three questions to adults from coast to coast:

The United States Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?

Here is the trend of the vote since the first survey on the subject, following the Court's decision in 1954:

July, '54	54%	41%	5%
May, '55	56	38	6
Feb, '56	57	38	5
TODAY	63	31	6

The second question was asked only of those who approved of the Court's decision:

Do you think integration—that is, bringing Negro and white children together in the schools—should be brought about gradually, or do you think every means should be used to bring it about in the near future?

The vote of those who approve of integration in principle:

Police Vow To Crack-Down On Integration Violence

Daily World Sun. 1-27-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Officers Told To Stop Bombings, Cross-Burnings

P. 1

Mobile, Ala. and Tallahassee, Fla. police officials moved Saturday to stop violence by white opponents to integration drives by Negro leaders.

38a General

Chief Dudley E. McFadyen of the Mobile police said he would invoke emergency measures if his policemen don't come up with some arrests in an outbreak of violence, including one explosion two attempted bombings and 20 cross-burnings.

He said during a special meeting of all city police that "all cross burnings and dynamiting in Mobile" will be stopped or officers will be working longer hours without special privileges. This would mean a seven day work week and no privileges to work outside jobs, he indicated.

The Mobile city commission, at the same time, offered a reward of $250 for the arrest of persons responsible for the violence. The commission's announcement said "these hoodlums, these rabble-rousers should not be put in the jails. They should be put under the jails."

Meanwhile Tallahassee Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said 18 white students are believed to "know something about" recent vandalism against Negro integration leaders here.

However, he said no charges were made against the youths because of insufficient evidence. He warned them that further lawlessness might land them in jail.

In Birmingham, Ala., another integration sore spot, police today are searching for a fifth suspect in the shooting of two Ku Klux Klan members, who they believe was wounded in the Tuesday night skirmish.

Police said Harold Wm. McBride, for whom a warrant was issued Friday, probably suffered a flesh wound at the Klan meeting shooting, and had been treated by a doctor outside the city.

Meanwhile, Chad C. Bridges, shot when he went to the aid of fellow Klansman J. P. Tillery, also shot, was placed on the critical list in a local hospital. Tillery was in "fair" condition.

Three other persons, including Asa Carter, head of the Birmingham White Citizens' Council, have been charged with assault with intent to murder. Carter is free on $20,000 in bonds, but Lewis Curry, 27, and Ira Evans, 32, remained in jail.

Mrs. Mary Nell Tatum, 32, was charged with being an accessory after the fact and released.

'Is stupid, is scared or he's lying

COLUMBIA, S.C. — "Any colored citizen who says he wants to be segregated falls into one of three categories:

"He is stupid, he is scared or he is lying."

P. 3

That is how the Rev. J. Herbert Nelson of Sumter sized up racial sentiment in an address to students at Allen University Friday.

38a

Urging "Christian and democratic" thinking and spirit as the best weapons with which to accomplish integration in the South Mr. Nelson leveled an attack on "rescuing the refugee from Hungary" while the same U.S. Government "sits by and only says it is thinking" about "the thousands of colored refugees who flee the South every month, every year, for other sections of this nation."

General

MR. NELSON SAID:

"The classic refugee, to me, is the Rev. J. A. DeLaine (who fled Lake City, S.C., in October 1955 after whites kept attacking his home). No Hungarian loves liberty and freedom more than J. A. DeLaine."

He also pointed to the bombings last week and shootings in to busses in Alabama as examples of colored refugees "the United States doesn't seem to care about."

Mr. Nelson was featured speaker on a program persented by the Mu Sigma Chapter of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity at the university, centered about the theme: "Techniques for Strengthening Our Demorcatic and Christian Heritage."

He was introduced by Nolan Thaxton. Among others on the program were Fred H. Moore, former S.C. State College student, completing his studies at Allen, who introduced the program; Melvin J. Hodges Jr., Frank Taylor and Leroy Rivers.

U. S. RACIAL STRIFE AROUSES FAR EAST

Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, Sept. 21—Racial strife in the United States has brought a sharp lowering of American prestige in the Far East, judging by newspaper and magazine treatment of the school integration conflict in the Southern states.

This week's issue of Asahi Picture News, Japan's leading pictorial news magazine, carries a double-page spread showing scenes of anti-Negro agitation in Nashville, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark., and Birmingham, Ala.

A brief explanatory paragraph in English is headed "America's problem." But the Japanese caption dominating the two pages translates as "America's incurable disease."

The Arkansas disturbance was featured in the foreign news sections of leading Japanese language dailies five days out of seven last week, but the stories were not given top position. Theer was only minor editorial comment, but several popular columnists dealt with the issue in critical fashion.

Today the Kyunghyang Shinmun, Opposition daily in Seoul, Korea, linked racial feeling to the reecnt shootings of Koreans by United States soldiers. "We feel American service men's actions may have been influenced by racial contempt," the newspaper said.

Hardly anyone would deny that there is an undertone of racial resentment in the current run of stories in Japanese papers dealing with misdeeds of United States service men here. Some have been printing stories on incidents involving G. I.'s that go back as far as ten years.

New Negro Nation

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

Progress of Negroes in Africa toward freedom has been in the news of late — for example, the British colony of Gold Coast is to become the independent nation of Ghana in the spring of 1957. It is expected to remain in the British Commonwealth, but to all intents will be a sovereign and independent state, as Canada and Australia are.

With little fanfare, a new Negro nation is taking shape on our doorstep, in the British West Indies. Some time in the third quarter of 1957, a governor general will be named for the scattered British islands in the Caribbean and they will be formally joined in a federation. It is expected that the federation will evolve into a dominion within five to 10 years, perhaps sooner. The name Antillea has been proposed for it.

The new state will not be a Negro state, officially, but it is expected to be so predominantly and in fact, because descendants of Negro slaves make up the greater part of the population. The Christian Science Monitor notes that there has already been a falling off in the white population of some of the islands, in anticipation of Negro control: "White parents are sending their children away to schools in Canada, England, or the United States — which they have done in the past. But today some parents are encouraging their children to stay away and make their lives elsewhere."

The islands are far from self-sufficient, and it is interesting to note that some residents "hope that their new status will entitle them to greater United States aid." We are already shelling out but naturally they could use more.

The West Indies are not as important as they were in colonial days, since other eras of sugar production have been developed. It is hard to realize that, 200 years ago and less, Haiti was rated as the most valuable of all the colonial possessions of France — more desirable than Canada. In the wars between England, France and Spain in the 17th and 18th Centuries, great importance was attached even to the smaller Caribbean islands, which today are insignificant and often a burden rather than an asset to the colonial power.

The total land area to be embraced in the new ration is a bit less than that of Massachusetts, and less than one-sixth the area of Alabama. But the population of 3,000,000 is roughly equivalent to Alabama's.

Too many people in proportion to resources — developed resources at any rate — constitute a major problem of the islands. And, in this connection, it is interesting to note that self-interest takes precedence over any impulse to help the less fortunate brother, as the following detail in the move toward federation shows.

One of the islands, Trinidad, is better off and not so densely populated as some of the others, and could absorb some of their excess.

But Trinidad is not welcoming immigrants from depressed islands. On the contrary, many Trinidadians frankly fear "threat to their preferred economic situation if a heavy influx from other islands descended on them after federation."

This fear has been translated into action — in preliminary negotiations it has been agreed that only limited immigration into Trinidad will be permitted for five years, after which the subject will be taken up again. Then, it is said, the bars will be lowered, either part way or altogether.

Rev. Henderson seen in Time mag picture

Los Angeles' Rev. J. Raymond Henderson, pastor of Second Baptist church, is clearly seen in the picture in this week's Time magazine showing the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the Montgomery bus protest and this week's Time cover-subject, addressing a Montgomery mass meeting.

REV. HENDERSON

The Rev. Henderson, who was the Rev. King's host during the famed young leader's visit to Los Angeles last Summer, is on a trip through "disaster areas" of the South, which will take in Tallahassee, Montgomery, Birmingham, and Atlanta.

In each city he is leaving a contribution of $500 to the chief jim crow protest from his church.

Upon his return, the Rev. Henderson will report his travels and impressions at a meeting, sponsored by the Los Angeles branch Naacp Mar. 7 at Second Baptist.

The churchman came to Los Angeles in 1941 from the pastorate of Atlanta's Wheat St. Baptist church, pastored now by the Rev. William H. Borders, one of the leaders in that city in the passive resistence to jim crow segregation movement.

Let's Avoid A Race War

It looks to me that the President of the United States and our Supreme Court judges want the colored people and the white people to have a race war here in the U. S. A. and while we are trying to kill one another, then Russia steps in and takes over while we are at our lowest ebb.

Anyone with any judgment should know that the NAACP is supported by a bunch of rotten politicians and the Communist Party. The colored people are being led to slaughter by Russia and a bunch of rotten U. S. A. high-ranking politicians, who, I believe, would sell their souls for a vote back into office.

I am ashamed our government has gotten so low down rotten they have become blind to anything but votes and power of office.

Talk about freedom, where is it? We got lots of would-be Hitlers here in the U. S. A. Watch your step, my friends, both black and white. Don't let a bunch of dirty money hogs put us in a race war.

Looks like Hitler was right when he said he would not have to whip the U. S. A. They would whip themselves. A race war here in the U. S. A. will turn the trick.

INTEGRATION IS BLAMED

88-Year-Old Man Kills Self Over Little Rock Crisis

SHREVEPORT, La., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Eighty-eight year old W. D. Morris, apparently disturbed about integration at Little Rock, Thursday fired a fatal bullet into his head.

The police report on why Mr. Morris committed suicide stated:

"They say he was despondent over Little Rock integration."

Officers found his room cluttered with pictures and newspaper clippings about segregation.

Both his sister and his housekeeper said Mr. Morris had been troubled about Negroes and whites going to the same classrooms.

Police said Mr. Morris, who was born in Louisiana, shot himself behind the left ear with a 32 caliber German automatic.

Negro's Position In America Underrated By Europeans

Mon. 8-5-57

By NEL SLIS

NEW YORK, Aug. 4 (AP) — The Belgian film producer recognized me for a fellow European and spoke frankly.

Montgomery, Ala.

"The situation over here is not ideal," he said, "but it's vastly different from what the average European thinks the position of the Negro in America is."

His voice reflected his surprise —the surprise most foreigners feel when they visit the United States for the first time. In Europe, it is generally believed that American Negroes are repressed and kept in a semi-primitive standard of living.

Europeans who have traveled, of course, know better.

And some of us were treated to an education in our own backyard last year when a colored troupe toured Europe in "Porgy and Bess."

OVERWHELMED

On the stage they portrayed what most of us thought was typical Negro life in America. Then we met the actors socially at cocktail parties. In the Netherlands, as must have happened elsewhere in Europe, we were overwhelmed by their culture, sophistican and sharp business sense.

During my four months' visit here in America many Europeans —and Far Easterners too — have talked to me in astonishment about the Negro's share in America's cultural, political and social life. They were impressed by the mutual tolerance, by the eagerness of both white and colored to improve the situation. By the Negro's fervent patriotism.

'EXCELLENT HOUSING

Remarked a French mystery writer: "The position of the average Negro in the South is still miserable, but in the North they are very much a part of the picture.

An Indonesian parliamentarian observed: "Housing conditions for the Negroes in the bigger cities are excellent."

Visitors are amazed to learn a Negro is holding down a $12,900 a year job on President Eisenhower's executive staff—E. Frederic Morrow, 48-year-old lawyer and first Negro White House aide.

To see how the Negro fared all over the country I traveled from East to West coasts and came back through the South.

SLOWLY CHANGING

Everyone told me that life for the American Negro is slowly but surely changing. Two major reasons seem to be: he participated in the postwar prosperity boom and he gets a lift from the fact his African brothers are being recognized formally and politically by the Western World, notably by the American government.

Increased earnings of colored workers have brought prosperity to publishers of some 150 to 200 Negro newspapers and magazines.

The most important magazine is probably "Ebony," which resembles "Life" in format. Its articles have particular appeal for colored people: profiles of well known Negroes such as Ralph Bunche and Sugar Ray Robinson, and stories such as the independence of the African Gold Coast under the name of Ghana.

EXCEPTIONS

Talking with Negroes, I found that while they acknowledge their race doesn't have equality, they are making progress and certainly could be far worse off then they are. Of course, there are exceptions.

A New York cab driver I rode with said he had gone to elementary school with the present premier of Ghana, Dr. Kwame Nkruhmah.

"He was wiser," said the cab driver, "and had the opportunity to come to Columbia University, and then back to his own country."

The driver still felt Africa was his home. He was a seaman, and only driving a taxi because his wife was sick and he wanted to stay with her until she recovered.

"Next month I am going back to sea," he said, "and I always manage to get to Africa, which is my own country."

But some of the other things I learned were:

More and more Negroes are working in white collar jobs. And many white firms employ them in advertising products for the more than 15 million Negro customers. In science, sports and the arts, the trend is upward.

For example, one of the vice presidents of Union Carbide, one of the world's largest chemical firms, is a young Negro, Lloyd Cook of Chicago.

He told me that he was accepted socially so long as he remained in the field of science. He is president of the Chemical Society in Chicago, a purely social organization.

"But," he said, "I could never be a member of Chicago's leading golf and country club."

Cooke discussed the alleged tolerance foreigners are supposed to feel toward Negroes. He said that in Chicago it was the European immigrants who were especially anti-Negro. Foreigners may be shocked by American segregation problems, he pointed out, but "they don't have one of their own."

In the nation's capital, I found whites and Negroes mingling freely. But it is very difficult for Negroes to find living accommodations in the sections tradionally white.

Visiting the South I got the feel that the issue of civil rights is more and more becoming emotional, rather than political.

On a bus going down into Virginia, a distinguished looking white woman sat talking with a Negro woman. At the first stop, Richmond, the waiting rooms and rest rooms are distinctly marked "for whites only" and "for colored people."

The two women went their separate ways, but getting back onto the bus they again fell into conversation.

Max Ascoli, editor of the magazine "The Reporter," in an editorial said: "Ultimately the sharper differences and conflicts dwindle, and lines are established that go beyond all groups. He was referring to other people who have had to overcome similar obstacles, the Irish, the Germans, and Jews.

"This is the way America has been made and is being made, thanks to the toughness and fairness of American politics. This will certainly happen south of the Mason-Dixon Line. Both white and Negroes know that it will happen. It will never be too soon," Ascoli wrote.

This year, 1957, is important to Negroes. It gave them their first great tennis star—Althea Gibson from Harlem, who won the women's singles at Wimbledon and was hailed as a national heroine.

Singers Harry Belafonte and Nat King Cole, among others, are riding the crest of popularity.

And constitutionally, this year may decide on their civil rights in the South, including their right to vote, and the futher education of their children.

It was in the Deep South that people told me: "Of course segregation is unconstitutional, but the North must give us time."

Desegregation: A firsthand report from the Deep South itself!

Famous reporter John Bartlow Martin goes right to the heart of the Deep South to give the nation an on-the-spot report on its most critical social issue.

He lays bare the facts behind the historic school issue that many believe detonated the momentous Supreme Court decision!

He interviews South Carolina's white Citizens' Council leader S. Emory Rogers to show you how the Council operates to counteract the federal order—and the N.A.A.C.P.

He tells why Negro leaders —in spite of crippling boycotts and other new pressures —claim the days of the "Old South" are over!

The Answer Is Simple

Afro-American

An editor of a Pennsylvania daily newspaper last week expressed puzzlement to the AFRO why colored people of his community were so exorcised over the plight of their race in the South.

They have integrated schools, the ballot, free use of all public facilities, decent homes and an equitable share of the jobs, so why should they be concerned with what is going on 2,000 miles away? he asked.

Baltimore, Md.

The answer, of course, is simple.

No American can be satisfied with freedom in this republic for himself alone.

Sat. 6-8-57

If it can be denied to anyone in America, it can be denied to him.

The helping hand of America has gone out to the persecuted Jews in Germany, the terrorized Hungarians, the starving British, French and Italians bankrupted by war and to the distressed and downtrodden all over the world.

So often we have sympathy and charity for outsiders and neglect our own underprivileged people at home.

The plight of the oppressed in Mississippi and Alabama and South Carolina and Virginia must weigh heavily upon the consciences of Americans of all races if this is going to be a great country.

Peace With South Is Dems' Aim, Harlem Solon Says

Sat. 7-6-57

NEW YORK — Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr said in a speech delivered Sunday, June 30 "that a majority of the National Democratic Committee has decided to ease off the Negro and the labor vote as a liability and to make its peace with the South then proceed from there to build up a new Democratic party based solidly on the southern states.

"Information received by me from top Negro reporters covering the White House, Senate, and House of Representatives press indicates that a behind the scenes strategy meeting has been held by the key leaders of the Democratic party who are Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas and Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn of Texas, to stop playing up to the labor vote and the Negro vote and to cast the lot of the Democratic party on the side of the south.

THE FORECAST OF this came during the past presidential campaign when, for the the first time since the days of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the Democratic candidate for president was received with open arms by the South and there was no Dixiecrat revolt such as took place against Harry Truman and against Mr Stevenson the first time he ran. While this report will undoubtedly be denied by those in power, yet nevertheless, every fact of recent days indicates that such a policy is the growing philosophy of a new reactionary Democratic party, and I cite the following:

(1) There would be no civil rights legislation passed by the House of Representatives if it had not been for the overwhelming support of the Republicans. On the vote to adopt the Civil Rights Rule, 178 Republicans voted in favor of it plus 112 Democrats. ONLY 10 REPUBLICANS LEFT THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TO VOTE AGAINST THE CIVIL RIGHTS RULE, WHILE ON THE OTHER HAND, 102 DEMOCRATS VOTED AGAINST CIVIL RIGHTS RULE.

Sat 7-6-57

(2) When the trial by jury amendment was presented on the floor of the House which would have gutted the Civil Rights bill, the unofficial leader of the Democratic party, not only in the House of Representatives but really in the Nation, Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn, led the procession of those who came within 30 votes of passing that hypocritical amendment.

"(3) When the trial by jury amendment was presented before Senator James Eastland of Mississippi's Judiciary Committee, the candidate for the Vice President on the Democratic ticket last year, Senator Estes Kefauver, voted solidly with Eastland.

"(4) When Senator Knowland, Republican, moved to take up the Civil Rights bill as it came from the House, the nation was shocked to learn that liberal northern Democratic senators voted solidly with the Dixiecrats to stop civil rights. Their names were: Senators Kennedy of Massachusetts,, Morse of Oregon, Magnuson of Washington, Murray of Montana, O'Mahoney of Wyoming, and Mansfield of Montanta.

"(5) The tip-off to the above vote by Senator Kennedy was given the week before when the State Democratic Committee of Georgia endorsed Senator John F Kennedy of Mossachusetts as their favorite son for the presidency in 1960.

"(6) A further tip-off was revealed when Senator Kennedy Jr, Little Rock, Arkansas, stated he was not a candidate for president, but proclaimed as his choice Senator McClellan of Arkansas. Senator McClellan of Arkansas is not only one of the Dixiecrats in favor of gutting the Civil Rights bill by inserting the hypocritical trial by jury amendment.

"(7) I received a wire from Governor Harriman at 5:00 p m today (June 27) stating that he "has not endorsed President Eisenhower's Federal Aid to Education bill or the Kelley bill." Therefore, Governor Harriman cannot be prejudged falsely in the matter of the Powell Amendment.

"(8) On December 24, 1956, I talked with the leader of the Democratic party of New York, I explained to him that my two jobs totalling $10,000 per year allotted to me on the basis of my seniority had been abruptly taken away from me by the Democratic party.

"I POINTED out to him that this had never been done to a single white man even though for years souterners had left the party and campaigned vigorously against Mr Truman in 1948 and Mr Stevenson in his first campaign for president. I told him that those two jobs belonged to new York and they belonged to Negro people.

"As of this date no Negroes have been apointed to these jobs. Furthermore, I wish to point out that no protests against this discriminatory action were made by Mr DeSapio, Mayor Wagner, nor Governor Harriman to the Democratic Party. None of these Democratic leaders protested why they should penalize me because I am a Negro for doing what white Congressmen and Senators have been doing for years and being received back into the fold with open arms.

"THIS IS A clear case of New York City and New York State Democratic officials following the Eastland line and condoning discrimination because of man's race. As matters now stand, I have no patronage.

"I HAVE A letter from the Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn, telling me that I was not entitled to new office space because I bolted the party, and yet on the other hand, Congressman John Bell Williams of Mississippi who did the same thing has had his seniority, patronage, and everything else respected and all this has been done without a word from a single northern Democratic leader.

"(9) Finally, the only individual of the New York City Council outside of Negro Councilman Earl Brown to protest the shelving of the anti-bias housing law is Republican Stanley Isaacs. The almost 100 per cent New York City Council has laid aside the anti-bias housing law for New York City because the people are not ready. This is the exact, identical reasoning used by Dixiecrats in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, an South Carolina. This is exactly what the die-hard south says when called on to abandon white supremacy in its schools. Arguments against the anti-bas housing bill are almost carbon copies of the south's arguments against integration in the schools.

"ALL OF THE above is more or less clearly understood by Negro people. It is of great significance to note that in the past election in the three largest districts populated by Negroes in this country — the 1st Congressional District of Chicago, Ill, the 4th Congressional District of Philadelphia, Penn, and the 16th Congressional Districti of New York — that close to 60,000 registered Democrats refused to vote at all. In Congressman Dawson's District in Illinois, the highest number of registered Democrats there refused to vote — 39,195, or a percentage of 30.4.

"In my District, the percentage was 18.2. In Philadelphia, 19,259 voters refused to vote, the Democratic percentage being minus 16.3. This means that the Negro voter is watching and weighing the action of the parties.

"WHAT CAN BE DONE?" "First, the northern Democratic leaders have got to stand up and be counted today and know that the enemy of the Democratic party and of our country is that bloc of southern Democrats which is rectionary, prejudicial and bigoted, concentrated in the defiant states. It means also that the Negro voter has now got to view politics from a different perspective; he can no longer afford to be a rubber stamp, a handkerchief head, boot-licking voter, but he must stand up and cast his vote for each and every candidate on the issues and not blindly according to either party.

"The Democratic party needs to follow the leadership of the Republican party in building a new party in the south because there is a large group of white and Negro Democrats in the south who do not subscribe to the Eastland philosophy.

"Lastly, Richard Nixon will be the next President of the United States unless we start building now Governor Williams of Michigan for president and bring back Senator Kennedy into the fold from which he strayed for Vice President."

The above speech was delivered at the Annual Harlem Achievement Day at 132 West 138 Street, New York, 4:00 p m on Sunday, June 30, by Rep Powell who received the MAN OF THE YEAR award:

Other speakers for the occasion were Mrs Rosa Parks who started the Montgomery, Alabama, bus boycott; The Reverend William Holmes Borders, who is chairman of the Atlanta, Georgia Ministerial Committee and is currently under indictment for refusing to ride in the segregated section of the Atlanta bus; and Bobby Cain, the first Negro graduate of the formerly segregated high school in Clinton, Tennessee.

Dixie Industry Boycott Said Yankee Propaganda

Daily News, Jackson, Miss.

POINT CLEAR, Ala. (UP) — A Northerner's claim that migrating industry was avoiding southern cities experiencing segregation violence was labeled a "propaganda device" Wednesday by a state official.

Thurs. 10-10-57

Pleas P. Looney, Alabama development director, denounced the claim made earlier this week by Leonard C. Yaseen, senior partner in Fantus Factory Locating Service of New York and Chicago.

Yaseen said industry moving from the North was by-passing Montgomery, Ala., Little Rock, Ark., and Clinton, Tenn., as well as other southern cities where integration attempts were met with violence.

"They have called us pirates and said we are stealing industries," Looney said in retaliation. "This is just a propaganda device by someone who stands to lose something."

Looney said "the South will continue to grow and get new industries because we have the things industry wants — principally a market, transportation and labor. Segregation never has been a problem in these matters."

Looney is here attending the annual meeting of the Southern Association of State Planning and Development Agencies which began today.

"The question of the Montgomery bus boycott has never been brought up in connection with all the dealings we have had there recently," Looney continued. "And for the first time in several years, Montgomery stands to get a major industry."

He declined to name the firm but said it was "one of the outstanding companies of the country."

THE CULTURE OF THE NEGRO AND HISTORY

Globe Sun. 6-21-67 P 12

American civilization and culture is heavily indebted to the Negro peoples of the ancient world for many of the things we now enjoy. Nashville Tenn

The beginnings go back to the dawn of time. Beneath the various changes that time has wrought rest the strong substructure of custom, religion, industry and the development of culture and civilization from the earliest time until now.

3a General

It is impossible to give a scientific definition of race. Only the main divisions can be indicated in a broad outline.

In the past, skin color has been the accepted means by which the main masses of mankind have been divided. Texture of hair, shape of head and body characteristics are some times used to designate racial types. But no standard of measurement can be rigidly established.

1. The Negroid, with black or dark skin and rather close curled hair, out of whom have come all mankind;

2. The Mongoloid, with sallow or YELLOW skin and straight hair; and

3. The Caucasion, with white or light skin and straight or wavy hair.

It is not possible to draw limits on even these three types because they fade gradually into one another.

AFRICA is the main home of the Negroids. It is believed that AFRICA is the center of all human development. Some authorities trace mankind's start from the Great Lakes in AFRICA, down the Nile Valley and around the shores of the Mediterranean. Thus the AFRICAN is the stock of both AFRICAN and European peoples.

The GRIMALDI NEGROIDS have been considered as the first men to reach Europe. They were emigrants from AFRICA. The Grimaldis are given credit for establishing the great Aurignacian culture in Europe. Traces of the GRIMALDI were found in the Principality of Monaco on the French-Italian frontier in 1901. The Cro-Magnon people, who lived about 25,000 B. C., probably descended from the GRIMALDI.

The earliest cultures, although crude and primitive, represented the highest attainment of mankind after many thousands of years of development. If we consider AFRICA as the center of all human development and trace another ranch into Asia that developed into the Mongoloid peoples and the Negroid peoples of southern Asia the Occania, we will realize that there is evidence of ancient Negro blood on the shores of the Mediterranean, along the Tigris-Euphrates and the Ganges.

The prehistoric Negro developed in historic times into three main stocks. These stocks are represented in AFICA and are inextricably intermingled. It is impossible to disentangle the blood relationships of Africa and Arabia.

In AFRICA there are at least five hundred main tribal units. These can be expanded almost indefinitely. These tribes cannot be grouped by physical, social or psychological measurements. It is impossible to group them only under cultural divisions.

One geographical and cultural grouping (See "BLACK FOLK, THEN AND NOW," by W. E. B. Dubois):

1. The Hottentot area in Southwest Africa

They are believed to be the result of a mixture between the Bushmen and taller northern Negro tribes. Only a few remain. Originally they were herdsmen, clothed in skins and polygamous.

2. The Bushmen in South Central Africa.

The Bushmen are short, but are not pygmies. The Bushmen have yellow or yellow-brown skin, sparse and closely curled hair. They are hunters and live in small bands of fifty to a hundred people. They are well known for their rock paintings. They wear little clothing and are usually monogamous. The Bushmen represent a very early stratum of AFRICA cultural life. They are remnants of perhaps the earliest African population.

3. The East African cattle area, reaching from the Nile Valley along the Great Lakes into South Africa.

These people are keepers of cattle. They have an agricultural culture. Here the tsetse fly divides this cultural area in the center near the Great Lakes, Ironworking and woodworking are handled by these people.

4. The Congo area.

In this region cattle are absent because of the tsetse fly. It is mainly an agricultural area. There are many secret societies and craft guilds. On the coast north of the Gulf of Guinea, in Liberia and Sierra Leone a branch of this Congo area can be found.

The West African and Congo Negroes were the main stock of the mass of American Negroes.

5. The East horn.

This includes such tribes as the Galla and Somali and modern Abyssinians. They are Negroids that have some Semitic blood.

6. The Eastern Sudan.

This is the region from Lake Chad to the Nile Valley and between the Sahara and the Congo. The people in this area are mainly Negro nomads converted to Islam (Mohammedanism) and engage in handling of livestock.

7. The Western Sudan.

This is the battle ground of Mohammedianism and aboriginal religions. This is the area of great kingdoms. The economic life consists of herding, agriculture, manufacture and trade. The art is famous.

8. The section that includes the desert where Mohammedan, Berber and Negroid nomads engaged in trade, camel and horse breeding.

9. Egypt with Arabian and some Negro blood and the Negroid Sudan.

The physical characteristics of the continent of AFRICA have played an important part in the history of the Negro peoples. There are very few gulfs, bays, capes or islands. The rivers are large, but are not means of communication with the outside world because they are not navigable. The inhabitants of Africa have had a severe fight for physical survival that does not compare with that of any other continent.

Africa, rather than Asia, "was the birthplace of the human family and ancient Negro blood was the basis of the blood of all men.

The Negro was the first to make and use tools.

The Negro first developed systematic religion.

The Negro first pursued art;

The Negro first domesticated animals;

The Negro first melted metal, especially iron.

The Negro was the original tamer of the domesticated animals—sheep, goats and chickens, as well as cattle are found in many parts of Africa. The Negro is a born merchantman. Cities in North Africa and Egypt grew rich through Negro trade. Cotton weaving was a flourishing industry long before it reached Britain. Many crafts and industries originated among the Negroes.

The development of the Negro peoples was affected by physical changes in Africa:

> The Sahara and Libyan deserts, which were once fertile plains, were dried up, causing the Negroes to migrate to new locations.
>
> Many of the peoples and much of the culture of ancient Egypt originated in Equatorial Africa.
> In mythology of ancient Greece many Negroes have important parts memnon, Eurybates, Cephus, Cassiopeia and Andromeda, as well as Zeus, are Negroes.
> In the Western Sudan, during the Middle Ages, Negro kingdoms and empires were organized. These Negro kingdoms had a very high culture. The increasing drying up or north and south Africa, the coming of Christianity and Mohammedanism and the Arab and European slave trade combined to overthrow these Negro states and largely contributed to the breaking up of their cultural life.

"Brighten The Corner Where You Are"

Daily World Tues. 6-25-57

Homer Rodeheaver made this simple gospel ballad famous during the crusading days of the late Billy Sunday, who was the Billy Graham of his time. The theme total of the exhortation would warn the individual not to seek some far place of elegance and genial poise, but brighten the corner he occupied.

Atlanta Ga. P. 6

Booker Washington, already famous, further endeared his memory when at the Atlanta exposition he told his fellow comrades to "let your buckets down where you are.

388

These two admonitions were never more wholesome in their preachments than to our fellow citizens living through these critical days set before us at the present time.

General

A few days ago, a literal scenario was spread before the general public, purporting to lay before lovers of history and those engaged otherwise in the field of better relations, a picture of the last few decades including and since the handing down by the Supreme Court, of the decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

The Primus King case could well have been included in this "scheme of progress" for it did make a contribution in its contention, that the so-called white primaries were the actual elections. In that a person barred from a primary, was at the same time being barred from the election.

The Autherine Lucy case and the Montgomery bus affair were listed in the reel which shows "how far we have come and how far we still must go."

The Montgomery bus affair was truly the entering wedge of passive resistance which in time will split wide open this street car and transportation discriminatory practice. Cases like the Autherine Lucy and Horace Ward suits never die. Like Banquo's ghost, they will continue to come back again and again.

Prior to 1946 when the ballot to the Negro was a will-s-the-wisp, a one-party system was feasting high and wide at the fleshpots of political slavery and minority government. So intolerable were concerous conditions, elections were becoming negligible so to draw the fires of the nation on some of the practices which [illegible] such a scheme. Fewer people were voting in many Southern states than in some of the upstate counties in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

The primary was the election, a county unit and one party regime held fast, and thousands fled the South not only for economic reasons but for political freedom as well.

Those who let their buckets down where they were and who sought to "brighten the corners where you are" began to lose their faith and patience and fled other parts in such vast numbers as to cut so heavily in the population of Georgia as to lose one Congressional District."

The Civil Rights bill now taking its turns at the hands of the United States Senate, apparently is becoming an eye opener to those who have stood around and by filibuster and other circumventie measures designed a strategy to defeat majorities.

Apparently those who thought they would have an opportunity at the kill in the committee rooms, are lamenting at a dangerous precedent being set. Vice President Nixon whose parliamentary sagacity warned them that each occasion would take care of itself. The Civil Rights bill was said to be one that had to bypass the Eastland committee. Thusly it will be seen that those who hold on for years and years in the Senate and win by such a fiat, seniority to sit at heads of key committees, might not always sway the balances in favor of the minority.

It is encouraging to note that liberal Democrats of the Douglass stripe are plumbing the line in favor of this legislation. The right to vote must not be interferred with in the machinery of Democratic principles; surely those who came to their seats by the route of denial of the ballot on the part of those who would vote against them, would certainly intercept any legislation meant for taking the power away from such rule by minorities.

While the opposition claims that the right to vote is a screen; that the idden joker in the deck is a horse of another color, they in nowise claim that their contention is backed by the Constitution of the United States and the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

So, those who remained in the South and insisted that faith and patience as reward the persistent, kept letting their buckets down where they were in spite of their occasionally bringing up mud, toad frogs and "wiggle tails."

So, brethren, take courage; register and get ready and you will be able to "Brighten the corner where you are."

North Carolina Author Urges State Legislature To Avoid Cold Civil War

Advocate Sat. 6-22-57

New Orleans, La.—Miss Willson Whitman, North Carolina author, editor, and SCEF board member voiced strong opposition last week to the so-called anti-NAACP bill in the state legislature.

The bill which passed the House (June 6) but was defeated in the Senate (June 8) required public listing of all members and contributors of "certain organizations . . . the principle objects of which are the support of, or oppositon to, racial separation in the use of public facilities . . ."

"My concern," Miss Whitman wrote in a letter to State Senator Thomas, "is to keep the state I now live in from displaying a regional prejudice embarrassing to all literate voters."

Miss Whitman's full statement follows:

"I write as a member of the board of directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., an organization which, as its name implies, is devoted to public enlightenment, with present efforts in support of the Supreme Court's decisions banning segregation in public schools.

"Like many other citizens of Moore county, I moved to North Carolina under the impression that this was the most progressive and enlightened of the Southern states. I still cherish the hope that this may be true, and for this reason am averse to action placing North Carolina among those states seeking, in an atomic age, to continue a cold civil war.

"From the language of the proposed legislation as I have seen it quoted, it might be argued that the bill would outlaw the Klan and the White Citizens' Councils. For that desirable end, it might almost be worthwhile to penalize groups which already have the law on their side. But it is already obvious that in application, as in intent, the bill would operate against the NAACP, an organization supporting the law of the land, instead of against the Klan and other subversive groups. Such groups can be best controlled by legislation against dissemination of race hatred. The proposed bill would, I am told, actually affec church groups as well as educa tional organizations.

"Lest my own attitude be misunderstood I add that though moved to Southern Pines fro New York only seven years ag I am not a "Yankee agitator" but a Texan whose two grandfathers were Confederate officers. When not fighting Yankees they were judges, and the rest of my family was professionally engaged, as I am, in the editing of newspapers, magazines and books. My concern is to keep the state I now live in from displaying a regional prejudice embarrassing to all literate voters."

'Duty' Is Entire Nation's--Davis

Says 'Pointing Finger at South' Solves Nothing

New Orleans La. Times-Picayune 6-11-57

WASHINGTON, June 10 (AP) — Rep. Davis (D-Ga.) Monday called on the North, East and West to take their share of the nation's Negroes and treat them fairly.

In a floor speech against the proposed civil rights bill, Davis said:

"If it is a Christian duty to do more for the Negroes than we have been doing, then by the same token, an equal share of the responsibility rests upon the North, the East and the West.

"The sections of the country cannot discharge their Christian obligation for civic obligation by pointing the finger of criticism at the South and saying 'dig deeper—dig more.'

'Take Your Share,' He urges

"If you want them treated better, take your share of them, and deal with them in your own states and in your own jurisdictions."

He said that a majority of Negroes live in the South and "we have provided for (them) uncomplainingly. While we have been doing this, other sections of the country, instead of helping to solve the problem, have made it worse by meddling, by criticism, by promoting dissension and ill-feeling with a holier-than-thou attitude, and by sponsoring such legislation as this now under consideration."

Many House members who are supporting the civil rights legislation, he said, do not have a handful of Negroes in their entire states.

"Stop evading your own responsibility," he told them. "Take your share of the Negro population and care for them."

'Your Claims Are Sham'

"Unless you are willing to do what you are demanding of the South, then your attitude is hyprocrisy, and your claims are sham," he said.

Davis said that some Negroes had left the South. These, he said, "have been relegated to Negro ghettoes; they have been grossly overcharged for rent, they have been segregated in residential areas, and through this means segregated in the schools pretty much to the same extent as they were segregated in the South."

The Georgian reminded the House that a bill now pending by Rep. Andrews (D-Ala.) would authorize the federal government to assist dissatisfied Negroes in moving away from the South.

"The time is here now for you to show good faith. Why not support this bill and thus secure an equitable distribution of the Negro population into every state in this union?" he asked.

3 Senators Say South Stays Solid

Predict a Rebuff To Republicans

Herald Tribune New York 6-2-57 p. 16

WASHINGTON, June 1 (AP).—Three Democratic Senators predicted tonight the South will reject "modern Republicanism" and give solid support to the Democrats in the 1958 and 1960 elections.

One of these, Sen. George A. Smathers, Fla., said his party faces "a great challenge" to recognize what he called the South's emergence from sectionalism to a point where it demands "a seat in the main dining room from the party who would seek its favors."

Sen. Albert Gore, Tenn., said the Democrats will win Dixie solidly again because "the simple truth is that the Republican party and its leaders are as unsympathetic with the economic problems of the South today as they were in the days of Reconstruction."

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge Ga., said not only the South but the American people as a whole have "rejected the philosophy now epitomized by Republicanism." He urged the Democrats to "seek new leaders from among the new generation of Democrats."

Civil Rights an Issue

Sen. Smathers, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, contended in a speech before the South Carolina Textile Association convention in Sea Island, Ga., that the South is not being given full political recognition.

"It is an unfortunate fact that because of one issue—the so-called civil rights issue—this great area, which in the past has provided so many national leaders for the betterment of this country, can no longer have its sons considered for the Presidency," he said.

"I would warn the leaders of my party that they face a great challenge in this changing Southland.

"Whistling in Dark"

"The days of the pot-bellied, run-down sheriff have come to an end—the screwball Governor with a Dixieland band and the Claghorn Senator with the flowing tie and big cigar are no longer typical of the South. The South today demands and gets ability and respectability. It demands full attention and a seat in the main dining room from the party who would seek its favors."

Sen. Gore, who headed an investigation last year into political campaign expenditures, said in a speech at a Rome, Ga., party rally that while the Democrats can't count on strength in some "traditional areas," Republicans who talk of establishing their party permanently in Dixie are "whistling in the dark."

One of the reasons for this, he said, is that the policies of the Eisenhower administration "are not designed to promote further development of the new industrial base of the South."

Many Whites and Negroes Are Friendly Neighbors, National Study Reveals

Dispatch Fri. 6-7-57 Oklahoma City, Okla.

NEW YORK.—Undeniable proof that white and Negro families are living as friendly neighbors in many American communities was presented here by Dr. John A. Morsell of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Gallup Poll—

North, South Mutually Liked —Negro Issue, Cold Repellent

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn. Mon. 5-27-57

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., May 26. — Confederate soldiers would likely turn over in their graves if they knew that nearly two of every three Northerners expressing an opinion in an institute survey today believe Southerners generally are "mighty fine people."

And that three of every four Southerners voice similar complimentary remarks about their Northern neighbors.

However, three of every 10 Northerners and two of every 10 Southerners take exception.

The Northerners say Southerners generally are living in the past and are slow and lazy.

Southerners say Northerners are always stirring up trouble in the South and take a superior attitude.

'Images' Are Examined

As part of its special survey on the "images" held by Northerners of the South and those held by Southerners of the North, the institute asked both what they thought of their neighbors on the other side of the Mason and Dixon line and what they especially liked and disliked about them.

Northerners were asked:

"What do you think of Southerners generally?"

Here are some of the typical unflattering comments of Northerners about their Southern neighbors:

"Southerners are fine people, but they're a little behind the times."

"They're living in the past."

"They stick to their old customs and don't like to change."

"They're procrastinators, but genial and likable people."

"Well, they want easy living I think they're kinda slow."

"They take life much easier than we do in the East."

Lazy, Shiftless

"They're fine, if they'd only stop fighting the Civil War."

"They're lazy, shiftless and ignorant."

To turn the tables around, what are some of the negative images held today by Southerners of their Northern neighbors?

Here are some of the typical comments of Southerners:

"Northerners get down here and mess up things. They ought to leave us alone."

"They claim we're still fighting the Civil War. I claim they're still fighting us, making fun of us all the time."

"They're always rushing around and are uncouth."

"The 'damnyankees' think they're better than others."

"They're pretty good, I guess, a lot better than I used to think they were."

Yankees Like Warmth

To a majority (55 per cent) of Northerners expressing an opinion in the survey, the South's climate is its chief drawing card, followed by the friendliness and hospitality of the people, mentioned by 19 per cent.

When Southerners were asked what they liked best about the North, most spoke of job opportunities and working conditions.

Slightly more than one Northerner in every three, or 35 per cent, points to the South's handling of the Negro problem as the one thing they like least about the South.

What do Southerners like least about the North?

More than four of every 10 Southerners, or 42 per cent, said the one thing they like least about the North is the cold.

One 73-year-old Mississippi day farm worker, a Negro, put it this way:

"I don't like none of it—no way, shape, form, or fashion!"

More Seek The South

One of the interesting findings to come out of the survey is the fact that there are proportionately twice as many Northerners who say they would like to make their home in the South, as Southerners who say they would like to live in the North.

Northerners were asked:

"Would you like to make your home in the South?"

The results, based on Northerners expressing an opinion:

LIVE IN SOUTH?
(Views of Northerners)

Yes	16%
No	74
Wouldn't care either way	10

When Southerners were asked if they would like to make their home in the North, here are the results:

LIVE IN NORTH?
(Views of Southerners)

Yes	7%
No	87
Wouldn't care either way	6

Before numbers on saddle cloths were introduced to horse racing, jockeys wore numbers on an arm band.

Integration Roundup

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 1-26-57 P. 3

• Six college students, three white and three Negro, were arrested in Tallahassee, Fla., and charged with riding together on one of the city's buses.

• A majority of Tallahassee's Negro citizens are still observing the traditional policy of riding in the rear of local buses, despite an NAACP admonition to sit "where you please."

• Louisiana State University has been restrained from denying admission to its graduate school for Arnease Ludley, 23-year-old Grambling grad, who wants to do work on an MA degree in sociology. The order for restraint was handed down in U. S. District Court at New Orleans by Judge Herbert W. Christenberry.

• William Doyle, Pine Bluff, Ark. father, attempted to enroll his five children in the all-white Dollarway School but was rebuffed after school officials told him they "just hadn't planned for integration" during the 1956-'57 school year.

• Fourteen Knoxville, Tenn. school children have filed petitions in U. S. District Court seeking admission to that city's all-white secondary and elementary schools.

• The 21 Negro bus riders who were arrested in Birmingham on Dec. 26 for defying jim-crow laws have asked U. S. Judge H. H. Grooms to rule against such laws.

• Fourteen-year-old Mary Alberta Washington and her father, Leonard Washington of Lafayette, La. have sued the Southern Pacific and Texas and New Orleans Railroads for $25,000 in damages alleging that Mary was denied sleeping car accommodations on a trip from Lafayette, La. to Los Angeles solely because of her race and color. Mary suffers from cataracts on both eyes.

• A Montgomery, Ala. group is seeking to organize an "all-white" bus line on a "club" plan with State Rep. O. J. Goodwyn named as its attorney.

• A Circuit Court judge has rejected the appeal of a $15 fine imposed upon Faith Bissell, a white woman who refused to move from the Negro section at a political rally in Arlington, Va.

• The American Federation of Teachers Union is going ahead with plans to organize an integrated local in Atlanta, Ga., after the Atlanta Public School Teachers Association, Local 89, surrendered its charter rather than eliminate the "white only" clause from its constitution.

• Miami Negroes ignored NAACP pleas and sat in the rear of city buses despite a ruling that city and state segregation laws are unconstitutional.

• Georgia's General Assembly will be asked to pass a resolution requiring that the NAACP be placed on the Federal Government's subversive list.

• In Birmingham, Ala., the Rev. Alvin Horn, a Ku Klux Klan leader, has vowed "war on Negroes" and warned: "We're going to get back some of the concessions we have already made the Negroes."

• Miami's White Citizen Council has promised to take a photograph of any Negro who sits up front in a Miami bus.

• Tallahassee authorities have blamed the recent wave of racial violence on "high school kids."

• A boycott of the Washington Redskins professional football team this fall is being threatened by a Negro group unless the team hires some Negro athletes.

• Federal Judge Roy M. Shelbourne has issued an order to end racial segregation in McCracken County (Ky.) schools.

• In Charlotte, N. C., the city's municipal golf links have been opened to Negroes.

• Houston's superintendent of schools has admitted that the board has no plan or target date for the desegregation of its schools, despite the fact that the Supreme Court decision was handed down two years and eight months ago.

As The Mill Of The Gods Grind "Exceedingly Well"

Daily World P. 6

The President of a nation, being the top custodian, should above all, be that upstanding executive around whose personality the whole of a nation's sentiment should subtend. Not only his party should be sensitive to his ideals, but those of a national interest, and out for the general welfare of the nation as well, should respond.

Atlanta Ga

Never was this exhibited in any administration more prominently than in the present crisis of the civil rights legislation now hanging in the balance.

Sat 6-15-57

From the first, President Eisenhower made it plain that the nation should be a one country affair; that all citizens, regardless of race or creed, should be accorded the same privileges.

Accordingly upon his ascendency to office he laid down the preamble of scuttling segregation of the races. He would have none of the South's "separate but equal" facility and, through his Attorney General, made known his desires that segregation must go.

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court handed down a decision outlawing segregation at the public school level, Forthwith, the President ordered that segregation cease in the city of Washington, and in time the "Colored" and "White signs were ordered removed from railway stations and in travel compartments.

The slothfulness by which desegregation has made the grade through a maize of local legal entanglements and sundry evasions, with the right to vote being seriously tampered, the administration spearheaded what is being known as certain civil rights bills. These have been rightly called the administration's legislation program, and to this hour the President has not receded one whit from his base in pushing full length this legislation.

From the sideline it is seen that both conservative Republicans and Northern liberal Democrats are lining up behind the President's legislative program.

Apparently the main amendment, the trial by jury proviso, is losing ground every day. Such a condition obtains through a coalition of those liberal minds gracing the halls of the American Congress.

The President of the United States feted in a supper a few nights ago certain key men in the struggle behind his program.

The country is to be congratulated upon having at its head at this time one whose magnetic personality, rugged honesty and determination of purpose would be the magnet attracting all liberal and upright Americans.

Face Responsibility In New Age, Robinson Urges

Daily World Wed. 6-5-57

Atlanta Ga.

Negro young people should look beyond the problem of race relations to the greater problems facing them, Dr. James H. Robinson told the graduating classes of Atlanta University, and Spelman and Morehouse Colleges. The baccalaureate speaker said that the time of protest had passed and that the present need was for people who could be constructive.

P. 1

"Since you were born, half the people of the world have changed their way of living without resort to power," the pastor of the church of the Master of New York said, citing India as an example.

"Who wins the minds of young Africans will rule Africa," he said, deploring the fact that Christian mission boards do not have five trained youth workers in Africa. He urged young Negroes to go to Africa, not as preachers, but as sociologists, public health workers and nurses.

Saying that the United States has a great reservoir of people on whom they could draw to make a most profound impact on the people of Africa, he urged a more adventurous pursuit of the ideals of democracy.

"Don't think in terms of the sadness and sorrow that has been our lot," he said. "Rise above these limitations, or you cannot be ambassadors to others."

This was the 26th joint observance of Baccalaureate Sunday by Atlanta University, and Morehouse and Spelman Colleges. President Albert E. Manley of Spelman presided and President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University introduced the speaker. The Reverend H. I. Bearden, pastor of the Big Bethel A. M. E. Church, read the scripture, Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild of the Temple offered the prayer and the Reverend T. C. Lightfoot, pastor of the West Mitchell Street C. M. E Church pronounced the benediction.

Raps Views Of Minister Who Said South Was Good Place For Negroes To Live

Call P. 5 Feb. 14-57

TOLEDO, Ohio. — (ANP) — A Toledo minister scorned the Rev. Simon Peter Montgomery, former pastor of Old Mystic Methodist church, Old Mystic, Conn., for his statement that Negroes in the South were better off than Negroes in the North.

Kansas City, Mo.

In a scorching letter the Rev. A. L. Roach, pastor of Mt. Nebo Baptist church declared:

"I do not understand how any intelligent person can visit one small village in the South and give an honest opinion of conditions as you have attempted to do.

"Economically, educationally, politically, socially and otherwise, I believe that I know the South as well as any man living today because I was born, reared and partially schooled there.

"I can truthfully say that there have always been and there always will be some good, sincere people in the South both white and black. I further agree that we have good and bad people in the North.

"The Negro suffers in the North from prejudice in employment, housing conditions and in many other ways, but in no sense is the Negro's condition in the North compared to the Negro's condition in the South."

The Rev. Mr. Roach noted that hate groups are now terrorizing Negroes in the South merely because they seek to vote.

"No people are better off," he wrote, "when the people themselves who make the law defy the ruling of the highest court of the land. No people are better off where they do not have protection of the law because of the color of their skins, whether it is behind the Iron Curtain in Russia or behind the Iron Curtain in Mississippi."

The Rev. Mr. Montgomery made his statement after returning to Connecticut from a visit in Pineville, a small community in South Carolina.

Plessy Vs. Ferguson In Bombay

Advertiser P. 4-A Montgomery, Ala.

One of the more specious arguments against segregation is the globaloney one: the colored peoples of the world hold it against us and we should therefore mingle to keep them happy.

In Louisville the other day a London-educated lawyer, Rahimtoola Abdullar, a native of Bombay, was critical of American segregation but defended the segregation of Moslems in the ghettos of Bombay. That's different, he said, because Hindus and Moslems are, well, different:

"Our dress is different; our foods are different and our most basic habits differ . . . It would be almost impossible to intermingle completely — we can't even eat in the same restaurants."

But, he hastened to add, it wasn't segregation, this separation of 40,000,000 Moslems from 316,691,000 Hindus:

"Moslems and Hindus are equals, both in our heritage and under the law. It is not like what I have heard of segregation in the United States—there is no suggestion of social inequality."

In other words, separate but equal.

The South Besieged

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 8-27-57 P. 4-A

Virginia Editor Suggests That The South Has Failed In Communicating With Other Regions; We Spend Too Much Time Convincing Each Other

EDITORIAL IN THE RICHMOND NEWS LEADER

IT IS not in bitterness, but rather in a sense of bewilderment, that many a Southerner these days looks toward the Congress of the United States. He asks himself, as he reads of precipitate action on the "civil rights" bill, What has the South done to deserve this palpable insult? What could account for the hatred of the South implicit in the drafting and in the handling of this vicious measure?

One explanation is simply "politics," but that is too simple. Granted that some members of Congress are deliberately cultivating a vital bloc of Negro voters, other members who supported this tyrannical measure have an insignificant Negro vote in their districts.

We must seek elsewhere for some additional explanation, and it seems to us —we may be completely wrong in this— that part of the answer lies in two conditions: One of them subjective, historical, and probably not demonstrable, and the other more immediate and tangible.

The first may be a sense of envy of the South. The thought ought not to be brushed aside without sober consideration. Other major divisions of the United States have undoubted characteristics of great worth — the thrift of New England, the productivity of the Midwest, the industry of the Southwest, the expansiveness of the Pacific Coast. Yet the South, because it is the South, envies none of these. We do not covet our neighbor's life.

Instead, the South continues to exhibit certain traits of gentleness, civility, good manners, and resistance to "progress" that have identified this region since the very beginning of the republic. A different set of values obtains in the South; there is a genuine indifference to materialism, a deep-rooted abhorrence of the hucksters' hollow gods. The pace is slower here; we take more time.

AND possibly, quite possibly, the very serenity of the South invites irritation in our impatient brethren. The zeal to reform, the restless ambition to cast all things in the same mold—these frenetic forces rush upon the South and break upon the tranquillity we know, or used to know. And because we will not plunge into Change, or adapt swiftly to every passing conception of a New Order, a lust for power that is inherent in all men suggests that the South must be compelled to conform. Is the South poor but contented? Then it must be made rich and anxious. Does the South possess something of the spirit that others lack? Then this must be destroyed, so that all may be equally impoverished.

Strenuously as this sense of envy may be denied, by those who denounce the South most frequently, we have a feeling that it exists; it has always existed, and the South has always suffered by reason of it. But more is involved than this: A more immediate explanation for the South's condition of siege may be found in the South's failure to communicate its own accomplishments.

We talk too much to ourselves down here. We persuade each other. Somehow the South has failed to reach effectively beyond the Potomac; somehow we have failed to sell our story abroad in the land. Those of us who have lived all our lives in the South, to be specific, know of the almost incredible gains of the South Negro in the brief 90 years since Reconstruction.

WE KNOW that the Negro has advanced farther and faster in the American South than he has advanced anywhere in the world, in terms of political equality, of material wealth, of creature comforts. We know that here, where racial separation has been most carefully observed, the Negro people have climbed highest and been most affectionately regarded by the society around them. We know, too, what sacrifice is represented by the sort of school shown above, which must be paid for largely by white taxpayers. All these things the South knows.

But others do not know these things. And because they do not know—because they accept the distorted picture of a "bigoted" South that is peddled by propagandists of the NAACP—it is perhaps understandable that at every turn the South is rebuked and her entreaties scorned. Our inadequacies and shortcomings are shouted from the housetops; our steady gains are muffled and interred.

This is the critical problem in "public relations," if you will, that sorely besets the South. We are not much given to horn-blowing or self-acclaim; we stand helpless when a Mayflower II spills the winds from the Susan Constant's sails; we suffer indignities because it is not fitting to acknowledge them. The South's modest tradition is to conceal its light beneath a bushel, and Southerners ought not to wonder that the light goes unseen.

We offer diagnosis, not prescription; and we do not intend to imply that many influential Southerners, among them Virginia's spokesmen in Congress, have not desperately attempted to gain sympathy for the South's position. Our thought is merely to suggest that in some fashion these efforts must be redoubled—that somehow the barrier in communications must be overcome. Otherwise the siege of the South must continue until we are overwhelmed; and when that time comes—when there is nothing in the South left to envy and our antagonists stand triumphant — it will be too late to sell a South, for the South will have ceased to exist.

—Editorial

The United States Supreme Court faced with the issue of racial segregation, ruled that it was unconstitutional.

The United States Senate, confronted with its duty to enforce the Supreme Court's decree, declined to act.

Last week, a group of Catholic laymen asked His Holiness Pope Pius XII to decide whether segregation is a mortal sin and whether Catholics have to open their churches and schools to all members of the faith without regard to race.

We have no doubts about how the Pope will rule.

His utterances on racial equality have been too frequent and too strong for any Catholic except possibly a few dumb men in New Orleans not to understand the church's position on this important question.

However. His Eminence can answer the question in one of two ways.

He can declare that he has already spoken on the issue and hold that it is no longer debatable.

Or he can give the New Orleans jim crow appelants a straight 'yes' and 'no' answer.

We hope he chooses the second way.

Such a response would be most heartening to Archbishop Joseph Rummell and to the great Catholic hierachy in the United States which has opened the doors of the church and the schools, firmly believeing that is forward step the Pope would have had them take.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Dealing With South's Nearoes

Both races seem to be frustrated over what the future might bring. Both races have lived in the South since the Civil War, suffering together in poverty. In recent years the South has been rapidly regaining the wealth she lost during the war; colored people have gained along with the white people; like brothers they came up together.

The colored man recognizes the white man as friend and boss. The white man recognizes the colored man as his friend and servant. The friendship is shown on both sides by the mutual relationship existing between families. Almost every white family owes a large portion of their prosperity and happiness to Negro service. They are so closely connected with their servants that they are deeply concerned with the well-being of the servant's family. Negroes are so deeply interested in the white family for whom they have worked and known for years, that the troubles and worries of that white family are the troubles and worries of their servants.

Should we allow this cordial bond of friendship to be broken? History does not record a time nor a place where such unbreakable bond has been developed between former masters and slaves. In this crisis why shouldn't the problems of one be the problems of the other?

The problems of the Negro should be most carefully considered by the ruling classes. They are many but they can be classified as follows: Protection without brutality, education, participation in government, employment and living conditions.

These problems should be handled in view of the fact that no serving class of people can be schooled, kept about the home, office and the plant without discovering the fact that they are entitled to certain rights and privileges.

Negroes are in and about the homes, offices and plants of white people, yet they lack essential information to keep them from taking hold of foreign ideas that might lead to a disturbance. White people, with their far seeing ability should have told the colored people long ago what was coming and how to withstand evil influences; at the same time, gradually, the Negro should have been given some of the things he wanted so as to keep him from looking north for help.

At present it seems that harmony between the races is impossible. Both races should cease to do things for vengeance, both should close their eyes on the past and use the present as a guide to a happy future. White people who claim that the purpose of the aggressive Negro is to mix the races should get that out of their minds. More than 300 years of respect and adoration to white women warrant no such charge.

Police brutality can be stopped by a command from the proper city or state officials without extra expense. The Boards of Education should do their best to improve Negro educational facilities then explain to the masses that the best possible is being done but improvement will continue until their system is as good as any other system. Negroes have always trusted white people, and they will trust them still. All the mistakes that Negroes have made in trying to better their conditions have been for the lack of knowledge. White people should teach them or send one of their group to do the job. Negroes will do nothing against the wishes of their white friends.

Cities and counties with large Negro populations should start by allowing the preachers and school teachers to register and vote. Negroes should be taught the proper use of the ballot by people who have had hundreds of years of political experience. A little companionship with Negro voters, and there need be no fear of them putting in office people of their race.

Crime and illegitimacy seem to be an inheritance from slavery. Negroes are not able to loose themselves from their grasp. If a small portion of the money and energy spent against him had been spent in his favor, the country would be better, besides floods of compliments would have been coming to the South from the four corners of the earth. Place the faults and shortcomings of both races in balances, along with their virtues and good intentions, and it will be found that there has grown up a unique degree of culture in the South that cannot be equaled nor surpassed.

The two races have brought the South to its highest peak of prosperity. Let us hold that we have gained by working together, ever mindful of the fact that in the end God will bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil; in so doing we should find rest to our wearied souls. Reds Hit U. S. Bigs!

Russians Shame America!

LONDON, England — Caustic comment from widely separated parts of the globe has been aimed at the U. S. in the wake of the Little Rock school integration incidents.

One of the more bitter commentaries was contained in Soviet Fleet, official publication of the Russian Navy, which asserted:

"The ruling circles in contemporary America really have something to worry about. Corrupt, man-hating propaganda for warmongers, as spread in the United States, depraves youth, cripples them physically and morally turns many into gangsters.

"Notorious segregation is flowering in the United States on a broad scale and millions of Negroes are deprived of elementary human rights. The bandit sallies of racists have created a situation in which parents fear to send their children to school. Such are the fruits of 'enlightened,' democratic America."

Here in London, Lady Cynthia Colville, who was named an "honorary citizen of Little Rock," commented, "Oh, dear, yes. I am an honorary citizen of Little Rock, but I rather wish I was not. I did seriously consider writing to say what I think of the things they are doing to the children. But I felt it would rather be like biting the hand that fed me. I am deeply shocked at what has been going on. I feel very strongly about the color question. If I knew a little more about Little Rock I might do something. But I shall keep quiet."

Rogers On "Race Mixing"

A foreword for and excellent book, title of which is 'NATURE KNOWS NO COLOR LINE," should be "Must Reading," for a whole gang of politicians and writers of this generation.

The author is J. A. Rogers who has traveled all over the world, has been a painstaking observer and compiler of facts about which the overwhelming majority of his contemporaries are blissfully ignorant. They will likely remain in their state of ignorance "from now on" because of their set determination to ignore and even dispute historical data compiled by a Negro historian, which Mr. Rogers is proud to confess himself to be.

In his book, Mr. Rogers has made diligent research, he says, "Into the Negro Ancestry in the white race."

Verily, Mr. Rogers' book must be highly amusing to many, while at the same time it must cause others to wish that the book be put on top of a heap the Nazis will schedule for "treatment" at their next "book-burning" holiday.

In the opening chapter of "NATURE KNOWS NO COLOR LINE." Mr. Rogers asks and promptly answers maybe for the benefit of Faubus & Co., the following question:

WHERE DID THE COLOR PROBLEM ORIGINATE? AND WHY?

The very first line in the chapter which takes up the above burning question, is as follows:

"The two varities of humanity which have intermixed the most and longest are the so-called Negro and Caucasian."

You can bet the "anti-Race mixers have refused to read any further in Mr. Rogers' book than to the period in the above sentence, and forthwith they probably have let loose in unison, in the direction of Rogers with their favorite answers to a "damaging" charge: "YOU'RE A LIAR." But educated persons can not avoid saying: "Yes, Mr. Rogers, what you are saying is the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

At the very outset Mr. Rogers quotes from Shakepeare, a Caucasian, who breaks down and lets the cat out of the bag," saying the following:

"Strange is it that our bloods of color, weight and heat, poured all together would quite confound distinction. .. '"

But Shakespeare, the Caucasian, comforts himself in the concluding line of the quotation, after saying in effect the "blood poured together would quite confound distinction" by saying, "yet stand off in differences so mighty."

Of course we know "blood is blood" and you can't tell the difference. Mr. Rogers explains what these "mighty differences are, says he:

"They are economic, social, educational and religious, also.

In other words, "Man has contrived mighty differences" in so-called races, where God Almighty actually didn't make or organize any races at all, despite all you hear is a loud voice from many pulpits.

'Negro Elite Echo Whites,' Frazier Says

Courier 1,2
Pittsburgh Pa.
Sat. 11-2-57

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON (ANP)—E. Franklin Frazier, professor of sociology at Howard University, struck at Negro elite for attempting to deny their heritage in this new process of integration. "Integration merely means that we are being accepted," he said. "It does not mean that we will become invisible."

Addressing the first session of the Workshop of Leadership Responsibility sponsored by the American Council on Human Rights, Dr. Frazier urged these leaders to train young people to face up to their heritage. Rejection of heritage means a loss of identification; and people who have no past have no future, he said.

OUR LEADERS, he continued, must get over their confusions. They must define values and establish goals. They must learn to think for themselves. He accused Negro leaders of echoing everything the white man says. This is an indication of an inferiority complex. If the Negro is going to play a leading role he must think for himself and not merely echo.

Teachers must be efficient and must insist upon efficiency in their students, continued Dr. Frazier. Charging Negro schools with being sloppy and inefficient, the noted sociologist declared that too long "we have sat behind the walls of segregation and had a good time." We must change our double standards and give our students a new conception of life. We have got to get out of our proventialism, he emphasized, and get a broader outlook.

The American Council on Human Rights is an organization composed of Greek letter sororities. The majority of its membership is engaged in the teaching profession. The two-day workshop included many prominent speakers. Noted among them was Mrs. L. C. Bates, Little Rock NAACP president.

IN HER address before the dinner meeting, held at the Burlington Hotel, Mrs. Bates, who has so effectively counseled the Negro children attending the Little Rock Central High School, discussed the place of prepared leadership in the fight for the end of racial discrimination.

The workshop was successfully carried out under the direction of Mrs. Thomasina J. Norford, conference chairman, and John Blue, director of the American Council on Human Rights.

Moderate Calls For Patience

Post Herald
Birmingham Ala.
11-21-57

Please let a moderate speak. The extremists have been very vocal.

It is hard for us to think objectively about the segregation issue. It is too close to us. We are like the man who could not see the woods for the trees. A lot of us do not think about it at all. We just fell more or less violently.

There has been a great deal of criticism of the Supreme Court for its decision that segregation laws are unconstitutional. Separate but equal schools have been constitutional for 75 years. Our compliance with that decision has been "too little and too late." But whether segregation laws are unconstitutional or not, they are certainly undemocratic.

In a democracy, it is contradictory to deny one group of citizens access to public institutions and facilities because of race, color or creed. Negroes pay taxes (if they have anything to pay on). They serve in the Armed Forces and shed their blood in time of war, and otherwise fulfill the obligations of citizens. Voter qualification should be based on education, not on color or the ability to interpret the Constitution. The Supreme Court cannot always do that to our satisfaction! Taxation without representation is still tyranny. We need not fear that Negroes will vote as a bloc. That was one of the arguments against giving women the vote a generation ago. But there is no woman's bloc. There is no labor bloc. There would be no Negro bloc.

Whether we like it or not, unless we change our Constitution, court decisions and court orders are the law of the land. The Supreme Court is the umpire. We could not have a ball game if the players did not obey the umpire even when they think he is wrong. If the end of segregation had not come by way of a Supreme Court decision, it would have come, sooner or later, by a constitutional amendmnt which would have been more acceptable, perhaps.

The Supreme Court did not say we must mix our schools. It just wiped the segregation laws off the books. It did do that. And Federal law must supersede state law, or we would have no United States. When the Prohibition Amendment was repealed (and I thought that was a good law), it did not say I or anybody else had to go out and buy a drink. It just said I could without breaking the law.

Furthermore if a majority of the citizens of a county or state did not want liquor sold within its jurisdiction, it did not have to have it. I see no reason why we cannot have local option on school segregation. If a majority of the parents of the children involved (not qualified voters, but parents) voted without intimidation that they preferred separate schools, it should be lawful. We can have voluntary segregation, but it must not be by law. Where numbers are so nearly equal there seems no advantage to anybody to mix the schools and I believe a big majority of Negro as well as white parents feel their children are happier in separate schools. It is worth trying.

There has been much bitter denunciation of President Eisenhower for sending Federal troops into Little Rock. I have not heard anyone say what Ike should have done, only what he should not have done. The local law enforcement officers had admittedly failed to handle the situation. Trouble was breaking out in various parts of the city. Certainly the governor could not be counted on to enforce the law. He had been using state troops to prevent compliance with a court order, which is the law. The mayor and governor were at odds. The situation was desperate and called for drastic measures. The troops were sent in to quell riots and demand respect for law, not to enforce integration. Unless mob rule was to prevail and anarchy reign, something had to be done. President Wilson sent Federal troops into Little Rock in 1914 to quell riots in connection with coal strikes.

The world is changing and changing fast. The colored races all over the world are demanding and getting their independence from white nations who have helped them (and in some cases exploited them). We cannot stop change any more than we can stop time in its flight. We cannot go back to the horse-and-buggy age any more than we can unscramble eggs. The atomic age is here whether we like it or not.

High school would always be the worst possible place to begin. Graduate school the best. We welcome Japanese, Chineses, Iranians, South Americans, all racs and nations except our own Southern Negro whom we love. Not every consistent.

Let us pray for patience, undersetanding, and wisdom in this difficult situation.

Egyptian And Soviet Press Playing It Up Big

IT'S BLOW TO PRESTIGE

Memphis Tenn.

By The Associated Press

The Egyptian Government has ordered its powerful Voice of Arabs radio to hit hard at the troubles in the United States over integration.

And the communist press is advising the world to turn its eyes to Little Rock and Nashville instead of worrying so much about Hungary.

These are examples of the way the school segregation story is affecting the United States abroad.

Soviet Spotlights It

The Egyptian directive, reported in Cairo yesterday, is for the Voice of Arabs to go all-out particularly in its broadcasts to Sudan, whose Southern people are dark-skinned and mostly pure African. The same directive is reported to have ordered increased attacks on "imperialists," particularly the United States.

Soviet newspapers are focusing on treatment of Negroes in the United States after a slow start on the current story. The newspaper Soviet Russia said yesterday the world press should turn its complaints to that instead of Hungary. It called foes of integration "white men with black souls."

The Soviet trade union paper Trud captioned pictures of National Guardsmen in Little Rock: "Soldiers Against School Children."

Soviet Russia said the United States Government does no more than express regrets at the troubles.

Hungary's Esti Hirlap, in an article headlined "School War in Little Rock," said the United Nations committee which accused Russia of oppressing Hungary should "make a study trip up the Arkansas River."

The racial situation has been mentioned briefly in United Nations debates on Hungary. Peter G. Voutov of Bulgaria told R. S. S. Gunewardene of Ceylon Wednesday he might have trouble if he went to Little Rock. Gunewardene was a member of the United Nations committee that made the report on Hungary.

Voutov said "There are people who have come to regard lightly the lynching of persons whose skins are dark."

Received Good Treatment

Gunewardene commented he had visited every state in the Union and that at Montgomery, Ala., "they rolled out the red carpet."

In the United Nations debates Reis Malile of Albania declared it hypocritical for Americans to refer to violation of human rights in Hungary in view of "brutal acts that are the consequence of racial discrimination in the United States."

In South Africa, whose government pushes a policy of racial segregation, the press has given restrained treatment to the story, mostly on inside pages. The Johannesburg Star, largest in the country, said "More dynamite blasts and even bloodshed are expected in America's Deep South."

Newspapers of India also have given only moderate attention to the story. Hindustan Standard said despite the outbreaks of violence, racial "prejudices of the past in the United States are slowly yielding to changes more truly in keeping with the spirit and ideals of Jeffersonian democracy."

In Ghana, the newly independent state of West Africa, and in Western Europe the troubles received major attention.

The Daily Graphic, Ghana's largest newspaper, gave prominence to President Eisenhower's signing the Civil Rights Bill and to preparations of the Government to take action against Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus.

Integration has received heavier play in Rome newspapers than any American story in months except for the Confidential magazine libel trial.

Italy Exploits Story

Italy's leftist and communist press exploited the story with news and pictures. Several Italian magazines carried between two and four pages of pictures and articles on integration this week.

Il Quotidiano, organ of the Roman Catholic Action Movement, said the situation "does not bring honor to the greatest democracy in the world."

French newspapers also are publishing the story prominently. France-Soir headlined a picture showing a Negro girl being jeered by a white crowd at Little Rock: "This Picture Shocked Americans Too."

Japan's largest newspaper, Asahi, has said: "It is an abnormal scene of education when children are kept away from school by armed forces under the order of a governor." Pointing to other racial discriminations, it said the United States "cannot talk of a big thing like humanitarianism."

Truman Puts Rights Crisis Over Sputnik

Advertiser P. 6B
Montgomery Ala.
Fri. 11-15-57

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (AP)—Former Democratic President Harry S. Truman last night advised the nation not to worry about Russia's Sputniks. But he said we ought to worry about Little Rock and civil rights.

Truman told the Joint Defense Appeal of the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith:

"Our attitude on this vital struggle for equal opportunity and human liberty is being watched by the world.

"Don't worry about the Sputniks. We can take care of that situation.

"Let's make sure we preserve the greatest inspiration we can give the world, the liberties and the rights we profess through one of the most wonderful documents in the world—the Constitution of the United States."

Truman has said little previously about the Little Rock school integration crisis. When Gov. Orval Faubus used the National Guard to keep nine Negroes out of Central High School, Truman declined comment except to remark that Faubus "is a wonderful fellow and a very good friend of mine."

But last night he said:

"I was shocked to see the governor of Arkansas take it upon himself to obstruct the enforcement of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court decision expressed the stated purpose and intent of the Constitution of the United States which extends equal educational privileges as well as civic and economic rights to every member of our population, regardless of race, creed or color."

In Little Rock, the Negro students have been attending classes under military protection since Sept. 24 when President Eisenhower sent in federal paratroopers and federalized the Arkansas National Guard.

What would Lincoln have done?

(An Editorial)

general

Speaking on television Sunday, poet-historian and expert on Lincoln, 70-year-old Carl Sandburg, was critical of the action taken by President Eisenhower in the Little Rock situation.

Afro-American

Mr. Sandburg declared that Lincoln was better informed about America and would have found "some other answer" to the defiance of Governor Faubus than Mr. Eisenhower, and would "have accommodated himself better."

P. 2 Baltimore Md.

We concede that Mr. Eisenhower, due to his long occupation with military affairs, has been sheltered from many of the problems of civilian life, he has been dependent upon his advisors for guidance in many instances.

Sat. 11-9-57

This probably accounts for his delay in taking a firm stand on the Little Rock situation before it developed to the point that it did.

Part of his procrastination was also due to the fact that he underestimated the nature of the opposition and expected Faubus to live up to his word given at Newport.

He failed to take into account the depths to which some men would sink in catering to the emotions for political advantage.

We would like, however, to know just what course Mr. Sandburg thinks Lincoln would have followed. The record shows that although slavery was the bone of contention in 1861 and touched off the Civil War, Mr. Lincoln did not sign the Emancipation Proclamation until the conflict had dragged on for several years. Then he took this action with some reluctance.

We think the patterns followed by both Presidents were almost identical. Lincoln abolished slavery to preserve the Union. Eisenhower intervened in Little Rock, not to enforce integration, but to preserve the law of the land.

Mr. Sandburg may be an expert on Lincoln, but until he can give us a solution to the Little Rock situation more effective than the course which Eisenhower followed, we cannot accept his theory. Mr. Lincoln or any other President interested in living up to the responsibilities of his office would have taken similar action.

Segregation Greatest Evil, Editor Declares

Atlanta World Atlanta Ga.
P. 7 Sun. 11-24-57

There is no greater evil than racial segregation, and nothing worse than one group of people saying, "We are better by law than you," Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite, declared Friday night.

More over, many southern leaders are "committing a fraud on their people" by spreading "chunks of bunk about segregation," the journalist told a meeting of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations.

Mr. Golden, who addressed approximately 200 persons in the meeting at the Life of Georgia Building, named specifically, Senator Irvin, of North Carolina, Senator Eastland, of Mississippi and "the governor of Georgia".

"The real issue," Mr. Golden declared, "is not whether a Negro child can go to school unmolested It is a question of a clear declaration that all men are created equal."

The speaker refuted claims that integration knows he can achieve whatever his talent may be then there will be less mingling of the races."

He predicted the Negro race will be darker after 100 years of integration than it is now.

However, the speaker said, it is hard for "white people to think black."

There is still "considerable dreaming in the South of old Plantation days and mint juleps."

He said that fear of "losing case" was the strongest emotion opposing integration. He named the sex factor as second.

Golden declared: "The surprise resistance to integration has been from the upper middle class. The Negro expected this class to become his allies, but they turned on him because of a fear that integration would put the Negro on much the same scale as themselves.

"The South is losing much of its white labor, because the white man will sit at home rather than dig ditches and become identified with the Negro."

But Golden predicted the fear of mingling of the races will take the oppisite road from what prosegregationists claim. He predicted also that the South may one day find it has for generations overlooked "the greatest untapped consumer market among Negroes."

Negro Calls Southerners Top Friends

MEMPHIS, Oct. 15 (AP)—Stepin Fetchit, retired Negro comedian, said today the Negro will find more friends and more help in the South than "among the supposed-to-be liberals posing as his greatest friends" in the North.

The former movie actor told a Press-Scimitar reporter in an interview that he had always been treated well by Southern whites.

"My only trouble," he said, "has come from fellows supposed to be liberal out of New York City. . . . The Negro will find that some of his greatest friends have been and will be Southerners."

THE GALLUP POLL

Whites Stiffen Resistance; Negroes Close Dixie Ranks

By JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll Staff Representative

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 30—Events of the last two years have served to widen the gap that exists between the white and Negro races in the South.

The white South, in the last 22 months, has stiffened its resistance to the idea of integration with the Negro. Southern Negroes, on the other hand, have closed ranks tighter than ever.

In an "exact repeat" of a study made 22 months ago, the Institute recently assigned its Southern staff of white and Negro interviewers to return to virtually the same areas and ask the same questions that they covered in the earlier study.

Just how far apart the races are today is evidenced by the following comments from interviews made in the same city with whites and Negroes — in areas not too far distant.

In Mobile, Ala., a white woman, the wife of a spray painter, said: "I just think that God intened no mixing of the races. The Negroes around here are pushing themselves in with the whites— I just don't know how we're going to work this thing out."

VIEWS OF SOUTHERN WHITES

When the views of Southern whites—in all of the 13 states of the South — border areas mid-South and Deep South— are added, attitudes about the Supreme Court decision are virtually unchanged. The results today on the issue, compared with those recorded in February, 1956:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

VIEWS OF SOUTHERN WHITES

	Today	Feb., '56
Approve	15%	16%
Disapprove	83	80
No opinion	2	4

The reasons why Southerners hold to their views about the Court's ruling are also virtually the same—it's against Southern tradition, the races just weren't meant to mix, separate but equal schools work better.

If anything, this reporter noted that in the South today there is an even greater determination in the typical white person's voice when he tells you that "white and colored just shouldn't mix" or that "if God meant for the races to mix, He would have mixed them."

A 71-year-old retired farmer from the town of Bronwell in Terrell County, Ga. (Negroes make up 67% of the country's population) was typical in his feeling and determination.

"Why don't I want integration?" he asked. "'Cause it's just not right and it's just not constitutional. It never has been the way of life here and it never will be. We won't have it here in the South. I wouldn't say what we would do if it were forced on us — we don't know ourselves."

MID-SOUTH STIFFENS RESISTANCE

One interesting thing that we noted was that while there has been little change in attiude toward the Court's decision in the "Border states" of the South—Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma—there has been a definite stiffening in reistance in the states of the Middle South—Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina and Virginia.

Two years ago, the Mid-South states were approximately midway between the Border and Deep South states (South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi) in their vote on the school ruling.

Today, the people of the Middle South vote virtually the same way as do those in the sister states of the Deep South — where over nine out of 10 express disapproval of the ruling.

TALK ABOUT ISSUE LESS

In the report on our 1956 study, I wrote that "everybody is talking about segregation". Today, it is certainly uppermost in poeple's minds—but here is greater reluctance to discuss it openly.

As a well-to-do Atlanta matron, whose home is on fashionable Peachtree Street told us: "It's just not something that 'the girls' talk about over bridge". The prevalent attitude today seems to be one of "if we don't talk about it, maybe it will go away".

There is also evidence from the study that there has been a definite breakdown in communication between whites and Negroes on the subject of integration.

This is not to say that whites and Negroes do not talk about the issue together. But when whites tell you they discussed it with Negroes, the conversation they mention is generally like that reported by a 59-year-old Dawson, Ga., farm housewife:

"I've talked with them about it —we talked about whether they'd be better off or worse in mixing. They don't want a change. They say please let them alone."

On the other hand, the discussions that Negroes reported having with whites usually run along the lines of that cited by a Negro school teacher from Lenoir, N. C.:

"They (the whites) said they think integration can work. We talked about the way we thought it should happen."

In brief, the evidence is that both the white and Negro South is hearing only what it would like to hear about the topic from the other race.

NEGROES HAVE MORE PRIVILEGES

Despite the breakdown in communications, both Negro and whites are agreed on one basic issue, namely, that the Southern Negro has made great progress in the last year and has more privileges now than in the past.

But even on this question there is little more than a "surface agreement"—a report on something that is a matter of record.

To the Southern white, more privileges for the Negro do not necessarily mean a betterment of relations between the two races. It is more often stated with an attitude of "look what we've given them and now they're causing all this trouble."

The typical Southern white, as a matter of fact, tends to feel that relations between the two races have gotten worse during the last year—or, at least, have not improved.

"Things sure are worse," said a 28-year-old wife of a farmer in Fitzgerald, Ga., "the Nigras are more forward — they don't give over to whites to be waited on first in the stores. And they have a lot more, too—why they have better schools now and it's much easier for them to get a job."

To the Southern Negro, more privileges usually mean more integration—in schools, buses, parks and other areas. To him, the situation between the two races is at least as good if not better than it was a year ago.

"Of course, things are better," said a young Negro crane operator in Louisville. "Why? 'Cause we got integrated schools, parks, swimming pools and even restaurants in some places. Why wouldn't they be better?"

Throughout the 13 states of the South, our white and Negro interviewers constantly met with this difference in viewpoint from Negroes and whites. It is a difference that stems from a lack of communication and an uncertainty over just what the future will bring. In back of it are the views of two races sincerely convinced that their goals are good ones. Unfortunately, for both races in the South, these goals today would seem to be light years apart.

Gallup Poll—

Dixie Attitude Toward GOP Soured By Little Rock Move

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn. Wed. 12-4-57 P.1

(Last of Four Articles)

By JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll Staff Representative

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 3.—The arrival of Federal troops in Little Rock may well have sounded the death knell to the Republican Party's chances in the South.

Following the 1956 presidential election when President Eisenhower polled a majority of the vote in the 13 states of Dixie, the GOP's outlook in that area was probably as bright as at any time since the Civil War.

But when this reporter recently traveled throughout the South as one part of a special American Institute of Public Opinion study on Southern politics, he found nothing but dissatisfaction with Mr. Eisenhower and the GOP for their handling of the segregation dispute.

'Went Back On Word'

The general attitude that the study turned up most often can be summarized briefly:

"Eisenhower said he wouldn't use force. He went back on his word."

Some 90 experienced opinion reporters from the institute field staff asked a representative cross-section of Southern whites this question:

"Has your attitude toward the Republican Party changed in any way during the last year?"

The vote was as follows:

SOUTHERN WHITES

Yes, has changed	30%
No, has not	62
Don't know	8

Virtually without exception, the change in attitude has been one for the worse for the GOP—and one brought about by their handling of Little Rock and other racial disturbances.

"The Republicans are the cause of all this trouble," said a 47-year-old farmer from Cordova, S.C., "I think less and less of them. They have no sympathy for the South and no understanding of conditions here."

In many instances, of course, because the South is so heavily Democratic, the change is not so much a switch in allegiance as it is a further confirmation to a Southern Democrat that the Republicans "are up to no good."

Likes GOP 'Worse'

Typical is the wry comment of a 27-year-old farm housewife from just outside of Clarksdale, Miss. She supported Adlai Stevenson in 1956 and has yet in her life, to vote Republican.

"Yes, I've changed," she said, "I don't like the Republicans—only worse than I did before."

Actually, in the case of this young housewife and many other dyed-in-the-wool Democrats in the South, the GOP has not really lost a vote. What they have lost is the chance of these voters even considering a vote for the Republicans.

More important politically, however, is the evidence in the study that nearly half of the Democrats who voted for Mr Eisenhower in 1956 say they have changed their attitude toward the Republican Party in the last year.

Memphis Tenn.

The comment of a 66-year-old nursery man from Chase City, Va., is typical:

"The fact of the matter is I voted for Eisenhower last time. But now, I'm going toward the Democrats again—I'm disappointed in Eisenhower."

Vote For Man, Not Party

Commercial Appeal

The majority vote that Southerners gave Mr. Eisenhower in 1956 was very much a vote for the man and not his party.

Although the GOP's share of the popular vote for Congress in 1956 was something of a "high water mark" for the last 10 years, the President still ran ahead of his party in that area by about 25 percentage points.

Here is the trend of the congressional vote in the South since 1948:

Wed. 12-4-57

CONGRESSIONAL VOTE IN SOUTH

	Rep.	Dem.
1948	21 %	79 %
1950	20.5	79.5
1952	20	80
1954	22	78
1956	27	73

If an election for Congress were being held today, the latest regular institute survey shows the vote in the South as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL VOTE IN SOUTH
November, '57

Democratic	76%
Republican	24

From a Republican point of view, congressional elections have to be won entirely in states outside the South. Of the 120 seats apportioned to the 13 Southern states, only nine are now held by Republicans.

Only Nine Held By GOP

In 1956, less than half of the 120 Southern seats were contested by the Republicans. In 65 districts in the South there were no GOP candidates entered.

Starting with this backlog of 111 seats, the Democrats needed to pick up only 107 more seats in the North to have the 218 necessary for a majority and control of Congress.

The Republicans, on the other hand, were faced with the prospect of winning 209 seats outside the South to win control of the House. Despite Mr. Eisenhower's majority, this hurdle proved insurmountable in 1956.

As of the moment, the prospect looks dim for a GOP "breakthrough" in the South. Political strategists would agree that a strong local organization is a prerequisite to victory in congressional districts.

Southerners today offer little in the way of suggestions to help strengthen the GOP in the South.

'Give Up Integration'

Two years ago, when we asked Southerners what could be done to make the Republicans strong, we were given many suggestions—ranging from getting better candidates in local elections to door-to-door canvassing to get votes.

Today, the usual suggestion given by Southern Democrats is one like that offered by a 27-year-old wife of a river pilot from Metairie, La.:

"Just give up the idea of integration—I think that's turned all of us against them."

In 1956 this housewife voted for Mr. Eisenhower. Yet today she says:

"I leaned toward the Republicans when 'Ike' ran last, but it was more for the man than the party. I am completely Democratic now."

This woman's attitude is typical of what has happened politically in the South in the last year or so. Like her, an overwhelming majority of the Southern electorate is "completely Democratic now."

Many Southern Democrats cast their first Republican vote when they supported Mr. Eisenhower in 1956. In the opinion of this reporter, it was probably the "first and last" for many.

Others Are Blamed

In light of Mr. Eisenhower's illness, it should be pointed out that one result of the "vote for the man" mentioned above, is a tendency on the part of some Southerners to blame someone other than the President for the trouble at Little Rock.

You often hear the remark that other members of the Administration were "in back of the whole thing."

As a 52-year-old wife of a Dallas insurance executive commented: "At times, you think Eisenhower has some poor advisers."

A 43-year-old lumber mill worker from Fitzgerald, Ga. was more outspoken:

"If you ask me, Nixon and the NAACP are too buddy, buddy about this."

In short, the available evidence now is that Mr. Nixon's popularity in the South is something less than President Eisenhower's.

The mood in the South today—III

Birmingham, Ala. News

Vote new weapon for Negroes

Wed. 12-4-57

but how many will use it?

BY JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup poll staff representative

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 4—In the opinion of many political observers, a powerful factor in the South's segregation dispute will be the future voting behavior of whites and Negroes in Dixie.

Any analysis of Southern politics must be divided into two basic investigations.

How many Negroes will vote—and with which party will they affiliate? What will white voters do in the South?

Today's article deals with the viewpoints and politics of Southern Negroes.

A later article will analyze the effect of the segregation dispute on the politics of the white South.

THE SOUTHERN NEGRO is, first of all, a person who until fairly recently was disenfranchised in a good many places in the South—whether this disenfranchisement was self-willed or brought about by white pressure.

In some areas of the South today where the Negro is able to vote, the tradition of not voting has been deeply ingrained.

For these Negroes, their position is perhaps best summed up in the words of a young Negro woman we interviewed in a small Tennessee town near the northern border of Mississippi. When she was asked her political affiliation, she shrugged and replied:

"Huh! Neither Republican or Democrat—here, we're just colored folks."

Her attitude is typical of many Southern Negroes today. It is perhaps one reason why the total number of Negroes on voting rolls in the Southern states in 1956—as estimated by the Southern Regional Council—did not exceed 25 per cent of the Negroes of voting age in that region.

Still, the number of Negroes who are registered to vote has increased considerably over the last decade. The 25 per cent estimated registered today is nearly twice that of Negroes who were registered in 1947.

AND OUR STUDY revealed that there has been an increase in interest in voting since the last presidential election in 1956.

The weight of sentiment with Negroes we interviewed was that more Negroes than ever would register to vote in the next election. Virtually no one said they thought fewer would vote.

The general reason why more Negroes will be voting can be summed up in the bitterness of a 57-year-old farmer from near the town of Cotton Plant, Ark., who said he thought more of his race would be voting in his area "to put our present governor out of office."

In short, the Southern Negro ties increased voting directly to the coat-tails of the segregation problem. As reported on Monday, his desire to fight for integration has increased sharply since the first Institute study on the subject 22 months ago.

The Southern Negro can now see some use to which his vote can be put. To him, it is at least one weapson with which he can fight for what he wants—an integrated way of life with the whites.

"I don't know just how many will vote," said a young Negro waitress from a Georgia farming community. "But there'll be a lot of them. A lot were scared to vote, but they understand it more now that they're had it explained to them. They thought it was wrong before. Now they know."

As regards plans for registration, this is how those Negroes who say they've never voted answered our staff:

SOUTHERN NEGROES WHO NEVER VOTED
Yes, I plan to register	57%
No, do not plan	14
Don't know	29

AS POLITICAL observers know, intention to register is a far cry from an actual appearance at the polls on election day.

But the important political fact is that the bulk of Southern Negroes today who have never voted are at least interested enough in voting to give some thought to the first step of registering.

The fact that more Southern Negroes are thinking about voting—and no doubt in certain states will vote—is one thing. How they will vote and with which party they will align themselves is another.

INDICATIONS ARE that neither party has yet done a real selling job with Southern Negroes. Traditionally Republican since the days of the Civil War, in recent years the relatively few Negroes who have voted have gone heavily Democratic.

But largely because of Eisenhower's intervention at Little Rock—a move that came as a pleasant surprise to many Southern Negroes—the GOP has a slight advantage today. It is by no means an overwhelming support.

The fact of the matter is that a mapority of Negroes in the South today (52 per cent) either say they don't know together and vote for one candidate.

"I don't think they will get far just voting for the same man," said a 37-year-old Atlanta shipping clerk. "It just makes the white people mad when they do."

The Southern Negro is just beginning to realize that there is power in his ballot—the shipping clerk is aware of it when he fears the consequences of bloc voting.

If the Negroes should some day come to the conclusion that they don't care if the whites get mad, more and more Southern campaigns may come to be directed at winning the Negro vote.

But for the time being, many Negroes are happy just in the fact that they can vote—something they consider a "giant step" forward.

Once they are certain that this privilege will not be taken away from them—and many are not—they will no doubt do some serious thinking about how to use it to their advantage.—©

No Major Legislation Completed; Civil Rights, School Aid Still Wait

By Rowland Evans Jr.

WASHINGTON.

The first session of the Eighty-fifth Congress is not likely to set a record of legislative achievement.

Only two domestic proposals that fit into the rather arbitrary category of "major" legislation now appear to have much chance of adoption this year. One of these, the school-construction bill, may get caught up in the economy mesh.

The other is the civil rights recommendations first sent to the Capitol last year by President Eisenhower. As matters now stand, the civil rights bill has a better than 50-50 chance.

There is, it is true, a rising murmur in the cloakrooms about an income tax cut to take effect next Jan. 1. But it is far too early to weigh the effects.

How It Goes

The first session of any new Congress is usually a pretty torpid affair, taken up with organizing of committees, testing of political strength between the two parties, and the long, arduous committee study of the President's new program.

Much of the hard, dull work done in stuffy committee rooms the first year of a new Congress requires the polish of final action in the second year.

What has given the first half of this Congressional session an unusual and signficant flavor is not so much legislation, in the formal sense, but the emergence of a Democratic party position on foreign policy that has compelled the Republican administration to negotiate with the opposing party in Congress.

The instrument used by the Democrats was, of course, the President's Middle East Resolution. The pressure was applied almost wholly from the Senate, although House Speaker Sam Rayburn, of Texas, let it be known that he too, had serious reservations about the new policy.

Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, D., Tex., made skillful use of the resistance by separate groups of Senators to different portions of the resolution to compel compromise by the Administration, and to give the program a Democratic stamp.

Johnson Maneuvers

Having accomplished that, he sat by quietly while the Senate delayed action until it became clear that the threat of sanctions in the United Nations against Israel had been eliminated.

Under his direction the Senate has assumed a greater voice, and hence a greater responsibility, in foreign affairs than at any time since the bi-partisanship leadership of Arthur H. Vandenberg in the late '40s.

The Senate's new influence, and Sen. Johnson's new role as foreign policy leader in the Senate, have been the outstanding political developments of the Congressional session to date.

In the last few days, however, it has become clear that the battle of the budget threatens to overshadow all else in the remainder of this first session of the new Congress. Because of the irresistible attraction of the budget-cutters to the President's $4.4 billion foreign aid program, Sen. Johnson's skill as the foreign policy leader in Congress will be put to an unpleasant test. His job in the Senate will be to guard against irresponsible foreign-aid slashing.

The vote on the economic aid portion of the Middle-East resolution disclosed far more Democratic than Republican defection. Sen. Johnson must be on guard to protect his party from a charge of going isolationist.

To do this in the face of the grass-fire of resistance to foreign aid now sweeping the South, coupled with the attack on the budget, will require statesmanship of a high order.

Both the House and Senate have conducted a thorough study of the whole concept of foreign aid. The special Senate Foreign Aid Committee will file a report and recommendations soon. Even if, as expected, it recommends continuing a substantial aid program, its impact is not likely to have much effect.

Eisenhower's Role

In the last analysis, however, President Eisenhower will have the greatest influence over final Congressional disposition of the aid request. Recent indications are that he intends to fight for the entire program. Nevertheless a reduction on the order of a billion dollars or more is still in prospect.

The school-aid bill is the most likely casualty of the economy wave which already has washed away small portions of the first general appropriations bills to reach the House floor. The best estimate today is that the $1.3 billion school bill will fail this year.

As for civil rights, the President's program will be taken up in the House late next month, after the mid-term Easter recess, with every prospect of overwhelming passage. In the Senate, the stiff wind of resistance is already blowing up out of the South. But a preliminary nose-count shows only eighteen Southerners ready to filibuster, and perhaps twenty-five ready to vote against the President's proposal—provided the sticky problem of contempt-of-court trials without a jury can be solved.

Postal Rates

Elsewhere in the legislative mill is the high-priority administration request for higher postal rates, given a fair chance of final action; extension of the Federal minimum wage to department store workers and other retail and wholesale employees, and a few others.

Congress has already passed an extension of corporate and excise-tax rates for the next eighteen months, beating back efforts to give small business a tax break.

Geography Affects Race Bias

By GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

The Gallup Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Three years ago the U.S. Supreme Court handed down its historic decision that segregation of the races in the public schools violates the Constitution.

In the 35 states of the North, initial reaction to the May 17, 1954 decision was one of approval. That approval has steadily grown in the last three years.

In the South, firm opposition to the decision has always been found. Although the number who disagree with the decision has lessened in the last 36 months, there is still a substantial majority in the South today who oppose the school ruling.

When the views of both Northerners and Southerners are added up, 63 per cent of all Americans favor the decision, 31 per cent are against it, and 6 per cent have no opinion.

But in the latest survey by the Institute, many Southerners concede that if they lived in the North they might not favor segregation.

Likewise, many in the North say they think they might favor segregation if they resided inthe South.

The latest figures on the school ruling show the following split in opinion between North and South:

	TODAY	1954
THE NORTH
Approve	74%	65%
Disapprove	19	30
No Opinion	7	5
THE SOUTH
Approve	27%	24%
Disapprove	67	71
No Opinion ...	6	5

When Southerners were asked how they would feel about segregation if they lived in the North, and Northerners if they lived in the South, the results were as follows:

SOUTHERNERS— If Live in North
Would favor seg'ation .	45%
Would not favor it	43
No Opinion	12
NORTHERNERS— If Lived in South
Would favor seg'ation .	37%

Deep South Defies Integration

Advertiser Tues, 5-21-57

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Montgomery Ala.

THREE years ago this month the United States Supreme Court ordered the desegregation of public schools. On the anniversary of this occasion, some 50,000 persons held a "Prayer Pilgrimage for Freedom" in Washington. The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., appealed to the President for "strong aggressive leadership" in behalf of racial justice.

P. 4-A

Why is executive leadership necessary? What does the record of three years show?

One year ago the Post-Dispatch published an editorial, "Two Years of Achievement," which described vast progress toward integration of public schools in Missouri, Kansas, Maryland, Oklahoma and Kentucky, considerable progress in southern Texas and hesitant steps in Arkansas and Tennessee.

The first two years after the Supreme Court's order were years of achievement, not just because progress was made in those states where obstacles were fewest, but because even those states might not have integrated their schools if the court had not ordered it done.

The third year after the court order, however, has shown far less achievement. The single major example of public school integration occurred in Louisville, which was indeed significant. And integration was extended somewhat in other parts of Kentucky, Oklahome, Maryland and border states generally.

Nevertheless, not one inch of advancement has occurred in five states of the Deep South where, in fact, resistance to integration grew bolder. Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina and Virginia adopted types of "pupil assignment" laws, or other measures to resist integration. The Louisiana legislature simply declared that "all schools shall be operated separately." The past year began with general resistance to the law of the land and ended the same way.

Hence it can now be said that the integration order of 1954 has accomplished much of its purpose in the border states, but has yet to face the challenge of defiance in the Deep South.

No doubt, as the years and the courts proceed, and as integration closes around the Deep South, some inroads will be made on unequal education in those five states. But it is clear that the impetus of integration would be stronger if the federal courts had encouragement and assistance from the executive and legislative branches of the government.

President Eisenhower has yet to make a clear, unequivocal statement in behalf of equal treatment of public school children in the Deep South. His party's leadership in Congress has done little about the issue, and the Democratic majority now seems reluctant to meet the issue of civil rights generally for fear of a party split.

Three years after the Supreme Court order, the advance of educational democracy has reached a wall far south of the Mason-Dixon line. A statement by the President as the one man elected to speak for the nation could help to breach that wall.

Scientists agree segregation is damaging both races

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 5-25-57

CHICAGO — Segregation not only hurts those against whom it is directed, but inflicts damaging psychological scars on persons who countenance or foster discrimination, 250 psychiatrists and social scientists contended here Thursday.

Their observation, contained in a report entitled "Psychiatric Aspects of School Desegregation," were made public at a meeting held in conjunction with the annual convention of The American Psychiatric Association.

P. 3

The conclusions were the results of a study sponsored by the group for the Advancement of Psychiatry of NYC. Dr. D. L. Farnsworth, president of the group and Harvard faculty member, said the report is intended to aid the smooth change over to desegregation in the nations' schools.

* * *

INTENDED AS a guard for public officials, school administrators, and others now working on interracial problems, the survey agrees with the U.S. Supreme Court decision that segregation impairs the psychological growth of children.

Segregation causes psychological damage not only to individuals but also to the communities in which it is practiced, the psychiatrist said.

THE REPORT also assailed prejudiced and racial myths which it said are among the principle stumbling blocks that stand in the way of successful desegregation efforts.

One of these myths, in which colored people are often depicted as being morally and intellectually inferior to whites, is without any scientific report, it was stated.

1. Segregation is not merely a legal problem 'but a social, and above all, a psychological problem.'

2. Segregation is related to racial prejudice which "knows no geographical limits."

3. "Wherever segregation occurs there are damaging effects to the personality growth and development of the person discriminated against.'

The report also declared segregation practices inflict damaging psychological scars on persons fostering them.

4. Although segregation contributes to mental and personality disorders "this is by no means to imply that all those who believe in and advocate segregation are themselves maladjusted or otherwise psychiatrically abnormal."

MANY REASON GIVEN

The report adds:

"Obviously, many persons in the U. S. who are free from psychiatric disorder strongly favor segregation for many kinds of reasons. These range from desire for economic and political power to sincere conviction that continued segregation is the soundest solution to Negro-white relations."

But the report noted that there were a "certain number of maladjusted, seriously insecure or anxiety-ridden people who are much more completely in the grip of prejudice thinking than the average; and who need to retain their prejudices to serve as defenses against their own inner feeling of lack of worth."

More "Prepared" To Accept Desegregation In South

Daily World Fri. 5-17-57 Atlanta, Ga.

BY EDWIN DIAMOND

International News Service Science Writer

CHICAGO — (INS) — A psychiatric survey issued Thursday reported more white Southerners are "psychologically prepared" to accept school desegregation than are opposed.

The report suggested such persons — a "silent majority" in many communities — appear willing to change their actions without changing their feelings on school desegregation and other integration issues.

The report said despite existence of these feelings, based on life-long racial conditioning to segregation, "psychologically-flexible" practical southerners would use reality "as a guide for their decisions an dactions, even though it may not alter very much their feelings."

The report was made by a group of some 250 psychiatrists and other specialists called the Group for Advancement of Psychiatry (GAP.)

GAP is a private organization made up of scientists from every section of the country and includes both Negroes and whites.

BASED ON RESEARCH

Dr Viola Bernard, a Columbia University psychiatrist, said the survey was two years in the making and was based on first-hand research and observation in border states where school desegregation has already taken place.

States in the "Solid South" where the 1954 Supreme Court decision declaring school segregation unconstitutional has so far been resisted, also were studied by the group.

These points were stressed in the 80-page report and at a news conference held by its chief authors at the American Psychiatric Association at Chicago:

WASHINGTON, May 17 — An educator called today for "an agonizing reappraisal" of the theory that this country could leave it to the next generation to end racial discrimination.

Ernest O. Melby, Dean Emeritus of Education, New York University, presently a visiting professor at the University of Michigan, said the population was aging so fast that today's youth would merely trickle slowly into set patterns of power.

"The kids won't build a better world anywhere near fast enough to catch up with social change," Dr. Melby told a five-state human relations conference at the University of Maryland. The conference was sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jewish service organization.

"The school is one, and only one kind of education," he said. "The community must educate itself and change itself."

Legislation, Dr. Melby said, can eliminate only the surface elements of second-class citizenry. Actual equality, he added, can come only by a conversion of the majority to the conviction that all men have worth and dignity—and that those who discriminate are hurt worse than those discriminated against.

A message of greeting from President Eisenhower to the conference said:

"Through the schools and colleges of our land much progress is being made in lessening tensions and in advancing the spirit of goodwill among our people.

"This is the result of the splendid work of educators and all responsible citizens who are meeting the daily problems of human relations with intelligence, courage and mutual respect. This is the American way."

Robert R. Nathan, consultant economist of this city who has just returned from his tenth trip to the Far East in the last five years, said that the economic level of a country depended not on its natural resources but on the ability and education of its people.

He said that withholding opportunities to all groups of Americans for education, "will cost this nation billions of dollars in the next ten years."

Dr. Joseph H. Douglas, program coordinator in the office of the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, suggested from Virginia, where segregation is mandated by state law.

"as laboratories in which students, parents and teachers can work together in learning about diverse cultural groups."

About 160 superintendents, principals, college professors and other educators were present. These included twenty who came

A Study In Southerners'

Advertiser

THE Minneapolis Morning Tribune (a newspaper with which Montgomery has enjoyed close relations on occasion) has delivered itself of an editorial entitled, "A Study In Southerners." It says in part:

38a General

Thurs. 5-9-57

For many years the American Negro has been the victim of a cruel and unjust stereotype. We have been told by the white supremacists that he is shiftless and ignorant, congenitally disposed toward crime and dedicated in his childlike mind to racial intermarriage.

Montgomery, Ala.

Today there is danger that the white Southerner will be similarly victimized. The stereotype, in his case, differs somewhat in form but it is quite as ugly. The white Southerner, we are told by his thoughtless critics, is bigoted and arrogant. Where the Negro is concerned, he is utterly without conscience, seeking to maintain segregation by fair or foul means and sowing broadcast the seeds of night-shirted terror and intolerance.

P. 4a

This stereotype came to mind Sunday evening when the imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan was interviewed on a television network. Here was bigotry at close range with every minute facet of it ruthlessly exposed by the television cameras. The imperial wizard was garbed in the ceremonial robes of his order but his dream world of ignorance, his evasiveness, his bland contempt for the Negro, were nakedly revealed. Through this dream world the press, the Anti-Defamation League, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People stalked like ghostly villains and nothing was real or good that did not have the mark of racial segregation on it.

Yet any thoughtful citizen must have known that the imperial wizard was hardly more representative of the South's people than the boll weevil is representative of the South's agriculture.

IN THE first place, The Advertiser wishes to match this era of good feeling in the form of this Tribune editorial by asserting that Northern newspapers have been the victim of an unfair stereotype. While many of them are dense and ignorant of the South, there are exceptions. None strives more painfully than the Tribune to be understanding.

The Kluxer is no more representative of the South than a Minneapolis blizzard of its climate. In Montgomery it is no exaggeration to say that the Kluxers are looked upon as the village idiot.

The Minneapolis paper will probably be intrigued by The Advertiser's assertion that a Klan leader would have no more chance of election to public office than one of the NAACP Mau Maus.

We have watched at first hand Kluxer oafs plodding down Dexter Avenue. Montgomerians reacted with expressions that made it obvious that the Kluxers were lucky to get off Dexter Avenue without being spat upon. And if somebody had to be lynched, one of these albino hooligans would have been the popular choice.

Trouble, the South has had, trouble the South will have, but The Advertiser does not believe it will come in the sheet and form of the Klan. Northern reporters and TV dandies are interested in familiar symbols. They use the Klan like a yo-yo.

ONE more counsel to the Tribune, because it plainly wants to understand. It makes an error if it thinks whites generally considered Negroes irremediably "shiftless and ignorant, congenitally disposed toward crime."

All statistics, including those recently released by the FBI and those of the police department in every Northern metropolis, show that this is relatively true at present. But whites well recognize the potentiality of the colored man. He has a long way to go, but he has already come a longer way.

This white attitude is epitomized by Alabama's expenditure on Negro education. A third of our population is Negro, a third of our state schools budget is for Negro education. Does anybody think we'd be spending $30,000,000 a year if we doubted that the certain destiny of the Negro is onward and upward?

Anybody who does business in Montgomery knows what Negro economic power is. Ask the credit reporting agencies about Negro credit. You will get a surprisingly favorable report. It is a mistake to think that the white is oblivious to the colored man's potential.

Dr. Mead sees equality for all in 25 years

HAMPTON, Va. — "The next quarter century will see the skills which the western world has been evolving over the last century, made available to people all over the world," declared Dr. Margaret Mead, famous anthropologist and associate curator of Ethnology, American Museum of Natural History.

P. 8

Dr. Mead was speaker at the annual Service of Dedication for 24 students of the Department of Nursing at Hampton Institute, in Ogden Hall, Sunday evening.

Dr. Mead, who is also an adjunct professor at Columbia University in New York and a member of the Board of Trustees of Hampton, recalled the work of missionaries and emissaries who pleaded, persuaded and cajoled less developed peoples to accept the knowledge we could offer. "Today," she stated, "there is no spot so remote, no people so primitive, that they themselves are not anxious for this knowledge."

ELABORATING on the subject "Nursing in a Widening World," Dr. Mead said that World War II taught the world what modern medicine could do, "and all over the world mothers are asking that their babies may no longer die."

She challenged the student nurses to accept the opportunity to spread the "saving knowledge," for in such ways the "gap of racial distrust which centuries of colonialism and exploitation have left in many parts of the world" can be bridged.

Dr. Mead hailed the advertised day of complete automation, when things shall be made untouched by human hands. For then, "the first time in human history, human hands will be freed from the tasks of working with non-living things, and free to do what no machine can do—work with living things."

There will then be "enough hands to care for children properly, to care for the sick, to soothe the frightened, to quiet the mentally disturbed, to guide the faltering steps of the aged." And with glowing words she looked forward to a future in which man's unkindness due to starvation and proverty, to inhuman conditions can be done away with and each can be given the care that each needs.

"In such a world the nurse will come into her own, in a world where compassionate hands are as imporeant as the trained mind and the sensitive heart to create a different kind of world."

DR. MEAD was introduced by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of the college. Miss Helen Seller, chairman, of the department of Nursing, presented the caps to the student nurses.

The lighting of the lamps was supervised by Miss Georgiana McFarlan, instructor in nursing. Mrs. John Lyman, chaplain of the Newport News Branch, Gideons International, presented Bibles to each student nurse.

The musical porition of the ceremonies was in the hands of members of the Music Department.

Segregation Held Rising In The Cities

Courier Journal

Fri. 2-8-57

Louisville, Ky.

© New York Times News Service

New York, Feb. 7 — Racial segregation is increasing in cities and suburbs, Robert C. Weaver, New York State rent administrator, declared tonight.

Despite scattered progress against discrimination in the sale and rental of housing, Commissioner Weaver said, existing Negro ghettos in cities were getting larger and new "lily-white" subdivisions were growing beyond city lines.

"Signal gains have been made in New York state in barring discrimination in publicly assisted housing," he said. "But the majority of our dwelling units are still closed to minorities.

"Our failure to secure a wide distribution of ethnic groups throughout communities tends to increase segregation in all its forms."

Weaver said the influx of Negroes into Northern cities increased their concentration in those neighborhoods where housing was available for them. He declared that this, in turn, resulted in some schools, parks, and other community facilities being utilized almost exclusively by Negroes, while those in other neighborhoods served only white residents.

How Ike and his Democratic opponent last year and most of the Senate and House of both parties can stomach this unconscionable legislation, however, may be explainable only by the human nature that divides minds into airtight compartments on some questions.

It is the sin of this century, with Hitler and Stalin the worst offenders, but America's Dealers and do-gooders are following hard. The worst offenders, believe, to practice what he preaches, most of all, know better, are the nervous nine who held hands and jumped.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

NEW YORK—"The hand-shaking of Vice President Nixon in Africa may be all right, but it doesn't mean anything. Hand-shaking in Africa and head-whipping in America just won't bring a peaceful solution!" said Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, at the Metropolitan Baptist Church here, scene of the Empire State Baptist Convention.

"The doomed dead of Hiroshima cry out from the grave against the injustices of the United States of America. In spite of what we have given to the nations across the sea, America is the most hated nation in the world," Dr. Jackson continued.

More than 100,000 people lined the streets of Harlem to see the motorcade of nearly 100 cars conveying the National Baptist Convention leader and his host of followers, including Dr. T. S. Harten, vice president of the convention.

Dr. Jackson addressed the convention on "The Security of America." He launched out at both the domestic and foreign relations policies of the nation. He spoke of the old allies of the country and their present condition. He stated that "diplomatic foreign relations of the country, for security in the future, should be conducted with black nations."

Words of greeting were given by Rev. William L. Houston, vice president of the Baptist Ministers Conference of New York and Vicinity; Hulan Jack, president of Manhattan Borough, and Dr. Sandy Ray, minister of the Cornerstone Baptist Church, Brooklyn, who is president of the Empire State Baptist Convention.

Clash of Authority Called Mental Bar to Integration

Post & Times Herald P. 4-B

Thurs. 5-16-57

Washington D.C.

By Eve Edsrom

CHICAGO, May 15—More people are psychologically ready to accept desegregation than publicly stated opposition indicates, some of the Nation's leading psychiatrists reported today.

But the clash between Federal and local authorities makes "many individuals obey the near because it feels more compellingly real for them," the psychiatrists observed.

Their findings—which underscore how segregation has damaged whites as well as Negroes, communities as well as the Nation—were published today by the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry.

The report, "Psychiatric Aspects of School Desegregation," represents the pooled observations of more than 250 psychiatrists and social scientists from every region in the Nation, according to the Group's president, Dr. Dana L. Farnsworth of Harvard.

Psychiatry's Role

Because desegregation is not merely a legal problem but a social, economic and "above all a psychological one," the Group feels that psychiatry has a "great deal to offer" in working toward a solution.

The solution, they continue, is handicapped by irrational fears and prejudices held by both Northerners and Southerners. Addressing themselves to public officials, teachers and parents, they offer evidence to destroy these fears in the hope of effecting a smooth changeover to desegregation.

Objective evidence, they agree, will not sway those whose steadfast resistance to desegregation serves "unscrupulous purposes." But the most "violent denunciations," they said, come from a minority of maladjsted people whose prejudiced attitudes reuect a need for psychotherapy for emotional dis orders.

The bulk of people, they declare, are not maladjusted. For economic and political reasons or out of sincere conviction, they may believe segregation is the soundest solution to the problem.

If their childhood conditioning is not too deep-rooted, they are "psychologically flexible" enough to modify their opinions when they are presented with evidence that desegregation can be carried out successfully, the psychiatrists say.

Numerous factors which have nothing to do with the race issue prevent public endorsement of desegregation, they observe. These include Southern fear of Northern economic domination, and a need to conform to dominant group patterns.

Conflicts of Authority

"In many ares of the South, citizens of both races are caught in the open conflict between local authority which forbids compliance with the Supreme Court ruling and Federal authority which requires it," they continue.

"These serious differences between external authorities, plus internal conflicts over attitudes toward authority coupled with intense feelings about desegregation springing from other sources, put many Southerners into situations of conflicted loyalty and conflicted sense of right and wrong which make rational action extremely difficult."

But, the psychiatrists assert, many Southern local officials, school superintendents and members of school boards who feel "their hands are tied by the local white power situations, welcome with a sense of relief whatever authority the Federal Government can bring to bear in the situation."

"Since for the most part, those who feel this relief dare not openly express it, their attitude is seldom recognized, concealed as it is behind the more vocal interests of the segregationist against outside intervention," they state. "Actually Federal and state authority can greatly support the morale and strengthen the hand of many local authorities who dare not otherwise act in accordance with their own convictions as to their responsibilities."

Inferiority Myths

The Supreme Court decision reflected the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the population, the psychiatrists state.

They emphasize that "no law can by itself bring about a fundamental alteration in personal and group attitudes," that for a "lasting change in attitudes . . . there must be long-term exposure to new experiences together with opportunities to develop new insights." But the possibiities of learning from new experiences are reduced by deeply grained prejudices, they say.

For this reason, the psychiatrists note, myths concerning Negro inferiority—intellectual, moral and social—play a crucial role in preventing attitude change.

The study, which supports previous scientific findings that there is no difference in intellectual capacity between Negroes and whites, breaks down a number of myths and also describes how attitudes can be changed to bring about a more favorable climate for desegregation.

The psychiatrists emphasize how classroom disturbances can come from hostile attitudes brought from home and also from group tensions which have nothing to do with racial issues. Teacher leadership not only must be responsible for identifying correctly the problem but has a responsibility to bring parents into a working relationship with the school, they declare.

COLUMBIA, S. C.—"Democracy — America's Greatest Intercontinental Ballistic Missile" was the theme from which Dr. Rayford W. Logan, head, department of history, Howard University, Washington, D. C., addressed the 112 gradutes of Benedict College at the commencement exercises held in Antisdel Chapel.

In his message, Dr. Logan called for total integration as the "most powerful weapon in the arsenal of democracy." "In 1954," he said, "the walls of segregation were steadily tumbling down, but since then there has been a resurgence of opposition to our gain." This he noted as representing a danger to American chances in its "cold war with Russia" and a potential jeopardy of its relations with European and Asian allies."

The speaker lauded the NAACP for the work which it has done in bringing down the walls of segregation. Throughout his discourse, Dr. Logan challenged the graduates to remain true to the principles of democracy; for democracy, he said, means "freedom under the law."

President J. A. Bacoats presided over the exercises and conferred the degrees.

(SPECIAL TO THE AFRO)

NEW ORLEANS—Shocked because President Eisenhower has turned a deaf ear to their pleas that he speak out against the rising wave of violence in the South attending desegregation of schools and other public facilities, colored leaders here this week announced plans for a pilgrimage to Washington unless the Chief Executive speaks out.

The plan was unanimously approved at a two-day meeting of the Louisiana Baptist Ministerial Alliance held at New Zion Baptist Church, the Rev. A. L. Davis, pastor.

The announcement was made by the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, president of the Southern Leaders Conference, comprising 97 leaders from all of the southern states.

* * *

THE REV. MR. KING, also head of the Montgomery Improvement Association which led a successful year-long bus boycott movement in Alabama's capital city, told newsmen he did not know exactly what form the pilgrimage would take.

He added, however, that thousands of colored people joined by thousands of whites in both the North and South, would go to Washington.

"This will not be a political march. It will be rooted in a deep spiritual faith," the Rev. Mr. King pointed out.

The press session was called after a telegram had been sent to Mr. Eisenhower imploring him to speak out against lawlessness in areas where integration was taking place.

THE MESSAGE is the third addressed to the President by this group since the first of the year. On Jan. 11, the Leaders Conference asked the President to speak anywhere in the South. Later, the Rev. Mr. King asked Mr. Eisenhower to speak anywhere in the nation about the violence erupting in the South.

The President, after consulting with the Justice Department, replied that he would be unable to do so, despite pleas from many individuals and organizations that he publicly discourage lawless elements.

The telegram also urged the President to call a White House conference on the maintenance of law and order.

"WE BELIEVE such a conference can help develop in the South and in the nation an orderly growth toward civil rights," the telegram said.

"Since our last appeal," the telegram stated, "violence has continued to erupt by night and by day. It has grown to alarming proportions. Some of the acts of violence would be unbelievable were the grim ruins not mute testimony."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the fight against bus segregation in Birmingham, Ala., whose home like that of the Rev. Mr. King has also been bombed, remarked that the group was not trying to "threaten the President" with the telegram.

Sat 2-23-57

HE CITED from the message:

"In the absence of some early and effective remedial action, we shall have no moral choice but to lead a pilgrimage of prayer to Washington.

"We implore you to enunciate, whether in the North or South, an Eisenhower doctrine for democracy at home."

Raymond B. Floyd, secretary of the United Clubs Inc. of New Orleans, explained that a pilgrimage to Washington would be somewhat on the order of the one planned by A. Philip Randolph, seeking to have Congress enact on FEPC law several years ago.

P. 5

The spiritual and moral aspects of the present situation would be stressed in any current pilgrimage to Washington, however, it was pointed out.

Attorneys J. M. St. Augustine of New Orleans and Thomas Berry of Alexandria, La., will be legal advisors to the Pilgrimage led by the leadership group.

IF, BECAUSE of the refusal of President Eisenhower to speak out the march on Washington does come about, it will set no precedent in the history of the nation.

Largest mass protests have been the march of Coxey's Army just before the turn of the century and the Bonus March at the height of the depression, when Herbert Hoover was President.

Jacob S. Coxey of Massillion, Ohio, worked out a plan to save the country during the panic of 1893 by the enactment of two bills providing for large issues of legal tender currency to be spent for good roads and other improvements, thus furnishing work for the unemployed.

* * *

AIDED BY Carl Browne, he planned the march as a "living petition" of the unemployed to Washington as the means of arousing public and congressional interest in these bills.

Because of Browne's religious zeal, the organization was called "The Commonweal of Christ."

It marched out of Massillon on Easter Sunday, 1894, with about 100 men, followed by half as many newspaper reporters.

Thinking that the movement would "snowball" as it rolled across the country, Coxey had only 500 converts when he arrived in Washington instead of the 100,000 he predicted.

HIS PARADE was cheered by enormous crowds, but when he tried to speak from the Capitol steps he was arrested, fined and sent to jail for carrying banners and walking on the grass in the Capitol grounds.

In the meanwhile, "industrial armies" larger than Coxey's were organized by the unemployed all over the country and some 1,200 finally assembled in Washington in futile support for the currency printing bills.

The District of Columbia finally paid their way back to their homes.

LESS FORTUNATE were the "soldiers" of the Bonus Army which converged upon Washington in May, 1932. These were World War I veterans who assembled from all parts of the United States to petition Congress for adjusted compensation or bonus certificates.

Some 15,000 were estimated to have moved into the city, most of them penniless.

Problems of food, shelter and sanitation embarrased D. C. Chief of Police Glassford, who tried to provide quarters for the men. Most of them, however, built wretched hovels or lived in tents while they made their plea for government compensation.

They did not use religious slogans, but appealed to the patriotism of the congressmen, under the strict leadership of Walter A. Walters.

In mid-June, Congress defeated the bonus bill by a small majority, but the veterans stayed on, haunting the Capitol grounds.

Late in July, Glassford ordered their evacuation; and by instructions from the President, U.S. troops drove them forcibly from their quarters in public buildings and from their camps.

IN 1941 a proposed "March on Washington," organized by labor leaders, was called off when the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order 8802, providing equal opportunity in employment.

If such a "Pilgrimage of Prayer," as now proposed was organized it would take the form of a gathering of colored and white Christians in the Washington's churches, praying for an end to violence in the South.

From an international standpoint, it would not be a pretty picture for the Asian-African nations the United States is currently trying to win as allies in the global cold war.

PRIOR TO the prospect of the mass "Pilgrimage of Prayer," President Eisenhower heard with his own ears about the crisis in Dixie.

Also in New York he was charged by Gov. Averell Harriman with "a tragic failure to assert his responsibility" for not speaking out in the South against interracial violence.

At Thomasville, Ga., a white minister, the Rev. A. Allen Gardner, 34, of the First Presbyterian Church, at which President Eisenhower worships during his visits to Thomasville, warned the chief executive of danger in the South in a sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Gardner took his text from "He whohath ears to hear, let him hear" (Matthew 11:15) and his topic was "When God Speaks to Man."

The minister said, "God speaks, not through nations screaming at nations, and not through racial tensions that hang over our southland like a heavy thunderhead. In spite of all the noise, there is a power working for good to reconcile man with his neighbors."

* * *

IN A SPEECH at a Madison Square Garden rally celebrating Brotherhood Week, Gov. Harriman accused the President of "discourtesy" in his failure to respond to an appeal from colored leaders to speak out for law and order in the South. Gov. Harriman said:

"This is more than a discourtesy — it is a tragic failure to assert his responsibility and to speak the conscience of the American people."

Before going to Thomasville, for a vacation, Mr. Eisenhower had said his schedule was ooo busy to permit and anti-discrimination speech in the South.

Mr. Harriman, observing that two-thirds of the world's people are non-white, continued:

"Violence in the Deep South or the housing riots in the Middle West impair our effectiveness aong the peoples that have newly come out of colonialism."

Ike Grooms Nixon For the Presidency

Atlanta Ga.

Sat. 3-9-57

WASHINGTON—Vice President Richard M. Nixon's present mission to Africa, an incident that occurred there, and some observations by a past vice president—John N. Garner of Texas—help clear up certain misconceptions about the current Nixon role and get it into better focus.

The familiar generalization that the vice presidency has assumed more importance under Nixon's occupancy needs some reservations.

Without minimizing the importance of his role, which is chiefly significant is that it's different from that of his predecessors in at least three ways.

For one thing, Nixon has become a stand-in for the President in a manner not seen before. This is due to circumstances. President Eisenhower has a natural disinclination for public appearances in the number and of the sort to which most presidents subject themselves.

For another thing, Nixon has become a sort of political buffer upon whom are shunted matters in which the President does not wish to become directly involved. And, for another thing, the vice president is getting the limelight as part of the promotion of him as the Eisenhower successor.

In the vice president's current African tour we see these three roles exemplified.

He was more or less dragged into the buffer role by an incident at Accra, during celebration of Ghana independence. Turning up there also, as guest of the Prime Minister, was the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala.

He told at a news conference how President Eisenhower had refused an invitation to go South to make a major anti-discrimination speech.

Soon thereafter the vice president and the Negro leader of the bus integration movement ran into each other. In the course of a friendly chat the vice president invited the Rev. King to come to Washington later and confer with him.

This takes the burden off the President, who has very carefully sidestepped any involvement in Southern integration problems.

Other vice presidents before Nixon have had important places in the administration in which they served.

In an active role of administration, such as Vice President Nixon has had, was Vice President Henry Wallace. In his one term as vice president, in Franklin D. Roosevelt's third term he was chairman of the important World War II agency, the Board of Economic Warfare.

The other sort of role was that filled by the veteran John N. Garner when he was vice president in Franklin D. Roosevelt's first two terms.

He was liaison man with Congress and most effective because of his wide acquaintance and previous experience as Democratic Party leader and speaker of the House, giving him tremendous influence.

Vice President Nixon doesn't have much influence at the Capitol because of the open antagonism of most Democrats and the lukewarm attitude of many Republicans to him. He is often away from there, whether or not it is accurate that he has presided over the Senate less than any other vice president, as former Vice President Garner says in an interview in U.S. News and World Report.

The 88-year-old Texan said he did not believe that President Eisenhower could "make Mr. Nixon great," but based this largely on the little time he gives to presiding over the Senate.

It is the other—and new roles—upon which Dick Nixon counts.

Negroes Bid Ike, Nixon Visit South

Herald

Jan. 1-13-57

Miami Fla.

ATLANTA —(AP)— President Eisenhower and Vice President Richard Nixon been have asked to come South to aid Negro leaders in the fight against segregation.

The requests, along with one of Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell requesting an interview "at the earliest possible date," were made by the Southern Negro leaders conference on transportation and non-violent integration.

Winding up a two-day meeting, the 60 Negro leaders from 29 communities in nine Southern states and the District of Columbia wired the President:

"We ask you to come South immediately to make a major speech in a major Southern city urging all Southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decision as the law of the land."

Nixon was urged to make a trip through the South similar to the one he made on behalf of Hungarian refugees and report to the President on "economic boycotts, and reprisals, and bombing and violence directed against persons and homes of Negroes who assert their rights under the Constitution."

South a Victim of Prostituted Pens

Florida Times Union

Jacksonville Fla.

This is the day to ponder the dire forebodings which come to a California scientist about the fate of Florida. Dr. Joseph Kaplan, professor of physics at the University of California, in his role as head of the U. S. committee for the International Geophysical year which begins today, says much of Florida may be inundated in another half century.

This prophet of evil declares that unless atmospheric temperature can be controlled, the Sunshine State will be one of the worst affected areas as a result of the melting polar caps. He blames increased use of oil and gas.

Perhaps this is the cataclysm which the late Henry L. Mencken once so fondly sought. The "Sage of Baltimore" was more all-encompassing in his words of ill will toward the South. He didn't limit his remarks, which were as scurrilous as they were libellous, to the State of Florida. He declared that if some phenomenon of nature would suddenly shear off that portion of the U. S. below the Mason-Dixon Line and plunge it into the ocean, the rest of the country would lose nothing in consequence.

Are scientists, like "literatti," subject to losing a grip on "objectivity," particularly when they reside in an area with interests inimical to those of Florida? To hear members of the fraternity rhapsodize about the pureness in heart of the brethren, one could hardly believe they would ever lower their eyes from the heights? But then there was Klaus Fuchs who sojourned in our land as a friend, and then advanced the cause of Russian A-bomb research at least a year and a half with his perfidy.

Could a California scientist lose his objectivity when speaking about the State of Florida? The implications are odious, but people sometimes forget for advantage. That was the case with that gone but not lamented—by Southerners, that is—cheap Baltimore publicist who spawned the generation of writers who have followed the tradition he established.

Man can't serve God and Mammon both, and the prostituted pens that are plying a lucrative trade of maligning the South make more burning the biggest issue of our times:

Just how objective is objectivity?

TO AIR PRESIDENT'S REFUSAL

Negro Leaders Set New Orleans Talk

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 7 (AP) —Negro leaders will meet in New Orleans Feb. 13-14 to consider President Eisenhower's "refusal to come South to appeal for law and order," a pro - integration spokesman said today.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth said he was speaking for Negroes who met at Atlanta recently, and urged the President to make a personal appeal from a Southern platform.

Shuttlesworth, whose home and church were wrecked by a dynamite bomb, issued a prepared statement criticizing Eisenhower's failure to make the trip.

"At a time when our churches and homes are being bombed, when the darkness of each night brings physical danger to our people, President Eisenhower has decided not to come South and put the moral weight of his office against the breakdown of law and order," said Shuttlesworth.

"It is ironic that less than three weeks ago millions of dollars were spent on an inaugural ceremony, the climax of which was the oath by President Eisenhower 'to uphold the Constitution of the United States. We Negro leaders of 28 communities and 10 states ask for nothing more than this — and we ask for it here in the South, and now."

Shuttlesworth said widespread disappointment at the President's decision has been expressed by Negro leaders in both Northern and Southern communities.

"Significantly," he said, "many of these leaders were prominent supporters of President Eisenhower in 1952 and 1956."

Negroes Ask President's Help in South

Implore Him to Use His Office on Visit To Oppose 'Terror'

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 11 (UP). —Sixty Negro leaders, asserting that "a state of terror prevails," urged President Eisenhower today to visit the South immediately and use the "weight of your great office" to bring about compliance with integration rulings throughout all of the region.

The Negroes called for presidential help as a Federal judge's ruling against a Virginia school segregation plan and the hurling of "Molotov cocktails" at a Chattanooga, Tenn. bus kept the south in racial turmoil.

A statement issued after a two-day meeting of Negro integration leaders from nine States also called on Vice President Richard Nixon to make a "tour of the south" similar to the one he made in Europe on behalf of Hungarian refugees.

MINISTER HEADS LEADERS

Heading the Negroes was the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the year-long Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott whose followers finally won vindication when the Supreme Court overthrew Alabama Jim Crow seating laws.

The group disclosed it had sent a letter to the President asking him to make a major speech in a southern city urging "all southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decisions as the law of the land."

"American citizens have been unjustly and brutally attacked at home," the letter said, referring to the bombing of integration leaders' houses, particularly at Montgomery.

"We, therefore, urge you to use the weight of your great office to point out to the people of the South the moral nature of the problem faced at home and abroad by the unsolved civil rights issues and the violent racial disorder that will arise again and again until these issues are solved."

A new showdown was shaping up at Tallahassee, Fla., which with Montgomery has been one of the main integration test centers.

EMERGENCY ORDER OFF

Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida revoked his emergency order which suspended Tallahassee bus service on New Year's day as a safety measure. The city had adopted a new ordinance making bus drivers responsible for assigning seats so as to provide maximum safety and "health" for the passengers.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee Negro integration leader at the Atlanta meeting, said the Negroes planned to ride where they pleased.

In Norfolk, Va., U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, ruled that Virginia's new law providing every pupil in the State is subject to placement in a particular school is unconstitutional because it is "directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

Hoffman denied motions for dismissal of segregation suits against the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News, Va.

There had been no integration of buses in Chattanooga. But the Southern Coach Lines, operators of city buses, announced early this week that the last screens separating the races had been removed from the vehicles.

About midnight last night, a man crouching in a culvert hurled two gasoline-filled bottles — nicknamed "Molotov cocktails" in the Second World War—at a Chattanooga bus near Rossville, Ga., a suburb.

Ike May Confer With 3 Leaders

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower may soon see a delegation of Negro leaders, but the White House has said it would probably be limited to just three persons.

This revelation came after Rep. Adam Powell conferred with Sherman Adams, the Presidential assistant on Friday.

Powell declared that Adams told him it was not a policy of the Administration to see delegations and that the President had turned down requests from any number of groups, including Jewish organizations.

RANDOLPH ASKS

Adams said that A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, had a request in for a long time and had submitted the names of 18 persons to accompany him as an outgrowth of last year's "state of the race" conference.

He also said a request had been received from Rev. W. H. Jernagin, president of the Baptist Training Union Congress who had submitted 16 names.

Unconfirmed reports say that if such a meeting is held, the delegation will probably include besides Randolph, J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist convention, USA.

SENIORITY DEAL

Adams also assured Powell that all but three of the Republican members of the House Labor and Education committee would support him in a new vote on seniority privileges when this comes up again on Feb. 19.

All of the Republicans had voted against him when the committee was organized a week ago. As third ranking member of the committee, Powell is entitled to a subcommittee chairmanship, but was bypassed.

The White House has assigned Edward McCabe, its legislative liaison assistant, to work with Powell on reaching a possible agreement on his clause in the school-aid bill which would prohibit funds from going to states that defy the Supreme Court decision.

Powell said he had discussed with Adams on Tuesday the whole matter of the civil rights and he felt that the President's remarks at his perss conference that he was too busy to make a speech in the South on the moral aspects of desegregation was very ill advised.

Eisenhower Evasive On Mob Rule Issue

Editor, Journal and Guide:

It is extremely regrettable that President Eisenhower cannot find time during his busy schedule of "vacations" to speak out against the tidal wave of racial terror and violence now going on in the South.

Mr. Eisenhower has consistently ignored this problem that keeps law-abiding citizens in constant fear of their lives. Like the Jews in the Jewish-Egyptian war, Negroes in the South constantly fear they will be maimed or their homes bombed.

WHEN RECENTLY asked by a New York reporter whether he planned to make a trip to the South, Mr. Eisenhower gave a stumbling, evasive reply that must have chilled the spines of victimized Negroes. However, Mr. Eisenhower did go South—but to play golf and later to shoot quail. Perhaps these pastimes are ample devices to combat mobster bombs and bullets.

Local government blatantly cry about states' rights, but because many government officials tacitly condone mob violence or are allied with White Citizens' Councils, embattled Negroes of the South find little or no protection.

Currently many of us are sympathetic and deplore the brutal treatment the Hungarians are receiving from the Russians, but on a problem of the same gravity on our own doorstep, Mr. Eisenhower, President of all the people, remains silent or, at best, evasive.

Ike Turns Request By Ministers Over To Justice Dept.

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — President Eisenhower has turned the request of Negro leaders of the South to come to the area over to the Justice Department for study.

The question of whether he intended to respond to the plea for a personal visit or some expression on racial violence there was raised at the Chief Executive's first press conference in his second administration and the first he has held in more than two months.

The President said he knew of the request and then turned to White House Press Secretary James Hagerty for a whispered consultation before answering that Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, had sent the request on to the Justice Department.

Negro ministers meeting at Atlanta had asked that either the President come or that he send Vice President Nixon to make a first hand investigation of the situation and then report on it.

Justice Department Says Invitation Of Negro Leaders Asking President To Make A Major Speech On Civil Rights Has Been Declined

Says Primary Responsibility For Maintenance Of Law And Order Lodged Lith Local And State Authorities

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1. — The Justice Department disclosed today that an invitation to President Eisenhower to make a major speech in the South on civil rights had been declined.

The department also made known that it had advised a group of Negro leaders that a conference with the attorney general to clarify the extent of the Federal Government's responsibility to enforce anti-segregation laws and court decrees would "not be helpful or appropriate" at this time.

The requests for the speech and the conference were made by a group of Negro leaders in the South.

Sherman Adams, the Assistant to the President, replied on Jan. 18 that it was not possible for the President to schedule the requested speech.

In disclosing this today the department also made public a letter of the same date from Warren Olney, 3d, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division, to the Rev. M. L. King, Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., rejecting the conference request.

Telegrams Sent Jan. 11

The requests were in telegrams to President Eisenhower and Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. They were sent Jan. 11 and were signed by the Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee, Fla., the Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, Birmingham, Ala., the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge, La., and the Rev. Mr. King.

Both messages of reply were sent to the Southern Negro Leaders Conference on Transportation and Non-Violent Integration, then in session at Atlanta.

The telegrams to the President and Mr. Brownell declared it to be a responsibility of the Federal Government to maintain law and order and described disorders in the South in situations involving civil rights as a challenge to Federal authority.

Mr. Olney, in the letter made public today, said that the Federal Government was fully aware of its responsibilities.

"This department will cause allegations of Federal offenses to be investigated, and will act vigorously when such investigations reveal the commission of Federal offenses," he asserted.

"Notwithstanding our deep aversion to violent acts of the sort you describe, the primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order is lodged in state and local authorities.

Limit On Power Cited

"The Federal Government has no general police power and this department can act only when offenses transpire within the purview of existing Federal statutory provisions."

Mr. Olney offered assurance of "our serious concern" over the situation. He urged the authors of the telegram to make available to the Federal authorities any specific information indicating interference with civil rights protected by the "Constitution and laws of the United States."

In the telegram to President Eisenhower the Negro leaders asked him to "make a major speech in a major southern city urging all southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decisions as the law of the land."

They asked also that he "use the weight of your great office to point out to the people of the South the moral nature of the problem faced at home and abroad by the unsolved civil rights issues and the violent racial disorder that will rise again and again until these issues are solved."

Mr. Olney pointed out that the President had addressed himself to the topic in his State.

President Urged To Tour South

Serious Integration Problem Demands Top-level Action

NEW YORK—(INS)—Former Senator Herbert H. Lehman (D) New York, proposed this week a three-step program for President Eisenhower to deal with the integration problem, which Lehman called "the most serious internal crisis the United States has faced in a generation." Lehman, in a statement transcribed for a Sunday radio broadcast, declared: "I prophesy that if President Eisenhower should continue to stand aloof from this crisis, he will be subject to the very harsh judgment of history.

"I URGE strongly that President Eisenhower immediately convene a White House conference of white and Negro leaders from the South --educators, businessmen, lawers, clergymen and politicians--to reestablish the lines of communciatoin between the whites and the Negroes.

"I urge that President Eisenhower undertake a special tour in the South and meet with the local leaders in each area in order to discuss and advocate integration and the abolition of segregation.

* * *

"I URGE that President Eisenhower and Attorney General Brownell call together all the law enforcement oficers in the nation and take counsel with them on how to restore the rule of law and respect for law in the South."

LEHMAN IN RACIAL PLEA

Urges President Tour South to Confront 'Crisis'

President Eisenhower was urged yesterday to tour the South to meet "the most serious internal crisis the United States has faced in a generation."

The plea was made by former Senator Herbert H. Lehman on the WMCA radio program "Report From Washington." Mr. Lehman said the President would be "subject to the very harsh judgment of history" if he continued to stand aloof from the integration crisis.

Mr. Lehman also urged that the President call a conference of educators, businessmen, lawyers, clergymen and politicians to re-establish communication between whites and Negroes.

Challenges Statement By White House Aide

NEW YORK.— A statement by Bernard M. Shanley, appointments secretary to President Eisenhower, "that feelings engendered by the (Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, anti-segregation) decision have resulted in the dropping of Negroes, especially graduate students, from universities in the South where previously they had been accepted," has been called "erroneous" by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Shanley's remarks were made following an address he delivered on March 21 to students at Fairleigh Dickinson university in Rutherford, N. J. Queried about the Supreme Court ruling during a question-and-answer period, the White House aide is quoted in The New York Times as having said that the "Supreme Court decision on segregati n has set us back many years." Later he is reported as having said that the decision had done "incalculable harm."

In a telegram dispatched to Mr. Shanley on March 22, Mr. Wilkins said that the NAACP regretted Mr. Shanley's "erroneous statement" and declared that "there are more Negroes enrolled in southern universities today than at the time of the ruling. For example the University of Texas last year opened all undergraduate schools to Negro students as against only graduate schools in 1954. Also, additional church-connected and other private institutions have enrolled Negro students since 1954."

Only in Louisiana, the NAACP leader told Mr. Shanley, has an attempt been made "to get rid of Negro students at the state university and this attempt has thus far been thwarted."

The present difficulties in the South, Mr. Wilkins continued, were not created by the Supreme Court ruling, "but by the White Citizens Councils, the Ku Klux Klan and other elements openly and contemptuously preaching defiance of the Supreme Court. Whatever your declared intention," he asserted, "your statement has given White House staff approval to the oft-stated views of these groups."

Moreover, Mr. Wilkins said, "as a lawyer, your statement places you on the side of expediency in the law rather than in support of the constitutional morality expected of the nation's highest court."

Police Vow To Crack-Down On Integration Violence

World Wed. 1-30-57 B'ham, Ala. P. 1

Officers Told To Stop Bombings, Cross-Burnings

Mobile, Ala. and Tallahassee, Fla. police officials moved Saturday to stop violence by white opponents to integration drives by Negro leaders.

Chief Dudley E. McFadyen of the Mobile police said he would invoke emergency measures if his policemen don't come up with some arrests in an outbreak of violence, including one explosion, two attempted bombings and 20 cross-burnings.

He said during a special meeting of all city police that "all cross burnings and dynamiting in Mobile" will be stopped or officers will be working longer hours without special privileges. This would mean a seven day work week and no privileges to work outside jobs, he indicated.

The Mobile city commission, at the same time, offered a reward of $250 for the arrest of persons responsible for the violence. The commission's announcement said "these hoodlums, these rabble-rousers should not be put in the jails. They should be put under the jails."

Meanwhile Tallahassee Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said 18 white students are believed to "know something about" recent vandalism against Negro integration leaders here.

However, he said no charges were made against the youths because of insufficient evidence. He warned them that further lawlessness might land them in jail.

In Birmingham, Ala., another integration sore spot, police today are searching for a fifth suspect in the shooting of two Ku Klux Klan members, who they believe was wounded in the Tuesday night skirmish.

Police said Harold Wm. McBride, for whom a warrant was issued Friday, probably suffered a flesh wound at the Klan meeting shooting and had been treated by a doctor outside the city.

Meanwhile, Chad C. Bridges, shot when he went to the aid of fellow Klansman J. P. Tillery, also shot, was placed on the critical list in a local hospital. Tillery was in "fair" condition.

Three other persons, including Asa Carter, head of the Birmingham White Citizens' Council, have been charged with assault with intent to murder. Carter is free on $20,000 in bonds, but Lewis Curry, 27, and Ira Evans, 32, remained in jail.

Mrs. Mary Nell Tatum, 32, was charged with being an accessory after the fact, and released.

ON STATE SEGREGATION LAWS

Advertiser Sun. 2-10-57

Byrnes Hits U.S. Court Actions

PEORIA, Ill., Feb. 9 (UP) — Former Supreme Court Justice James F. Byrnes said tonight that if federal judges are permitted to disregard state assignment laws and order school integration, "the American people will have as serious a problem in the Southeast as we now have in the Mideast."

Byrnes a firm advocate of continued racial segregation in the South, said the Supreme Court had substituted the courts for Congress" by its integration rulings.

"That means the power of injunction," he said. "The power of injunction is a dangerous thing, often abused."

The 77-year-old former U. S. Supreme Court justice and secretary of state addressed the annual Lincoln Day dinner of the Illinois State Bar Assn.

He said different judges would interpret integration rulings differently.

As an example, he cited the interpretation U.S. Circuit Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, N.C., placed on the Supreme Court's decision against segregation, as compared with that of a district judge at Clinton, Tenn.

Parker said the Supreme Court had not ruled that the constitution required integration but that it "merely forbids discrimination."

Parker, in other words, held voluntary segregation possible, Byrnes said, but in Tennessee a U.S. district judge took a different view.

He issued an order Jan. 4, 1956, which required Anderson County, Tenn., school authorities to adopt a "program of integration that will expeditiously permit the enrollment of Negroes of high school grades in the high school of that county."

"Subsequent events demonstrate the chaos that will result from these judge-made laws," Byrnes said.

He cited the use of troops and tanks to quell the riots which followed the integration order at Clinton. As a result of the riots, a number of persons face a contempt hearing.

He said they want to know whether a district judge, "instead of enjoining discrimination against individuals, has the power to issue an order requiring the adoption of an integration program."

Byrnes said that heretofore, it has been thought that when a person was alleged to have violated an order of injunction and at the same time to have violated the criminal law, the defendant was entitled to a jury trial.

Advertiser

"The people want to know if this has been replaced by the court," Byrnes said.

P. 2-A

He called upon Congress to exercise the power of Article Four of the Constitution to regulate the appellate powers of the Supreme Court.

38a

"Congress by legislation should protect the people against judicial abuse of the powers of injunction."

Byrnes said "pride of race" is not confined to the South, pointing out that 23 states have laws forbidding intermarriages of the races.

"It is useless for men to argue whether the racial instinct is right or wrong — it exists. It is nothing new," he said.

Byrnes said the people of the South are "overwhelmed by this problem of race which was inherited by them more than a century ago."

"Now, they earnestly appeal to you for understanding, as they pray that their burdens may be lessened, if not lifted," he told the Illinois lawyers.

Money for Bombed Alabama Churches

The National Baptist Convention's board of directors has allocated a sum of money to the bombed and burned churches of Montgomery, Ala. In addition, a wire was sent by the NBC directors to the Southern Baptist Convention (white) urging them "to take the leadership in helpuing to save our dear Southland from the crimes of those who would destroy law and order."

Patience Running Out, Roy Wilkins Tells Senate Group

World ~~Birm., Ala.~~ Atlanta, Ga.
Sun. 2-24-57 p. 1

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The Negro's long patience in the face of "continuous violence" may be nearing an end, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, told a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee here last week.

Supplementing his testimony before the committee on behalf of 25 national organizations, Wilkins, on Feb. 19, warned the committee members that he could not "predict what mood would be engendered" among Negro citizens if Congress failed to pass legislation assuring them "a minimum safeguard of the constitutional rights which have been so long denied them."

Mr. Wilkins testified on behalf of pending civil rights measures which would provide civil remedies against interference with the right to vote, authorize the Department of Justice to initiate civil suits on behalf of persons deprived of their civil rights, set up a special civil rights division in the Justice Department, and establish a bi-partisan commission to investigate violations of civil rights.

Queried by Senator Sam J. Ervin (D. N.C.), the NAACP leader agreed that the voting rights of Negro citizens in North Carolina are more secure than in Mississippi or Alabama. However, he pointed out, there are only about 145,000 registered Negro voters in the state out of a potential of 550,000. This is far below the national average, Wilkins said, and would seem to indicate restraining factors which keep nearly three-fourths of Negro citizens of voting age away from the polls.

OUTRAGED BUT PATIENT

Recalling that "the period from last September up until last week has been marked by almost continuous violence directed at Negro citizens and groups in the South who seek the elimination of discrimination and segregation," Wilkins told the senators that "Negro citizens have been outraged, but they have been patient."

Thus far, he said, "our people have maintained their hope in spite of specious talk, rebuffs and violence. Under advice of some dedicated men they have followed a non-violent course in the face of extreme provocation. Under advice of others, notably the NAACP, they have placed their trust in the law, the courts, in legislative bodies, and in the orderly processes of government."

"What they are asking of this Congress, and what sincere men of both parties are seeking to give them, is a minimum is being challenged."

Negro potential seen needed in U. S. economy

Tribune p. 5
Wed. 2-10-57
Los Angeles, Calif.

WASHINGTON — Restricting the potential of Negro labor, denies society "urgently needed manpower skills" while the Negro is "forced into an even more marginal position in the American economy," Herbert Hill, Naacp labor secretary, warned here today.

Addressing the annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, Hill said, "A basic need today is to make possible the full realization of the individual Negro's talents and abilities in terms of industrial and engineering skills, to eliminate all the restrictions and limitations which prevent Negro youth from becoming highly skilled workers."

Restrictions center in large part on refusal to admit qualified Negroes into apprenticeship training programs in industry and into other forms of vocational training, Hill explained.

"It is evident," he said, "that, despite great changes in the employment and occupational characteristics of Negro wage earners in the last 10 years, the economic standards of Negroes remains substantially below that of the white population."

The Naacp, Hill said, has "urged that all forms of public support be withdrawn from discriminatory apprenticeship programs, including use of public school buildings and other facilities."

Magazine Study Says Discrimination Less In North, but Still Extensive

Negro Progress 'Far Greater' Than In South

Courier-Journal Louisville Ky. Thurs. 3-7-57

New York, March 6 (AP)—Life Magazine said today that while Negroes have made far greater social progress in the North than in the South, they are still plagued by countless forms of discrimination in the North.

The magazine published results of a survey of Northern Negroe life in an article titled "The Negro and The North." It was a follow up to a survey of Southern segregation published last September.

'Thousands Hold Good Jobs'

"The North has done far more for Negro dignity than the South," said the magazine. "In the past 15 years, Negroes have advanced faster there than in any previous time, and their political equality is now assured.

"Thousands of Northern Negroes hold excellent jobs, some with white employees under them. Hundreds of thousands of Northern Negroes have social contacts with their white friends.

"In general they fare better and earn more than in the South. This is why Negroes in the North have roughly quadrupled since 1920 while the number in the South has risen a mere 30 per cent.

"Yet Northern Negroes keep encountering walls of exclusion which result from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox, and hypocrisy.

"Some Negroes are jammed into ghettos more rigid and more squalid than many of those in the South. . . ."

Difference Called Great

Still, the magazine said, "an enormous difference exists between legal segregation in the South and practices in the North, where discrimination is a matter of social pressures."

Life described the difference in this way:

"In the South, resistance to desegregation is open and blatant. In the North, it is covert. In most of the South, segregation is still a way of life to be defended. In more and more of the North, discrimination is coming to be recognized as a wrong to be corrected."

Magazine Reviews Progress On Discrimination

SOUTH STUDY EARLIER

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, March 6.—Life magazine said Wednesday that while Negroes have made far greater social progress in the North than in the South, they are still plagued by countless forms of discrimination in the North.

The magazine published results of a survey of Northern Negro life in an article titled "The Negro And The North." It was a follow-up to a survey of Southern segregation published last September.

"The North has done far more for Negro dignity than the South," said the magazine. "In the past 15 years, Negroes have advanced faster there than in any previous time and their political equality is now assured.

Fare Better, Earn More

"Thousands of Northern Negroes hold excellent jobs, some with white employes under them.

"In general they fare better and earn more than in the South. This is why Negroes in the North have roughly quadrupled since 1920 while the number in the South has risen a mere 30 per cent.

"Yet Northern Negroes keep encountering walls of exclusion which result from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox and hypocrisy.

"Some Negroes are jammed into ghettos more rigid and more squalid than many of those in the South. The Northern white violence against Negroes at Trumbull Park in Chicago since 1953 has been as bad as any Southern white violence in Montgomery, Ala.—and has drawn a peaceable Negro response modeled on Montgomery."

Resistance Is Covert

Still, the magazine said, "an enormous difference exists between legal segregation in the South and practices in the North, where discrimination is a matter of social pressures."

Life described the difference in this way:

"In the South resistance to desegregation is open and blatant. In the North, it is covert. In most of the South, segregation is still a way of life to be defended. In more and more of the North, discrimination is coming to be recognized as a wrong to be corrected."

Some of the problems encountered by Negroes in the North at present were listed as:

"Negro real estate men find few attractive houses anywhere for their clients, and seek to open new areas for Negroes. They face many obstacles.

"From artists to day laborers, Negroes in the North find themselves excluded from work which white men may do . . . no top American symphony orchestra employs any Negro instrumentalist — although Negroes sing at the Metropolitan Opera . . .

No Place For Surgeons

"There are no Negro surgeons at any of Chicago's 77 private hospitals except Provident. Only a half dozen of these 77 private hospitals accept Negro patients in appreciable numbers . . . In many places in the North, Negro doctors and patients are likely to get a similar short shrift.

"Dozens of Midwestern towns refuse to let Negroes work as clerks. "Some large unions (E. G. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the National Postal Transport Association) still have bars up against Negroes.

On the other hand, the magazines listed these points of advancement for Northern Negroes:

"Today qualified Negro engineers find a readier acceptance in the North than any other professional group. The whole 1956 and 1957 classes of engineers at Howard, a Negro university, had fine job offers long before graduation.

"In the North, 15 states and 36 cities have laws which forbid discrimination against Negroes. Negroes can now frequent most leading Northern hotels, restaurants and theaters, although they still feel a little uneasy about it because pretexts are found to turn them away."

Battle in South today may decide destiny of world

Afro-American Balti. 3-2-57 P. 6

Baltimore Md.

ANNAPOLIS, Md.—"This is it—and the South knows it. If they don't win this one, they will finally have lost the American Civil War."

Dr. Rayford W. Logan, professor of history and dean of the graduate school at Howard University, made the statement to a rally sponsored jointly by the Anne Arundel County chapter of the NAACP and the Annapolis chapter of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority Wednesday night at the First Baptist Church here.

He paid tribute to those who have stayed "in their homes in the South — fighting the problem where it is," and asked his audience of about 200 to "send them aid."

"This battle for liberty in the South today may well determine the destiny of the world," he said, and called the Rev. Martin L. King Jr., "one of the real heroes of the modern world" for his non-violent leadership.

IN A QUESTION —and—answer session that followed the address, Dr. Logan answered that "in my opinion President Eisenhower is not going to make the address to the South as he has been asked to do."

He emphasized that "I do not make predictions, on this or anything else," but he quoted the President as saying to the South earlier: "It makes no difference whether I endorse the Supreme Court's decision or not."

On the basis of this statement, he said, he feels that the President will not speak to the South on current racial violence and lawlessness.

"If he does, however," Dr. Logan added, "it will be because Sherman Adams (top Presidential aide) and other astute advisors tell him that it is the expedient thing to do."

IN FURTHER answers to questions, he said that Attorney General Brownell "has not made a single case" on the bombings in the South.

He explained that the American policy of federalism — through which the Constitution guarantees certain rights of the states, forbiding jurisdiction by the Federal Government—often makes it difficult for the Federal Government to exercise power against crimes in the states.

"But," he said pointedly, "the Federal Government has shown more skill in moving across state lines when colored people were not involved than when colored people are involved."

To illustrate this, he mentioned the present law which makes kidnapping a Federal crime. It grew out of the famous kidnapping of the Lindberg baby, 1932.

Although the Federal Government has made no cases in the bombings in the South, "it would find some ground to do so if it really wanted to do so."

* * *

DR. LOGAN deviated widely from his prepared text to tell of his experiences in Atlanta in the 1930's as a teacher at Atlanta University.

A man of fair complexion and a freckled face, Dr. Logan told how he joined a parade of the Ku Klux Klan, and followed them to a rally in Mayo Park.

"It was one of the worst experiences I have ever had," he said.

Hiram Evans, then Imperial Wizard of the Klan, whipped the crowd of men and women into "screaming hysteria," he said, by telling them of how he would like to have been part of a lynching party that killed a colored man shortly before that in Texas.

At the Klan rally, he said, Evans asked the crowd for all to raise their hands if they would like to have been in the lynching party.

"I didn't raise my hand," he said, adding that a woman in back of him made comment of it to a man who gave him a long stare, but no more.

As they paraded through the streets, they (the Klansmen) were more afraid than the colored people looking on," he said.

"We have stopped running," he said. "They were wrong when they thought the colored people were going to run in Montgomery, Clinton and elsewhere down South."

* * *

DR. LOGAN TOOK strong exception to oft-made charges that the NAACP is Communist - infested.

"If it were, it would be on the Attorney General's list (of subversives). It is not. And not one out of 10 who makes the charge believes it.

"Too many persons in our country are being frightened by the charge — especially in the South."

He said that those who failed to support the NAACP because of fear "should get down on their knees and ask God for courage."

IT HAS been the Supreme Court that has brought gains to our race during the last 40 years, and the NAACP has been responsible for the cases and for winning them."

ALTHOUGH DR. LOGAN strayed widely from his prepared text ("Democracy — America's Most Powerful ICBM"), he did discuss what he meant by the title of the prepared statement.

"Now we have almost reached the ultimate in man's foolishness — the ICBM," he said.

He explained that the ICBM (inter - continental ballistic missle) is capable of "destroying hundreds of thousands of Russians—and Americans."

He pointed out that an exchange of blows with today's modern war weapons is capable of destroying the world or leaving "whoever is left" deformed "for generations to come."

"I don't know any better way to die than to lay down one's life to make this country free for democracy," he said.

But the World War I veteran officer offered "real democracy" as an alternative to modern war.

"It is my firm belief that democracy, as I understand it, is the most powerful weapon the United States has in meeting the propaganda of the Russian cold war."

Mob Rule Hurts U.S. Abroad Powell Tells Eisenhower

U. S. Representative Adam Clayton Powell, of New York is shown as he returned on the SS United States, Tuesday. He is displaying the front page of a London, Eng., tabloid which featured the segregation crisis in our Southland. The picture on the front page is that of Dorothy Counts, colored girls barred from a school in Charlotte, N. C. Racial violence in the South already has had "a calamitous effect on U. S. prestige" in Europe and all over the world, Rep. Powell said on his return from a European mission.

Meanwhile, President Eisenhower this week agreed to meet with Rep. Powell to discuss racial violence in the South. Journal & Guide, Norfolk, Va. P. 11 Sat 9-28-57

Exiled By Faubus

Advertiser P.A.V. Mon 9-16-57 Montgomery Ala.

Not only is Arkansas taking a licking in national and international opinion currently, the state is also bottom in expected population growth by 1970.

Latest projections show Nevada's expected growth of 92% highest in the nation. The national average will be a gain of 27%. Arkansas is expected to lose an astounding 20%. Alabama is eighth from bottom with an expected 5% increase. Mississippi ranks next above Arkansas with an expected loss of 6%.

38a General

We confidently expect to see the hasty conclusion by experts that Faubus is chasing citizens out of his state faster even than Mississippi. That the out-migration is due to a complication of economic factors will be ignored.

Ignored also will be Arkansas' previous history of good race relations and the fact that the projection was prepared before the battle for Little Rock.

MONTGOMERY-SCHOOLED ACTOR

Stepin Fetchit Says Negro Has More Friends In South

MEMPHIS, Oct. 15 (AP)—Stepin Fetchit, retired Negro comedian, said today the Negro will find more friends and more help in the South than he will "among the supposed to be liberals posing as his greatest friends" in the North.

The former movie actor told a Press Scimitar reporter in an interview that he had always been treated well by Southern whites.

"My only trouble," he said, "has come from fellows supposed to be liberal out of New York City . . . The Negro will find that some of his greatest friends have been and will be Southerners."

Stepin Fetchit, whose real name is Lincoln Perry, symbolized carefree laziness in his career as a comedian. He said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People played a part in his retirement several years ago.

"My wife got me to fire Stepin they said the lazy character I portrayed belittled the colored race."

Perry is a native of Key West, Fla., and attended school in Montgomery, Ala. He is visiting a cousin, Dr. W. A. Bisson.

USIA Fails to Counter Racial Stories Abroad

By the Associated Press

The United States Information Agency said today it did not succeed in countering sensationalized stories on United States race relations in many newspapers abroad, despite a special effort to depict progress in this field.

The agency's report, published yesterday, covered the first six months of 1957, hence did not touch on the effect abroad of the September crisis in Little Rock, Ark., over school desegregation and the ordering of Federal troops there.

But the report listed "American racial problems" among those which required special USIA attention during the six months because "Communist propaganda built (them) up as unfavorable to the United States."

"Soviet propagandists strongly publicized every anti-integration incident in the United States," USIA reported. "USIS (the United States Information Service, USIA's overseas division) presented the actual record of progress toward integration in the schools and elsewhere.

"The effort did not succeed in blanking out heavy press usage in many countries of sensationalized stories on the issue."

The agency, charged with supporting United States foreign policy through information and cultural means, listed among situations in other fields exploited by Communist propagandists and requiring special SUIA efforts:

1. The controversy as to whether a United States court-martial or Japanese courts should try a United States soldier accused of killing a Japanese woman and in general "the complex questions concerning the status of American forces stationed in other countries."

2. United States nuclear weapons tests — "the Soviet press gave repeated emphasis to our nuclear tests, declaring the yshowed that United States proposals on disarmament are meaningless, but failed to mention USSR tests."

The agency said its programs in Western Europe were the hardest hit when it trimmed operations to conform with the reduction Congress voted for the year beginning last July 1, allotting USIA $95.1 million, compared with 113 million for the previous year.

Egypt Orders Voice Of Arabs Radio To Hit At U. S. Integration Crisis

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Egyptian government has ordered its powerful Voice of Arabs radio to hit hard at the troubles in the United States over integration.

And the Communist press is advising the world to turn its eyes to Little Rock and Nashville instead of worrying so much about Hungary.

These are examples of the way the school segregation story is affecting the United States abroad.

The Egyptian directive, reported in Cairo Thursday, is for the Voice of Arabs to go all-out particularly in its broadcasts to Sudan, whose southern people are dark-skinned and mostly pure African. The same directive is reported to have ordered increased attacks on "imperialists," particularly the United States.

Soviet newspapers are focusing on treatment of Negroes in the U. S. after a slow start on the current story. The newspaper "Soviet Russia" said Thursday the world press should turn its complaints to that instead of Hungary. It called foes of integration "white men with black souls."

The Soviet trade union paper Trud captioned pictures of National Guardsmen in Little Rock: "Soldiers Against School Children."

Hungary's Esti Hirlap, in an article headlined "School War in Little Rock," said the five-nation UN committee which accused Russia of oppressing Hungary should "make a study trip up the Arkansas River."

The racial situation has been mentioned briefly in UN debates on Hungary. Peter G. Voutova of Bulgaria told R. S. S. Gunewardene of Ceylon Wednesday that he might have trouble if he went to Little Rock. Gunewardene was one of the UN committee that made the report on Hungary.

Gunewardene commented that he had visited every state in the union and that at Montgomery, Ala., "They rolled out the red carpet."

In South Africa, whose government pushes a policy of racial segregation, the press has given restrained treatment to the story, mostly on inside pages.

Newspapers of India also have given only moderate attention to the story. Hindustan Standard said that despite the outbreaks of violence, racial "prejudices of the past in the United States are slowly yielding."

In Ghana, the newly independent state of West Africa, and in Western Europe the troubles received major attention.

Integration has received heavier play in Rome newspapers than any American story in months except for the Confidential magazine libel trial.

Our Opinions

Recession And Race Prejudice

A recession in the American economy is already under way according to the Federal Reserve Board which acted last week to ease the flow of money. The Board, in a statistical report, noted that over-all industrial production in October fell two points from September, bringing it to the lowest level since last year's steel strike. It was four points below the October, 1956, level.

As a result of an anticipated slowdown in production, unemployment may separate 4,000,000 workers from their jobs this winter. At the peak of the recession last year there were 3,200,000 unemployed.

It is believed that the drop in industrial production has been a major factor in the Federal Reserve Board's action in reducing the discount rate from 3½ to 3 percent. This makes it easier for borrowers to get loans, and generally pumps a little inflation into a sagging economy.

That the downward trend has started is indicated by other signs. There has been a steady decline for the past two months in personal income, non-farm employment, and retail sales. However, long before signs were noticeable, bank loans to business, new orders for durable goods, steel operations and commodity prices started downward.

Negro business communities will feel acutely the adverse effect of the recession. Especially is this true of Negro farmers whose applications for loans are turned down flatly by banks that were formerly friendly and cooperative. With the passage of the civil rights Act, and court enforcement of school integration, hostility has crept up in many transactions where none existed before. Banks in many a Southern community are refusing loans to Negro farmers and businessmen have been denied commercial credit.

Of the four million workers who are expected to be idle this winter, the proportion of Negroes in their ranks will be, of all probabilities, at a ratio of 10 to 1. Such a disparity must be reckoned with as one of the weak spots in our economic system. Dissatisfied and hungry workers do not make loyal citizens. America's survival may well depend on the loyalty of its citizens.

Laymen Petition Pope To Stop Integration

Courier-Journal P. 7
Fri. 8-9-57 Louisville, Ky.

New Orleans Group Bypasses Archbishop, Challenges Right To Define Matter of Morals

New Orleans, Aug. 8 (AP)—The Association of Catholic Laymen—bypassing its archbishop—Thursday asked Pope Pius XII in Rome to stop racial integration in the church.

In a letter that challenged the right of Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel to define a matter of morals, the group of New Orleans Catholics asked:

1. That Archbishop Rummel be requested "to take no further steps" toward integration of white and Negro Catholics pending a papal pronouncement.

2. That the papacy decree that segregation is not morally wrong and sinful as the archbishop has said it is.

The letter also listed types of segregation in regions of the nation and the world outside the South.

Archbishop Rummel said he had no immediate comment. He said he would issue a statement later.

"For over two years now," the letter to Pope Pius said, "conscientious and sincere Catholics in the archdiocese of New Orleans have been confronted with the strange doctrine, propounded by our archbishop, his excellency, Joseph Francis Rummel, that the segregation of the white and Negro races is 'morally wrong and sinful.'

Concept Called New and Strange

"Indeed, this concept is both new and strange, for even the clergy and the church itself have participated and are participating in the perpetuation of this type of segregation by, among other things, sanctioning the establishment and maintenance of separate churches and schools.

"Despite the fact that no competent attempt has been made to offer a conclusive proof to establish the validity of the principle, nor to demonstrate a bishop's authority to define a matter of morals, Catholics have been admonished that they are bound in conscience under pain of possible serious sin to accept it."

As a result, the letter said, educated Catholics have become demoralized and uneducated ones scandalized.

"For the good of souls," said the letter, "something must be done and done swiftly."

The letter said some clergy had advised the laymen that the Pope would not consider the question worthy of direct attention, but "we cannot be convinced that this is so."

Catholic consciences, the letter continued, seek to find out "whether the separation of any people or race from any other people or race is in itself 'morally wrong and sinful.'"

Will Accept Papal Decision

"We respectfully submit that, viewed in this light, the resolution of this question of world-wide significance becomes a most serious obligation of your holiness."

Jackson G. Ricau, association executive secretary, said the letter closed with assurance the association would accept as final a papal decree.

The association's letter came only a few weeks before the start of the 1957-58 parochial school year.

The archbishop, however, indicated that conditions must be right before he would order integration. There has been no indication whether the traditional segregation would be abolished when Catholic schools open next month.

Emile Wagner, Jr., association president and a New Orleans lawyer, estimated membership at 2,000 to 3,000.

Segregation Called Widespread

The letter emphasized that it sought not only a ruling on the morals of segregation as it affects the Southern Negro. It said that while segregation of Negroes from whites "obtains openly here, it is equally true that it obtains throughout the rest of the nation, although great pains are taken to deny the fact in many areas."

"Besides," it said, "there are other types of segregation in this country as well as in the rest of the world. . . ."

Archbishop Rummel has been a leader in efforts to integrate Catholics in the archdiocese of New Orleans. In October, 1955, Archbishop Rummel suspended Masses at St. Cecilia Mission at Jesuit Bend, 12 miles south of New Orleans, after parishioners objected to a Negro priest assigned to the mission by the archbishop. The suspension is still in effect.

Pope Pius II Said Behind Race Mixing

Daily News
Sun. 8-11-57
Jackson, Miss.

By CHARLES W. RIDLEY

VATICAN CITY, Aug. 10—(UP)—Pope Pius XII fully supports Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel of New Orleans in his fight against racial segregation in the church, a high Vatican source said today.

It appeared that the Vatican, indirectly, would reject an appeal to the Pontiff by the New Orleans Association of Catholic Laymen asking him to halt the archbishop's program of racial integration.

The source said the church's stand was contained in the first encyclical of the Pope's reign issued Oct. 20, 1939. In that encyclical entitled "Summi Pontificatus" (Of the Supreme Pontificate) the Pope declared all men "equal sons in the house of the Father" once they have been baptized and enter the church.

However, the source said it was unlikely that the Pontiff himself or the Vatican Secretariat of State would reply directly to the appeal of the New Orleans Catholics.

He said a reply probably would be made either through Msgr. Amleto Cicognani, the apostolic delegate to the United States or through Archbishop Rummel himself.

HAS TAKEN STAND

A direct answer from the Pope was not necessary, the source said, because the spiritual leader already has taken his stand that segregation is sinful.

Archbishop Rummel ruled that segregation in the church was "morally wrong and sinful," a statement which the semi-official Vatican newspaper "Osservatore Romano" has echoed frequently in sharp editorial language.

In October, 1955, Osservatore said it was the duty of American Catholics to erase the "color smudge." At the time, Archbishop Rummel had closed down the St. Cecelia mission at Jesuit Bend, La., as punishment because the parishioners refused to accept a Negro priest.

The newspaper denounced segregation as "blasphemy" and "sacrilege."

An even more bitter attack on segregation appeared in the paper last Sept. 6 when it charged that racial discrimination in the United States was a "sin against the nature of Christianity."

Anti-Negro riots in Oliver Springs, Tenn., sparked that editorial in which Osservatore said race discrimination "mortifies" the United States and denies it the full flowering of its "genius."

Racial Separation Held 'Morally Wrong, Sinful'

CATHOLIC APPEAL FAILS

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

VATICAN CITY, Aug. 10.—Pope Pius XII and the Holy See stand squarely behind New Orleans Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel in his condemnation of racial segregation as "morally wrong and sinful," a high Vatican source said Saturday.

The source was commenting on an appeal sent to the Pope by a group of Roman Catholics in the New Orleans diocese. They asked the Pope to support racial segregation.

The source said it was highly unlikely that the Vatican secretariat of state would reply directly to the appeal. If anything, the source said, a reply would be made either through Msgr. Amleto Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, or through the New Orleans archbishop.

Reply Unnecessary

The Vatican source said a formal reply to the New Orleans Association of Catholic Laymen was unnecessary because the Pope already had made the church's opposition to racial discrimination crystal clear.

He said the Pope did this in the first encylical of his reign—"Summi Pontificatus" (of the Supreme Pontificate), issued Oct. 20, 1939.

In the encyclical, Pope Pius declared all men to be "equal sons in the House of the Father" once they are baptized and enter the church.

He reaffirmed this viewpoint in 1945 when a world Jewish delegation called on him to thank him for what he had done to help the Jewish people during World War II.

The Vatican City newspaper Osservatore Romano has strongly attacked racial segregation in the United States on two occasins in recent years.

In October, 1955, the newspaper said it was the duty of United States Catholics to rub out the "color smudge" of racialism from their "fine and generous" nation.

Followed Prelate's Action

This followed action of New Orleans Archbishop Rummel in closing down the Saint Cecilia Mission at Jesuit Bend., La., as punishment for the exclusion of a Negro priest.

"Racial exclusion is a sin against the nature of Catholicism; it's negation, it's blasphemy," the paper said at the time. "It is sacrilege."

The Vatican City newspaper attacked segregation again on Sept. 6, 1956, when it declared racial discrimination in the United States to be a "sin against the nature of Christianity."

The Osservatore Romano was commenting on anti-Negro riots at Oliver Springs, Tenn. It said persons who try to deprive Negroes of their rights should themselves be deprived of those same rights.

The mood in South today—I

Whites stiffen resistance, Negroes close ranks in 22 months

BY JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll staff representative

Events of the last two years have served to widen the gap that exists between the white and Negro races in the South.

The white South, in the last 22 months, has stiffened its resistance to the idea of integration with the Negro. Southern Negroes, on the other hand have closed ranks tighter than ever.

In an "exact repeat" of a study made 22 months ago, the Institute recently assigned its Southern staff of white and Negro interviewers to return to virtually the same areas and ask the same questions that they covered in the earlier study.

Just how far apart the races are today is evidenced by the following comments from interviews made in the same city with whites and Negroes—in areas not too far distant.

In Mobile, Ala., a white woman, the wife of a spray painter, said: "I just think that God intended no mixing of the races. The Negroes around here are pushing themselves in with the whites—I just don't know how we're going to work this thing out."

A Negro store owner from the Gulf seaport city commented: "The Negro schools just don't have the equipment that white schools have. And the white people here think Negroes are not up to par with them. It makes me mad. I just don't know how we're going to do this thing. I hope the people here will obey the Supreme Court.

Views of Southern white

WHEN THE VIEWS of Southern white—in all of the 13 states of the South—border areas, mid-South and Deep South—are added up, attitudes about the Supreme Court decision are virtually unchanged. The results today on the question, compared with those reported in February, 1956:

"The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN WHITES

	Today	Feb. '56
Approve	15%	16%
Disapprove	83	80
No opinion	2	4

The reasons Southerners hold to their views about the Court's ruling are also virtually the same — it's against Southern tradition, the races just weren't meant to mix, separate but equal schools work better.

If anything, this reporter noted that in the South today there is an even greater determination in the typical white person's voice when he tells you that "white and colored just shouldn't mix" or that "if God meant for the races to mix, He would have mixed them."

A 71-year-old retired farmer from the town of Bronwell in Terrell County, Ga. (Negroes make up 67 per cent of the county's population) was typical in his feeling and determination.

"Why don't I want integration" he asked. "'Cause it's just not right and it's just not constitutional. It never has been the way of life here and it never will be. We won't have it here in the South. I wouldn't say what we would do if it were forced on us—we don't know ourselves."

Mid-South stiffens

ONE INTERESTING THING that we noted was that while there has been little change in attitude toward the court's decision in the "border states" of the South—Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma—there has been a definite stiffening in resistance in the states of the "Middle South" Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina and Virginia.

Two years ago, the Mid-South states were approximately midway between the border and Deep South states (So. Car., Ga., Ala., La., Miss.) in their vote on the school ruling.

Today, the people of the Middle South vote virtually the same way as do those in the sister states of the Deep South—where over nine out of 10 express disapproval of the ruling.

How this study was made

In making its study of the South today, the Institute assigned some 90 members of its Southern field staff to return to virtually the same areas they worked in 22 months ago in a special segregation study and ask the same questions they did then.

To insure that unbiased replies were obtained from both races on this highly controversial subject, white reporters interviewed members of their own race while a special staff of Negro interviewers talked exclusively with Negroes.

As was the case 22 months ago, John Fenton of the Institute staff, along with another member of the Gallop office, toured the Southern states during the course of the study. Working as a "team", they sought to get behind the facts and figures and find out why Southerners hold to the views they do about segregation, politics and many other related issues.

The study thus offers the opportunity to measure the shifts in Southern opinion during the last two years. The results are based on the work of many experienced opinion reporters—not just one.

Talk about issue less

IN THE REPORT on our 1956 study, I wrote that "everybody is talking about segregation." Today, it is certainly uppermost in people's minds—but there is greater reluctance to discuss it openly.

As a well-to-do Atlanta matron, whose home is on fashionable Peachtree-st told us: "It's just not something that the girls' talk about over bridge." The prevalent attitude today seems to be one of "if we don't talk about it, maybe it will go away."

There is also evidence from the study that there has been a definite break-down in communication between whites and Negroes on the subject of integration.

This is not to say that whites and Negroes do not talk about the issue together. But when whites tell you they discussed it with Negroes, the conversation they mention is generally like that reported by a 69-year-old Dawson, Ga. farm housewife:

"I've talked with them about it—we talked about whether they'd be better off or worse in mixing. They don't want a change. They say please let them alone."

On the other hand, the discussions that Negroes reported having with whites usually run along the lines of that cited by a Negro school teacher from Lenoir, N. C.:

"They (the whites) said they think integration can work. We talked about the way we thought it should happen."

In brief, the evidence is that both the white and Negro South is hearing only what it would like to hear about the topic from the other race.

More privileges

DESPITE THE BREAK-DOWN in communications, both Negro and whites are agreed on one basic issue, namely, that the Southern Negro has made great progress in the last year and has more privileges now than in the past.

But even on this question there is little more than a "surface agreement"—a report on something that is a matter of record.

To the Southern white, more privileges for the Negro do not necessarily mean a betterment of relations between the two races. It is more often stated with an attitude of "look what we've given them and now they're causing all this trouble."

The typical Southern white, as a matter of fact, tends to feel that relations between the two races have gotten worse during the last year—or, at least, have not improved.

"Things sure are worse," said a 28-year-old wife of a farmer in Fitzgerald, Ga., "the Negroes are more forward—they don't give over to whites to be waited on first in the stores. And they have a lot more, too—why they have better schools now and it's much easier for them to get a job."

To the Southern Negro more privileges usually mean more integration—in schools, buses, parks and other areas. To him, the situation between the two races is at least as good if not better than it was a year ago.

"Of course, things are better," said a young Negro crane operator in Louisville. "Why? 'Cause we got integrated schools, parks, swimming pools and even restaurants in some places. Why wouldn't they be better?"

Throughout the 13 states of the South, our white and Negro interviewers constantly met with this difference in viewpoint from Negroes and whites. It is a difference that stems from a lack of communication and an uncertainty over just what the future will bring. In back of it are the views of two races sincerely convinced that their goals are good ones. Unfortunately, for both races in the South, these goals today would seem to be light years apart.

Professional agitators taught, dispatched—

Review of records shows Reds fanned South's racial strife

BY EDWIN STRICKLAND
News staff writer

The race issue in America today is "top priority" for our home-grown Reds and their Soviet advisers. News

The Negroes and whites caught in the destructive whirlpool of strife and emotions, are mere pawns in the Communist master plan which has been spelled out for us by the Communists themselves.

These conclusions are inescapable to one who takes the time and effort to look behind the scenes and see who is arranging the stage settings.

Last of a series

Also inescapable is a fact that may come as a shock to good Americans who have always been taught that Democracy is rule by the majority. P.3 Tu. 10-11-57

The shattering truth that has demonstrated itself time and time again is that the unorganized majority is voiceless and without the means of making its will felt. It is the highly organized, militant and often ruthless minorities which rule almost every facet of our national life today.

Chief among these militant minorities is the Communist Party, U. S. A., and the literally hundreds of "fronts" behind which it disguises itself.

Communism in America has many faces.

Responsible Southern leaders speak sincerely when they charge that behind Southern race incidents lurk the crimson shadow of International Communism.

Previous articles in this series have attempted to explore the basis for these charges. The findings are clear: The Communists and their fellow travelers have seized upon a situation of their own making to bring strife and divide the country's strength at a time when our national security hangs delicately in the balance.

Several states have undertaken to ferret out the Red fronts behind race incidents. Some fault has been laid directly at the door of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which has been barred from activity in Alabama and several other states.

But the fault goes much deeper than the NAACP, the facts indicate.

SOME LEADERS say we have been protecting too many "sacred cows" disguised under patriotic and religious labels.

Fully half of the officially labeled Communist fronts go under names which begin with the word "American." A large percentage begin with the words "Christian" or Religious" or some other word indicating the group to be religious in character.

Congressional hearings and numerous official investigations have established the fact that the Communists seek anonymity in highly respected organizations, then work from within to change the character and purpose of those organizations to make them fit into Communist plans.

Labor unions, cooperatives civic and patriotic groups, educational institutions, charitable organizations and even churches have been infiltrated by Red agents and their "yes men."

These facts are known to agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and often by leaders of the infiltrated groups. Only the latter, and an informed membership, can stop such use of their organizations by the Reds.

How can you tell whether an organization to which you belong is Red-infested, or in danger of becoming so?

1. Look behind its high-sounding statement of purposes and see whether it is really working for American ideals.

2. Read the list of its sponsors, organizers, donars and board of directors. If you find there are names of persons known to have connections with "front groups" it would justify you to look further.

3. If the end result of the policies of the organization would be strife or disorder, or would give aid and comfort to the enemies of our society, you're striking pay dirt.

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia charged that Communist are "preying upon members of both races" in creating discord. He has avowed to expose what he calls the entire Communist conspiracy behind the race issue.

ALABAMA'S attorney general, John Patterson, said his investigations have disclosed connections between race boycotts in Montgomery and Tuskegee, and The Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn., which has been called "a Communist training school" by the Georgia Commission on Education.

The school, through its own publications, stated that its field agents worked in almost every Southern city where race incidents have occurred.

The 23rd annual report of the school listed its "accomplishments" of the past 12 months. It listed 11 residential workshops, dealing with everything from labor union activity to the United Nations to "Public School Desegregation Workshop."

The report also stated that field agents of the school had worked in integration problems in Charleston, S. C., Columbia, S. C., Monks Corner, S. C., Tuskegee, Ala., Knoxville, Tenn., Oak Ridge, Tenn., Chattanooga and Nashville.

In Tuskegee, later the scene of a merchants boycott, the field agents "met with school teachers, clergymen, NAACP leaders, civic association representatives and Tuskegee students to analyze deadlock between white and Negro communities and discuss possible solutions. . . ."

In almost every place, according to the field workers reports, they met with NAACP leaders.

At Johns Island, S. C., May 29, 1955, Highlander representatives participated in an all day panel discussion on the following subjects:

1. Why should Negroes be organized?

2. Some of the causes for other races to overlook Negroes.

3. Who is responsible for less than 30 per cent of colored citizens in South Carolina not being voting citizens?

4. Does the buying power of the Negro, when wisely used, help change this condition?

THE LAST SUBJECT would seem to suggest economic boycott, such as occurred in Tuskegee.

Other activities of the school's staff, said the report, included attending:

1. Testimonial dinner for Judge J. Waites Waring, Charleston, S. C.

2. Staff Conference, Campbell Folk School, Brasstown, S. C.

3. Tennessee Council of Human Relations, Nashville and Knoxville, Tenn.

4. Southern Conference Educational Fund, Atlanta, Ga.

5. Southern Sociological Conference, Nashville.

At least one of the above mentioned, the Southern Conference Educational Fund, has been listed as a Communistic front.

The report also noted that "meeting with Highlander fund raising committees on the West Coast made it possible for staff members to speak to classes at the University of California and the University of Washington.

"During visits to Chicago and New York for similar meetings staff members spoke at the University of Chicago, Columbia University, Sarah Lawrence and New York University."

It might be well to note here that while funds for the school are raised nationwide, "scholarships" are offered only to people in Southern communities who wish to provide leadership along the lines taught at the school.

In July, 1956, the Highlander Report headlined its front sheet with:

"WE WILL EDUCATE FOR INTEGRATION IN OUR RESIDENCE SESSIONS, IN OUR FIELD PROGRAM, IN OUR COMMUNITY!"

It started off the report by saying:

"The immediate and challenging barrier to Democracy in the South is segregation.

"The immediate and challenging task confronting those who desire a democratic South is integration."

In other words, the school's chief aims in 1956, were identical to the stated aims of the Communist Party, U. S. A., in 1928.

The school likes to crow about what it calls accomplishments in areas where racial incidents have occurred. It publishes sheets called "The Story of John Island," and "The Montgomery Story," as examples.

THE MONTGOMERY story, as told by the publication, has Rosa Parks deciding her people "are not goin gto take it any more' 'and thus kicking off the bitter bus boycott.

It is interesting to note that almost every place that staff members of Highlander did field work in 1955, have become the scene of racial incidents.

In Tuskegee the issue is still unsettled. It is led there by Charles G. Gomillion, dean of students at Tuskegee. Gomillion is on the board of Highlander, as is Rosa Parks. Gomillion is also listed as a sponsor for the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

His other affiliations, most of them officially listed as Communist fronts, are as follows:

W. E. B. DuBois Testimonial Sponsoring Committee, sponsor, 1951. (DuBois, honorary head of NAACP, holds the distinction of having literally hundreds of Communist front associations — more than any other known American.)

First Line of Defense—signer of statement in defense of Communists. (Reported Aug. 29, 1948, "Daily Worker" page 9.)

Manifesto of Negro eLaders —signer of statement against outlawing the Communist Party, 1947.

Sotuhern Conference Educational Fund, member of board of direcetors, 1954.

Southern Negro Youth Congress, member of advisory board an dsecretary, 1947. (Officially liste d as Communist front.)

Are Negroes being victimized by their own organization, the NAACP, as part of a Red plan in America? Maybe so, maybe not.

The fact is, however, that 10 of the members of the NAACP's natiional board of directors, each have from 23 to 57 known associations with Communists fronts, including direct defense of the Communist Party, in some cases, and of convicted Communist in others.

This may account for the fact that the group has never been able to attract more than a skeleton membership in the South, and must depend largely for its funds from the North and Northern "foundations."

Along that line I will mention The American Fund for Public Service. It was a foundation, amounting to over $2 million, left by the late Charles Garland of Massachusetts.

The fund's own report for 1928-30, listed a gift of $100,000 to the NAACP, and another $5000 loan to that organization.

Significantly, perhaps, most of the other loans and gifts from this foundation were to:

1. Daily Worker, $6875.

2. American Civil Liberties Union (several grants).

3. International Labor Defense, $9975.

4. Max Eastman, for preparation and production of an historic film on the Russian Revolution.

5. Russian Reconstruction Farms, New York, $21,015.

6. Urban League, $15,000.

Those are only a representative part of the report, but clearly shows the makeup of the fund to be a deep red.

COMMUNISTS are not found on soap boxes or handing out leaflets. They operate from offices and respectable addresses. They are like termites which enter a timber, gut it to a shell and destroy its strength before being discovered. In many organizations today they entered just as unnoticed, work just as stealthily and in the end bring about the same ruin.

Old Thinking Now Outmoded

Russia astounded the world on October 4 when it sent aloft the world's first earth satellite.

Hardly had the flurry among American scientists abated before the Soviets, sent aloft their second man-made moon, this time bearing a dog.

The first satellite, weighing 184 pounds, and hoisted 560 miles up, is circling the earth at a speed of 18,000 miles per hour.

The second, weighing an unbelievable 1,120 pounds, was thrust into outer space 1,056 miles and circles the earth every 104 minutes at a slightly slower rate of 17,840 miles an hour.

The Russian moons, scientists agree, were made possible by the development of a new kind of fuel, unknown to our American specialists.

AMERICANS, accustomed to superiority in this field, have real cause to shudder.

For if the Soviets can project a missle in the atmosphere to that height, it takes little imagination to envision the same weapon carrying an atomic war-head aimed at any of our cities the Russians might select as a target.

So the soul searching has begun.

How, it is being asked, was it possible for a backward totalitarian nation to outstrip the leader of the free world?

How did we manage to fritter away our acknowledged superiority in the scientific and mechanical fields?

The search for answer proceeds at break-neck pace. But we venture to assert one need not look far to pinpoint the tremendous advantage we have given the Russians.

WHILE WE were forming mobs to drive an Autherine Lucy from an Alabama campus, the Russians were compelling ALL children to attend the best possible schools.

While eight children were being terrorized for trying to obtain high school diplomas at Clinton, the average Russian child at the end of his 10th grade had finished five years of physics.

While guardsmen with drawn bayonets were preventing nine courageous youngsters from entering Central High School, the Russians were requiring ALL high school students to take at least four years of chemistry, six of a foreign language and five of mathematics above the level of arithmetic.

The big advantage the Russians enjoyed over us was that while we were clinging to the ancient myth of racial superiority, they were clever enough to recognize that skin color has absolutely nothing to do with innate ability and that no one segment of the human family has a monopoly on brains.

The news that two young Americans who just received the Nobel prize in physics are natives of China is the latest evidence to support this fact.

AN INDIAN Foreign Ministry official, commenting on the launching of the twin Sputniks, said: "These developments make old thinking on world problems outmoded."

Unquestionably, he has succintly stated the cause of America's current scientific dilemma.

"Old thinking" is responsible for our lagging behind. Only "new thinking" will permit us to catch up and reclaim our long-held lead.

If the Sputniks can shake us from our dangerous lethargy in this regard, they will have served a useful purpose.

For only when we throw off the dead weight of the past will we be prepared to face the dynamic future with necessary renewed confidence and the united will to win.

RUSSELL ON THE AIR

Intercontinental Debater

He Fears Widespread Troop Use,

Javits Tells Russell in Radio Duel

Sen. Javits (R-NY) said Thursday that "there is a danger of widespread federal intervention" in further integration attempts throughout the South.

He and Sen. Russell of Georgia debated the racial issue on an intercontinental radio broadcast sponsored by the British Broadcasting Co. Javits spoke from New York, and Russell used the radio facilities of WSB in Atlanta.

Referring to his comment on the possibility of federal intervention becoming more widespread, he said: "But I hope and pray that it doesn't."

Immediately after that remark, he said, "I think that Little Rock may turn out to be a useful case in point." He did not say whether he meant Little Rock would be cited as a precedent in legal actions for school integration.

Declaring, "I am opposed to violence in any form," Russell said there is no racial problem in areas in which the Negro populations involved are only 4 or 5 per cent.

In fact, Russell said, "I will say there will be a great deal of integration where there are few Negroes concerned." He said that this integration would take place in border states, or in states which allowed a few Negroes to enter white schools in compliance with the Supreme Court decision of 1954, as in North Carolina.

The broadcast was moderated in London, and questioning the senators were educators and journalists in Paris, Johannesburg, South Africa and Rio de Janiero.

The 45-minute broadcast was divided into three portions: the first, a statement from each of the senators; the second, an interviewing period and the third, a discussion of the future in the matter of segregation. All participants could hear each other on the hookup.

Often, though, interviewers got lost in the verbal scuffle.

At one point, Antonio Collado, an editor in Rio de Janiero, asked

Russell whether the troops were sent to Little Rock to enforce integration or to eliminate violence. "That's a nicety that you'll have to decide for yourself," said Russell.

During another portion of the broadcast, when Javits had evidently embarked on a more detailed answer than Russell thought necessary, the Georgian said, "I think I'm entitled to get into this somewhere."

"Indeed you are," murmured the English voice, over the radio, but he was interrupted by a babble of questions from throughout the hookup.

Javits said the law was to be obeyed and justice should be provided for all persons.

Russell said that all right-minded persons in the South believed in equal justice, and "that the Negro is entitled to every right that the white man has, but there is nothing in the Constitution or Christianity that says the two races must enjoy these rights together." Russell said integration inevitably would lead to intermarriage, and thus, a "diluting" of the blood of the white race.

Javits replied that the theory of "artificial separation" in the South and the threat of intermarriage was an "apparition."

Wednesday night, portions of the rebroadcast were replayed over WSB.

At the end of the broadcast, as Russell and Javits and possibly the professor from Johannesburg were engaged in a simultaneous discussion, the BBC announcer, Robert McKinney, said, "Thank you very much for the discussion which showed characteristic American candor and vigor."

Here And There On Desegregation Front

Defender, Louisville Ky.
Pt. 2 Thurs. 10-17-57

• WISCONSIN — Sid Williams, a junior at Wisconsin University from Little Rock, is the first Negro to ever play regular quarterback for a "Big Ten" school.

Williams, a student of chemical engineering, won eight letters in high school. As a freshman at Wisconsin, he played end but was converted to quarterback in his sophomore year.

Along with his athletic prowers, Williams is president of the student council and a member of a national honor society.

Herbert Hill, NAACP labor secretary, revealed recently that, for the first time, Negroes have been admitted into local 8 of the Milwaukee Bricklayers Union.

Pointing out that he had worked for more than a year with the Wisconsin Industrial Commission and AFL-CIO officials to secure this admission, Hill called the action "significant because it is a successful attack against the discriminatory practices which are widespread in building trades unions."

Two Negro mechanic, Randolph Ross and James Harris, had initiated action before the Wisconsin Industrial Commission. The commission had ordered the Union to admit then but the union refused to do so.

The refusal to admit them had been sustained by the State Supreme Court of Wisconsin.

• FLORIDA — The new Constitution for the State of Florida which was completed last week contained new provisions for the prevention of integration in public schools. After a stormy session which a Senator resigned because stiffer action was not taken, a provision was passed which provided for the closing of the schools if Federal troops were sent in to enforce integration.

In a move to maintain segregation in public facilities, the city of Ford Lauderdale sold its Golf and Country club to a private golfing association of over half a million dollars.

• ARKANSAS — In direct contrast of 85 church leaders who held services for "observance of law and order and good will among men", 24 baptist ministers of Little Rock held a prayer meeting dedicated to the return of racial segregation. The ministers called for the return of the nine Negro students ot Horace Mann school from Central High.

Fifty criminal cases growing of the disorders at Central High school last month were postponed until November.

In postponing the trials, Municipal Judge Harry Robinson cautioned five defendants to "stay away from the school." All cases involve such charges as disturbing the peace, unlawful assembly, and resisting arrest.

• NORTH CAROLINA — Delegates to the 14th annual convention of the North Carolina State NAACP which was held in Charlotte Oct. 10-13 concentrated on plans for expanding present school desegregation programs and implementing all civil rights for Negroes.

At the session note was taken that "three North Carolina cities have desegregated their schools on a token basis."

Over in Greensboro the first case of violence since the integration began was reported.

A stick of dynamite was set off and thrown at the home of Elijah H. Herring, whose two children racially integrated the Gillespie Park school for the first time. Police seized four men for questioning shortly after the blast occured.

Little damage was caused to the Herring home and no one was injured.

• WASHINGTON, D. C. — An order that would have provided Army task forces for possible use in cases involving defiance of Federal Court orders was created and revoked, according to Army Secretary Wiber M. Bricker.

Brucker revealed the text of the order in response to a demand by Senator Russell of Georgia. The revoked order would have created such task forces in the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N. C.; 3rd Infantry, Fort Benning, Ga.; 1st infantry, Fort Riley, Kan., and the 1st Armoured, Fort Polk, La.

• NEW YORK — William Delgado, a dark-skinned caucasian and a partly disabled veteran, has moved from his newly rented house in Copiague after receiving telephone threats for "you niggers" to get out. Delgado said he searched for six months before finding the house.

Reporting that there were 15 calls in six days, Delgado said the caller told him that the house would be burned down if he didn't leave the all-white neighborhood.

Police saidt that they could do nothing because there had been no "overt action."

Gov. Averall Harriman recently denied a charge that the New York State Police discriminates against Negroes in appointing troopers.

The charge and denial was caused by a disclosure that the State Commission against Discrimination was investigating a complaint filed by three Negroes.

Harriman's office reported that the governor had written to the State Police Superintendent shortly after the complaint was filed saying that he expected the force "to be wholly free of discrimination." Defender, Louisville Ky

• NEW HAMPSHIRE — St. Paul School, a one-hundred year old boy's preparatory school at Concord, recently broke tradition and set a precedent by hiring a Negro Episcopal priest as a member of its staff. Pt. 6 - Thurs. 10-17-57

Fr. John Thomas Walker who had just completed a three-year pastorate at St. Mary's Episcopal church in Detroit was selected over six applicants. He teaches ancient history and sacred studies.

• OHIO — The Catholic Federation of Women's clubs recently announced the appointment of Miss Martha H. Frye as a member of its executive board for the year's program. Miss Frye becomes the first Negro to serve on the board of directors to this club which is a branch of the National Council of Catholic Women.

• NEVADA — According to reports, the authorities at the Naval Ordnance Depot at at Babbitt have begun a slow piece meal system of housing desegregation that leaves most Negroes living in one section of government base.

The South Besieged

Virginia Editor Suggests That The South Has Failed In Communicating With Other Regions; We Spend Too Much Time Convincing Each Other

Montgomery, Ala.

Shore 6-27-57

EDITORIAL IN THE RICHMOND NEWS LEADER

IT IS not in bitterness, but rather in a sense of bewilderment, that many a Southerner these days looks toward the Congress of the United States. He asks himself, as he reads of precipitate action on the "civil rights" bill, What has the South done to deserve this palpable insult? What could account for the hatred of the South implicit in the drafting and in the handling of this vicious measure?

One explanation is simply "politics," but that is too simple. Granted that some members of Congress are deliberately cultivating a vital bloc of Negro voters, other members who supported this tyrannical measure have an insignificant Negro vote in their districts.

We must seek elsewhere for some additional explanation, and it seems to us —we may be completely wrong in this— that part of the answer lies in two conditions: One of them subjective, historical, and probably not demonstrable, and the other more immediate and tangible.

The first may be a sense of envy of the South. The thought ought not to be brushed aside without sober consideration. Other major divisions of the United States have undoubted characteristics of great worth — the thrift of New England, the productivity of the Midwest, the industry of the Southwest, the expansiveness of the Pacific Coast. Yet the South, because it is the South, envies none of these. We do not covet our neighbor's life.

Instead, the South continues to exhibit certain traits of gentleness, civility, good manners, and resistance to "progress" that have identified this region since the very beginning of the republic. A different set of values obtains in the South; there is a genuine indifference to materialism, a deep-rooted abhorrence of the hucksters' hollow gods. The pace is slower here; we take more time.

AND possibly, quite possibly, the very serenity of the South invites irritation in our impatient brethren. The zeal to reform, the restless ambition to cast all things in the same mold—these frenetic forces rush upon the South and break upon the tranquillity we know, or used to know. And because we will not plunge into Change, or adapt swiftly to every passing conception of a New Order, a lust for power that is inherent in all men suggests that the South must be compelled to conform. Is the South poor but contented? Then it must be made rich and anxious. Does the South possess something of the spirit that others lack? Then this must be destroyed, so that all may be equally impoverished.

Strenuously as this sense of envy may be denied, by those who denounce the South most frequently, we have a feeling that it exists; it has always existed, and the South has always suffered by reason of it. But more is involved than this: A more immediate explanation for the South's condition of siege may be found in the South's failure to communicate its own accomplishments.

We talk too much to ourselves down here. We persuade each other. Somehow the South has failed to reach effectively beyond the Potomac; somehow we have failed to sell our story abroad in the land. Those of us who have lived all our lives in the South, to be specific, know of the almost incredible gains of the South Negro in the brief 90 years since Reconstruction.

WE KNOW that the Negro has advanced farther and faster in the American South than he has advanced anywhere in the world, in terms of political equality, of material wealth, of creature comforts. We know that here, where racial separation has been most carefully observed, the Negro people have climbed highest and been most affectionately regarded by the society around them. We know, too, what sacrifice is represented by the sort of school shown above, which must be paid for largely by white taxpayers. All these things the South knows.

But others do not know these things. And because they do not know—because they accept the distorted picture of a "bigoted" South that is peddled by propagandists of the NAACP—it is perhaps understandable that at every turn the South is rebuked and her entreaties scorned. Our inadequacies and shortcomings are shouted from the housetops; our steady gains are muffled and interred.

This is the critical problem in "public relations," if you will, that sorely besets the South. We are not much given to horn-blowing or self-acclaim; we stand helpless when a Mayflower II spills the winds from the Susan Constant's sails; we suffer indignities because it is not fitting to acknowledge them. The South's modest tradition is to conceal its light beneath a bushel, and Southerners ought not to wonder that the light goes unseen.

We offer diagnosis, not prescription; and we do not intend to imply that many influential Southerners, among them Virginia's spokesmen in Congress, have not desperately attempted to gain sympathy for the South's position. Our thought is merely to suggest that in some fashion these efforts must be redoubled—that somehow the barrier in communications must be overcome. Otherwise the siege of the South must continue until we are overwhelmed; and when that time comes—when there is nothing in the South left to envy and our antagonists stand triumphant — it will be too late to sell a South, for the South will have ceased to exist.

Dixie Governors Vow Segregation

Defender Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 6-29-57

WILLIAMSBURG, Va.—(INS)—Two southern governors vowed to national audiences that their states will not integrate white and Negro children in public schools.

Speaking on the NBC-TV program "Meet the Press," Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi, said: a baby born in Mississippi today will never live long enough to see integration."

Asked the same question on whether Virginia's schools will "ever" be integrated, Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia answered: "When you say ever, I'd have to say I don't think so."

The program was televised from the annual governors conference at Williamsburg, Va.

RACIAL PROBLEM

At a news conference, Tennessee Gov. Frank G. Clement, whose state had the widely publicized Clinton school disturbance, called on the north to face up to its own racial problem.

"If we're washing dirty linen," he said, "let's wash all our dirty linen at the same time."

Clement said racial disturbances in Detroit and Chicago were given less press attention than those in Clinton and other southern communities.

Coleman was asked why only 7,000 of Mississippi's 900,000 Negroes voted in the last election, while almost half of the 1,200,000 whites votes. He answerd that "the great majority of them (the Negroes) are not ready to vote."

He added that "if they were qualified to vote there is nothing stopping them." But later when asked if it were not true that he didn't want the Negroes to vote, Coleman exclaimed: "I certainly said that."

On the supreme court's ruling that the southerners must integrate the white and Negro schools, Coleman said Mississippi had "no intention of complying with a decision that we feel is unconstitutional."

He told the newsmen that the Negroes "can educate themselves and should be given that opportunity."

When Stanley was asked about the supreme court ruling, he answered that Virginia was "willing to continue to operate our schools under legal and constitutional methods."

He explained that this meant "we will operate as we have in the past." Virginia schools are now segregated and Stanley said there was a state law withholding state funds from schools that integrate.

Labor Leader Tells Of Racial Progress In U.S.

Daily World Atlanta Ga.

7-12-57

TUNIS, Tunisia — A Philip Randolph, top New York union official, told labor delegates from all parts of the free world Tuesday about the progress being made in America toward wiping out racial discrimination.

Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Workers and a vice president of the AFL-CIO, received a standing ovation after his speech at the biennial congress of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The themes of his speech were that the United States could be proud of its accomplishments in safeguarding civil rights and that the test of the Western powers' devotion to freedom lay in the vigor with which they helped the African peoples attain political freedom and higher economic standards.

Advertised Segregation

A pair of Southern governors last week spoke to the nation over the NBC-TV program "Meet The Press" and spit the same type of race-hate segregationist venom so common in the states they preside over.

Throughout the nation went this attempted indoctrination that has about as much chance for future survival as a snowball in hades. Nevertheless, Governor J. P. Coleman of Mississippi and Governor Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia can go back to their respective areas boasting that they got in a free plug for segregation.

Coleman declared that "a baby born in Mississippi today will never live long enough to see integration." Additionally, he stated that Mississippi had no intention of abiding by the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the nation's public schools.

Coleman's reasoning, of course, was unsound, his premise baseless and his theory in direct opposition to the principles we accept as being part of democratic America. He achieved one important point, however, in the form of national advertising for segregation.

Stanley of Virginia felt the same as Coleman.

The world today watches to see if the states of Mississippi, Virginia and the rest of the segregated South dictates the laws of America, or if freedom, justice and the elements thereof still prevail. It must have been a joke on the nation, in the eyes of others, to hear two Southern governors stand and defy the highest court in the land in the name of states' rights and white supremacy.

It is indeed fuel for the fire currently being burned by those souls who stoop to the dictates of communism. Undoubtedly, it appears as making America a farce to that major segment of the world who possess dark skins.

Yet, through advertisements from the mouths of white supremacists, many of the attitudes concerning America are formulated. These attitudes, though erroneously led awry from the codes of our national government, weigh heavily in our dealings with our foreign neighbors.

At a time when America is attempting to establish and maintain friendly outposts in the world of nations to combat the imperialism of communism, such men as Coleman and Stanley advertising their brand of "racial communism" is indeed unfortunate.

We can only pray that people of good judgement and knowledge throughout the nation and the world pay no more heed to the nonsense of the South than they should to the dictums of communism.

'Desegregation will come in the North'

PHILADELPHIA — "The percentage of high school graduates among colored immigrants coming to Chicago is higher than among those of non-whites already in Chicago by two per cent."

"But the real desegregation showdown will come in cities of the North," predicts former AFRO writer Carl T. Rowan as he reflects the field of race relations over the nation in a series of articles appearing in the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Rowan, the only newspaperman to ever win three consecutive journalistic annual awards from Sigma Delta Chi, the journalistic fraternity, bases his visions on the great exodus of colored people from the South into great cities of the north.

* * *

"BY 1965," Rowan states, "there will be a million colored persons living in Chicago; under perhaps the most rigid residential segregation in this nation."

He said an almost similar situation of mass migration of colored people is occurring in Los Angeles, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and other major cities in the nation.

Rowan pointed out that as colored persons migrate to big northern cities, non-colored persons are leaving. He added:

* * *

"A CHICAGO Urban League study of adult immigrants showed that the percentage of colored high school graduates migrating into the city was higher than the high school graduate percentage of non-whites already in Chicago.

"Migrants," he said, "are a special burden because for the most part they are crude, uncultured, ne'er-do-wells, out seeking something for nothing.

BAPTIST WHO'S WHO

Ghana Student In America, Finds 'Disturbing Conditions'

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(ANP)—When the Rev. Richard D. Ansah landed in America three months ago from his native Ghana, first student from the new state to arrive in this country, he had an opinion about racism, not quite what he has today.

On arrival at Allen University in April, Mr. Ansah told a reporter that he liked America and had not encountered racial differences since landing a week before at New Orleans.

But this week the 48-year-old ministerial student, completing his seminary training in this country after raising his boat fare from the sale of pigs, was baffled and frustrated.

CONFUSED "BY EXPERIENCES"

The Rev. Mr. Ansah related three experiences which have confused him, all occurring late in June.

On that day:

"I decided to get a sandwich and a cup of coffee while waiting for my bus to Winnsboro, S. C., at the Columbia bus terminal," he said.

Attired in his clergy rainment, Mr. Ansah entered the cafe section of the station, an exclusive lily-white arrangement, and placed his order.

"The woman (waitress) told me they didn't have any cups for coffee," the minister said, adding:

"I saw several white men sitting at the counter drinking coffee from cups, and many other cups ready for use. "I asked her what she meant there were no cups."

Mr. Ansah said that by this time whites at the counter were noting the episode. The white waitress told him that she could serve him in the bus terminal's kitchen.

"MY WIFE NOT IN KITCHEN"

"I say to her, 'why should I go in kitchen. My wife, she's not in kitchen to prepare my food. I have no business in kitchen," he said he told the woman.

"Are you under race prejudice," Mr. Ansah said he asked the woman, who made no reply. Finally, she brought him a sandwich, but no coffee.

He left the sandwich untouched and later boarded his bus for Winnsboro.

Returning after church services that night, he said he had sat down still in his ministerial garb, on the third seat from the front, in the aisle opposite the driver.

A white passenger (male) instructed him to take a back seat.

"I asked him what did he mean 'back seat,'" Mr. Ansah said.

"I told him I paid the same fare, this seat was empty and I preferred it. I told him that your American Vice President Nixon had come to our country and had bowed before our rulers and that if necessary I'd call on him to get people straight about my status in Ghana," Mr. Ansah said.

He posed several questions to the unidentified passenger, who did not answer further. Mr. Ansah took the seat. The bus driver remained silent.

Two Sunday nights later, on another bus scheduled from Winnsboro to Columbia, Mr. Ansah said he encountered a similar experience with another white passenger.

His remarks were similar, but this passenger surrendered his seat for the 26-mile run into columbia.

"What I do not understand," he said, "is why some Americans try to suppress the colored man."

McKeldin Cites Gains By Negroes in U. S.

Star Wed. 9-4-57 P. 10-b

Washington, D.C.

DETROIT, Sept. 4 (AP).—Maryland's Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin said last night the United States is more inclined now than ever before to do something about the losses it has suffered by not developing the full potential of its Negro citizens.

38a

"The country realizes more keenly than ever before that it has been throwing away part of one of its greatest resources in not developing the full potentiality of this group," Gov. McKeldin said.

"I make that assertion without reservation because I have been in position to see what is going on and I am testifying as an eyewitness," he said.

Gov. McKeldin is serving his seventh year as Governor of Maryland. He is the first Republican ever re-elected to that office.

Cites Appointments

Gov. McKeldin made his remarks on the American Negro in a speech at the annual conference of the National Urban League.

He said he has appointed more Negroes to public omce than any of his predecessors, but he denied that he created opportunities for the minority group.

"I have never appointed a man to office solely on account of the color of his skin and I never will," the Maryland Governor said.

Gov. McKeldin said he is half persuaded that all minority groups owe something to the dictators such as Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin.

". . . They showed the world the horrible end to which race prejudice and race hatred inevitably leads," he said.

In other speeches, an industrialist and a union executive today urged Negroes to increase their skills and learn new trades and techniques to share proportionately in the foreseen prosperity.

The men are Robert W. Conder, vice president for personnel of the Chrysler Corp., and Carl Huhndorff, research director of the International Association of Machinists.

"You can't put a man on a skilled job simply by wishing him there," said Mr. Huhndorff to the inter-racial group dedicated to economic and cultural equality.

"The naked truth is," he continued, "that many Negroes are not ready to take advantage of opportunities that already exist. . . . I realize that the Negro has operated in a vicious cycle in the past.

"Because he had no job opportunities in the skilled trades, he had no reason to develop his skills. And because he had no trained skills, he could not break into the skilled trades." Mr. Conder told the delegates:

In my opinion the soundest way to improve the status of any major group is first to identify the areas of prime economic need that are clearly shaping up for the years immediately ahead and then to do everything possible to help prepare the members of the group to meet those needs.

"And if it is true that the need for people with skills and training and education is as great as it appears to be, the sound course for Negro leaders is to give maximum encouragement to their people in securing the necessary education and training to fill that need."

Vote favoring integration shows drop since last January

News

(American Institute of Public Opinion)

The civil rights battle on Capitol Hill takes place against a backdrop of increased opposition to the Supreme Court's decision on school integration.

Although a majority of Americans questioned in an Institute survey approve of the decision today, the vote in favor of integration—which had been increasing steadily over the last three years — is smaller today in all sections of the country than it was seven months ago, when sentiment in favor reached an all-time high point.

Today, 58 per cent of adults across the country approve of the Court's ruling. In January, 63 per cent approved.

THE DECEASE in the approval vote is proportionately greatest in the South but there has been a drop in the number who support the court's ruling in all other sections of the country as well.

First in a Series

The survey question, which Institute interviewers have asked at periodic intervals in the more than three years since the May, 1954 decision:

"THE U. S. SUPREME COURT has ruled that racial segregation in the public school is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Here is the trend of sentiment since the Institute's first study in the Summer of 1954:

SUPREME COURT RULING

	Approve	Disapprove	No Opin.
July, '54	54%	41%	5%
May, '55	56	38	6
Feb. '56	57	38	5
Jan. '57	63	31	6
TODAY	58	36	6

THE NUMBER of Southerners who disapprove of the Court's decision is greater today than at any time since the ruling was handed down in May, 1954.

As the following trend shows, Southern resistance to the decision reached its lowest point in January of this year when nearly three out of 10 Southereners supported the Supreme Court ruling:

SUPREME COURT RULING
—South Only—

	Approve	Disap. prove	No Opin.
July '54	24%	71%	5%
May, '55	20	73	7
Feb., '56	22	72	6
Jan., '57	27	67	6
TODAY	20	75	5

IN THE REGIONS outside the South, the vote today is as follows:

EAST: Approve, 76 per cent, disapprove, 18 per cent. No opinion, 6 per cent.

MIDWEST: Approve, 61 per cent, disapprove, 33 per cent, no opinion, 6 per cent.

FAR WEST: Approve, 75 per cent, disapprove, 20 per cent, no oponion, 5 per cent.

Outside the South, the sharpest increase in the number opposing the court's decision is recorded in the Midwest. Whereas one person in four in this area (25 per cent) opposed the ruling January, today one person in three (33 per cent) is opposed.

IN LOOKING for reasons other than the civil rights debate of recent weeks for the increased opposition to the school decision, observers might want to consider the several controversial decisions of the Supreme Court in the last few months.

A recent Gallup Poll showed that one American in five had changed his opinion of the court recently—chiefly to holding an unfavorable viewpoint of the nation's highest tribunal.

IN THE SECOND of a series of two articles the views of the public on the future of integration will be covered.

How do Americans size-up the racial situation on the South during the coming year? What approach do they favor in adopting integrated schools? How do they feel about the ultimate course of integration in the South?—(c)

Opposition To Integration Is Rising Throughout U. S.

Segregation Increasing in West!

Courier Sat. 8-31-57 p.3

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON (ANP)—It might not be merely coincidental that the jury trial amendment inserted into the civil rights bill was introduced jointly by a Southerner and two Western Democrats. It might also be significant that a Westerner joined with 17 Dixiecrats in opposition to the bill itself.

This is the opinion advanced in a recent report released by the Committee on Human Rights for the Western States.

Contrary to the general opinion that the West has no racial problem, the Human Rights Committee reports that segregation is rapidly increasing in the mountain and great plains states of the West.

THESE STATES have previously had "no civil rights statutes guaranteeing the ordinary 'day-to-day' basic human rights for every American, regardless of his race or color, in places of public accommodation," according to this study.

"The Supreme Court school decision has made the evil more apparent and revealed it as a blot and stain upon our American democracy. There are grave dangers to the nation and to the Western states, themselves in allowing the situation of widespread racial or color discrimination in public places to continue until those discriminatory practices crystalize into rigid patterns of segregation.

"With the South on the way toward desegregation, it would indeed be a tragic blunder for the Western states to move in a backward direction. To stand . . . to fail to enact corrective laws, is actually to go backward while the evil of discrimination worsens."

In an effort to point up the importance of this problem and the gravity of the situation, the committee made a state-by-state survey to show the gap between the democratic ideals and the practice of equalitarian principles.

THE REPORT showed that discrimination and segregation are prevalent in Bisbee, Warren, Lowell, Douglas and Yuma, Ariz., and that hotels, restaurants, cafes, bars and night clubs generally exclude Negroes in Tucson and Globe, Ariz. The same situation exists in Phoenix where the first-class hotels accommodate only "nationally prominent Negro personalities."

Segregation also exists in most of the leading movie theatres in Phoenix and Globe. Certain sections of Arizona have been labeled "little Dixie."

There is a policy of racial discrimination in taverns, bars, night clubs and places of entertainment and amusement in Boise and Pocatello, Idaho, according to the report. Most of the hotels and many of the restaurants refuse service to Negroes.

The report further revealed that many of the 500 colored soldiers stationed at the Great Falls, Mont., air base have been turned away from eating places, hotels, theatres and barbershops in that area.

There is only one place in Great Falls where Negro airmen can go for entertainment. display "Canadians Welcome" signs and then say, "Sorry, airmen, we don't serve colored people here."

THERE ARE ONLY three places in Butte, Mont., where Negroes may eat, and two of them are operated by colored people. Negroes are usually refused service in public eating places in Helena, Mont. Hotels of that state are still cool to Negro patronage although they will accept traveling Negro athletes.

The situation affecting the Negro in Nevada is almost on a par with that of the deep South. There are 5,000 colored people in Las Vegas but they can't gamble downtown with the whites, they can't live in the hotels, and they can't eat in the restaurants.

Negroes are humiliated and segrgated in the theatres in Las Vegas even when such names as Lena Horne or Billy Eckstine are on the marquees.

In New Mexico, discrimination against Negroes is as prevalent in Albuquerque, with its 100,000 population, as it is in Ruidoso, a small mountain resort.

In Southern New Mexico, near the Texas border, not only Negroes but Spanish-speaking people and Indians are subjected to considerable discrimination.

IN NORTH DAKOTA, the patronage of both Negroes and Indians is discouraged by first-class hotels and restaurants. Negroes are denied service in some restaurants, bars, taverns and places of recreation and amusement around Sioux Falls, S. D.

Courier P.6

A considerable number of restaurants in various cities in Utah have admitted that they do not serve Negroes, Mexicans, Indians or Orientals.

Negroes are refused service in hotels, motels, motor and trailer courts, restaurants, bars, taverns, bowling alleys, night clubs, pool halls, dance halls, swimming pools and other places of entertainment and recreation in Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah.

Places of public accommodation in Cheyenne and Laramie, Wyo., discourage and refuse service to Negroes. Repeated complaints have been made by Negro airmen at the Francis E. Warren Air Base near Cheyenne.

MANY OF THE Western states, however, are now enacting civil rights bills in conformity to a rapidly growing public opinion against discrimination. But no civil rights bills have been introduced in either of the Dakotas or Idaho. (Senator Church, one of the sponsors of the infamous jury trial amendment, hails from Idaho.)

Because segregation is no longer limited to the South but is rapdily spreading westward and will soon engulf the nation unless an immediate halt is initiated, the Committee on Human Rights for the Western States highly recommends passage of civil rights legislation.

"The evil practice of discrimination will not die by mere lapse of time but must be dealt with by affirmative corrective steps," the report concluded. Such steps would include "civil rights laws guaranteeing legal protection to all persons. Upon each individual rests the important and ever-present moral and religious obligation to see that such laws are enacted."

ONLY SUBJECT MENTIONED FOR 16 MINUTES

Troubling Question Of Integration Main Topic At Ike's News Conference

By ARTHUR EDSON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—Generally a presidential news conference is like sitting down with an encyclopedia and flipping through the pages.

Advertiser

The questions, like the articles in the encyclopedia, often seem totally unrelated, and, sometimes, not even having much to do with the real business of government.

But today was different. The questions, like the headline news, were almost exclusively focused on the same topic: The troubling question of integration.

Pittsburgh Pa. 10-4-57

For 16 minutes no other subject even was mentioned. In the remaining 10 minutes there were but the briefest of timeouts for the Middle East, for the budget, for what, if anything, does the administration plan to do about corruption in union-management relations?

As Eisenhower said, every question seemed to be on the same subject and some were deeply philosophical.

USA General

But now, a word about Eisenhower himself.

Probably as a concession to the cameras, he was dressed all in blue, light blue suit and shirt, dark blue tie. They made his eyes look bluer, and went well with his golf course tan.

For anyone seeking some sure, firm answers, this must have been a disappointing 26 minutes.

NO FORMULA

No statement of how long the troops would be in Little Rock. No formula for how this problem can be solved easily.

Instead there were such sentences as these:

"I don't know really of much more that can be done," and, "This is not, I admit, a very persuasive answer."

INTEGRATION FIELD

As the questions ranged over the integration field, and Eisenhower's attempt to handle them all, he raised his voice for emphasis only once. That's when he said: "The courts must be sustained."

Though there often are light-hearted moments at these gatherings, today there was but one. That was when the President was asked if he thought the Navy football team should play in an Oyster Bowl game in Norfolk, Va., before an audience that would be segregated.

JOINED LAUGHTER

Eisenhower kicked that one to the superintendent of the Naval Academy.

"I've got enough problems," he said. Seomwhat ruefully, he joined in the laughter.

Well, the conference ended, and Eisenhower went back to his problems.

It was a lovely day outside. The fountains on the White House lawn looked beautiful. Ditto for the flowers. Ditto for the falling leaves, some of which had been raked into a tidy pile. Nice for jumping in purposes should the Eisenhower grandchildren come visiting.

TYPICAL AMERICAN

The White House squirrels hustled about. Typically American, these squirrels. Though never spurning any free handout, they were toting nuts to their nests in a fine display of free enterprise.

You couldn't help thinking as you strolled by the White House, with the many problems that somehow, somewhere way must be solved, that this is one of those days when it's great not to be President of the United States.

VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD NIXON GAINS IN WAR ON RACE BIAS

Jackson, Miss. Sat. 5-11-57

Chicago — "Considerable progress" in ending racial discrimination in firms under government contract was announced here by Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon served as chairman of the first of a projected series of regional meetings of the President's Committee on Government Contracts. The committee, with Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell as vice chairman, includes 14 business, labor, and government members. It is charged with "the elimination of racial and religious discrimination in employment done under government contract."

The Vice-President told newsmen here April 30 that existing discrimination in the Chicago area follows a pattern which committee members believe can be broken. It stems, he noted, from an attitude which the committee has decided can be replaced with one of fair play. His fact-finding sessions here with local business, welfare, and government leaders were closed to the public and press.

Persuasion and Pressure

Noting that some 30 million workers are now estimated to be employed by companies holding a government contract for all or a part of their activity, Mr. Nixon emphasized that reduction and ultimate elimination of discrimination in these businesses alone should be adequate to bring about a nationwide atmosphere of fair treatment of all working citizens.

The committee's tools for this task, said the Vice-President, are two: persuasion and threat of cancellation of contracts.

Since August, 1953, when the President's committee was established by executive order, he added, persuasion alone has proved inadequate. But the committee can, nonetheless, recommend to the government agency issuing the contract that the agreement be dropped if an employer persists in refusals to hire capable applicants without regard to race or religious belief. Failure to upgrade workers on the basis of merit and seniority would also be grounds for committee action.

Mr. Nixon explained that committee members are not closely concerned with individual complaints from employees but with what these complaints add up to in terms of a general pattern of discrimination and prejudice. Committee attention is then focused on countermeasures, with the goal of building up the largest possible pool of skilled manpower for the nation.

Sat. 5-11-57

A part of the committee sessions here were taken up with meetings of officials from various contract-letting departments—a broad assortment of government agencies—to hear details of the committee's aims and methods. "We plan definitely to step up our activities," Mr. Nixon explained.

P. 4

Contracts Number Six Million

Underscoring the Vice-President's words was the announcement that the committee will shortly open in the city its first branch office to serve a four-state area. These states, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin, the announcement noted, make up a region marked by a heavy concentration of government contracts.

Contracts outstanding nationally now number about six million, and are worth some 15 billion dollars. Sooner or later, it is estimated in Washington, 85 percent of all American firms are involved in a government contract, as either a contractor or subcontractor.

One eastern employer of more than a thousand men and women spokesmen disclosed, forcefully defied committee efforts for two years. But "we wore him down" and recently he hired nine Negroes including several in skilled positions."

Following up a complaint from the South, committee staff members found a more complex case. An employee whose church urges him to spend a good part of each day proselytizing felt his employer was unfair in repeated attempts to keep him at his bench. No decision was made, staff men noted, since the government contract had terminated before they arrived on the scene.

Nixon and the Negro

News + Observer Thurs. 5-23-57 Raleigh, N.C.

By DORIS FLEESON

WASHINGTON — Vice President Richard M. Nixon today is headed toward the biggest gamble of his extraordinary political career. He is about to take actions which show him casting his lot with the pivotal states where presidential elections are won and lost.

P. 4

They are won and lost in such states — New York, Pennsylvania, California, Ohio and a few others—by way of the candidate's appeal to the crucial minorities of their great cities. Of those minorities none is more politically important than the Negro.

In one day Nixon pledged himself to moves of limited practical significance but of great symbolic appeal to the Negro.

The Vice President promised the Rev. Martin Luther King, Montgomery (Ala.) bus strike leader, to visit the South soon to look into fair employment practices. Nixon is chairman of the President's Government Contracts Committee and it will meet in a major southern city. The Rev. King is a power among his people now by reason of the Montgomery affair.

The President himself, incidentally, has so far refused to visit the South despite repeated urgings from Negroes who want administration prestige behind their cause.

The Vice President also has agreed to support a tactical maneuver which would help to get an early showdown in the Senate on the civil rights bill. In his capacity as presiding officer of the Senate he can rule that the House-passed bill can be put on the Senate calendar after two "formal readings."

The ruling would start a southern filibuster. But when and if the filibuster was broken the Senate could decide who was right by a simple majority, not by the two-thirds normally required to suspend Senate rules. Whatever the end of the debate on the bill itself, Nixon would be enabled to say he had done his part.

That the ambitious Vice President is turning left will not surprise the reporters who covered his 1956 campaign. He picked the big states for his most ardent efforts and he leveled the old human interest appeal at all of them. Being a pro, he avoided the slogan pitfall with which Arthur Larson, an amateur, has saddled the men around President Eisenhower—"modern Republicans."

Above all, Nixon is a pragmatist and the mathematics of his course is plain. A Republican has never been elected president without New York. Democrats of late have been elected by New York and similar big-city states.

Nixon obviously regards the Midwest as the Republican South. It may grumble but by and large it will stick to the GOP. It sounds callous to say it but the simple fact is also that the Eisenhower-Benson farm policies are liquidating the family-size farmer so fast he is almost ceasing to be a powerful minority. Benson's assistant secretary, Earl Butz, has said there were too many farmers, and he has done something about it.

The Vice President's story has by far the most potential importance in the relations of the administration with the South.

Certainly, changing economic patterns there are creating a Republican Party. But, as national chairman Meade Alcorn correctly said, "Stone-age" state laws make the Congressional task terribly hard. By a careful selection of House districts, plus good candidates, the ground can be broken to a degree. But any big crop, state-wide, cannot be looked for soon.

Rains Regrets Nixon Coming For Minority

Post-Herald Birm. Ala. Thurs. 6-20-57

Post-Herald Capital Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 19 — Rep. Albert Rains said today it's too bad that Vice President Nixon's visit to the South will be made only "in the interest of minority votes."

P. 26

"We in the South," said Rains, "so seldom have a chance to greet many national political leaders because we are a one party region.

"Now," he added, "we hear from the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery that Vice President Nixon will soon visit the Southland to look into fair employment practices and to aid the colored people in their 'civil rights' battle . . .

"I am sure we all hope Mr. Nixon has a pleasant trip when he comes South. It is unfortunate that his visit will be in the sole interest of minority votes."

The Rev. King visited with Nixon for two hours last week.

Afterwards, he said the vice president had said he would come South in the near future.

Lillian Smith asks for a leader

Afro-American
Sat. 6-15-57
Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA — Miss Lillian Smith, novelist and lecturer, last week asked for one southern "young white man" to rise up to equal the stature of the Rev. Martin Luther King.

Lamenting the lack of southern leadership during the past half-century, Miss Smith told Atlanta University's 86th commencement audience that the future lies in the development of leadership.

She stressed the need also, for loyalty of the people to their leaders in order that such leaders may remain leaders and not become martyrs.

* * *

MISS SMITH, who was awarded the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters by the university, charged the graduates with their responsibility as free people, living in a world of three and a half billion free people, declaring:

"Free people can jail artists, can say what shall be printed and said, can blow up churches and deny others their civil liberties unless they are restrained by conscience and reason.

"It is God who should be supreme," she concluded, "not the white race, not Communism, not capitalism."

The Source of Prejudice

(First In A Series of Two Articles)

By JOSEPH H. ROSE
Sociology Analyst

With permission of the author, the facts presented here on this controversial discussion may appear dogmatic. But they are the facts found in the recently released book, WHERE DO WE STAND? THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH TODAY.

Education is common knowledge acquired by the many. Knowledge is new education produced by the few. The process by which a belief is acquired by training is one of imitation, but the process by which a belief is produced by reasoning is one of origination.

Negro sociologists have been led to believe much about the source from which prejudice originates by their training, but they have not been led to know the source from which prejudice originates by their feeling and reasoning.

He, who develops a new concept about this source by his own feeling and reasoning will have to wait until a change takes place in the minds of Negroes, who have acquired an erroneous belief about it, before they will accept this new concept by their feeling and reasoning.

But Negroes' right to know is a basic heritage and when they turn their unknowing into knowing, the debased source from which prejudice originates against them, the last hurdle standing between freedom being obtained and the race problem being solved will be surmounted.

However, their ignorance of this source invites their attention to this biblical maxim: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth will make you free. For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known."

Interracialists

Negroes know little about the theory, "blood will tell," despite the fact, that they are no longer racialists but interracialists, with an interracial feeling of the blood of whites and blacks which makes them unprejudiced against whites. This also accounts for Negroes making whites feel more at ease when at their homes than whites make Negroes feel at ease when at theirs.

Whites are still racialists, with a racial feeling which makes them prejudiced against Negroes. Neither training and fear nor inferiority and superiority account for these two different types of racial and interracial feelings— one prejudiced— the other unprejudiced. These facts about prejudice have never been included in Negroes' training.

Some of the beliefs Negroes have acquired by training are as distorted as the knowledge that processed them. Especially was this true because the distortion offered the processor social and economic advantages. In the training Negroes are acquiring only a few facts are included which their interracial feeling and reasoning created about prejudice.

But prejudice against the Negro is as ubiquitous as air. Its existence against him is universal. But despite this fact, he refuses to challenge his training which alleges that this inherent disease whose cause once was discovered, a curef or it was not ofund? But despite this fact, white sociologists' training has led Negroes to believe training, environment and fear were the cause for the disease.

Training Misconcepts

One cannot be exposed to training without becoming victimizable, but for one to become a permanent victim of a type of training in which many errors exist without discovering them leads to this conclusion. The confidence Negro sociologists have in their training acquired, and the beliefs it has established in their minds, they believe are inviolable and sacrosanct, and should not be changed. For, in his conversation with many Negro sociologists, the writer is led to believe that some of them prefer prejudice to continue to exist against Negroes, than for any of their acquired beliefs about the source from which it originates, to be proven wrong.

But most of the Negro sociologists fail to see that at first, white sociologists made training the source from which prejudice originated. And when it became apparent that training might be challenged as being the real source, environment was included to strengthen training's claim. And when it was suspected that both training and environment would be challenged, fear was added to strengthen their claim.

Thus, like Harvard, Yale and Princeton, Training, Environment and Fear have become the big three, the trinity of the sources from which prejudice must be envisioned, from which it must be acquired, and from which it must be produced.

False Training

Negroes have come to believe that the belief they have acquired by training is their own belief produced by thinking. But they can be more certain about training producing their belief, than about training must first produce prejudice before boys and girls can acquire it by training. How can Negro sociologists ever come to know that training was not purposely used by white sociologists to process a lie for the truth, about a false source from which prejudice originates, because the real source was too shameful to be exposed by training,

Was this not reason enough for white sociologists wanting to hang the cause for prejudice on something more dignified? What could be a more dignified source than training upon which to hang the cause? The confidence Negroes had in training, based upon its many superficial accomplishments, made it easy for them to identify prejudice with training and to accept training as the source from which it is produced as well as the source from which it is acquired. This leads Negroes to believe prejudice would not exist if training was not the source from which it could be acquired.

Negroes, therefore, do not see the real source from which white men's prejudice originates against Negro man as being a pudency, and if the source which creates it was exposed, it would shame white men and shock the modesty of their women beyond compare.

It was a case, not where white men's prejudice was hurting them by knowing the source from which it originated, but one, where if Negroes came to know the source also, white men would then be hurt by their own prejudice and Negro men would be hurt less by it.

It would hurt white men, because this exposure of the source would force suppression and repression of much of the prejudice they had against Negro men which was the thing enabling them to steadily increase their economic advantages over Negro men. To prevent Negroes from knowing the real source, training, environment and fear were instituted as the camouflage sources for the real source.

Women Not Prejudiced

But if white women were as prejudiced against Negro men as white men are, white men would suppress much of their prejudice against Negro men. All women are negative of jealousy in their sex nature, from which prejudice originates. They are neither prejudiced against men nor women, based upon color. This accounts for white women's feeling of anger never becoming inflamed enough to lynch a Negro woman, on the grounds of sexual relations with some white man.

Behind every woman's interest in some man, there is another interest of greater importance, her concern over the security the man she is interested in can offer her. Inversely, behind every white man's interest in things material, there is a greater interest, his concern about the woman he loves. To protect this love, the white man allows his prejudice against the Negro man to transcend itself into his economy to prevent him from acquiring too much of the things material in which all women are interested.

And his indoctrination of prejudice, into the minds of his women, against Negro men is the extra precaution he takes to prevent them from becoming interested in some Negro man, because of his material wealth, should he, however, be fortunate enough to acquire it against white men's prejudice.

Most Negro men have just enough to subsist on, but nothing to save from their labor to depend upon in their old age except their social security or old age pension. Is this the true yard stick of progress based upon America's high standard of living? Does it not go far beyond simply buying or owning a home? Or does it mean having some money over and above the subsistence and maintenance of his home for investment?

The Churches Have A Duty In This Crisis

It is encouraging to listen to some of the sermons and the reading or hearing of strong pronouncements made by those whose charge it is to carry the gospel to the nations. This is a time of action and thought on the part of all who essay to be the leaders of the people. The world and the country as well as the state are in a stage of unrest. On every hand there are those evidences of man's inhumanity to man.

In that, the church has a distinct function and duty in this crisis. The ministers of the day should not toil at far-fetched sermons when they can see one walking along every hour in the day. These must be the time of the fulfilling of many of the prophesies. What the preacher used to labor with in parables is plain before the eye.

We see nations against nations; children against their parents and wars and rumors of wars deafening every ear.

A magazine recently carried pictures of the terrible orgy of a bombing in which Tunisian children were killed in their classrooms. The picture of the mass burials, with some shrouded in sheets and others interred in their wearing clothing in which they were killed, should shock the world.

The world must now move back to the preaching of the gospel. The solution handed down in the sermon on the mount and later carried all over the Near East by Apostle Paul is the solution to the problems of the UN Congress, the world councils of Peace and the high law-making bodies of the world.

Simplier than sword or spear, bomb or Sputnik would be those terms laid down in the Ten Commandments and wrapped into a nutshell in the first and greatest Commandment — "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Not For Men Alone

Women In Frontlines Of Rights Battle

By A STAFF WRITR

The big mess that power-mad politicians and Dixie diehards are making out of issue is, admittedly, hard on men, too, but indications are that it is the women who are caught in the middle of the muddle.

In most of the major sirmishes on the integration front, the girls have been in the frontlines.

THE MOST RECENT indident to grow out of the doings of Dixie diehards was the expulsion of Minsie Jean Brown from Little Roc's Central high school.

The involvement of Miss Brown in an segregationist-inspired muddle follows on the heels of the quitting of a Charlotte, NC high school by Miss Dorothy Counts. This was, in turn, preceeded by the Autherine Lucy near-tragedy at the University of Alabama. Miss Lucy joined Ida Sipuel Fisher of earlier rights-seeing fame and Paula Murry on the roll call of women who have central figures in integration muddles.

OF COURSE, MRS. L. C. "Daisy" Bates, presidest of the Aransas branch NAACP was right in there pitching, oo, when the days were darest.

Miss Brown, who this wee arrived in New or to tae up studies at the New Lincoln school, was one of the nine students enrolled at Little Rock's embattled Central high school. For fully two months, she was the No. 1 target of forces that ought to rid the school of its colored pupils-come hell or high water.

MISS BROWN WAS bumped in hallways, the target of jeers, hit with purses, chased with erasers and cat-called day in and day out. et, for nearly two months she merely "too" it. Then, one day a white girl called her a "n----r b----h" and hit her with a purse. Miss Brown retailiated by calling the girl "poor white trash." Th eresult: she was expelled from Central high and the en tire Little Roc public school system. "She had no right to tal bac to a white girl," a school official said.

Miss Brown was gives a scholarship worth $1050 to the New or school, one of the nation's most outstanding in-The school has students from Par avenue and from Harlem, with all races, religious learnings, etc. beisg represented.

MISS COUNTS, daughter of a college professor at Charlotte, NC, left the school to which she had been assigned by the school board in her hometown because of contined pressures brought to bear on her by white students.

Students surrounded her in the hallways subjecting her to physical and verbal harrassment. They spilled in on her clothes and boos, pelted her with erasers, crayon and paper clips. She stood it as long as possible and withdrew from the school on advice of her parents who saw that whe would soon be "cracing up" under the strain.

THE CASE OF Autherine Lucy was one of the classics of the decade. Miss Lucy defied mobs — drun on whisey supplied by Alabama politicians—day after day, registering and entering classes at the Alabama university.

Fear for her own safety seemingly never crossed her mind. But a series of maneuvers by state officials made it necessary for the university to expel her.

THE SIPUEL AND Murray cases are similar. Both young ladies mad epioneer efforts to open institutioss of higher learning to colored students. While they dd not reap the benefits, what they did was not in vain and additional opportunities were made availa ble to persons who followed their leads.

Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Roc has stood up under burdens which would have humbled even some of the more resolute males. Day in and day out, her life was threatened via telephoned messages and mailed missles of hate. She was dragged into court. Attempts were made to blacen her reputation, etc. et, she still stands heads and shoulders above her detractors.

• • •

THE QUESTION "why" these girls and women come involved in such matters arises.

One observer says "They're merely trying to follow in the foot-steps of one of their forebears——Sojourner Truth.

Sojourner Truth, of course, was the roiginator and chief conductor of the Underground ailroad during the slavery era. Her credo: "We shall be free!"

What Negroes can learn from Gandhi

When Montgomery, Ala., integrated its buses, everyone waited for the explosion! But it never came . . . and today Montgomery Negroes sit next to the whites in peace!

Now, in this week's Saturday Evening Post, you'll learn how this major integration battle was won—by following the principles of the great Mahatma Gandhi. You'll see how Negro leaders convinced their people not to fight, but to turn the other cheek, just as Gandhi did when he freed 400,000,000 segregated Indians!

And you'll read what the ingredients are in Gandhi's policy of "peaceful protest" that can wear down oppressors, change laws . . . and what could happen if our American Negroes put his proven principles to work! It's all in the penetrating article "What Negroes Can Learn From Gandhi," written for the Post by Chester Bowles, our former ambassador to India.

SILENCE OF- PRESIDENT EISENHOWER
U.N. WILL GET MATTER

Negro Says If Ike Stays Silent On Strife U.N. Will Get Matter

Courier-Post

NEWARK, N.J., Feb. 24 (AP)—A Negro pastor said tonight that if President Eisenhower does not speak out on racial violence in the South he and other members of the clergy will take the matter to the United Nations.

The Rev. Milton Perry, 21-year-old pastor of a Jersey City church, said in a prepared radio address that some may regard such a step as "embarrassing to America," but he added:

"I say that we are already embarrassed because we are preaching democracy in world councils and practicing tyranny in our own backyard."

Rev. Perry, characterizing the broadcast as an open letter to the President, said American Negroes honor the Hungarian freedom fighters.

DISMAY CITED

"We note with dismay, disillusion and deep sorrow, your failure to answer the ringing cry for freedom for the colored and white people in the South.

"You have failed, Mr. Eisenhower, to come to the aid of the bombed out refugees of your own nation, the color of whose loyalty is red, white and blue and the color of whose skin is black."

The broadcast was paid for by Perry's church, Deliverance Temple, church of God in Christ, Jersey City. It was carried by a small independent station in Newark.

As instances when he said President Eisenhower failed to speak out, Perry cited the Emmett Till slaying, the Autherine Lucy case, the Clinton, Tenn., school integration dispute, the bombings of Negro homes in Alabama.

Jackie, NAACP Leaders Clash Over Ike's Stand

Defender Sat. 3-4-57 Chicago, Ill. P.5

WASHINGTON — Jackie Robinson, former Dodger star, and NAACP leaders are in sharp differences and have clashed over President Eisenhower and the role he is playing in race relations.

While Jackie says he believes the President will soon condemn the violence and terrorism directed against Negroes in the South, Mrs. Ruby Hurley, militant Southeastern leader for civil rights, says:

"Negroes have every right to believe that Eisenhower has forgotten them and we are very much aware that Congress doesn't think much of us."

This clash of opinion was voiced at an NAACP rally held at Metropolitan Baptist church before approximately 800 persons.

DISPLEASED

Also showing displeasure of the chief executive's attitude was Franklin H. Williams, West Coast secretary-counsel for the NAACP.

He admitted that he was thrilled with Vice President Nixon and Gov. Adams' statements, but he asked: "Where in Heavens name is the voice of the President of the United States?"

Jackie said he believed Eisenhower would soon take a stand similar to Nixon and Adams because he did not see how he could remain silent. Failing to speak out against southern violence is in some ways endorsing these actions, the baseball great declared.

Jackie is honorary chairman of the 1957 "freedom fund" campaign which expects to raise a million dollars in the fight for freedom. Washington chapter hopes to raise $50,000 of that amount.

MET IKE

While Robinson said he had met the President and felt confident that he would take a stand in endorsing the struggle of the Southern Negro in his fight to freedom, the other speakers blasted the President for remaining silent so long.

Robinson was severe in his criticism of Manning Johnson the former Communist who "viciously and unjustly attacked men like the Rev. King and the NAACP" in Louisiana. Such men, said Robinson, should be put in an insane asylum.

He was very pleased to read a letter from the FBI which denied that Johnson was in any way connected with that Bureau, and that he certainly does not speak the sentiments of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Will Take Message To People By Radio And TV . . . Ike

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Eisenhower Wednesday launched a showdown battle with Congress over his legislative program which includes Civil Rights bills and the budget.

The Chief Executive plans to take his next fight straight to the people through a series of radio-television speeches.

The Chief Executive, in combat condition after his Georgia vacation, told Republican legislative leaders he will carry directly to the people his struggle to prevent threatened deep cuts in his 71 billion, 802 million dollar budget.

News Secretary James C. Hagerty said the timing of the radio-television address is being worked out and that the President will seek support for his spending and legislative proposals "every time he talks in public from now until he wins the fight."

Hagerty said that Mr. Eisenhower will correct "a great deal of misinformation" which he feels has been spread about his record peacetime budget.

WOMEN VOTERS

And in the White House rose garden, where he talked to the National Council of the League of Women Voters, the tanned, vigorous looking President voiced a crisp appeal for support of his foreign aid program, now under heavy congressional attack.

He declared: "You can't allow freedom to be pushed back to the shores of the United States and keep freedom at home. Unless the United States understands this, the future doesn't look so bright. Let's not throw away the engines of this ship of state."

Mr. Eisenhower took note of the mounting demands on Capitol Hill for tax cuts and said he hopes that by the time he leaves office in 1961, world peace will be secured enough to justify substantial tax relief.

SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS

The President added: "I would like to go out of office with an even larger tax cut than we put out in 1954." That year tax reductions totaled seven billion dollars, some of it in the form of slashes previously voted by the Democratic-controlled 82nd Congress.

The President spoke to the young politicians of his party after he was given a tremendous ovation at Constitution Hall, where he and Mrs. Eisenhower attended a musicale given in their honor.

The young Republicans adopted a unanimous resolution, read by Republican Governor Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, paying tribute to the President's "dedicated leadership."

Eisenhower told them that his administration and the Republican party represent "soundness in all governmental dealings, with religion or the color of his skin."

The President spoke out against racial and religious discrimination as Southern forces in the Senate lost a battle to prevent the President's Civil Rights bill from being brought up for consideration.

Eisenhower's forceful statement of his administration's position on the civil rights issue was made being placed on the Senate calendar for consideration.

The chief executive made no direct reference to the battle that has been raging in the Senate as southern forces sought to have the house-passed civil rights bill referred to committee instead of

No Time To Falter, President Warns

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. 5-21-57

BY WILLIAM THEIS

WASHINGTON — (INS) — President Eisenhower, in a likely review of his next budget appeal, warned Monday that this is no time for the United States "to falter, to hesitate or to turn back" in the fight for freedom.

The President kept alive his bid for support in an address to the national convention of the American Red Cross as budget debate and budget action continued on Capitol Hill and elsewhere.

GOP POLICY

In Chicago, Sen. Styles Bridges (R) N. H., GOP policy chairman, reiterated his call for a three billion 300 million dollar budget slash and he said Mr. Eisenhower, despite his appeal for public backing, "actually has been cooperating in the budget effort."

On the Senate floor, Sen. Alexander Wiley (R) Wis., urged Congress not to get so "befogged" in the budget battle that it loses sight of the larger campaign for survival.

And the Senate itself in a temporary reversal of the economy drive, voted 61 to 17 to restore some 30 million dollars asked by the President to continue to purchase a Tungsten and other strategic metals.

Mr. Eisenhower founded a theme Monday which is expected to run through the nationwide radio-television speech he will make tonight on Foreign Aid. His foreign aid message is scheduled to go to Congress today in advance of the 8:30 P. M. (EDT) TV-Radio talk.

DESIRE TO HELP

Comparing the nation's problem with those of the Red Cross, the President said all Americans share a "desire to help the suffering brother" and "to preserve justice and to prevent suffering."

Mr. Eisenhower added: "This is no time for your country or for the Red Cross to falter, to hesitate, or to turn back. 5-21-57

"We must assure ourselves that human hopes are being satisfied under freedom — otherwise freedom will have to retreat."

The demand has been for the White House to place the tremendous prestige of the Presidency on the side of the Supreme Court desegregation decision, morality and law and order.

Until last week, there was nothing but silence. Baltimore, Md.

Then, from all places, Augusta, Georgia, came a message.

Church leaders from all over the South had gathered for the Conference on Christian Faith and Human Relations.

The profound words of presidential wisdom were addressed to them.

Wired Mr. Eisenhower:

"It is important that new plans and effective programs be considered if we are to make the service of God and neighbor meaningful in our generation."

What does this mean? Many of the 300 ministers, who earn their livelihood dealing in words, were unable to say.

Meanwhile about his own meaningful civil rights program stymied in hostile committees of both houses of Congress, Mr. Eisenhower sayeth nothing.

BISHOP WALLS BACKS IKE'S FREEDOM PLAN

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Sat. 6-1-57

BOSTON, Mass. — Bishop W. J. Walls, senior prelate of the A. M. E Zion Church, told the delegates and visitors of the 113th annual session of the New England Conference, in his episcopal address, that the world is a seething pot, it is rumbling with earthquakes and is a rising flood under an angry heaven.

He praised President Eisenhower's stand on freedom for oppressed people everywhere. "Peace con only come when all people enjoy full freedom," said the prelate. He also commended John Foster Dulles for trying to bring peace without war and too much chaos. He deplored the fact that minority groups, here in America, were finding it hard to enjoy the freedom that Eisenhower and Dulles would have all people enjoy. He singled out the Negro, the Indian and the Jew.

He scored those who would deny any citizen his right, but was highly hopeful that the church would continue its role as the leader in obtaining justice for all people. He reviewed that recent forthright manifesto of the Southern Presbyterian Church, issued at Birmingham, Ala., demanding the right to work without limitation, due to race, color or creed, --- the right of free assemblage and organization of defense groups as well as offending groups and finally the right to vote and live the full life of American citizens.

He was proud of the fact, he said, that he was part of a major factor in this endeavor --- the church --- and pointed to such incidents as those sponsored by the women's organizations of southern churches, the National Council of Churches, the Presbyterian Curch in the United States and the Southern Presbyterians in outstanding pronouncements that have demanded forthrightly straight thinking, and fair action in opening the door for the weaker groups.

He called upon the northern brethern of his group to rededicate themselves to the true principles of the Christian religion and the tenets of democracy, by joining those forces which have shown that they mean to fight until peace reigns supreme and men the world over shall brothers be.

He ended his address with a special appeal for the NAACP. "If this group should be hushed, as some mounting opposers seek to do, we as a race would be set back 100 years in our rise to first-class citizenship. God is with us and we cannot fail," said the bishop.

REP. EMANUEL CELLER

Rep. Celler Tops As Foe Of Bias

Defender p.11

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a series in the personalities behind the faces on Capitol Hill Hill. Here is a sketch on Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N. Y.) who comes from the 11th District and is a hep person in the civil rights battle since he is chairman of the powerful House Judiciary Committee. Rep. John McCormack (D. Mass.) is the majority leader of the House and the person responsible for marshalling important pieces of legislation through the tortuous maze of committee hearings and deliberations on to the floor for action. As one of the leading policy makers on Capitol Hill, the chances of favorable action on any bills depends on what he thinks of the measures.

Sat. 3-23-57

Former President Truman tells this story about Emanuel Celler.

It seems that the district he represents is made up of stable, financially comfortable people.

He does not have man of the complex problems of other districts. Chicago, Ill

Once, with some spare time on his hands, Cellar undertook to launch a project to collect all of the lost papers of George Washington and have them put in one place in the National Archieves. He wrote to several of his constituents asking them to serve on an advisory committee.

One prosperous merchant who received several letters confided to a friend. "I know who 'Manny' Celler is, but who in the hell is this fellow, George Washington, he keeps talking about?"

A BROOKLYNITE

A tree grew in Brooklyn and so did "Manny" Celler.

He was born there, May 6, 1888, attended school there and then Columbia university in New York where he finished law school and began practicing in 1912.

He has been serving continuously in Congress since 1922, and has been chairman of the House judiciary committee for several terms.

Cellar has been a leading figure in the battle to pass civil rights legislation, though his district does not contain a predominance of Negro voters.

Under his leadership, the House did pass some civil rights legislation in the last session of congress, but this was killed in the Senate.

He has authored innumerable bills on civil rights and has worked closely with proponents of the legislation. He is also close to Sam Rayburn and John MacCormack and is a strong party man.

It was Cellar who was outspoken in his feeling that Adam Clayton Powell had shown disloyalty to the Democratic party by supporting President Eisenhower and was therefore not deserving of any patronage.

This time, Cellar is assuming direct leadership of the strategy to get early action on civil rights by taking over the chairmanship of the sub-committee of the judiciary which has been holding hearings since Feb. 4. This is an indication of the importance of civil rights to Democratic leaders who see the handwriting on the wall in the slipping Negro vote.

John W. McCormack

Boston born and bred John W. McCormack is as Irish as his name and the South Boston in which he grew up.

A tall craggy-faced man, he is both devoutly religious and a politician to his finger tips. Elected to the 70th Congress, he is now entering his 28th year as a legislator on Capitol hill.

Affable and energetic, McCormack is always in a hurry; seldom relaxes. Usually, he is seen rushing throught the corridors of the House side of the Capitol building with an arm load of papers or books.

In his book of rules, politics and that means Democrats, is the science of always playing for the advantage to your side; though McCormack has a good bi-partisan record on such issues as foreign policy, immigration, and labor.

John McCormack writhes in horror at the though of a split party. Hence the reason why for two conventions, 1952 and 1956, he was chosen to head the Democratic platform committee. He is acceptable to both the South and the North.

It was he who held the insistent liberals at arm's length, while he watered down the language of the sizzling hot plank on civil rights. Then it was his job to convince them that the language was strong enough to satisfy Negro voters.

To do this, he and Sam Rayburn drafted former President Truman to speak in behalf of the final version on the convention floor in order to quiet the smouldering rebellion.

McCormack consults frequently with Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of the NAACP, though he and the organization are in frequent disagreement on strategy.

McCormack thinks the NAACP is sometimes too aggressive and should be more practical in its political thinking. With the tide swinging away from the Democrats, McCormack is alarmed that this will have wide repercussion in the 1958 Congressional elections.

It is his job then to whip up enough support on his side of the aisle to assure passage of some legislation at this session of Congress.

Race Decision a Setback, Presidential Aide Says

Star Fri. 3-22-57 P.2-B

Washington D.C.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., Mar. 22 (AP).—Bernard M. Shanley, presidential appointments secretary, said yesterday he thought the Supreme Court decision banning segregation had "set us back many years," but he later termed it "a right decision."

Mr. Shanley made the remark about a setback in replying to a student's question after he made a speech at Fairleigh Dickinson University here.

To newsmen who questioned him later, he said he considered that the decision had done "incalculable harm" because of "immediate damage," but that it was only a "temporary setback" for integration.

The Bernardsville, N. J., lawyer added:

"If I were on the bench, I would have voted the same way. But there isn't any doubt that the decision did create additional feeling in the South in the steady progress toward desegregation."

Many Students Leave

He said that he was "not questioning the decision of the Supreme Court, but the decision itself unfortunately resulted in many of our colored students severing their relationships with Southern colleges and universities."

He said he considesed it "a right decision."

The question that prompted the subject came from a student who asked if Mr. Shanley "considered President Eisenhower indifferent to the South, as has been charged."

Mr. Shanley replied: "More has been accomplished in the past four years than in the past 20. Where any Federal dollars are being spent there can be no segregation or discrimination."

At this point he referred to the court decision.

Newsmen questioning him later asked him if he had been expressing White House policy. He said he was expressing a personal view.

"Considerable Damage" Seen

He said the court decision was "a right one" but "in effect it has done considerable damage." Some areas of the South are as "hot as foxes" about the issue, Mr. Shanley said, and he felt the Supreme Court did the correct thing in leaving implementation of the decision to district courts.

In his speech, Mr. Shanley said: "It's impossible for the President to do the things he did three years ago." He said, "I have seen the President so tired, he has rested his head in his hands."

Mr. Shanley went on:

"Undoubtedly you have been reading many of the columnists who now indicate that a so-called 'palace guard' is preventing the President from seeing members of the Congress and other people who would give him views other than those he is receiving from his staff.

Different Viewpoints Desired

"The President has given me full authority to determine his schedule from day to day. I, therefore, have a very grave responsibility to make certain that those who see the President represent not only different viewpoints but also are responsible spokesmen for his particular cause.

"The President is an inveterate reader and because of his vast experience, if I were to fail in my responsibility, he personally would see to it that these diverse views were presented to him through people whom he invites to his residence rather than his office."

Mr. Shanley said the State Department had decided that Mr. Eisenhower will greet "every ruler of every country personally from now on" when they visit Washington.

Mr. Shanley was counsel to the President for 25 months before moving to appointments secretary two years ago.

The White House And Integration

Wed. 3-27-57

WASHINGTON — While the White House is pretty well sealed off and insulated these days, we occasionally get a revealing glimpse into what goes on there and of the thinking and attitude of the inside circle when one of that elect group makes a speech somewhere and pulls up the curtain a bit.

The most recent illumination came from Bernard M. Shanley, President Eisenhower's appointment secretary, in his answers to some questions asked by students of Fairleigh Dickinson University at Rutherford, N.J., after he made a speech to them.

Most illuminating of all perhaps was the insight given by Mr. Shanley into the hands-off attitude of the President toward the integration problem in the South, which has been so studied that it has become very noticeable.

THE STUDENTS who sat before Mr. Shanley seemed aware of it, judging from the question from one of them as to whether the President's secretary "considered President Eisenhower indifferent to the South, as has been charged." His reply was that "more has been accomplished in the past four years than in the past 20."

Afterward, however, he said that the Supreme Court public school integration decision had "set us back many years." When queried later about this remark, he sought to tone it down by saying he felt the decision had done "incalculable damage" but was only a temporary setback for integration. He emphasized that he considered it a "right decision."

In the general attitude he revealed, which must reflect complaints you hear among Southerners, even the "moderates." They contend that if the decision had been delayed it would have been easier to adjust to it. They argue that the South gradually would have adjusted to integration on its own, even without the Supreme Court. They are very vague, however, about how long that would take, or how long the court decision should have been postponed.

IT'S STRANGE for a White House official to accept this attitude; but it may explain why the President has not tried to use his great personal influence, as he has been besought to do, to try to bring about understanding, tolerance and conformity.

Anyone who understands the Southern people knows that whenever the decision came, should it have been delayed, it would have been resisted and probably with the same heat and bitterness as of today. That would have happened under any circumstances. It would seem that the best way to look at the decision is that the South will be just that far ahead in trying to adjust to it, and such adjustment admittedly is going to be difficult.

The Colossal Robbery

The rejection last week by the U. S. Supreme Court of appeals from judgments ordering desegregation at a Florida swimming pool and a Texas court house cafeteria reminds us afresh of the colossal robbery of colored citizens, of which mainly the Southern states have been guilty, and which is now drawing to a close.

Until recently (and to a large extent), colored citizens have been robbed of billions of dollars over many decades by the denial to them of facilities supported out of taxes which they pay along with other citizens but which they never enjoyed.

The most glaring robbery has been in the field of education, of course, but there are many other examples which are not so obvious but are galling nevertheless.

Public swimming pools through the South (and until quite recently in the rest of the country) have been supported out of taxes which all citizens paid but which only white citizens (and even aliens) enjoyed.

The same has been true of public tennis courts, golf links, parks, camps, auditoriums and other facilities whose construction and upkeep were paid out of taxes paid by all of the people but to which admittance was given only to whites.

A great uproar has rent the welkin all over Dixie because Supreme Court decisions have legally put a stop to this robbery, and the burden of the complaints has been that white people should not be forced to associate with colored people in these tax-supported facilities — as if one who helps pay for an installation should not share its use!

If these tax-supported facilities were of no value, they would not have been constructed and maintained; so when and where colored Americans are barred from them, they are robbed of their share of the value of these public services.

The argument that "Negro" facilities supported by common taxation are also maintained is entirely invalid because it does not disprove the fact that some of the public facilities available are closed to colored (or white) people.

This colossal robbery of colored citizens since the Civil War makes the fleecing of the aboriginal Indians pale into insignificance, considering the disproportion in the numbers of Negroes and Indians.

Legally, logically and humanistically, those Southern whites who would exclude their colored fellow-citizens from tax-supported educational, medical, entertainment and recreational facilities haven't a leg to stand on.

They know this, and knowing it they are desperate, for the resort to force and the reckless defiance of the Constitution and the Supreme Court's interpretation of it.

It is very hard to defend robbery, especially on such a colossal scale.

Integration Foe Aids Probers

Leslie Hall, chief counsel for the Virginia Legislature's new Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities, is a soft-spoken, Alabama-born segregationist.

Reared in southern tradition, the 44-year-old attorney believes that racial integration "is wrong for the South."

As legal advisor for the investigating committee, he will guide a statewide probe of groups concerned with racial activities.

Critics of the 10-member committee have called it a "witch hunting" unit set up to stifle the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The committee itself announced this week that the initial targets of its probe will be the NAACP and the two major pro-segregation groups in Virginia; the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties and the White Citizens Councils.

Hall said: "It's bound to be controversial because of its subject matter, but it was the consensus of thought of the members of the committee not to go on any witch hunt or anything resembling a McCarthy committee . . . we're going to try to conduct it in an orderly fashion."

21 Years of Practice

The orderliness of the upcoming hearings and the collection of evidence will be some of Hall's responsibilities as chief counsel. He will rely on his background of 21 years of law practice, including nearly two years service as Assistant Commonwealth's Attorney in Alexandria.

He temporarily left this job to take the committee post. "The committee was looking for somebody with trial experience and asked me if I was interested . . . it was a complete surprise. I felt very complimented."

The trial experience came naturally to Hall because he was born into a family of lawyers and political office holders in Bay Minette, Ala. He left his home town to obtain a law degree from the University of Alabama in 1935, then returned home to practice for six years.

He moved to the Washington area in 1941 and became head of the Claims Branch of the Real Estate Division, Office of the Chief of Engineers, War Department.

After moving from Washington to Arlington, he was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1944 and began law practice in Arlington. He served as a Commisioner in Chancery there for 10 years and also presided periodically as an acting Circuit Court judge. In 1955, he became a prosecutor in Alexandria where he now lives at 1708-A Commonwealth ave.

In his new job, Hall, father of four children, will be involved in a study of the possible effects of integration on publis schools in Virginia. His personal opinion is that segregation should be continued.

"I think integration is wrong, for the Souht at least . . . it will upset the mores and customs in a great segment of the population of the country.

"The South has just as good schools for colored people as for white people in most places. Colored people have just as equal opportunity for an education as the white people do. There is no reason why any one group should be forced on another group against its will when it's not to the advantage of either one."

Reflects Byrd Thought

The 1954 Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools was "based an socialogical and phychological principles rather than on legal theory and precedent."

Hall's thinking on this issue reflects that of leaders in the Byrd organization, dominant group in the state. "I like Sen. Byrd's idea very much," says Hall, a Democrat.

He did not express his opinion of the anti-segregation efforts of the NAACP. "I'd rather reserve that until later . . . I think there been too much agitation by extremists on both sides."

In preparation for hearings of the committee, chaired by Del. James M. Thomson, of Alexandria, Hall has been boning up on racial litigation. In leisure hours, he reads the Readers Digest and newspapers.

Hall, a spare, brown-haired man in a dark brown suit, looked at a stack of legal homework on his desk in the small, pine-paneled office of the committee at 113 S. Fairfax st., Alexandria. "I'm looking forward to the work . . . it should prove interesting," he said.

Miseducation of the Negro

We got something of a sinking feeling when 60 Negro leaders met recently in Atlanta and, asserting truthfully that "a state of terror prevails" in the South, urged President Eisenhower to come immediately there and urge reluctant white Southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's desegregation decree.

It reminded us of the book of the late Dr. Carter G. Woodson entitled "The Miseducation of the Negro," in which he pointed out that the "education" the colored brethren of the upper class had received unfitted them for sound leadership.

The merest tyro cognizant of political realities would scarcely expect the President to do more than utter weasel words on a hot issue like civil rights and Dixie's widespread ignoring and violation of such, in view of his obvious determination to be regarded as a bipartisan President of all the people.

This view was confirmed not only by his State of the Nation speech but also by his inaugural address, in which the President ignored all such domestic issues while concentrating on his plan to defend freedom everywhere—except in Dixie.

It was also confirmed by the ominous news from the U. S. Senate that the traditional coalition between reactionary Democrats and Republicans in the Judiciary Committee (headed by Senator Eastland of Mississippi) has again conspired to kill any move to enforce civil rights.

The Republican Administration, having twice cracked the erstwhile solid South, and with an eye on 1958 and 1960, has probably gone as far as it deems expedient in "plugging" civil rights without alienating the Southern white support it has gained, and is not disposed to stick out its neck any further.

We believe that Negro leaders should know this, and that they should now recognize the necessity of concentrating on what really counts: i.e., getting as many Southern Negroes qualified to vote (and voting) as is possible between now and the next Congressional elections in 1958.

The only thing recognized by practical politicians, North or South, local or national, is votes; and until such time as the Negro vote is more powerful and decisive than it is at present, there is not going to be any challenging of Southern prejudices by the Administration.

Until the eminent clergymen who met in Atlanta, and others associated with them, can get their followers to register and vote 100 per cent, there will be nothing more than fine, and encouraging, words on civil rights emanating from Washington.

Slavery Lingers On, Not Only in Arabia

Mon. 2-4-57 P.4

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—We are nearly a century away from the end of human slavery in our country. It was on Jan. 1, 1863, that Abraham Lincoln issued the emancipation proclamation. That freed some 3,120,000 Negroes from bondage on plantations in the southern half of a nation which, 89 years before that, had subscribed to the words of Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." (There was no amendment reading, "except for people with black skins.")

But it was, at any rate, a long time ago we banished human slavery. So we can condemn human slavery existing anywhere today, such as in Arabia.

Still, to the sensitive ear there might come the rumble of dynamite blowing up the homes of ministers of the Gospel in Montgomery, Ala. They have committed no crime, except to have black skins as did their forbears who were slaves, and to accept in good faith a decree of the United States Supreme Court that they can sit where they please on public buses so long as they pay their fare.

What sort of an example the Southern Ku Kluxers are setting for some of our future citizens we learned from an incident in Long Island, N.Y.

Three youngsters were arrested on juvenile delinquency charges. They had paraded through a Negro neighborhood wearing Ku Klux Klan uniforms they had designed. They scattered anti-Negro literature and carried cardboard signs on which they had printed, "Get Out of Town."

Prejudice travels fast.

It is no secret that our government is being nice to the king of Arabia partly because of the oil concessions to powerful American interests. The royalties from them provide money with which he can buy more slaves, more wives and concubines, more Cadillacs.

But the solicitude for big oil interests by our government is not only in the Middle East nor is it anything new. Congress bends the knee right here, has for a long time. It gives big oil companies special privileges in their taxes so they don't pay as you and I do.

In the early part of the Eisenhower administration, with the President's blessing Congress turned over offshore oil lands to the states, as was sought by big oil companies.

And once again we seemingly may look ahead to the biggest bonanza of all for the big oil companies—namely, the bill to exempt natural gas producers from regulation by the Federal Power Commission, which the President urged in his budget message a few days ago. It would be a windfall of mammoth proportions and would cost consumers heavily.

While the visit here of the king of Saudi Arabia may help the cause of peace in the Middle East, which is the President's hope, maybe it will turn the gaze of the rest of us inward upon ourselves to see if we are entirely free of the slave complex, of intolerance and prejudice, of special privileges for the rich and powerful.

'Freedom left out of our independence': Dr. Franklin

Afro American Sat. 2-23-57 P.8

BALTIMORE

"Only in the U.S. has there been a marked distinction between the struggle for independence and the struggle for human freedom.

"Almost every country in the world that fought for its independence carried on a simultaneous struggle for human equality."

Dr. John Hope Franklin, noted historian and head of the Brooklyn College, New York City, history department, was speaking to Coppin State Teachers College students Wednesday when he made the above statements.

Dr. Franklin recently returned from India where he spent a three-week period representing the American Council of Learned Societies at the Centenniel Celebrations of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay Universities.

CONTINUING HIS address at Coppin, Dr. Franklin said: "The United States made a distinction. Therefore freedom was not a part of our American heritage.

"General Washington did not want us in the War for Independence.

"It has been necessary to rehabilitate the struggle for freedom and force it into the total picture of our history.

"Here we are 75 years later fighting for freedom while in other countries like Haiti, Mexico, Peru, and Argentina they incorporated freedom with independence.

"THE TASK of those who would now carry on our fight for freedom' is two-fold Dr. Franklin stated.

"We must fight and destroy the myths that have obscured the birthright of all Americans.

"We must engage in legal, political and educational programs which will bring freedom into the full picture of American life," Dr. Franklin said.

U.S., Africa Bias Topic Of Students

Herald Tribune's 4th Panel Held

P.25

Racial prejudice here and in South Africa produced a heated discussion among four delegates to the New York Herald Tribune Forum for High Schools yesterday on their fourth weekly panel discussion of "The World We Want" on WOR-TV, Channel 9.

Participants in the program, which was on the theme, "Who's Responsible for Prejudice," were Boniface Offokaja, of Nigeria; Susan Rennie, Union of South Africa; Amelia Addae, Gold Coast, and Mesfin Binega, Ethiopia. Mrs. Helen Hiett Waller Forum director, was moderator.

The panelists are among thirty-three students from as many countries who will take part in the Forum on March 23 at the Waldorf-Astoria. Their transportation to this country was furnished without charge by Pan American World Airways and Trans-World Airlines.

Holds Press Responsible

Mrs. Waller started the discussion by asking the students if they beleived Americans were prejudiced about Africa. Mr Offokaja said they were. "How could they be objective about African Negroes," he asked "when they are so full of prejudice about American Negroes?"

Miss Rennie said that on the contrary she found "very large prejudice" in the American press against the white people in South Africa. "Everywhere I go," she said, "I'm discriminated against because the situation in South Africa is so distorted. I'm looked down upon. I feel the press is responsible for this."

Mr. Binega entered the discussion with the statement he felt prejudice against both Negroes and whites. He explained that Ethiopians considered themselves survivors of "the lost tribe of Israel."

Denied Service in N. Y.

Miss Addae said, "We feel very badly (in the Gold Coast) about what Americans are doing to our Negroes. We hear that Americans don't give Negroes the same education as whites. She said that she was told here that segregation existed only in the South and then told of visiting a restaurant in New York with a British friend and being denied service by the waiter.

Mr. Mesfin said he, too, had experienced similar difficulties when a series of barber shops he entered for a hair cut proved too busy to attend to him.

Mr. Offokaja said, "I have apparently been lucky. I was looking for segregation, but I have not got it." He went on to explain that he believed racial segregation was the result of "insecurity in economic conditions," and turning to Miss Rennie, said he had read there was only one telephone in the Negro area of Johannesburg, South Africa. Miss Rennie said, "Ridiculous."

Amicable Conclusion

The discussion reached an amicable conclusion when Mr. Offokaja said he believed in this country "conditions are getting better." He said there were conflicting opinions in the United States, and added, "This is progress, not weakness."

Miss Addae said, "In spite of color, I am friends with Susan. I am sure that in the future we will all understand each other better."

Mr. Binega said, "I am beginning to realize I am an African."

Will Hungarians See America's Prejudices

Sat. 1-26-57 p. 10

To the Editor:

When we think of the United States of America, we think of three things: (1) Justice, (2) Democracy, and (3) Equality. These definitions combined make one think of the United States as a land of freedom, a paradise, a modern "Garden of Eden." To the Hungarian refugees, that is exactly what they expect and that is what they, as refugees, will receive. Is justification really considered when we bring into our overcrowded country a group of immigrants who will receive the glory and honor, the praise and acceptance which, for many centuries, has been denied honest-born citizens of the United States? These people will come to our country, receive food, clothing, shelter, and care, which is financially supported by some of the same citizens of the United States who receive bombs thrown into their homes along with many other unjust and undemocratic incidents. I wonder if the Hungarians will become acquainted with these conditions which we, as American citizens face, such as hatred, prejudice, overcrowded schools and thousands of slum areas which exist throughout our country. Charity begins at home. We should first begin to clean up our own dirt. If our Government has the power to accept the responsibility of the Hungarians, then why doesn't it have the power to correct the corrupt condition which exists within our own nation and among our own citizens?

—MRS. ELIZABETH CASEY LEIGH, Dayton, Ohio.

Why Won't 'Ike' Speak?

To the Editor:

After reading a front page of the San Francisco News, and looking at the attention paid the plight of Hungarian refugees, I wonder why President Eisenhower won't say something about the South and the way human rights are treated in that section of the country. I don't like to see anyone misused, but I can't understand why the United States will help someone thousands of miles away and yet cannot seem to help those in the South.

Indian-Negro History

To the Editor:

No treatise is known to exist which would give a full historical and significant picture of the American Indian-Negro relationship during and after the days of slavery. A few historical records do show that the American Indians did much to aid and comfort fugitive slaves. Many tribes considered the plight of the Negroes similar to their own hardships and made every effort to assist slaves to escape to join their tribe. Many of these fugitive slaves did much to help the Indians in their wars against the frontiersmen and early settlers. In 1850, the Comanches had approximately 1,500 fugitive slaves helping them in their war against Mexico. The Seminoles of Florida united with fugitive slaves and waged a glorious war against the United States Army after causing havoc in Georgia from their raids against the settlers. Today, they still remain undefeated. The complete picture of the American Indian-Negro relationship was not all of war. There were included: acculturation of ideas on both sides, raising of families, deep friendships, communities were created, and the earnest desire to live in peace with complete freedom. When we are able to consider how valuable a role the American Indian played to help break the chains of enslavement of the Negroes, it wouldn't be too difficult to readily and actively support the promotion, establishment and observance of an "American Indian Day" in this country.

Dixie Solon Says South Should Settle Own Ills

Sat. 2-16-57

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15 (AP) — A Southern senator pleaded that the South be allowed to settle its own racial relations problem today while a Northern senator plumped for an antilynching bill on top of the administration's civil rights program.

Sen. Douglas (D-Ill), who urged the antilynching bill, also called for enactment of a measure to make bodily attacks on uniformed members of the armed forces a federal offense.

DOUGLAS

"Our treatment of the Negro is a national sin," Douglas said.

Sen. Stennis (D-Miss.) pleaded the cause of those opposing federal legislation. He said nobody can solve the problem but "the patient leaders of both groups in the South."

"When the agitation ends and the outsiders leave," Stennis said, "then we will have to go back to rebuilding good relations."

Stennis said the Supreme Court decisions against school segregation and agitation for civil rights bills in Congress and elsewhere were only setting back good race relations in the South.

Dclaring it is "a sad day" when the public schools "are handled by courts and politicians in such a fashion that they have to be operated through injunctions and criminal statutes," Stennis said:

"We are not going to build a school system in the South on injunctions of the attorney general."

Stennis and Douglas testified at a Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing marked by peppery exchanges between Atty. Gen. Brownell and Sen. Ervin (D-NC), a subcommittee member.

Before recessing until tomorrow the group received a statement from Sen. Talmadge (D-Ga) contending the administration program offers "a grave threat to the civil rights of all Americans, whether they live in Chicago or Atlanta, Oregon or Maine."

Ervin, who spent all morning jousting with Brownell, commented:

Advertiser

"I sometimes think that all this agitation about racial relations is impairing our national sanity. Otherwise, I don't see how a man with the legal background of the attorney general can come here and ask us to make these fundamental alterations in our laws."

Ervin contended the Eisenhower administration had failed to show any need for the legislation it proposes. Brownell, in response, promised to submit to a list of criminal prosecutions for civil rights violations which he said probably would "run into the hundreds."

ERVIN

The Eisenhower administration wants authority among other things, for the attorney general to handle such cases in the civil courts, through injunction proceedings.

Sat. 2-16-57

Ervin, spearheading Southern opposition to the administration program, argued that Brownell had failed to show "any specific conditions" warranting enactment of what he called such a "drastic remedy."

The exchange took place at a Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing that developed into a sparring match between the two lawyers. Brownell is a product of Yale Law School, class of '27, and Ervin took his law degree at Harvard in '22.

"I'd have to grade you zero on that," Brownell told Ervin at one point during the argument.

"If we're going in for grading," replied Ervin, a former member of the North Carolina Board of Law Examiners, "I'd say you were 99 and 99-100 per cent wrong on that."

Ervin freuently accused the attorney general of dodging his questions.

The attorney general said that over the years, and in recent years too, "there have been a great many violations of the civil rights of our citizens," such as the right to vote.

Pressed for examples, Brownell snapped that he couldn't be expected to "turn myself into an FBI." He said he would submit court records of criminal prosecutions of the type the civil rights legislation is designed to deal with.

SOME INSTANCES

may apply for an inunction to enforce his rights. But Brownell said in some instances people have not done this because of "economic pressures," apparently meaning they were unable to afford a lawyer.

Under the administration plan, the attorney general would go into court and seek the injunction for them, at government expense.

The New American 'Civil War'

Sat. 2-16-57 Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 4

EDITOR'S NOTE: This provocative editorial is reprinted from the Albertan, a Canadian newspaper published in Calgary, Alberta. Here is additional proof that our neighbors to the north are acutely aware of the Negro's struggle for equal rights and economic opportunity in America.

The American Negro is on the threshold of major progress toward his emancipation. Those in the Deep South who are resisting that movement are fighting a losing battle. By shooting into desegregated buses and dynamiting the homes of colored clergymen they may delay integration of the races, but they cannot halt it.

The Republican party, at first a coalition of several small groups, was created to resist the expansion of slavery more than for any other reason. Abraham Lincoln, its first President, was elected because the Democratic party was badly split. Its dominant section was openly the party of slavery.

M. L. King

The defeat of the South in the Civil War further entrenched the Democratic party there, so much so that except for a few local and temporary freak situations the Republicans haven't been able to get a foothold there in the 90 years since. Most of the Negroes live in the South, but they have been denied the vote by the local Democratic whites.

In the North, however, what few Negroes there were until 25 years ago were mostly Republican because of devotion to the memory of Lincoln.

But the Republican party effectively scuttled itself in the great depression, and Franklin D. Roosevelt earned and won the affection of not only other minorities but the Negroes as well. His wife Eleanor was a big help in that. Even today she is the idol of millions of colored Americans. So throughout the Roosevelt and Truman administrations the growing Negro vote took on increased importance in the North, the only part where it could be exercised. The firm Democratic grip on the country was maintained in part by that unholy alliance, the bitter anti-Negro vote in the South which stood by the party out of habit, and the Negro vote in the North.

Thus the Democratic party was once more divided as it had been in 1860. And again, as then, the dominant section was in the South. Through the processes of Congressional seniority the South obtained the most powerful positions (for example, the most rabid Negro-hater of them all, Senator Eastland of Mississippi, is chairman of the powerful judiciary committee which more than any other controls the civil rights of the Negroes).

Eastland

But that is not enough. His emancipation depends on much more than the constitution. It depends on a sympathetic Congress and the enactment of civil rights legislation.

At long last that is imminent.

This may well create a new political alignment, as was done in those politically fluid years before 1860. The Democratic party as now constituted could easily go into eclipse.

. . . . There will be turmoil and bloodshed and anguish, but the forces of justice cannot be stayed. The cause of the Negro is good.

In other lands this situation would be ready-made for communism. It is to the American Negro's everlasting credit that he has not been fooled by that remedy. The United States is more fortunate than it deserves to be in that the cause of its Negroes is led by such men as the Rev. Martin Luther King whose counsel is patience, tolerance, non-violence and even goodwill toward the white oppressors.

Ike Hears of Easing Tensions in South

Post + Times Herald P. 2-B

Mon. 2-11-57 Washington, D.C.

By Edward T. Folliard
Staff Reporter

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Feb. 10—President Eisenhower and Mrs. Eisenhower attended services at the 103-year-old Presbyterian Church here today and heard a Southern clergyman say that there is "a power working for good" to ease racial tension in this area.

They drove the seven miles to Thomasville from Milestone Plantation, where they are guests of Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey and Mrs. Humphrey.

The Church was crowded as the President and Mrs. Eisenhower drove up in a Chrysler Imperial, he wearing a dark business suit and the First Lady in a black print Nettie Rosenstein dress and a Sally Victor white pillbox hat. Azalea and camellias were in full bloom on the lawn.

'Power for Good'

The Rev. A. Allen Gardner Jr., minister of the church and a native of Alabama, used as a sermon topic "When God speaks to man." He said that God speaks not in but through a deafening storm, in a still small voice.

God speaks, Mr. Gardner continued, "not through nations screaming at nations, and not through racial tensions that hang over our Southland like a heavy thunderhead."

"In spite of all the noise," he said "there is a power working for good to reconcile man with his neighbors."

President Eisenhower and Mrs. Eisenhower, after returning to the Humphrey plantation, had a 2 p. m. dinner, and presumably feasted on some of the 17 quail that the Chief Executive and his Cabinet officer brought down on Saturday.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said they planned to "take it easy" for the remainder of the day.

The President again today, as on Friday and Saturday, talked on the telephone with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles about the situation in the Middle East, especially the demand of the United Nations on Israel to pull her troops out of the Gaza strip.

More Bridge, No Golf

Last night, for the second time on this trip, the President played bridge with Secretary Humphrey, John Hay (Jock) Whitney, Ambassador to Great Britain, William E. Robinson, president of Coca Cola, and George Allen of Washington, D. C. One of the four friends dropped out after every two rubbers so that all could play.

Whitney, Robinson and Allen are enthusiastic golfers like the President. So far, however, they have not been out to the Glen Arven Country Club.

Press Secretary Hagerty noted today that Secretary Humphrey is not a golfer. Then, in reply to a question as to when the President would play golf, he said:

"I guess they are getting the hunting out of their systems first."

'No Troops For Dixie --Brownell

Courier P. 12 Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 2-23-57

WASHINGTON — Atty. Gen. Herb Brownell spoke out against the "implication" that President Eisenhower would use Federal force to enforce a civil rights program in the South to spice testimony before a Senatorial judicial subcommittee.

Questioned by Robert Young, counsel for opponents of civil rights bills, and North Carolina Democratic Senator Sam Ervin, Brownell bristled in anger and cracked: "There is an implication here that the President would act recklessly, if not unconstitutionally. I cannot sit by . . . I feel this has gone far enough. I cannot stay here to allow any such implication to stand."

Young and Ervin had stated that a post-Civil War law empowers the President to call out either the militia or the armed forces in order to enforce judicial decrees.

Satchmo Armstrong's Horn Don't 'Dig' Race Troubles

News + Observer P. 7 Raleigh, N.C. Thurs. 2-21-57

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 20 (UP) —Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong, unruffled by a dynamite blast—apparently race-inspired—during a jazz concert at Knoxville, Tenn., said today "I'm gonna blow where I want to blow . . . my horn don't dig those race troubles."

The noted Negro trumpet player, "tuckered out" by a long bus ride from Knoxville, relaxed for a few hours before launching another concert tonight with his small racially-mixed combo here.

"Man, I had no idea that thing caused so much static," the veteran entertainer grinned.

The "thing" was the explosion last night of two or three sticks of dynamite outside a Knoxville auditorium which tore a hole five feet deep and showered mud over cars parked nearby.

No One Hurt.

No one was hurt and Armstrong said only "six or eight folks" of the packed, segregated audience of 2,000 white and 1,000 Negro enthusiasts plus police officers "went running" to see what happened.

Armstrong said his instrumental group of four Negroes and a white bass player continued "Back O' Town Blues" without skipping a [illegible] and gravel-voiced Louis, himself, paused only long enough to tell the crowd, "that sounded like a drunk falling out of the balcony."

He pooh-poohed any idea that he might cut short his southern tour as Negro singer Nat King Cole did when assaulted in Birmingham, Ala., a year ago by white foes of integration.

"I don't know about King Cole but I'm a New Orleans boy myself and I've never had any trouble in the South," Armstrong said. "I'm gonna blow anywhere I want to blow. The horn don't dig those racial troubles."

The stubby jazz artist then said he needed a few hours sleep so "these cats won't think the old man's laying down on 'em tonight."

CLAIM SOUTHERN RACIAL DIFFERENCES DISTORTED

Dispatch Fri. 3-29-57
Oklahoma City, Okla. p.3

Dixie Congressman Declares Northern Newspapers Are Discriminating Against South

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—Congressman John Bell Williams of Mississippi last week charged the northern newspapers with discriminating against the south in their news coverage.

In a speech on the House floor. Williams stated that "much of the agitation for the passage of the many force bills before Congress has come about as the result of discriminatory policies of much of the northern press in reporting news stories coming out of the south."

He claimed that any racial incident which occur in the south are headlined in other areas of the country. But racial incidents happening outside of the south are given little attention.

"The South finds itself portrayed as a section peopled by barbarians, taking delight in depriving members of minorities of their constitutionally guaranteed civil rights," continued the Mississippian.

But the South which deplores "journalistic shysterism" is beginning to fight back with truth as a weapon. In an effort to prove his statement Williams introduced two editorials from Southern newspapers to be inserted in the Congressional Record.

One editorial was called "Coloring the news" and appeared in the Vicksburg Evening Post. The other entitled "It happened in the North" was taken from the Shreveport Journal.

The first editorial specifically stated that news concerning race relations in the south is published by some leading papers and dispatched by radio or TV in such a way as to be "deterimental" to the south. It mentioned the Clinton, Tenn., incident, which was reported in such a way that it "would put Tennessee in a bad light."

It further criticized TV for carrying a news story of the "death" of Alcorn A&M college. The news commentator made "no reference to the fact that a Negro professor used his God-given right of free speech, and that the student body, evidently with outside inspiration, walked out in protest, because the professor's views were not shared by an ultraliberal organization which professes to speak for all Negroees," the editorial stated.

Coloring the news has been viciously continued for the past several years since the racial issue has been brought so much to the fore, continued the article.

"It is surprising to witness the extent to which people will go, even to the extent of doctoring news and, in some cases, falsifying it, just to gain support for a cause."

The second editorial which Williams placed in the Record contrasts news coverage of the recent murder of a Negro Massachusetts with that of Emmett Till in Mississippi.

It happened in Boston, the news item said, when two white men kicked and beat to death a colored man while his white wife looked on in horror. But there is a strange quiet in the offices of Look magazine, stated the editorial. Reports on the incident are absent on the major news wire circuits. This makes it appear that "everybody up North, including both the law-enforcement officers and the newspapers, must be anxious to drop the whole subject."

But when Emmett Till met with violent death in Mississippi after he tried to force his attention upon a white woman, you would have thought the northern press had formed a brigade and sent it into the South to avenge the death of this Chicago teenager, stated the article.

The editorial continued its argument with the contention that racial integration is as violently opposed in the North a sin the South, if not more so.

Southern Negro Needs A Chance

Commercial Appeal p. 3

Boundaries Don't Determine Mental Capacity

Sun. 3-17-57

To The Commercial Appeal:

J. R. Frame of Martin, Tenn, believes that Northern Negroes are in a different class from Southern Negroes, and he accordingly sets each group apart. As a former Northerner, he would naturally know because he attended school with Negroes during his childhood in Illinois, and has been able to see the other side of the picture. These qualifications would enable him to give an objective answer to the whole problem of the status of Negroes in America.

I admit there are many Southern Negroes who do not have high morals and intelligence, if by intelligence it is meant one's mental capacity or common sense, but it could not be accurately said that Northern Negroes are the sole possessors of the virtues of morality and intelligence. To admit that is to admit that virtues can be measured by Northern or Southern boundaries, and that is untrue. If by intelligence, Mr. Frame meant educational achievements, I could agree with him to an extent. Realizing, of course, that there are many Southern Negroes who have made great educational advances, I venture to say that on the whole, the Northern Negro benefits more from his education. Why? Because of the equal chance he has to better himself educationally, and therefore economically.

I believe Mr. Frame got to the heart of the matter when he discovered the "intellectual" difference between the Northern and Southern Negro. But I wonder if he ever stopped to think why the Northern Negro had impressed him more than the Southern Negro? If he had, he certainly would not have made the concluson that the Negro's mental capacity is not ready or large enough to be filled with the white man's social obligations.

In the case of the Northern Negro, he inferred that the social gap could be filled by giving an example of the social acceptance of a Negro boy who attended school and was treated decently by him and his schoolmates and recognized as one of the group. But now, he wants us to believe that the Negro has a long way to go before he will be able to bridge the "social gap."

Of course, integration cannot solve the Negro's problems; it would be foolish to think so. But what progress has been made under segregation in the past? It has been like the farmer's burning down his barn to get rid of the rats, and just as in the farmer's case, rebuilding the "barn" has cost more than getting rid of the rats. Mr. Frame unconsciously made the same observation when he compared the educational achievements of the Northern Negro to those of the Southern Negro.

No, integration cannot force the social acceptance of the Negroes here in America or anywhere else, but it can serve as a means for equalizing educational opportunities. If the Negro is educated in an environment which evades the stigma of inferiority attached to his color, he could go a long way toward using the mental capacity or intelligence he already has, but has not been able to develop fully in many instances.

Life Magazine Reveals Startling Situation Of Hypocrisy, Subterfuge Practice Against Negroes In The North

Advocate Sat. 4-6-57
Jackson, Miss. p. 4

From: The Negro Labor News—Houston, Texas

Since the migration of Southern Negroes to the North some 40 years ago to answer the labor shortage caused by World War I, Negro and white leaders have exploited the race issue more for political purposes in the North than for economic welfare of the race.

They made the Negro believe that all he had to do to secure racial equality was to pack up his suit case and depart for the promised land the North.

Old timers in the North centers, like Chicago, Philadelphia and other industrial centers, will tell you quickly that there was no race problem until the influx of Negroes from the South.

In many sections, discrimination and general living conditions are much worse than those in many sections of the Southland. Yet, these conditions are never played up to the Southern Negro. Many are ignorant of these conditions until they sell out or dispose of opportunities to improve their own conditions.

The credit to Life magazine, probably the most outspoken journal concerning public issues, exposed in its March 17th issue, hypocrisy, discrimination and subterfuge used against Negroes in the Northern cities.

The magazine points out that: "While Negroes have advanced faster in the North in the past 15 years than in any previous time, and their political equality is now assured, they still encounter many walls of exclusion. This discrimination in the North, LIFE says, results from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox and hypocrisy.'

According to LIFE: Northern acceptance of integration is everything from schools to beaches often still means segregation in effect because Negroes have to take what housing is available in the limited areas where they may live. The Negro ghettos in Northern cities are more crowded today than ever, and even so, Negroes have to pay up to half their income for housing, far more than the whites average.

Northern resistance to any genuine integration of PRIVATE housing seems as FIRM as Southern resistance to intgeration of schools.

LIFE says that to keep Negroes and white sections separated from one another with the frequency which occurs through out the North requires steady tactics, cooperation between real estate men, builders, bankers, home sellers and buyers.

These groups represent a large part of the whole Northern communities, and to a large degree reflects its attitude.

Discrimination in Medical Field

In many places in the North, Negro doctors and patients are denied access to medical facilities. Using Chicago as an example. LIFE says that there are no Negro surgeons in 77 private hospitals except Providence, a Negro hospital. Only a half dozen of these private hospitals accept Negroes in appreciable numbers.

Even though 20 percent of the population in Chicago is Negro and the city ordinance forbidding hospital discrimination is in effect, very few Negroes have access to hospital facilities.

AS I SEE IT, this is a typical example of how racial discrimination cannot be solely abolished by law, but it shows that it will take tolerance, education and the application of Christian principles to settle these problems. Just how long it will take, no one can predict, but it is obvious that it cannot be legislated or forced.

Labor Problems

LIFE says that "Negro laborers run into problems. In New York, though, some five thousand of the city's dock workers are Negroes and yet there is not a single Negro employed in the more favorite occupations, such as checkers, coopers, carpenters, weighers and watchmen."

In Cleveland, Ohio, after five years of argument, not a qualified Negro electrician carries a union card. Some unions such as the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Negro Postal Transportation association still have barriers up against Negroes.

In the field of education there is the rankest type of race discrimination practices against Negro educators in the North. The record shows that in the 31 so called non-segregated states there are only about 10,248 Negro teachers as compared with 722,487 white teachers. This is a ratio of about one Negro to 72 whites.

AS I SEE IT, if the Negro had heeded the advice of Booker T. Wasihngton "Cast your buckets down where you are in the South," the race as a whole would have been better off economically. Dr. Washington advised the Negro to become land and property owners. His theory was that the people who owned the land would control it.

He also urged them to own business enterprises of their own and employ their own people. He emphasized industrial education and thrift.

Last, but not least he cautioned the race during his great career to ever strive to make friends with white people in the community where we live.

In speaking of the social and integration issue facing us today, Dr. Washington advised that in all things purely social we can be as separate as the fingers yet together as the hand in all things effecting our economic progress and development.

NEGROES MUST GET RID OF INFERIOR FEELINGS BEFORE INTEGRATION COMES, SAYS RIGHTS FIGHTER

Columbia, S. C. — Negroes have been prejudiced against themselves by the American white man, and must first rid themselves of their inferiority feelings before they can be truly integrated, John Bolt Culbertson, who is a white civil rights fighter of Grreenville, S. C., told an Allen University audience here recently.

The South Carolina attorney who is singular for his race in the state in his active interest in equality, said Negroes "must emancipate themselves from feeling inferior to the white man before they can set themselves free."

The white man historically has laid so much stress on the socalled inferiority of the Negro that most Negroes actually believe they are inferior," Culbertson said. He added:

"White preachers said God sanctioned slavery, and that Negroes should serve white people — and most Negroes believe it because early Negro preachers believed what white preachers preached.

"The hardest job of Frederick Douglas was to convince Negroes that they were equal.

It is what is in the mind of people that counts. If one can make you believe you are nothing, then you are nothing."

Man Has Common Ancestry

It is time, the civil rights advocate said, for someone to start counteracting these false arguments. Man, the South Carolinian added, has common ancestry. He also asserted that 85 per cent of American Negroes have white blood but pointed to the arbitrariness of southern law which holds a man Negro even if he has 99 and 44/100 per cent white blood.

The white man rebuked Negroes who say they don't want progress "the hard way," who say, he went on, "It ain't worth it.

"It is a travesty to see Negro teachers failing to take leadership in this struggle for the minds of men.

"Seven thousand Negro teachers, if they had courage and gumption, could transform South Carolina if they would work together and stop fussing and fighting among themselves."

Cadillacs

Too many Negroes, the white man said, think only about new Cadillacs, new clothes, new homes, and similar distractions.

The white attorney's words were echoed by Negro attorney Elliott D. Turnage, of Darlington, who told the university audience that the "big difference between people is in opportunity and environment.

"The Negro must be taught to think free and feel free. . . . The Negro must feel free in the presence of others.

"It is difficult for a Negro to go into certain groups and feel free. Training for freedom must come from within."

South Carolina's need now is for leaders who will help South Carolina Negroes "think free, feel free and be free," he said.

A European Compares U. S. Negro With The Continent

By NEL SLIS

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (AP) — The Belgian film producer recognized me for a fellow European and spoke frankly.

"The situation over here is not ideal," he said, "but it's vastly different from what the average European thinks the position of the Negro in America is."

His voice reflected his surprise —the surprise most foreigners feel when they visit the United States for the first time. In Europe, it is generally believed that American Negroes are represed and kept in a semi-primitive standard of living.

Europeans who have traveled, of course, know better.

And some of us were treated to an education in our own backyard last year when a colored troupe toured Europe in "Porgy and Bess."

On the stage they portrayed what most of us thought was typical Negro life in America. Then we met the actors socially at cocktail parties. In the Netherlands, as must have happened elsewhere in Europe, we were overwhelmed by their culture, sophistican and sharp business sense.

ASTONISHED EUROPEAN

During my four months' visit here in America many Europeans —and Far Easterners too — have talked to me in astonishment about the Negro's share in America's cultural, political and social life. They were impressed by the mutual tolerance, by the eagerness of both white and colored to improve the situation. By the Negro's fervent patriotism.

Remarked a French mystery writer: "The position of the average Negro in the South is still miserable, but in the North they are very much a part of the picture.

An Indonesian pariamentarian observed: "Housing conditions for the Negroes in the bigger cities are excellent."

Visitors are amazed to learn a Negro is holding down a $12,900 a year job on President Eisenhower's executive staff-E. Federic Morrow, 48-year-old lawyer and first Negro White House aide.

To see how the Negro fared all over the country I traveled from East to West coasts and came back through the South.

Everyone told me that life for the American Negro is slowly but surely changing. Two major reasons seem to be: he participated in the postwar prosperity boom and he gets a lift from the fact his African brothers are being recoginzed formally and politically by the Western World, notably by the American government.

INCREASED EARNINGS

Increased earnings of colored workers have brought proseprity to publishers and magazines.

The most important magazine is probably "Ebony," which resembles "Life" in format. It's articles have particular appeal for colored people: profiles of well known Negroes such as Ralph Bunche and Sugar Ray Robinson, and stories such as the independence of the African Gold Coast under the name of Ghana.

Talking with Negroes, I found that while they acknowledged their race doesn't have equality, they are making progress and certainly could be far worse off than they are. Of course, there are exceptions.

A New York cab driver I rode with said he had gone to elementary school with the present premier of Ghana, Dr. Kwane Nkruhmah.

"He was wiser," said the cab driver, "and had the opportunity to come to Columbia University, and then back to his own country."

The driver still felt Africa was his home. He was a seaman, and only driving a taxi because his wife was sick and he wanted to stay with her until she recovered.

"Next month I am going back to sea," he said, "and I always manage to get to Africa, which is my own country."

But some of the other things I learned were

WHITE COLLAR JOBS

More and more Negroes are working in white collar jobs. And many white firms employ them in advertising products for the more than 15 million Negro customers. In science, sports and the arts, the trend is upward.

For example, one of the vice presidents of Union Carbide, one of the world's largest chemical firms, is a young Negro, Lloyd Cook of Chicago.

He told me that he was accepted socially so long as he remained in the field of science. He is president of the Chemical Society in Chicago, a purely social organization.

"But," he said, "I could never be a member of Chicago's leading golf and country club."

Cooke discussed the alleged tolerance foreigners are supposed to feel toward Negroes. He said that in Chicago it was the European immigrants who were especially anti-Negro. Foreigners may be shocked by American segregation problems, he pointed out, but "they don't have one of their own."

HOUSING DIFFICULT

In the nation's capital, I found whites and Negroes mingling freely. But it is very difficult for Negroes to find living accommodations in the sections tradionally white.

Visiting the South I got the feel that the issue of civil rights is more and more boceming emotional, rather than political.

On a bus going down to Virginia, a distinguished looking white woman sat talking with a Negro woman. At the first stop, Richmond, the waiting rooms and rest rooms are distinctly marked "for whites only" and "for colored people."

The two women went their separate ways, but getting back onto the bus they again fell into conversation.

Max Ascoli, editor of the magazine "The Reporter," in an editorial said: "Ultimately the sharper differences and conflicts dwindle, and lines are established that go beyond all groups. He was referring to other people who have had to overcome similar obstacles, the Irish, the Germans, and Jews.

WILL NOT BE SOON

"This is the way America has been made and is being made, thanks to the toughness and fairness of American politics. This will certainly happen south of the Mason-Dixon Line. Both white and Negroes know that it will happen. It will never be too soon," Ascoli wrote.

This year, 1957, is important to Negroes. It gave them their first great tennis star—Althea Gibson from Harlem, who won the women's singles at Wimbledon and was hailed as a national heroine

Singers Harry Belafonte and Nat King Cole, among others, are riding the crest of popularity.

And constitutionally, this year may decide on their civil rights in the South, including their rights to vote, and the further education of their children.

It was in the Deep South that people told me: "Of course segregation is unconstitutional, but the North must give us time."

By Atty. Gen. Patton

Supreme Court Is Accused Of Destroying the Nation

MOCKSVILLE, Aug. 8 (AP) — State Attorney General George Patton today accused the "power-mad" United States Supreme Court of destroying this country by "swapping legal precedents for ideological ideals and sociological arguments."

Speaking at the 77th annual Masonic picnic given in the benefit of the Masonic Orphanage of Oxford, he charged the court is rewriting the Constitution to suit individual whims and thereby dividing the nation, race against race, class against class, and section against section."

Division of this type, he warned, is the 'first step toward national destruction.'

Sounding a solemn note in what was otherwise a fun-and-food affair, Patton pleaded with eloquence for a "halt to the pattern of chaos and strife being created by the judiciary."

'Only Salvation.'

He said the "only salvation" in curbing such a trend lies in positive action by the people through their duly-elected representatives in the legislative branch.

After describing the dangers of one governmental branch usurping the powers and funds of another, the speaker called the judicial branch "the worst offender by far" at the present time.

"Unless the present trend is halted," he predicted, "our continued democratic existence will be greatly jeopardized."

Departing from his prepared speech, Patton said, "I have great respect, and I want you to understand that, for the judicial branch of our government. And I respect the men who occupy those seats (pause), insofar as their positions are concerned.

"But I tell you that when they go to swapping legal precedents for ideological ideals and sociological arguments they are step by step destroying us just as surely as leukemia will destroy you if it ever strikes you."

In what is probably the first speech by a State government official since the Senate approved a Civil Rights Bill, Patton said, "the surrender of States Rights to the Federal Government is cause for alarm. We unwittingly and without protest have handed over to the federal government the rights which were reserved to us by the Constitution."

He likewise charged that invasion of legislative powers and functions by the executive departments causes "great concern."

"But the most important question confronting the American people today," he continued, "is how may we curb the desire of what I would term a 'power-mad' United States Supreme Court to rewrite the Constitution of the United States to suit the individual whims of the members of the Court, without regard for legal precedent."

Russell and Talmadge for Once Agreed With Illinois Senator on Race Matter

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Sun. 8-4-57
P. 9-E

By HAROLD DAVIS

Washington.

FOR THE FIRST time in recent months, Senators Dick Russell and Herman Talmadge found it possible last week to agree with Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois about a race matter.

In the course of a colloquy on the Senate floor, Sen. Douglas declared that race relations are a national problem in America.

"It is more acute in the South only because there are more Negroes in the South," he said.

"If we had the same proportion of Negroes in the North as our friends in the South have, and if we had inherited the traditions which grew out of slavery, our behavior would probably be no whit better."

To that, the two Georgians could agree.

In the debate which preceded and followed the Douglas remark, Mr. Russell, in one of the rare instances where he has become angry on the Senate floor this session, laced into several of his Northern colleagues on the question of race riots. He particularly noted the disorders which occurred last week in Chicago and which have taken place in recent years in Michigan.

Harold Davis' column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Journal.

To Sen. Charles Potter of Michigan, Russell said:

"The point I am making is that the system which the senator from Michigan wants to impose on Georgia (integration) has brought about race riots in Michigan. We deplore race riots . . . and we are determined not to have them in Georgia.

"If the senator from Michigan would simply not seek to invade our state to fasten their race riot generating system upon us, we would appreciate it. I hope there will not be riots; but if the senator must carry out his system that results in riots, let him keep it in Michigan and not bring it into Georgia.

"We do not have nor desire race riots there."

RISK

Meanwhile in the House of Representatives, the Georgia delegation took a calculated risk recently on the Eisenhower school construction bill. The measure would have given the states grants of federal money to help them build new schools.

The Georgians opposed the measure on principle, believing federal control would follow federal money.

At one point in the deliberations, Rep. Stuyvesant Wainwright of New York offered an amendment saying states which keep segregated schools couldn't get any money.

The Georgians decided to walk out of the House of Representatives and let the Wainwright amendment pass in hopes that its extreme provisions would kill the entire bill later on.

As Congresswoman Iris Blitch of Homer said: "I was off the floor so much that day I could hardly tell what was going on."

The amendment passed 136-105 with most of the Southerners outside the chamber. Only one Georgian stayed to fight and vote against the Wainwright proposal—Rep. Henderson Lanham of Rome.

When the bill, as amended, was finally voted on, it was defeated only 208-203.

Had it gone into law amended by the Wainwright proposal, the South would have had a real monster on its hands.

PASSPORTS

Rep. James C. Davis of Stone Mountain has supplied information which shows that 4,000 Georgians applied for passports to go abroad during the first six months of this year.

Thirty or 40 years ago, only the very rich were able to travel.

Yet this year, in the country at large, common laborers outnumbered bankers and brokers more than two to one—5,264 to 2,337. More than 36,000 students traveled in other lands compared with 15,267 merchants, manufacturers and executives.

Mr. Davis says these figures disprove the Karl Marx contention that in America, the rich would get richer and the poor poorer.

The Deep South Says Never

Louisville, Ky.

HOW STRONG IS SOUTHERN RESISTANCE TO SEGREGATION?

"For the sake of your children, your children's children, talk white, think white, hire white, buy white, and remain white."

"They couldn't send enough bayonets down to compel the people to send their children to school with Nigras."

"I am pledged to the separation of the races at all costs."

These are but three of the answers John Bartlow Martin got in his journey through the South gathering material for his new book, THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS NEVER.

The first is an exhortation written by Robert Patterson, leader of the White Citizens' Council in Mississippi, and published in a circular distributed by the Council. The second is the answer made by Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia to a question put by Mr. Martin. The third is a statement from the inaugural address of Governor Cole of Tennessee.

THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS NEVER is the outstanding result of extensive research in the field, faithful recording of direct conversations with key people, scrupulous adherence to the reporter's obligation to present as complete a picture as possible. Here are factual descriptions (often in the words of the men themselves) of segregation leaders: Sam Englehart, Executive Secretary of the Citizens' Councils of Alabama; W. J. Simmons, organizer of the Council in Jackson, Mississippi; Attorney General Cook of Georgia, who claims he would sell the state parks rather than desegregate them; Robert Patterson and Asa "Ace" Carter, two of the strongest figures in the White Citizens' Council groups.

Mr. Martin records events little known outside the South: Emmett Till and Autherine Lucy were the focal points of incidents given world-wide publicity; but how many people outside the state of South Carolina are aware of the school board struggle in Summerton, a "black belt" town? Mr. Martin is aware of it, and his report on the activities of W. B. Davis, local Council leader; School Superintendent Hugh B. Betchman; Charles Plowden, town banker; Reverend Henry Rankin, Presbyterian minister and head of the Council's Race Relations Committee; Reverend Mr. Richberg, spokesman for the Negroes and minister of the Liberty Hill Methodist Church, shows with brilliant clarity the practical problem facing the whole nation.

THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS NEVER is more than a record: It is a weapon, and a warning. It is a warning against complacency, the attitude that tensions have subsided, and the tendency to be deceived by the picture in the border states where desegregation is working out. It is a weapon in its sharp and accurate delineation of the progress which is being made by desegregation forces, and the pressures which are being brought to bear by the hard-core South.

John Bartlow Martin has three times won the Benjamin Franklin Magazine Award for exceptional reportorial jobs he has done. THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS NEVER is another such report: an invaluable handbook for anyone who wants to know what is actually happening in the South, while the Civil Rights debates make front page news through the nation.

Can't escape 'integration,' Dixie warned

38a
Courier

HOUSTON, Tex. — The 23rd annual session of the Southern Historical Association Friday heard an eminent Texas author and educator warn the South against trying to escape the "inevitable" in the current integration-segregation struggle.

"The South tried to escape the inevitable once and has suffered for it ever since. It cannot afford to make the same mistake twice," Dr. Walter P. Webb, a professor in history at the University of Texas, told the meeting as he spoke on the economic progress of the South between 1930 and 1950.

"The Supreme Court has ruled on segregation and like it or not, the South must eventually accept the decision, however deliberate its speed," the educator emphasized.

DR. WEBB said the race question and the fact that the South may be divided politically are the two great dangers imposing upon the area currently.

"Segregation, like slavery, threatens disaster to the South. If the South in 1860 would have looked at the world, it would have seen that history had passed it by.

"Chattel slavery had been abolished almost throughout the Western world and the South was but a tiny island in a rising sea of freedom. Today, the South finds itself in the same position again.

"And again history has passed it by, this time in reference to educational practice. Nowhere else in the Western world, with the exception of parts in Africa, is there such discrimination as the South has used and continues to use in many places.

"AGAIN IT is an island in a rising sea and its inundation is again inevitable. This is not the time for the South to divide and nullify its political influence."

Contending that racial bars threaten the South with disaster, Dr. Webb explained:

"The South can never hope for anything better than what it has had from the Republican party and the rich men of the South should keep that in mind.

"In the past, Southerners have been bound together by poverty. They should not now be divided by prosperity."

Neither Negro, Nor White Man Free In Deep South

World Wed. 5-1-57 Pt 1

Birm. Ala.

While many Americans assume what they consider a "moderate" viewpoint on desegregation, white supremacy advocates are battling the 1954 Supreme Court decision for integration in the Nation's schools.

As a result, neither the Negro nor the white man is free in the Deep South, says Carl T. Rowan in 'Go South To Sorrow," published by Random House on April 17.

In this forthright book on the conflict that has plagued the South since the United States Supreme Court outlawed school segregation, Rowan reveals the "hoodlums and scalawags (who) imposed their reign of racial terror."

"This nation will flounder, and it will deserve to flounder, so long as we face our most distressing and demoralizing domestic problem with indecision and timidity," writes Rowan, the only newspaper ever to win three consecutive annual awards from Sigma Delta Chi the nations top professional journalism society.

A staff correspondent for the Minneapolis Morning Tribune, Rowan also is the author of "South of Freedom" and "The Pitiful and The Proud." In 1954 he was honored by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce as "one of America's ten outstanding young men."

In "Go South To Sorrow," Rowan narrates in stark detail the stories of the rise of the White Citizens Council movement; the murder of Emmett Till; the shooting of Gus Courts, who wanted to vote in Mississippi; the mob forcing Miss Autherine Lucy out of the University of Alabama; the heart-throbbing, victorious struggle against bus segregation by the "new Negroes' of Montgomery, Ala.

But through crisis after crisis, writes Rowan, "a large portion of humane, justice-loving America sits idle, assuming naively that time solves all problems, while the evil and the ill attempt to mentally rape a section of the country and to plunge all the nation into world-wide disrepute."

The 31-year-old, Tennessee-born newspaperman, who has filed prize-winning dispatches from the Far East, the Bandung Conference, Africa and the United Nations, places the bulk of the blame for the nation's embarrassing racial crisis on timid men "who seek refuge in 'moderation'."

In a chapter on "The Wail of the Moderates," Rowan writes: "Every patriotic impulse inside me asks have we become a cowardly nation always searching for 'middle ground' between right and wrong, between justice and injustice, between morality and immorality?

"How is it that a nation that commissioned ten million of its finest young men to go abroad and, if necessary, to die in behalf of the ideal of man's equality under God, the ideal that man was born to be free, can now be frightened into meaningless, cowardly double-talk because a few hoodlums and demagogues are threatening riots and bloodshed if any effort is made to enforce a decision by the nation's highest court?"

In "Go South To Sorrow," Rowan reports that, while he saw reasons for optimism when he wrote "South of Freedom" in 1952, today racists "are offering only bloodshed, hatred and ignorance to an already distraught people."

He asks the nations—and Negroes particularly—to understand that, while black men appear to be the chief victims of this new wave of "tyranny and fear," in truth it is "the white man who enslaves himself."

"There is no paradise for any Negro in the Deep South," Rowan conceded, "but Americans must understand that the white man, the honest white man of good will with a living sense of democracy, lives in a purgatory that is all his own."

Rowan continues: "These (white) men know what a hellish prison it is for a white man to live in fear that if he relaxes just one day his "fair-skinned blue-eyed daughter" will elope with the first "uppity Negro" to come along; what impregnable mental walls must surround the Southern white man who fears that if he fails to preserve the eighteenth-century and his cotton-plantation economy, Negroes will wrest away all the jobs and money; what a deep, deep dungeon for the man who fears that the 'inferior Negroes will seize political power if any are allowed to vote."

Rowan says the crisis will deepen and do inestimable harm to the United States unless the federal government enforces the decisions of the federal courts.

Dixie Jury Justice?

Birm-Age-Herald

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Dixie, the eyes of the world are looking at you. You say your justice is fair. But is it?

Your congressmen say that the civil rights bill now before the Senate Judiciary Committee, indicates that Southern juries cannot be trusted. Can they?

And your congressmen say that if the present civil rights bill is passed, it will deny the right of a trial by jury.

Southern juries have proved time and time again that they cannot be trusted to mete out even-handed justice. The judge knows the law, but in many instances, must follow the recommendations of the jury.

The world must admit that Southern justice is speedy, but is it justice as the world sees it?

HERE ARE samples of the latest Southern miscarriages of justice—where a trained judge has to follow the recommendations of 12 prejudiced jurists that have their minds made up in advance.

In Longview, Texas, last week, Perry D. Ross, 21, white, readily admitted that he fired the shots from a .22 calibre rifle that killed John E. Reece, 18, and wounded two teenage girls in a cafe.

Testifying before an all-white jury, Ross gave a pitiful explanation of the October shooting.

He told the jury how he and several other whites went on a drinking spree and then decided to go "on a raid"—a raid to shoot at colored people.

Ross then described how he fired several shots from the rifle from a moving automobile into a cafe south of here.

PLEADING ROSS' case, Gordon Wellborn addressed the jury:

"This boy just wanted to scare somebody and keep n—s and whites from going to school together. Now that's the truth about it, and this is the result of other trouble."

That's all the jury needed to hear in finding Ross guilty. The jury recommended a suspended sentence, however, and Ross received a five-year suspended sentence.

Seemingly the "trusty" jury thought nothing of according justice to John E. Reece, or to the more fortunate two girls who were only wounded.

AND AS FOR the latest sham of justice in Alabama . . .

Charles C. Hamilton was sentenced to die in the electric chair for a night-time burglary of a Birmingham home, last October, which he maintains he did not committ.

Hamilton may, or may not, have committed the burglary, but did he go into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Milko with intent to ravish as Deputy Solicitor Cecil claimed?

Or did Hamilton enter the house as he testified?

The 26-year-old man said he was walking home when Mrs. Milko's grandmother signalled him to come into the house, seemingly in "a foreign language," indicating she had been robbed and needed help.

* * *

IN CONTRAST, the Milkos' testified they found Hamilton just outside of Mrs. Milko's grandmother's room standing in his bare feet with his trousers off.

Hamilton admitted he had his shoes off, taken off at Mrs. Milko's request, but denied that he had taken off any other clothing.

He refused a court-appointed counsel, Clell Mayfield, to plead his own case. His only record is an AWOL conviction in the Army.

SOUTHERN JUSTICE first showed in the courtroom when Deputy Solicitor Deason challenged the jury to show "you've got the guts to do right" as he demanded the death sentence.

Alabama passed a law in 1935 making a nighttime burglary a felony, punishable by 10 years to death. Only four persons have been given death sentences under the statute—all colored.

In demanding the death sentence, Deason said:

"True Hamilton did not ravish anybody. But are you going to wait until a man like this accomplishes his purpose before giving the extreme penalty?

"Send word out from this courthouse this very day that anyone, anyone at all, who enters a house in the night time with intent to ravish, will face death."

* * *

SO AFTER less than an hour of deliberation, the jury decided that Clarence C. Hamilton should die.

Did they do as Deason asked when he challenged them to show "you've got the guts to do right?"

Does Hamilton deserve to die in accordance to what harm was done, regardless as to whether he did or did not commit burglary?

And especially in view of the fact that only four persons have been sentenced to die under the statute since its enactment in 1935.

Fortunately none of the four colored persons sentenced have been electrocuted as of yet because of actions taken by the governors.

SO ONCE AGAIN, a judge, trained in the law, has had to follow recommendations of a Southern jury in dealing out justice.

But since an appeal to the Supreme Court is automatic under capital punishment, Clell Mayfield, who many say has a bright future as a defense attorney, now has the task of saving Hamilton's life.

Circuit Court Judge Wallace Gibson, who formally pronounced the death sentence, has presented Mayfield with a legal text book to study the necessary steps and proper procedure in filing an appeal.

Southern justice—one law for whites, another for colored persons—has been accomplished, but is it JUSTICE?

The President Hesitates To Speak

Courier Sat. 5-4-57

Pittsburgh Pa. P. 9

It is regrettable that President Eisenhower has not heeded the invitation of Southern Negro leaders to visit the section where race relations are at their worst in years and speak words of "wise counsel" on civil rights violations and disorders.

Last week he urged the Conference on Christian Faith and Human Relations meeting in Nashville to "arrive at a constructive approach to the problems of our day" and "make the service of God and neighbor meaningful in our generation," but he did not go down there to say it.

We believe he could have set the best national example by speaking in the South about conditions that disgrace the South and the nation.

EDUCATION FOR INTEGRATION

World P. 8

By JAMES A. OWENS

(Editors note: This is the second in a series of three articles by Prof. James A. Owens, president of Selma University, Selma, Ala.)

Sat. 2-2-57

THE INDIVIDUAL

In the final analysis, this business of integration must be reduced to an individual basis. The ideas, opinions, concepts and value systems held by the individual will determine the nature and course of procedure of the attack to be launched in planning our offensive for a program of education for integration.

B'ham Ala.

In the first place, to be an effective element in the educative processes designed to foster integration, the individual personality must be well integrated. We mean by this that the individual must be emotionally stable, possess ideas and concepts which have been derived by a process of sound logic and mature judgment; that his frame of reference contains opinions and conclusions derived as a result of his critically evaluating each experience which has become a part of his system values.

If we accept these concepts as our criteria for a well integrated personality or a suitable personality for our purpose and apply them to many of those who are attempting to lead in this effort, we will find that a considerable percentage will be ineffective as an instrument in teaching both by precept and example. This will hold true in the teaching profession as well as in other walks of life. This is highly regrettable in the case of teachers, since they are now in the forefront and must lead the assault.

MORE DIFFICULT

Marguerite Cartwright believes that the elimination of the segregated school will be more difficult for the white teacher than the Negro teacher. In America, the caste system has always been a problem for the white man, not the Negro. We are convinced that prejudice is often more detrimental to the group that enforces it than to the victim. Neither by interest nor by experience are white teachers prepared to meet the task with which they are faced. Negro citizens have been regarded as remote and apart and as such they have been of little concern to the white school teacher. On the other hand, the Negro teacher has had to study the life, habits, characteristics and even idiosyncrasies of the whites in general in order not to offend and to occupy in a most inconspicuous way, the role of "forbidden neighbor." The white teacher will be confronted with the result of years of violation of the American creed with its resultant guilt and need for rationalization and self justification. What a price to pay for the arrogant and humiliating treatment which they have accorded their neighbors.

STUDENT ADJUSTMENT

The problem of adjustment, on the part of the student, in the desegregated school will be a minor one and in most cases, of little consequence. The real difficulty lies with the parents and other adults of the community who are so steeped in prejudice that they are not able to view any situation involving Negroes with a clear-cut, sane and logical approach. They attempt to project their feelings into the children and then speak for them. This is well illustrated on the part of a white mother at Hoxie, Ark., when the school board ordered the abolition of segregated schools (Life Magazine, July 25, 1955, P29), and a few white parents accompanied their children the first day to express their distaste for the whole affair.

The mother said, "We have to obey the law, but Peggy fears Negroes." After the mother left the school, Peggy was seen strolling arm-in-arm with a Negro school mate. As this article from Life further points out, the novelty of the situation soon wore off and during the noon recess, white boys sought Negro boys and invited them to try out for the school basketball team. Negro and white girls happily romped together. "By the end of the day the children were behaving as if they had gone to school together all of their lives."

THE NEGRO COLLEGE

On the college level we find white students entering Negro colleges for the first time in Missouri and West Virginia, where the relationship seems to be most cordial. However, this situation poses a real problem for the Negro college. In the first place, the Negro college was established to serve Negroes only and meet their special needs. Within this framework there has been operated a system of semi-avoidance, to reduce the possibility of conflicts with whites.

Therefore, Negroes were compelled to establish and maintain their own professional organizations which were primarily concerned with issues affecting the Negro, his education and economic problems. The whole pattern was designed to keep the Negro on a marginal cultural basis. The decision of the Supreme Court also means that the Negro college must begin a program of instruction which is truly American and designed to enhance the merging of Negroes into the main stream of American culture.

Our boys and girls must acquire a new outlook, one to help them become integral parts of the American economy. In the past, as E. C. Harrison points out, the predominant emphasis in the Negro college has been that of preparing teachers. This has been due to the fact that Negroes have experienced considerable difficulty in entering other fields of employment, thus they have avoided in a large measure, non-teaching professions. These institutions must now reorient themselves to meet the demands of a new social order; a new cultural epoch and a new application of the democratic creed. They are no longer Negro colleges any more than the white institutions are exclusively white.

Deep South Defies Integration

Advertiser Tues. 5-21-57

Montgomery, Ala.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

THREE years ago this month the United States Supreme Court ordered the desegregation of public schools. On the anniversary of this occasion, some 50,000 persons held a "Prayer Pilgrimage for Freedom" in Washington. The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., appealed to the President for "strong aggressive leadership" in behalf of racial justice.

Why is executive leadership necessary? What does the record of three years show?

One year ago the Post-Dispatch published an editorial, "Two Years of Achievement," which described vast progress toward integration of public schools in Missouri, Kansas, Maryland, Oklahoma and Kentucky, considerable progress in southern Texas, and hesitant steps in Arkansas and Tennessee.

The first two years after the Supreme Court's order were years of achievement, not just because progress was made in those states where obstacles were fewest, but because even those states might not have integrated their schools if the court had not ordered it done.

The third year after the court order, however, has shown far less achievement. The single major example of public school integration occurred in Louisville, which was indeed significant. And integration was extended somewhat in other parts of Kentucky, Oklahome, Maryland and border states generally.

Nevertheless, not one inch of advancement has occurred in five states of the Deep South where, in fact, resistance to integration grew bolder. Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina and Virginia adopted types of "pupil assignment" laws, or other measures to resist integration. The Louisiana legislature simply declared that "all schools shall be operated separately." The past year began with general resistance to the law of the land and ended the same way.

Hence it can now be said that the integration order of 1954 has accomplished much of its purpose in the border states, but has yet to face the challenge of defiance in the Deep South.

No doubt, as the years and the courts proceed, and as integration closes around the Deep South, some inroads will be made on unequal education in those five states. But it is clear that the impetus of integration would be stronger if the federal courts had encouragement and assistance from the executive and legislative branches of the government.

President Eisenhower has yet to make a clear, unequivocal statement in behalf of equal treatment of public school children in the Deep South. His party's leadership in Congress has done little about the issue, and the Democratic majority now seems reluctant to meet the issue of civil rights generally for fear of a party split.

Three years after the Supreme Court order, the advance of educational democracy has reached a wall far south of the Mason-Dixon line. A statement by the President as the one man elected to speak for the nation could help to breach that wall.

Integration—And Rome

Newsweek P. 81

New York

Ever since the 1954 Supreme Court decision barring segregation in the nation's schools, New Orleans' Roman Catholic Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel has pointed his archdiocese's parochial-school students toward eventual integration. A year ago, the onetime Harlem priest postponed integration "at least until September 1957," largely because of the bitter opposition of a group of Catholic segregationists who formed the Association of Catholic Laymen. Although the archbishop ordered the association to disband, the group appealed to a higher church authority.

Last week the association made public a letter it had sent to Pope Pius XII, asking him to request their archbishop to take "no further steps" toward racial integration. The letter, furthermore, asked the Pope to decree that segregation was not "morally wrong and sinful," as the archbishop had defined it in a pastoral letter last year.

The Holy Father, on vacation in Castel Gandolfo, had not yet seen the appeal, a high Vatican source promptly stated. But, unequivocally, the source added, the association had committed "a grave error" by writing the letter. Since the church is "concerned with souls, and all souls are equally dear to her," it is inconceivable the source said, that any form of discrimination could be sanctioned by the Holy See.

The president of the New Orleans group, Emile Wagner Jr., thought the matter did not end there. "We are asking the Pope to give Catholics a definitive answer on segregation," he said. "We will be gravely disappointed if we get no reply."

Sees South's upheaval as death pains of old system

Afro American

"The present upheaval in the South is but the death throes of the segregated racial system."

That, in essence, is what John T. Blue, director, American Council on Human Rights, told delegates to the American Sociological Society in a recent meeting here.

Reading a paper on "Systems of Racial Stratification: A Categoric Typology," Mr. Blue declared changes come slowly and always with resistance.

Sat. 9-21-57

HE ADDED that the significance of the Supreme Court decision on schools is the fact that the constitutional and legal basis for a segregated system of race relations is being destroyed.

What is emerging from this, he told the sociologists, is a quasi-equalitarian racial system in which racial discrimination will be less overt.

"Race will be, for a time, a basis for discrimination and not an inherent stigmata," he added.

"In the north," Mr. Blue said, "the quasi-equalitarian system is changing into an count more than the racial equalitarian system in which achievements are beginning to taint."

Says Pope Opposes 'All Discrimination'

Afro-American Sat. 8-24-57 P. 19

Baltimore, Md.

ROME, Italy — "The church (Catholic) is completely and unalterably opposed to all forms of discrimination . . . in New Orleans as much as in the Union of South Africa.

"The church is concerned with souls and all souls are equally dear to her."

Thus declared a high church source here last week, speaking for the Vatican, as he stated his views on an appeal to the Pope by a New Orleans group of Roman Catholic laymen seeking the retention of segregation in their archdiocese.

"THE NEW ORLEANS Catholic laymen have committed a grave error," the source declared, "as far as the substance of their case is concerned.

"They apparently think it conceivable that the Holy See could declare itself against integration, but this could never be," the source asserted.

The New Orleans group appeal consists of a request that the Most Rev. Joseph Francis Rummel, archbishop of New Orleans, speak out against integration and take no further steps toward desegregation in Catholic schools.

THE ARCHBISHOP has made it explicit that he intends to end segregation in New Orleans Catholic schools. He has already ended racial separation in churches.

The Vatican source indicated that the laymen group should have taken their appeal to the sacred congregation of the council and not to the Pope, as has been done in past cases of this sort.

However, the Pope is expected to speak or write about the racial issue in the near future.

Segregation Tension Rises Anew Throughout Southland

Daily News Fri. 8-16-57 Jackson, Miss.

By UNITED PRESS

Elements of opposing sides of the segregation controversy—white terrorists and alleged Negro boycotters—are being investigated in Alabama today.

Elsewhere in the South there were developments of almost every type—renewed attempts by Negroes to enter white schools, complaints about other racial incidents, and picketing of a controversial movie.

Authorities at Maplesville and Evergreen, Ala., were investigating two mass floggins by robed Ku Klux Klansmen while the Alabama attorney general used undercover agents in an alleged attempt to break up a racial boycott by Negroes of Tuskegee, Ala.

There was speculation in North Carolina that the state's pupil-assignment law may be brought into a court test by 20 Negro pupils who were denied their second plea to enter white schools at Charlatte Thursday.

RECENTLY DENIED

The applicants were among 35 turned away by the Charlotte School Board recently after the board there and boards of two other North Carolina cities decided to permit a few transfers of Negroes to white schools this fall.

In Florida, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked Gov. LeRoy Collins to order a full investigation of two recent racial incidents, one flogging and a shooting.

The flogging victims was a mill worker at Jasper. In the other incident, at Dade City, someone fired into an automobile in which white and Negro baseball players were riding together, slightly wounding a white player.

A showing of the movie, "Island in the Sun," touched off a downtown parade by 200 robed and hooded Ku Klux Klansmen Thursday night in Jacksonville, Fla.

Scores of city, county and state police gathered at a Florida theater to prevent possible disorders. Other pickets had paraded in front of the theater earlier in the day.

NEGROES BEATEN

In the Klan incident at Maplesville six Negro men were beaten last Friday night during a demonstration by some 150 robed and hooded men. Authorities said three of the Negroes have since fled with their families.

Authorities at Evergreen, about 100 miles from Maplesville, disclosed that four Negroes including two ministers had been accosted on a highway, kidnaped and beaten the previous night.

The state of Alabama meanwhile obtained a court order for Negro leaders at Tuskegee to end alleged economic warfare which threatens to put white merchants out of business.

The Negroes, members of the Tuskegee Civic Assn., denied there is any organized boycott. They claimed they were campaigning for "first class citizenship" because the State Legislature changed the city boundary to reduce Negro voting power.

Editor says whites fighting two-front war

ATLANTA, Nov. 19 — (AP)— Southern white people are fighting a "two-front war" against outside measures for integration and against demands from Southern Negroes, according to Grover C. Hall, editor of The Montgomery Advertiser.

Times

He described the morale of whites in the South as "very, very poor" since they have lost battle after battle, but not the war.

Birmingham, Ala.

"THIS IS AN ERA when the NAACP is carrying a swagger stick," Hall said last night in a lecture at Emory University. The talk was one of a series on "Editors View the South."

"Custom is stronger than law," Hall declared in pointing out that people all over the country ignored the prohibition law and other similar court decisions. He chided those outside the South for saying that all resistance should end with the Supreme Court's decisions.

Dec. 11-19-57

FOR THE MAJOR PART of his talk Hall discussed the Montgomery bus boycott and the Tuskegee situation where city limits were redrawn to place most Negro voters outside the lines.

dealing with defense spending for the next fiscal year.

BUT THE SERIES of talks which began months ago has taken on much more significance in the light of the Soviet Union's recent advances in the fields of ballistic missiles, satellites and other space age developments.

In a speech at Oklahoma City Wednesday night, Eisenhower said that because of those developments U. S. spending in those fields will have to be increased by a very considerable amount.

Times

The president provided no specific estimate. He did say that savings must be made wherever possible in other military categories. And he added that some non-military programs which are not absolutely essential will have to be deferred or eliminated.

Birmingham, Ala.

THERE HAVE BEEN some predictions that defense expenditures in the new fiscal year will run between $1 and $2 billion in excess of outlay for this year. The original estimated for the current 12 months was $38 billion, but it now appears the total will be around $39 billion.

Dec. 11-19-57

As for the amount of increase for the year starting in July both McElroy and McNeil have indicated the over-all boost may not be as large as it was suggested Eisenhower had in mind when he talked about a very considerable hike.

Optimism over money fades—

Will Dixie ever integrate? Fewer people now believe it

(By The American Institute of Public Opinion)

Although a majority of adults across the country believe that general integration will eventually come to the South, there are fewer white Southerners today who will admit it will happen than was the case a year and a half ago.

Whereas 55 per cent of Southern whites questioned

Second in a Series

in a February, 1956 survey said they expected the day to come when segregation will end, the latest check by the American Institute of Public Opinion finds 43 per cent holding this view.

Most of the difference is accounted for in an increase in the number of white Southerners who today either express doubts about the eventual outcome of integration or have no opinion.

The survey also finds that the country generally is not so optimistic as it was that the racial situation in the South will improve during the coming year.

In January of this year, the weight of sentiment throughout the nation leaned to the view that the situation would get better in the immediate months ahead. Today the picture is almost exactly reversed.

By a margin of 4-to-3 among those adults who forsee a change, the view today is that the racial situation in the South will worsen during the coming year.

Among Southerners, generally, sentiment is 2-to-1 today that "things will get worse before they get better."

Interviewers asked a cross-section of adults from Maine to California:

"Do you think the day will ever come in the South when white and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants and generally sharing the same public accommodations?"

The results nationwide today:

NATIONWIDE

Yes, will come	54%
No, will not	30
No opinion	16

It must be pointed out, however, that even though there has been a drop in the proportion of white Southerners who think the day will come eventually, those who consider integration to be inevitable still out-number those who believe such a thing "will never happen."

Here is a comparison of the vote of Southern whites today and the vote recorded in February, 1956:

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY

	Today	Feb. 1956
Yes, will come	43%	55%
No, will not	38	33
No opinion	19	12

Adults in the survey were next asked:

"Do you think the situation in the South between the races will get better or worse during the coming year?"

The vote nationwide today and in January of this year:

NATIONWIDE

	Today	Jan. 1957
Will get better	32%	41%
Will get worse	41	35
No difference	9	11
No opinion	17	13

Here is the vote in the 13 Southern states today and in January of this year:

SOUTH ONLY

	Today	Jan. 1957
Will get better	25%	33%
Will get worse	51	46
No difference	8	10
No opinion	16	11

As reported Wednesday by the Institute, there has been a drop since January of this year in the number of adults throughout the country who approve of the Supreme Court's decision to ban racial segregation in the public schools.

In January, 63 per cent approved, compared to 58 per cent today.

Among those who say they approve of the ruling, however, sentiment in all areas of the country is approximately 2-to-1 that integration should be brought about gradually rather than use every means to try to bring it about immediately.

KADAR SCORES U. S. ON BIAS TROUBLES

Hungarian Premier Attacks 'Interference' in U.N. and Points to Little Rock

By Reuters

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Sept. 11—Premier Janos Kadar, in an attack on the United States today, declared that "those who tolerate that a people should be persecuted because of the color of their skin have no right to preach human liberty and human rights."

Mr. Kadar, addressing a Communist party meeting in honor of a visiting outer Mongolian delegation, did not specifically mention recent disturbances in the United States South over school integration.

But observers here interpreted his statement as an allusion to these incidents. It was greeted with a loud burst of applause from an audience of about 1,000 persons in the Building Workers Trade Union headquarters.

U. N. Report Attacked

Mr. Kadar made his comments after attacking the report prepared by a special United Nations committee on last year's Hungarian uprising. The report is being discussed by the General Assembly in New York.

He said the resolution submitted to the Assembly yesterday showed that "the imperialists" were smarting under the defeat they suffered in Hungary last fall and could not forgive the Hungarian people for repelling the assault.

The resolution would renew condemnation of the Russians for their repression of the Hungarian revolt.

"The resolution reproaches us with arresting people and putting people into jail," Mr. Kadar declared. "I ask what would happen to Americans who make armed plots against the sttae."

The Premier said that it was crude interference to put the report on the United Nations agenda, but declared that Hungary was not the only country suffering from such interference.

[Hungarian and Outer Mongolian officials signed a communiqué in which the discussion by the United Nations General Assembly of the report on Hungary was condemned as a "direct interference in Hungary's affairs," the Budapest radio announced Wednesday night. Mr. Kadar will visit Mongolia in the near future, said the broadcast, which was monitored in London.]

Mongolian Joins Criticism

The Outer Mongolian Premier, J. Tsedenbal, said that the "imperialists" were violating the United Nations Charter by hindering the entry of Mongolia into the world organization. He denied that Mongolian troops had fought in Korea or taken part in crushing the Hungarian uprising.

The Budapest Evening Newspaper Esti Hirlap also mentioned today the integration troubles in the United States. It advised the United Nation's investigating committee on Hungary to take a trip to Arkansas. "In our view there is something to be learned at the high school of Little Rock," the newspaper said in a 500-word report on the integration troubles.

The newspaper Nepszabadsag said that yesterday would go down as a "day of shame" for the United Nations. The organization failed in its duty by occupying itself with a "putsch that lasted only a few days and that failed miserably" while imperialist actions in the Middle East and North Africa lead daily to bloodshed, the newspaper asserted.

Why The 'Cornballs'

Defender Sat. 5-4-57 Chicago, Ill.

U.S. DIPLOMACY NOT DIPLOMATIC WHERE RACE IS CONCERNED

P. 11

38a General

By ETHEL L. PAYNE

During his recent African tour, Vice President Nixon is reported to have complained about "the cornballs" in high diplomatic posts who were fumbling their jobs and giving the U. S. a bad name abroad.

This observance by no less a person than the second man in command in our government should give some assurance that there will be a general improvement in the standards of people we send on the delicate mission of maintaining our relationships with other countries.

However, before giving over to optimistic joyousness, one should be aware of some sobering facts.

One is the complete domination of the U. S. foreign service by cold hard professional careerists who have a virtual stranglehold on diplomatic assignments below the ambassadorial rank.

TELLS OF NEEDS

Even though the Vice President in his report on Africa, emphasized again the necessity for high calibre people and an expanded service, it's a sure bet that the small core of iron-fisted dictators in the State Department who run the show will still be carrying the ball on their own terms.

Unless there are some sweeping and drastic changes at the top, this group will never relax one of its policies of keeping Negroes out of the foreign service, even though there are solid indications that many countries regardless of their geographical positions or the makeup of their populations would welcome American Negroes in diplomatic assignments.

The careerists take advantage of one long established fallacy. The old standby of lack of qualified and trained Negro personnel automatically produced by the fact that since doors are closed in this field, few ever brave the barriers to becoming prepared.

NIXON

While this has been known for a long time, the African experience has underscored the viciousness of the system. As soon as public interest began mounting in the independence of Ghana, there was speculation about the ambassadorship to the new country and most of it centered around prominent Negroes who might be named.

SPECIAL SECTION

Close upon this came reports that the administration was considering setting up a special African division in the State Department with an assistant secretary in charge.

At this point the guessing game tapered off a little in confrontation of the instinctive reasoning conditioned by tradition that a Negro no matter how high his background might be had only the merest chance of being given the job.

Conjecture then turned to the rather wistful thinking that maybe some colored person might get a job as assistant to the assistant.

The recommendation for a Bureau of African Affairs has gone through and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has already approved it; but there are no signs at all that Negroes will be considered either for the top spot or down below. The career boys are already firm in the saddle and have the staff handpicked.

A source to the Vice President said that the chances were slight that the job would go to Mrs. Frances P. Bolton. The able and respected congresswoman from Ohio is known to be interested, has the personal admiration of President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon and could muster bi-partisan support on Capitol Hill.

CAREERIST FAVORED

The source said that the Vice President favored a career person and the job would probably go to John Palmer, a career man and presently Deputy Undersecretary for African Affairs who accompanied the Vice President on his tour. Palmer drafted the Nixon report, although the Vice President wrote it in his own words.

An episode of the "cornball" variety occurred in Rome while the Vice President was being honored at a reception at the American Embassy. The wife of the Minister Counsellor of the embassy walked up to a group of three American Negroes with a cocktail glass in her hand and announced that her husband was the Ambassador - Designate to Ghana.

Even before this bit of surprise and choice information could be digested, the lady let her disgust be known when she complained that although her husband, a Southerner, as most of the careerists are, had more than 27 years of service, "the best they can offer us is the crumbs and we have to take it."

BLABBERMOUTH

Although she later denied that she was casting any aspersions on the country, her careless and indiscreet baring of her attitude points up the serious defects in the system that allows totally disinterested persons to have a monopoly on assignments where genuine interest and sympathy for the people ought to be the primary considerations.

It has only been within the last five years that such schools in Washington like George Washington university, American university, and Georgetown university have opened their doors to Negro students.

Georgetown has the largest and most important foreign service in the country and is famed for training diplomats. So far, only a handful of Negroes are attending the school. Here again this is because their chances for appointments are so narrow in comparison with the whites who are guaranteed positions upon graduation.

PEOPLE TO PEOPLE

On June 12, 1956, President Eisenhower launched the "people to people" program with the cooperation of the State Department, the United States Information Agency, and the Armed Services. It is an ambitious project for encouraging understanding on a mass basis through individuals and private organizations.

In the armed services, the staff is under the direction of James C. Evans, civilian assistant to the Secretary of Defense. Evans has been quietly working for a long time to break down one aspect of diplomacy and that it is the failure to assign Negro military personnel to military missions and military assistance advisory groups as well as the embassies abroad. Formerly, the only place where they could be assigned was Liberia which specified that it wanted Negro personnel.

Recently, under Evan's guidance, the Department of Defense has instituted a new policy whereby Negroes are not only being assigned to military missions, but are being encouraged to make application for military attaches at American embassies abroad.

ICELAND NO CHOICE

The only exceptions are Iceland, Ethiopia, and Saudi Arabia, the latter which has a restriction against persons of the Hebrew faith.

Some months ago, the Ethiopian ambassador denied that his country had any restrictions against accepting American Negro military personnel at the embassy. This came about after a defense department official claimed this was the reason for not sending any Negroes there.

As for Iceland, as one soldier put it, "Who wants to go there anyway?" At any rate, Evans has been instructed by the Department to get a clarifying statement of policy from each of these places and this includes persuading Liberia to change its policy for Negroes only to conform to the overall policy of integration in the services.

This assignment of Negro personnel and other minority groups to missions and embassies would be in keeping with President Eisenhower's "people to people" program which is designed to familiarize the man in the street in foreign countries with the USA and what it represents and how it operates.

Vice President Nixon's recent trip to Africa showed that the people to people program can get a boost from the assignment of minority group personnel to all countries and not necessarily to Africa alone.

SOLDIERS ABROAD

Captain Clarence M. Hurtt, a graduate of Morgan State college is now serving as a training officer with the U. S. Military Assistance Advisory group in Viet Nam. Captain Hurtt is an infantry officer who was recently transferred from the medical services corps. He is a regular army officer.

Captain Charles I. Smith, a Negro graduate of West Point is now serving as a training officer with the U. S. Military Assistance Advisory Group on Formosa. Smith is a field artillery officer.

Major Lee Archer, a Negro officer attending the air university at Maxwell Airforce Base, in Montgomery, Ala. wrote a paper on the value of minority groups in the attache system. The paper was well received and could provide the needed opening for assignment of airforce personnel.

The outstanding job done by General Benjamin O. Davis Jr. as commander of the U. S. Air Force Task Force 13 on Formosa attests to the ability of the Negro officer to hold his own in diplomatic circles as well as in combat.

MARINES BAR NEGROES

One branch of service which is a holdout as far as moving forward in this area is the Marine Corps. There are no Negro marines serving as guards at U. S. embassies around the world and it is doubtful that any have ever served in this capacity.

The job of ambassador is an expensive one because it requires so much entertaining above and beyond the budget allowed to embassies. Most important posts require a man of wealth who can afford to dig into his own pocket to make up the deficit.

This often handicaps a President in making an assignment because the emphasis is more on wealth than ability. However, there are many posts that are manned by career people who have come up through the ranks and in no sense can be called wealthy.

For years, the tradition has been to send a Negro as ambassador to Liberia. This is the only major diplomatic post in the world that goes to a Negro; yet there are many Negroes with background fitting them for ambassadorial rank.

ROXBOROUGH REPORT

Two years ago, John Roxborough II, a young Negro attorney from Detroit, was named as a consultant to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. Roxborough was hired on a per diem basis to spend approximately two weeks out of a month in Washington observing and making suggestions on improving the State Department personnel policy.

Roxborough went to work in quiet deadly earnest to dig deep, get the facts and come up with some practical answers. He saw the secretary once in the year he served and that was when he was sworn in.

Dulles told him then that he was concerned about the lack of Negroes in top positions in the Department and gave him a carte blanche order to investigate and make any recommendations he saw fit, promising that they would be acted upon.

Roxborough soon found himself up against a stone battlement of cold subtle resistance. He was blocked at practically every turn by the careerists in charge who actually run the Department from the second plateau. Secretary Dulles occupies the loftiest peak and seldom if ever gets a chance to look at what's going on down below.

Roxborough completed his report and turned it in, then went back to his law practice. Nothing has been heard from his report. Certainly no action has been taken on its recommendations, and it it further doubtful that Secretary Dulles has ever seen it.

300 to Discuss Problems of Desegregation—3-Day Talks Begin Tuesday

Sun 4-21-57

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 20 —Southern church leaders will meet here Tuesday to discuss what religious organizations can do about tensions resulting from desegregation.

The three-day conference is being sponsored by eighty-five Southern religious leaders. Sessions will be held at Scarritt College and at the Vanderbilt University Divinity School. About 300 churchmen are expected to attend.

Dr. Everett Tilson, chairman of the planning committee, said the assembly would be attended by "Christians who are united in both a commitment to Christ and a search for the specific meaning of Christian loyalty in common life."

Dr. Tilson is Associate Professor of Biblical Theology at Vanderbilt.

"The conference sprang from the deep concern of some Southern church leaders that the Christian church should speak a constructive, healing and reconciling word at a time when the South is being severely tested by the tensions growing out of the United States Supreme Court decisions regarding racial segregation," he said.

"We come together as Christians for prayer, study and discussion in order to discover how religious faith impels us to act amid the present confusions."

The conference will open with a worship service Tuesday evening. It will be led by Dr. A. L. Currie, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church here. A greeting from President Eisenhower will be read.

Included on the program are a series of seminars on "nonviolent approaches to racial tension, the churches and the public school issue" and other subjects.

A special report on "what the churches in the South are doing about race relations" will be presented by Dr. Herman Long of Nashville, director of the race relations department, Board of Home Missions, Congregational Christian Church.

Negro Educator Praises Southerners, Cites Louisville

Courier-Journal p. 14

Louisville, Ky.

Times 5-7-57

Detroit, May 6 (AP)—A prominent Negro educator says that, "As a group, the people of the South have conducted themselves with dignity and honor in compliance" with the U. S. Supreme Court's integration rulings.

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University at Washington, D. C., told a fund-raising dinner of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People here last night that Louisville, Ky., is a good example.

"As soon as the court's decision reached the people, they immediately opened their schools to all students," he said.

In San Antonio, Tex., he said the City Council held a meeting immediately after the court decision, "completely desegregated the city and was home in time for supper. It was as simple as that."

Javits Cites Slowness Of Integration in South

Star Fri. 9-13-57 P. 8-a

Washington D.C.

Although more than three years have passed since the Supreme Court ruled against segregated schools, only about 700 out of 3,000 bi-racial school districts in the South have been integrated, according to figures gathered by Senator Javits, Republican of New York.

He made the figures public last night in a telegram urging Attorney General Brownell to disclose now whether information in the hands of the Justice Department shows that civic order was in jeopardy in Little Rock, Ark., as claimed by Gov. Faubus in justifying his use of the National Guard to prevent integration.

"It is my conviction that the clear and frank answer to this question is essential to marshaling the full weight of public opinion behind the effort of the United States to enforce the law," said Senator Javits.

The Senator also expressed his belief that the outcome of the Arkansas situation will have great bearing on whether the January session of Congress revives the section that was eliminated from the new civil rights law. This would have enabled the Federal Government to take the initiative in trying to protect all civil rights, including school integration. Elimination of this section restricted the new civil rights law to voting privileges.

"This civil rights bill is not adequate, as the Arkansas situation clearly shows, to deal with organized and entrenched defiance of the Constitutional rights of Americans," Senator Javits added.

Renew Plea For A 'Nixon Good Will Tour Of South'

Weekly, New Orleans, La. p. 1
Sat 3-23-57

WASHINGTON (ANP) -- Declaring that "to segregate is sin," Methodist Bishop B. Bromley Oxnam, recently added his voice to that of many others in suggesting that Vice President Richard M. Nixon should go south on a good will mission.

The 65-year old white clergyman, who has served as Bishop of the White Methodist church in the Washington area since 1952 said he was proud of the Vice President's mission to Africa and "of his dignified representation of our country.' But he added, the Vice President should undertake another good-will mission to Montgomery, Alabama, and call upon the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and look upon the bombed homes of clergymen.

A group of ministers from the South had asked either the President or the Vice President to visit that section in an effort to cement relations between the races and to quell violence against the Negro citizens. They had also requested a conference with the Attorney General on the subject.

The latter request was denied on the grounds that the Attorney General had made it a policy to meet no delegations. The Vice President had remained silent on the matter, and the President had said in effect that he did not have time to visit Georgia or Alabama to attempt to settle this question. His schedule was too heavy he said, and there must necessarily be some time for recreation.

The blunt answers coming from the White House and the Department of Justice had started all sorts of speculations. There was talk of a march on Washington under the guise of "a good will crusade."

There was further talk about carrying this problem to the United Nations.

There were individual criticisms such as the one given by Washington's outstanding Bishop Oxnam and the Minister-Congressman from New York, Adam Clayton Powell.

Hate Groups Hurt U. S., Nixon Says

Daily World p. 6
Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 3-26-57

BY LOUIS LAUTIER
Washington Correspondent, Atlanta Daily World and NNPA News Service

ROME — (NNPA) — Hate mongers in the United States are not only hurting their country internally but harming it internationally, Vice-President Richard M. Nixon declared at a press conference in Rome Sunday.

The question came up when Mr. Nixon was asked what he thought the impact of his goodwill tour of central and northern Africa would have on race relations in the United States.

Replying, the Vice President pointed out that when he returned from his first trip to Asia in '53 he had made a statement in which he said any evidence of racial prejudice in the United States and prejudice in the United States is blown up a thousandfold, does irreparable damage to the U. S. and makes the task of its foreign policy makers infinitely more difficult.

He also said at that time, Mr. Nixon stated, that in addition to the other strong reasons for dealing effectively with that problem in the United Statesthe moral and economic reasons ,there is the fact that peiple in the United States must be given a chance to make their maximum contribution to society.

Mr. Nixon noted that he had toured a continent, 90 percent of whose inhabitants are colored and will become increasingly vital and important in the years ahead.

"What happens in the United States—insofar as we deal with the problem of discrimination and prejudice—can have a very serious effect on the success or failure of the efforts we are making together with other free nations toward seeing that Africa as it proceeds toword self-government, develops along the lines of independence and freedom and not along dictatorial Communist-dominated lines," Mr. Nixon said, adding:

"In my conversation in parts of the area we visited—although the race relationship problem in the United States never came up—I definitely sensed that in considering why so-called colonialism was in dispute in this area—apart from the economic objections some might have because they thought there was economic exploitation—was the fact that there is a feeling on the part of colonial areas that there was discrimination practiced not only economically but otherwise ,and that this was one of the major reasons for giving impetus to the anti-colonial drive."

"Would you say that discrimination practices in the United States helps the international Communist cause abroad?" a reporter asked.

"I would say there is no question but that those who promote racial hatred and those who foster prejudice in the United States are hurting their own country not only internally but harming it internationally," Mr. Nixon replied.

The Vice-President added that Pope Pius XII had no specific comment on race relations, but expressed approval of the general good will approach in the field of international relations.

Mr. Nixon said it was difficult to summarize his audience with the Pope, but the Holy Father had covered in his conversation some of the points he made in the statement he read to the Vice President Mrs. Nixon, the press and the plane crews.

"I was greatly impressed by his intimate knowledge of the African area," Mr. Nixon said, "as well as other areas of the world I have visited, particularly Asia and Latin America.

"For example, in Africa he pointed out the necessity for preparing the people of tha continent for the great responsibilities which independence would bring them."

Mr. Nixon said the Pope inquired about President Eisenhower's health at the beginning of their conversation. The Pope had been following reports of the President's health very closely, Mr. Nixon stated, and was aware that he had a cold.

Says Discrimination Has Damaging On African Attitudes

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA) Vice President Richard M. Nixon, reporting to President Eisenhower on his 22-day goodwill tour of Africa, urged "a far more effective job" in rooting out racial discrimination in the United States as a means of winning the newly emerging independent countries of Africa to the side of freedom in the cold war.

"As a result of skillful propaganda primarily inspired by the enemies of freedom, a consistently distorted picture of the treatment of minority races in the United States is being effectively presented in the countries I visited," Mr. Nixon told the President.

"Every instance of prejudice in this country is blown up in such a manner as to create a completely false impression of the attitudes and practices of the great majority of the American people," he said.

Damage to Freedom

"The result is irreparable damage to the cause of freedom which is at stake." Because of the effect racial discrimination in the United States is having on African attitudes, Mr. Nixon recommended that the United States "continue to strike at the roots of this problem." Continuing, he said:

"We cannot talk equality to the peoples of Africa and Asia and practice inequality in the United States.

"In the national interest, as well as for the moral issues involved, we must support the necessary steps which will assure orderly progress toward the elimination of discrimination in the United States.

Call p. 4

"And we should do a far more effective job than we are presently doing in telling the true story of the real progress that is being made toward realizing this objective so that the people of Africa will have a true picture of conditions as they really are in the United States."

Mr. Nixon's report to the President, covering his visits to Morocco, Ghana, Liberia, Uganda, Ethiopia, the Sudan, Italy and Tunisia, was released for publication Sunday.

Mn. 4-12-57

The importance that the President attached to it was shown by the fact that it was made public at the White House.

Special Subjects Discussed

A number of subjects were touched upon lightly in the report. This was because they were the subjects of special recommendations made by the Vice President to the interested federal agencies. Such subjects included:

1. The effects of the Algerian situation on the countries the Vice President visited. The Vice President did not visit Algeria but everywhere he went the leaders with whom he talked brought up that situation. The Moslems in Algeria are in revolt against French rule and want their independence.

2. Relations with the Middle East countries. Mr. Nixon did not visit those countries but everywhere he went, particularly in the Arab countries, Arab leaders spoke of the effects that a Palestine settlement might have. Mr. Nixon believes that the question of the Arab refugees in Palestine must be settled before there can be permanent peace in the Middle East.

3. Recommendations as to the amount of aid that might be given to the countries visited was strictly confidential and not disclosed in the report.

4. Recommendations as to State Department personnel overseas also were confidential and only slightly touched upon in the report.

In addition to the written report, Mr. Nixon made an oral report to the President upon his return. In the written report he put down many of the things he had orally reported upon.

Talk Several Times

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said President Eisenhower had talked with the Vice President at least two or three times since Mr. Nixon returned.

No one can travel in Africa even as briefly as he did, without realizing "the tremendous potentialities of this great continent," Mr. Nixon said in his report, adding:

"Africa is the most rapidly changing area in the world today. The course of its development, as its people continue to emerge from a colonial status and assume the responsibilities of independence and self-government, could well prove to be the decisive factor in the conflict between the forces of freedom and international communism."

The leaders and people of the countries he visited, the Vice President said, "cherish their independence, which most of them have only recently acquired, and are determined to protect it against any form of foreign domination."

Eyes on Ghana

The wider significance of the emergence of the new nation of Ghana, the Vice President reported, lies in the fact that "The eyes of the peoples of Africa south of the Sahara, and of western Europe particularly, will be upon this new state to see whether the orderly transition which has taken place from dependent to independent status and whether the retention of close ties on a basis of equality with the British Commonwealth, will continue to work successfully and thereby present a formula of possible application in other cases.

"By the same token, inimical forces will be closely following the situation to see whether any openings present themselves for exploitation in a manner which would enable them to disrupt and destroy the independence which Ghana seeks to achieve."

Among the great leaders Africa is producing Mr. Nixon named the Sultan of Morocco, Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, President William V. S. Tubman of Liberia, Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, and Prime Ministers Abdullah Khalil of the Sudan, Ben Halim of Libya and Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia.

He said they compare favorably with the great leaders of the world and recommended that the United States come to know them better, to understand their hopes and aspirations, and support them in their plans and programs for strengthening their own nations and contributing to world peace and stability.

To that end, Mr. Nixon recommended encouragement of "the greatest possible interchange of persons and ideas" with the leaders and peoples of the countries he visited and the sending of the "strongest possible diplomatic representation" to those countries.

Mr. Nixon said he found the prestige of the United States "uniformly high" and President Eisenhower "respected as the acknowledged leader of the Free World.

Must Keep High Prestige

The maintenance of this high prestige, he said, "will depend upon whether the people of the continent to understand our dedication to the principles of independence, equality and economic progress to which they are so deeply devoted.

He recommended the staffing of American diplomatic and information establishments "with men and women capable of interpreting and explaining our policies and actions in a way that will guarantee that they are so understood."

The Vice President said all the countries he visited are underdeveloped. "Their needs are great in terms of education and public health," he said. Their other needs include roads, agricultural development, assistance in developing their great mineral and forest resources, and the development of small industrial enterprises.

The leaders with whom he talked, the Vice President said, expressed preference for developing their economics through encouraging investment of private capital and through loans from international agencies such as the World Bank.

Mr. Nixon recommended that the United States government direct the attention of private American capital to opportunities for investment "in those areas where the conditions for such investments are propitious."

Lehman Is Right On Integration

Chicago, Ill.

The crisis in Southern race relations which is deepening by the day, has disturbed everybody but the President of the United States. Despite repeated pleas, resolutions and supplications by the leaders of both races, the White House remains impassively cold to the suggestion that President Eisenhower speak out on integration.

Yet this is the most explosive issue that America has faced in a hundred years. The fuses to the powder-keg of race relations are burning short. There are sinister forces at work at this very moment exhorting the people in some rebellious sections of Dixie to use force and violence against integration.

The Ku Klux Klan, the White Citizen Councils and other motley assortment of dyspeptic dissenters are intensifying their drive against the school decision. But they are not stopping there. They are preaching a virulent brand of racial hate that would deny the Negro even the right to live in the South. Leering, jeering and unprintable name calling are familiar emotional outbursts at the sight of a black face.

Negroes on the other hand have been cautioned to remain calm, patient, forbearing and even forgiving in the face of these daily provocations. But when physical violence breaks out, as it will inevitably, the question then will be how far and how long will Negroes endure such abuses and indignities? A recognition of this fact in all its tragic and ugly implications caused former Senator Herbert H. Lehman of New York to sound a note of warning to the White House.

Speaking at a 50th anniversary dinner of the American Jewish Committee at the Waldorf-Astoria recently, Mr. Lehman offered the following emergency program:

1. Immediate convening of a White House conference of white and Negro leaders from the South.
2. A special tour of the South by President Eisenhower for the purpose of meeting local leaders to "avocate integration."
3. Calling together all governors and all law enforcement officers of the nation by the President and Attorney-General Brownell to discuss ways of restoring respect for law in the South.

Mr. Lehman feels that the "entire executive branch of the government must . . . appeal to all men of goodwill in the North and in the South to help resolve this crisis." He believes that President Eisenhower should have moved sooner, adding that Ike is the only man able to "set the moral tone" for the necessary effort in the South.

We agree thoroughly with Mr. Lehman that the time has passed, when anybody can hope that "time and the courts" will cure the situation.

The President went south immediately following Lehman's suggestions, not to meet local leaders about integration, but on a matter of far greater concern to him — golf playing.

Dear Sirs:

In your editorial, "INTEGRATION" ISN'T AN EARTH-SHAKING PROBLEM WITH OUR YOUTH, March 23, "a gentleman who lives in a good-sized New England town" tells a tale about some school children. Is this tale fiction or truth? If fiction, what is it doing on your editorial page?

Dear Sirs:

The gentleman who thought the two little colored girls signified something of great moment betrayed his lack of grasp of the situation. Such ignorance would be comical were the situation less serious.

MRS. JOHN D. BRITTON

Dear Sirs:

In the present racial matter, no school of thought would seem to be in a position to dictate the correct answers. Clearly the whole nation is confronted with a problem of dangerous potential. Thus, no responsible person or publication should permit itself to toss out frivolous or half-baked solutions, thereby adding fuel to an explosive situation. If ever mature judgment, restraint and tact were called for, now is the time.

Negroes Urged To 'Keep Cool'

Birmingham

Sat-Herald

JACKSON, April 27 (U.P.)—A Southern Negro leader who ignored a threat by state leaders to arrest any "out of state racial agitators" urged Mississippi Negroes tonight to "keep cool" in the fight for integration.

Mem. A-29-57

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham, Ala., chairman of the Alabama Christian Movement which was formed after the NAACP was outlawed in that state, addressed a statewide meeting of the Negro American Legion.

P. 15

Shuttlesworth told some 125 Negroes he didn't know what kind of reception to expect here after reading reports that Gov. J. P. Coleman might have speakers on integration jailed. He added, however, that he doesn't "believe any man can take it upon himself to stop freedom of speech."

The Baptist minister who gained nationwide publicity when his home was destroyed by a dynamite blast last Christmas told the group to "be more civic minded, be a part of everything that is American, vote, stop being afraid, drink less whisky," and "above all, keep cool."

Death Of Race Prejudices Seen A Reality In The Next 25 Years

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 4-12-57 P. 1

BY SAMUEL ADAMS

A world famous psychoanalyst and educational psychology professor, addressing the Morris Brown College student body on his views of the problem of integration, Thursday predicted that racial injustices will be wiped out within 25 years.

Bruno Bettleheim, internationally known author and head of the Soniz Shankman Orthogenic School of Chicago University, told a capacity audience that the difficult battle for integration on the political front is practically won, but he warned that a greater battle faces the Negro if the victory is to be made meaningful -- wiping out prejudices that the Negro himself nurtures.

The noted author and educator said Negroes feel within their own group that light skin is better than dark skin, and that straight or the caucasion type hair makes one better.

"If you re-introduced these silly prejudices, you are going to lose on the social field the victory you have won on the political field," he explained.

"Education is the best preparation for integration because you will be in competition with the whole population", rather than segregated segment, when complete integration comes, Dr. Bettleheim emphaized.

He blamed the lack of interrelation between the races because with anger, and the white group will anger ,and the white group will face the Negro with guilt and shame.

Bettelheim said Negroes are carrying on a good strong fight for freedom, adding:

"I wish you could see it as a good fight and enjoy it. History has shown that the good thing has to be fought for in a good battle in order for it to be lasting and meaningful."

In this connection, he recalled how short lived the freedom was for the Germans when the Allies handed them democracy and delivered them from the Kaiser.

"When something is given to you without effort, it is no good for growth," he said. "Every new generation has to prove itself against the older order .....The victory must be won by you or it won't mean very much."

To further show his meaning that greater difficulties will be faced after integration is a complete reality, Dr. Bettelheim said it is easy for Negroes to stick together to trade with businesses of their race, because the whole group faces a common enemy -- the white bigot. However, with integration, a Negro will no longer be able to rely on his group because he is friendly. The Negro doctor or lawyer won't get patients or clients just because he is a Negro. he said.

Segregation Is Doomed, Says Doctor

Black Dispatch Okla. City, Okla. Fri. 4-26-57

ATLANTA, Ga. — (AMP)—The opinions of a group of eminent college sociologists here last week just about coincided on the segregation issue when the entire group predicted the downfall of segregation saying it will "collapse like the one-hoss shay."

The opinions on the matter were cast at a meeting of the Southern Sociological Society here where the South's customs of segregation were assailed by numerous college professors.

Dr. Edgar Thompson, of Duke university, echoed the U. S. Supreme Court in stating "a mixed education is a right which must be available to all on equal terms."

Educational desegregation was praised by Forrest Laviolette and John Fenton of Tulane university. The two sociologists lauded educational integration as a means by which "individual rights, new conceutions of social efficiency and our institutional practices are being made more consistent with one another."

Laviolette added: "In the new post-1954 world, social peace cannot be achieved until the structure of compulsory segregation by force of law is demolished."

Belief in race purity a myth

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 4-27-57

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio—"It is possible to estimate that in less than two generations more than half the persons classified as white will have African ancestry."

That assertion was made last week by an Ohio State University researcher who said his studies indicate that already more than 21 per cent of Americans classified as white are descendants of persons of African origin.

* * *

THE RESEARCHER, Dr. Robert P. Stuckert, graduate instructor of sociology at the university, declared that the one conclusion standing out from all other data in the study is:

"The belief in the racial uniformity of an individual's ancestor may be the basic myth of the white man's past."

Dr. Stuckert spoke before the 66th annual meetijg of the Ohio Academy of Science at Bowling Green State University.

He said his research project was undertaken "to determine the validity of the popular belief in the non-colored ancestry of persons classified as white."

HE DESCRIBED the popular definition of a colored person as "a person having any known trace of African ancestry, regardless of how far back one must go to find it."

"To social scientists, defining a racial group generally poses a problem," he said. "A definition of a race has yet to be proposed that is satisfactory for all purposes. This is particularly true of the term 'Negro' in the United States."

Describing the approach used in his research, Dr. Stuckert said all persons were classified into one of three categories—white persons of non-African ancestry, white persons of African ancestry and colored people.

Statistical computations in the study were based on a number of assumptions, he said. With one exception, said Dr. Stuckert, the assumptions made would "tend to minimize the final estimate."

* * *

AT ONE point in the study, he asserted, two alternative assumptions were made—one on a basis of selective mating; the other on a basis of random mating.

In explaining that, Dr. Stuckert pointed out that:

"Under selective mating the probability of whites of non-African ancestry mating with persons classified as colored is one tenth of what would be expected if mating were random.

"The figure of one tenth was established on the basis of previous estimates of the relative size of the mulatto population and studies of the mixed ancestry of colored groups."

ON THE selective mating assumption, the study showed that 21.1 per cent or 28,423,000 persons had African ancestry out of a total of 135,215,000 persons classified as white in 1950.

On the random mating assumption, the percentage of whites with African ancestry in 1950 would have been 54.9 per cent or 74,202,000 persons—more than half the white population.

Dr. Stuckert expressed the belief that the 54.9 per cent figure approximates a maximum estimate, but that the 21.1 per cent figure is probably an underestimate.

ASK SOUTHERN HEARING

Danger To Republic Is Seen In Racial Issue

ATLANTA, Nov. 4.—(AP)—A Southern spokesman on racial segregation declared Monday night that the South must be heard and understood on this issue if the Republic is to survive.

"I do not say that the country will die if the Federal Government continues to enforce integration," expalined editor Thomas R. Waring of the Charleston News and Courier. "People can live under the most difficult and obnoxious circumstances. Generations have a way of adjusting.

"But the Republic as we have known it, a combination of local and national authorities tailored to the needs of every section, will disappear if this race problem is not resolved."

The South Carolinian conceded that advcates of segregation are outnumbered, but declared, "Sooner or later right will triumph." He charged professional agitators, greedy politicians and others "are arrayed against us" and that brainwashing is practiced in the South as well as elsewhere.

Gallup Poll—

Fewer In Dixie Will Admit That Integration Will Come

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn. Sun. 8-18-57 P. 1

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 15.—Although a majority of adults across the country believes general integration will eventually come to the South, there are fewer white Southerners today who will admit it will happen than was the case a year and a half ago.

Whereas 55 per cent of Southern whites questioned in a February, 1956, survey said they expected the day to come when segregation will end, the latest check by the American Institute of Public Opinion finds 43 per cent holding this view.

Most of the difference is accounted for in an increase in the number of white Southerners who today either express doubts about eventual outcome of integration or have no opinion.

Nationwide Trend Cited

By a margin of 4 to 3 among those adults who foresee a change, the view today is that the racial situation in the South will worsen during the coming year.

Among Southerners, generally, sentiment is 2 to 1 today that "things will get worse before they get better."

Interviewers asked a cross-section of adults from Maine to California:

"Do you think the day will ever come in the South when white and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants and generally sharing the same public accommodations?

The results nationwide today:

'Racial frontiers moved to North'

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn. Sun. 8-18-57 P. 1

ATLANTA — The racial frontiers of America are no longer in the South but in the metropolitan centers of the North, Joseph Lohman, Cook County sheriff, said at Atlanta University last week as he addressed the arts and sciences forum on "Group Tensions and the Police."

Citing the fact that in Chicago 750,000 non-whites now live in an area where 260,000 for formerly lived, Mr. Lehman said that tensions had developed because there was no understanding on the part of the public of the new problems caused by the change in the nature of the population in both North and South.

"The future of democracy is one of tensions for decades ahead," he declared, adding that "tensions are not always bad and do not always lead to violence. The acceptance of this myth is an invitation to violence."

Editor The Herald: Some people in our beloved United States have said, "Thumbs down on the Star Spangled Banner and thumbs up for Dixie."

Herald

I am a Southerner and have lived in the South all my life. First of all I am a Christian, second a United States citizen and third a Southerner. P 3 G

As a musician, I do not particularly like the tune of the Star Spangled Banner, but the ideals which it stands for are something that the history books will never be able to completely tell. Manuscripts.

I want the states to have all the rights they deserve and are entitled to. But still each state is bound to a higher law in the Constitution of the United States. It is the job of the Federal courts to interpret this Constitution and then act accordingly. They are not, nor do they want to be, a dictatorial power because they do not want that type of government any more than you or I.

Sun. 9-22-57

Perhaps these radical sovereign states rights people would like to have each state set up as its own little country. This is exactly what the Russian powers would like to see happen.

It would be very interesting to see if Mississippi could stave off an enemy air attack. Sounds silly, doesn't it? Well, it is just as silly as some of the activities and ideas of these radicals.

Then, too, these people might like to have the blood-soaked Stars and Stripes replaced by the Confederate flag. I think it is just about time we stopped fighting the Civil War and got down to the job at hand of making the whole United States a true Christian nation once more.

We are going to have to either send missionaries to the far corners of the world or soldiers.

Perhaps if some of these radicals and other citizens would spend as much time acting on the responsibilities of being a citizen as they do enjoying the privileges, then maybe the Federal government would not have to do the job the states and citizens are failing to do.

Let's stay on the ball and be proud citizens of the United States and not one of an Un-United States.

How Free Is the Sea?

Courier Sat. 8-10-57 Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 10

38a general

THE United States is signatory to numerous treaties and agreements assuring continued FREEDOM of the seas, and of course claims all of the waters within three miles of its coastline to be under ITS sovereignty.

At this torrid season of the year 16,000,000 American citizens are keenly CONSCIOUS of the fact that in general this freedom of the seas does not apply to them—unless they plan to go BEYOND the three-mile limit to swim.

Of course their predicament is not as bad as it ONCE was (thanks to court decisions opening some tax-supported and publicly owned pools), but their general EXCLUSION from beaches affording ocean bathing remains a national disgrace.

Practically all of the GOOD ocean beaches along the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific littorals are either privately or publicly owned, and with a few exceptions (including the few Negro-owned beaches) the privately owned beaches are barred to colored vacationers.

PUBLICLY OWNED beaches and resorts in the areas in which MOST U. S. Negroes live, apparently have not HEARD about the Supreme Court decision banning exclusion of Negro taxpayers from these places, because the latter are conspicuous by their absence and would be most UNWELCOME if they showed up, to put it mildly.

There are notable public and private EXCEPTIONS to this generalization, but the average colored family is so well AWARE of the custom that it IGNORES all beach resort advertising in Sunday papers and magazines, knowing it is not meant to appeal to THEM.

When will our Government become concerned about making our seashores free to ALL of its citizens regardless of color?

Tortured Souls Of The South

Of all the misguided Southerners, undoubtedly the most tortured of souls are those ministers who attempt to twist the Bible to justify segregation.

One of the most widely quoted of these brethren is the Rev. Henry E. Egger, rector of St. Peters Episcopal Church, Charlotte, N.C.

The Rev. Mr. Egger, in a recent sermon not only seeks to document his "separate but equal" views with the Bible, but even calls on Booker T. Washington to bolster his astounding conclusion that colored Americans prefer second-class citizenship.

Mr. Eggers, however, fails to explain that Booker T. Washington's Atlanta views were expressed some 40 years ago and are as outmoded today as a horse and buggy or high button shoes.

Moreover, Mr. Washington did not speak for all the colored people even in his own time, no more than did the Tillmans, the Vardemans and the Tom Watsons reflect the thinking of a majority of Americans in their day.

Many of Booker T.'s meetings in the North erupted into disorder and at his death, he was openly discredited.

* * *

BROTHER EGGERS really stoops to a new low in scriptural chicanery when he attempts to give St. Paul's 28th verse, 3rd chapter of the Epistle to the Galatians, a "separate but equal" meaning wholly inconsistent with the teachings of Jesus, who said: "Love thy neighbor as thy self."

Imagine the effect of the Egger gospel in China, India and Africa, where white people are in the minority.

Does he seriously believe these people would accept his kind of Christian gospel?

Sermons like that of the Rev. Mr. Eggers might well be the reason that the Mohammedan religion is the dominant faith among the world's two-thirds colored population.

Among Mohammedans, there may be distinctions of cast, but never of color.

THE SOUTH, under the goad of some segregationists and some religionists like the Rev. Mr. Eggers, who support them, has put itself in a difficult position of saying, it will not obey the law, and the law cannot be enforced because a majority of the people are opposed to it.

Abraham Lincoln had an answer for this situation. He insisted, and we think correctly, that a law can be enforced when the majority is opposed to it, if the majority is wrong.

FORTUNATELY, FOR America, and indeed the free world, the number of ministers like Henry Eggers is few.

The Catholic Church and most Protestant faiths do not approve of his gross misinterpretation of St. Paul's 28th verse, 3rd chapter of the Epistle to the Galatians.

These denominations, in marked contrast to his teaching, are firm in their belief that segregation is not only unlawful, but is a sinful contradiction of everything that Jesus taught and died for.

Dixiecrats to help spread integration?

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — In an editorial titled, "Two Yardsticks for Measuring (the South's) Sickness," the Louisville Courier-Journal raises the point that the Dixiecrats in their madness may "advance integration on a scale as yet undreamed of."

But let the Courier-Journal speak:

"Dazzling stupidity in Georgia, nauseating hypocrisy in Arkansas — it's hard to tell which exceeds the other as a pathological sickness of some white minds in the South.

"But both tell much about how far some have slipped from the Wilsonian standards of justice and righteousness once held so high in the South, standards inseparable from a decent regard for the dignity of all men.

"IN GEORGIA a bunch of ribald gravediggers have been winning notoriety for some weeks with a scheme to 'resettle' southern colored families nextdoor to northern 'liberals' or others 'soft' on the school desegregation issue.

"Their mirthful malice hasn't produced much more than headlines yet, since it would take both a mint of money and the undignified collaboration of colored people willing to play their game.

"But it would be poetic justice should someone succeed in breaking the restrictive real estate covenants still fencing in many a residential area in the land and so, with the Georgia segregationists' own help, advance integration on a scale as yet undreamed of.

"THIS WOULD BE especially fitting in Washington, where Vice President Nixon's residential block was erroneously reported in danger of such inspired 'resettlement.'

"Indeed, whatever the difficulties of arrangement, Mr. Nixon might have been pardoned for minimizing them himself for the sake of enormous political profit —

"A televised welcoming of his new neighbors and of the cake that his friends say Pat would bake for them, a boomerang of national laughter at those who jest with the dignity of man.

"In Arkansas, meantime, under a piously hypocritical ordinance enacted by the Little Rock City Council at the unique behest of the state's attorney general, ..hitherto ..undistinguished forces of law and order have arrested the local president of the NAACP.

"HIS CRIME is enormous: He refused to turn over to the city (pending Federal court action on a petition for a restraining order) membership and financial information required by the ordinance.

"Elsewhere in the South whole states have taken similar action and done it with similarly hypocritical arguments — the law is not aimed at the NAACP but at other organizations as well.

"Yet every southerner knows that known members of the NAACP and simple signers of school admission petitions as well have felt the sting of the white man's economic reprisals.

"SUBMISSION OF lists of NAACP members means, at the least, in many an area, the drying up of their credit.

"No such penalties confront the members of the three segregationist groups in Little Rock who have already complied with the new ordinance, and everybody in Little Rock knows it.

"Indeed, for some, their credit rating might well be higher than ever."

Cost Of Discrimination Strains U. S. Taxpayer

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 5-25-57 P. 21

By GEORGE DANIELS

In the past five years the cost of living has skyrocketed to astronomical proportions — and so has the cost of discrimination.

It has been several years now since Elmo Roper estimated the national economic cost of discrimination was some $30 billion annually. And although there is no new estimate on the price America must pay (in dollars and cents) to maintain a dual system of government, it is certain that discrimination now is costing U. S. taxpayers more hard cash than ever before.

One way of estimating the cost of discrimination is by studying the establishment of hundreds of anti-bias agencies and organizations supported by government a private enterprise.

To fight Communist propaganda among the colored peoples of the world, for example, the State Department paid $400,000 to send "Porgy and Bess" to South America and other countries. To fight discrimination in employment in firms holding government contracts, President Eisenhower established his President's Committee on Governmenet Contracts, giving it a "peanut budget" of $190,000. The Chicago Commission on Human Releations has a $160,000 budget, and New York was spending as high as $400,000 four years ago and has increased its total anti-Jim Crow fund by leaps and bounds.

COLLECT MILLIONS

On record are some 25 state commissions on human relations that are spending the taxpayers' money. Illinois spends about $3,000 annually for its state program — less than one tenth of that spent by New York.

In addition to the large number of agencies spending public funds to eliminate prejudice and discrimination, there are free-hearted liberals and those made target of discrimination. Some of them include such organizations as the NAACP, the Anti-Defamation League, the American Friends Service Committee and various neighborhood councils.

Discrimination has proven to be such an expensive item in U. S. economy that responsible social and political authorities predict its days are certainly numbered. The U. S., private and public industry just cannot afford to keep losing billions annually merely because of racial and religious differences.

The American way of life is based on money; it takes money for anyone to do any and everything. And sooner or later the taxpayer in Chicago is going to tire of finding himself taxed for city and state difficulties while the federal government and Congress pussyfoot on civil rights, and cater to the demands of Southern bigots who are drying up their own states' funds by discriminating against the Negro.

In education the South could save millions annually if it did not insist of maintaining two separate sets of facilities for Negro and white students. With the desegregation of schools, Oklahoma is expected to save $1 million.

In dollars and cents, discrimination is a costly item for the Negro, America's largest discriminated minority. The Negro in Chicago loses about $30 billion annually because of wage assigunments and garnishments levied against him by shyster merchants who won't allow him to establish a decent credit rating because of his race.

"Much of the eceonomy of the Southside community," stated a Daily Defender editorial Feb. 13, "is being gnawed away by shyster merchants who hoodwink the unsuspected, the poor and the ignorant into installment buying on terms beyond their capacity to fulfill obligations."

Thus, by discrimination having already retarded the average Negro citizen, especially those recently arrived from the South, he is made victim of money-hungry merchants who have transformed "time-buying" into a racket.

This is the dollar and cents cost of prejudice — and no one is more concerned about how his money is spent than the American taxpayer. A number of industrial concerns and labor unions have already established humane and practical non-discrimination in business and industry, which is a great stride forward in American democracy.

"If all of the people who have been held back in some way were able to advance to their full capacity," said Vice President Nixon two years ago," they would represent a new consumers' market which would raise everybody's standard of living. . ."

The average American, religiously set on raising his standard of living, has numbered the days of discrimination in this country. It's costing them too much!

Albany Citizen Warns Of 'Threats to Liberty'

Constitution P. 4 Tues. 3-19-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Albany—I wish to call attention to one of the many hypocrisies practiced by the present administration. When the "Eisenhower bubble" or "Eisenhower myth" is deflated, we will all see behind the scenes, and we will see many, many things that have been hidden behind the screens of censorship and partisan politics.

We will understand the triple threat to our personal liberties: (1) the Supreme Court; (2) the NAACP; (3) the CIO-AFL coalition.

Regardless of whether or not he is right, merely because he disagrees with certain administration policies, Sen. McCarthy was uninvited to the "President's party." What form of "discrimination" is this, by one who professes absolute abolition of discrimination?

Deep South States Still Hold Firm To Segregation

World Fri. 5-17-57 Atlanta, Ga. P. 6

BY PAT J. McDONNELL
International News Service

Deep-south states held firm today in opposition to racial integration in public schools, three years after the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling that segregation is unconstitutional.

The historic court decree, issued May 17, 1954, brought violence to sections of the South, general unrest throughout the vast region and was followed by adoption of hundreds of New, stringent laws designed to maintain traditional separation of the races.

NOT A SINGLE CHILD

In Eight Deep-South States today, not a single Negro child attends a grade school or a high school with the white students. In one other state—Tennessee—only one high school has been integrated.

At Clinton, Tenn where rioting this fall accompanied forced integration of the high school, some of the old Tenseness remained tonight on the Eve of the Anniversary of the Supreme Court decision.

High School Principal D. J. Brittian, Jr., asked that a policeman be stationed at every door of the school building tomorrow, when 17-year old Bobby Cain becomes the first Negro student to graduate with white students.

Young Cain's path to the senior class was cleared by National guard Bayonets when 12 students were admitted under Federal Court order. the move to integrate brought a series of riots and spasmodic dynamitings have followed in subsequent months, five of the Negro students have left school, for one reason or another.

Desegregation today is in effect in parts of nine states of the 17 which maintained dual systems under the long standing "seperate but equal" doctrine. Action in these states, however, has put only a relatively few of the region's nearly 3 million Negro children—some 300,000—into integrated situations

In Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, and in Tennessee with the exception of Clinton, the segregation line remains unbroken. Five of these States have maintained segregation also at the college level.

New State laws, including measures allowing governors to suspend some Civil Rights to keep down integration violence, have given impetus to litigration and agitation for an end to segregation in other aspects of Southern life. The Supreme Court decision outlawing transit system segregation in Montgomery, Ala., followed by a series of devastating dynamite blasts against churches anr ministers homes—brought similar integration moves at Birmingham, Tallahassee Miami, Atlanta, New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

GOLF COURESE

Since the Supreme Court decree, Golf Courses at Atlanta have been desegregated, and other decisions have applied the desegregation principal in scattered situations to bathing beaches and public park facilities. A Federal Court at New Orleans this week outlawed transit and Park segregation.

More than 100 Court cases are now pending, dealing with the segregation question. A major case in a new field under attack public housing will be heard in Savannah, Ga. beginning Monday.

Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook, who said the 1954 decision opened the door to "100 years of litigation" still maintains the deep south will not relent and end segregation.

SOUTH IS WITHOUT WHITE LEADER, LILLIAN SMITH SAYS

Daily World Atlanta Ga
Tues. 6-4-57

Miss Lillian Smith, distinguished Southern author, gave Atlanta University graduates "a rough, crude blueprint of our lives" in which we must seek survival by new ordeals of power through world opinion, wise use of atomic energy and by living in a world with 2½ billion free people.

Miss Lillian Smith descibed living in a world of free people as a wonderful but dangerous thing which could blow up our civilization through strength and unity of liberated people.

The author of "Strange Fruit", "Killers of the Dream" and "Now Is The Time," who was awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters" by President Rufus E. Clement" appealed to the South to produce a white leader with the humility, love for justice and compassion exemplified by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of Montgomery bus boycott.

SOUTH WITHOUT LEADERSHIP

She deplored the fact that in 50 years the South had not produced one single white race leader who could appeal to the area for moderation and compliance with the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, and for forceful actions to end bombing of churches and against violence and intimidation of Negroes in wake of the change which resulted from the high court decree.

"Not a single white man since the turn of the 20th Century has assumed the leadership against mob violence, burning of churches and injustice which have jeojardized our survival in the ordeal of world opinion."

WARNED SOUTH ON RADIATION

Miss Smith was emphatic in condemning continuous testing of atomic weapons and warned that "southerners should not only be so concerned with mixing of the races but what radiation fallout would do to their children from the testing of horrifying atomic weapons which imperial our civilization."

LIST TYPES OF MOBS

Miss Smith listed three dangerous types of mobs which threatened democracy in the South. She listed one type of mob that bomb houses and churches, who inflict violence upon individual and commit over tacts against property and individuals.

The most dangerous type of mob, Miss Smith, insisted, was that which operated under the guise of respectability as manifest in the leadership of the White Citizens Council which lists preachers, teachers, business men and those with professional status.

The third and even more explosive type of mob was that "invisible empire" which condoned wrong without ever voicing protest. She said their failure to speak up against wrong doings had reinforced resistance to law and had endangered the whole foundation of legal principles."

Dr. Clement introduced Miss Smith as a woman "divinely inspired and divinely guided."

PROBLEMS OF MANKIND

He said "You know her as an author, but I know her as a woman concerned with human betterment and the problems of mankind."

Rev. Harrison McMains, executive director, Christian Council of Atlanta, spoke the praver. Benediction was by the Rev. D. T. George, pastor of Antioch Baptist Church.

Music was by the Atlanta-Morehouse-Spelman Choir.

Lawrence, whose syndicated column is distributed to more than 270 daily newspapers, will deliver the baccalaureate address at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Lawrence began his newspaper career at 14, when he became a parttime reporter for the Buffalo Express. He's been newspapering since.

When Grover Cleveland died in Princeton, N.J., in 1908, Lawrence scored his first "scoop" of a long career that has brought him national recognition. Following his graduation from Princeton in 1910, Lawrence joined the Associated Press in Washington.

He was with the Associated Press for five years, leaving to become Washington correspondent for the old New York Evening Post. From that time on, Washington has been his headquarters and he has written from there a daily dispatch that has known few interruptions.

One of his noteworthy columns was one in which he predicted Woodrow Wilson's victory over Charles Evans Hughes in 1916. Few members of the press had given Wilson more than an even chance for re-election.

Editor David Lawrence Says Segregation National Problem

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Sun. 6-2-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 1 (AP) —Segregation is not a sectional, but a national problem, David Lawrence, editor of U. S. News and World Report, said here today.

Lawrence said in an interview the "race problem must be approached all over the nation and not as a sectional thing."

LAWRENCE

The well known editor and Washington columnist stopped in Birmingham enroute to Tuscaloosa, where he will address graduates of the University of Alabama tomorrow.

In commenting on integration efforts, Lawrence said "it's like a debate. We cannot tell who is going to win until all arguments are in and the debate is over.

"This debate will last many years," he added.

Soviet Radio Tells of U. S. School Bias

Herald Tribune New York
Thurs. 9-12-57

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11 (AP).— Moscow radio is broadcasting reports of racial violence over school integration in this country to Soviet audiences. But so far it has not exploited the issue internationally.

American officials believe that once the integration conflict dies down, Soviet propagandists will try to keep it alive by harping on the issue to foreign and domestic audiences alike.

But American propaganda experts believe that for the present, the Russians feel the South's school integration problem is getting so much publicity elsewhere in the world that they don't have to bother broadcasting the story to foreign audiences themselves.

Dixie Whites 'Forcing' Negroes to Integrate!

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 6-8-57

By Trezzvant W. Anderson
(Courier Staff Writer)

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — By the time you get into this Northeast Tennessee metropolis you are pretty well convinced of one thing . . . if you came by rail: Southern whites are actually forcing Negroes to integrate in rail transportation.

Mr. Anderson

That sounds like a contradictory statement in view of the adamant proclamations of Dixie whites that "it will never happen here," but if you just use your eyes on trains coming into the South from the North you will see it happening.

On routes heading the other way, there is a difference. And on routes heading from South to West and Midwest that old "camouflage" jim-crow system is evoked in round-the-bush manner. Let's take a look:

Mixed Seating

FROM POINTS north of Alexandria, Va., Negroes and whites sit indiscriminately together in all railroad cars. When those cars come into Virginia this mixed seating continues, on into North Carolina, down into South Carolina, even at Columbia, the Palmetto State capital.

White men, women and children walk into the cars and sit in front of, behind, beside and with Negroes and no one even turns a head. The same thing is observed at Columbia and then into Georgia where Herman Talmadge vowed "The races will never mix in Georgia."

The trains roll into Augusta with everybody sitting everywhere — and thinking nothing of it. That is the pattern.

But when you start away from those states and head West, then you've got a different situation altogether.

Smashing Jim-crow

UNDER THE North-to-South situation, the whites were actually forcing Negroes to integrate, for the very simple reason that where Negroes automatically went into what would have been jim-crow cars the whites came into these same cars and took seats, thus breaking what otherwise would have been self-segregation by Negroes.

Heading West, however, the case of Mrs. Martha Meadows of Union, S. C., and a young woman companion is typical. Boarding the train for Cincinnati at Union Mrs. Meadows was told by the conductor to "turn to the right" as she got aboard.

That put the pair in the first coach, where there were no whites. The second coach was occupied entirely by whites, although there were plenty of vacant seats in this coach.

This reporter asked Conductor R. T. Mynatt: "Is the next car open to colored passengers?"

Quizzes Conductor

QUICKLY the gray-haired conductor came back: "What's wrong with this one?"

"I was asking about the next car," was my rejoinder.

"Yes, they're all okay," said Conductor Mynatt, but still he had not made a positive statement. He had given me a queer look when he followed me into the all-white car as I looked it over carefully.

Then moments later he said something to Mrs. Meadows and called her—as white Southerners sometimes do—"Grandma." Like a flash the slightly gray Mrs. Meadows fired back at the conductor: "My name is Martha."

The conductor then very lamely remarked: "They call me 'Grandpa,'" but Mrs. Meadows would have none of it. "You've got grandchildren," she said, "I have none." The conductor shut up.

But the North-South pattern is making those "reluctant" Negroes who automatically head for the jim-crow section become integrated, because the whites are moving right in.

As one Negro train porter said: "There just hasn't been any trouble and everybody is happy, except once or twice, when white people stood up all the way rather than sit with Negroes." But that's the exception nowadays.

Spokesman Says South's Stand On Segregation Must Be Heard

ATLANTA, Nov. 4 (AP)—A Southern spokesman on racial segregation declared tonight that the South must be heard and understood on this issue if the republic is to survive.

"I do not say that the country will die if the federal government continues to enforce segregation," explained Editor Thomas R. Waring of the Charleston News and Courier. "People can live under the most difficult and obnoxious circumstances. Generations have a way of adjusting.

"But the republic as we have known it, a combination of local and national authorities tailored to the needs of every section, will disappear if this race problem is not resolved."

The South Carolinian conceded that advocates of segregation are outnumbered but declared, "sooner or later right will triumph." He charged professional agitators, greedy politician and others "are arrayed against us" and that brainwashing is practiced in the South as well as elsewhere.

Believers in segregation, he counseled, should "hold down the crackpots and hoodlums," stand firmly but calmly for their cause, "persue but not antagonize."

Waring stated his views in a speech prepared for delivery at Emory University as one of a series under the heading, "Editors View the South." He has been widely in demand as an exponent of the Southern viewpoint since writing an article for Harper's Magazine on the issue.

"Professional agitators, both white and colored, have not been willing to leave the Negro's development to natural and normal circumstances. They won't let him grow in his own way. The American Negro is being shoved forward faster than his capacity permits him to move," he said.

"In the process, the Negro is being made unwelcome among white people who would like to be his friends. He is also being used as a tool to bring about a political and social revolution.

"That revolution is a part of a world movement for leveling off the human race and stamping all men in a faceless pattern."

In the essence, he maintained neither southerners nor most of the Northerners want "a mongrel population." But, he held, that will be the result if lines of separation are broken down.

And yet, he recounted, "a constant stream of abuse against the South and its racial customs has polluted the minds of Americans."

As argument for racial separation, Waring cited juvenile delinquency and what he said will happen in the schools in the event of forced integration.

He said that the incidence of juvenile delinquency in the mixed populations of such large centers as Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Detroit and Washington proves that racial separation in the formative years is good.

As for the schools, he contended, integration can lead only to deterioration. Gradually, he said, the better class of white people would send their children to private schools "to avoid contact with Negro culture, manners and morals" and eventually "only the poorest whites would mingle in classrooms with Negroes."

Marriage Taboo Has Role in Segregation

It's Real Issue in School Crisis in South

BY JOSEPH ATOR

ST LOUIS has a curious and charming residential institution called "the place." A place is a property, usually a dead-end street, which the owners of its residences own, not to the curb, but to the center of the paving. They maintain the paving and usually a more or less elaborate gate, which in days of cheaper help was probably manned by a watchman who admitted the residents as they drove home of an evening in their carriages.

There are 30 or more of these places in the city, some boasting quite luxurious homes, and others out in St. Louis county beyond the city which have the characteristics of private residential parks. One of the more modest of these communities, lined with 28 substantial homes built in the 1890s, is Windemere place. It is in the path of Negro residential expansion in the city, and a few years ago some Negroes bought some of its homes.

One of the residents is Charles Nagle, the extremely tall and extremely talented director of the city's fine art museum. One of his neighbors is Jacob Lashley, now in his 70s, a former president of the American Bar association and a southerner raised in the southern tradition.

EXPERIMENT BEGUN

Overcrowding Blamed for Negro Slums

Nagle, with the approval of Lashley and other white residents of Windemere place, undertook an experiment in interracial living as an alternative to abandoning their homes to the Negro invasion. Their theory has been that it is not Negroes, but overcrowding in Negro residences, that makes slums. Windermere place, both by city zoning ordinances and valid restrictive covenants, is restricted to single family occupancies.

The primary purpose of the biracial organization of property owners is to see that these rules are not broken. So far their only trouble has been with a Negro alderman whom they suspect of turning one of the houses into a rooming house, forbidden by law in the section, and against whom they are seeking legal sanctions. The other more recently arrived Negro tenants are, in the main, professional people—physicians and teachers.

At a meeting of the property owners one evening a white mother, a simple and direct young woman, brought up the forbidden subject.

"My little girl is playing with her colored neighbors," she said. "They are nice children, and she enjoys their times I wonder whether the attachments she is forming now might lead her into a mixed marriage when she grows older."

There was a long, painful pause, as Nagle recalls the incident. Then a young Negro matron spoke up, saying:

"I was raised in a mixed neighborhood, and I played with white children for years. None of my Negro friends married a white person, and none of my white friends married a Negro. I can assure you that it is just as difficult and alarming to us as it is to you."

That was a valid answer. There is evidence that the vast majority of Negroes regard racially mixed marriages with the same distaste, and exhibit the same prejudice toward the participants in white people, south or north, display. In one respect, the Negroes' feeling is not so deep, according to one of their spokesmen, a banker whose own appearance demonstrates a high proportion of white blood.

"We have difficulty persuading our people that the white people regard this matter with so great a concern as they obviously do," he said.

Another banker, a man widely respected in financial circles and a leader in his community, put the other side of the case even more succinctly, however. Explaining his undying opposition to desegregation of the schools, he merely said:

"I don't want my five-year-old granddaughter to marry a Negro."

This reporter tried what he deemed to be a logical approach to the issue one Saturday afternoon, and fell flat on his face. He was sitting, over highballs on the kitchen table, with two old friends. They are a college trained, intelligent couple. Their financial and social status is secure. The husband had just expressed what he termed, correctly, the overriding fear of nearly all white southerners that desegregation of the schools will have as its inevitable concommitant propaganda that there is no essential difference between the races.

"Our children will be indoctrinated in this at an impressionable age," he said. "It will lead some of them, at least, to think that mixed marriages are perfectly proper."

"Has it occured to you," he was asked, "that that little granddaughter of yours is almost certainly going to marry someone in her own social and economic class? She isn't likely to marry a field hand, be he white or black. And if she should be attracted to a Negro of intelligence and education, those very qualities will cause him to have as great a pride of race as you expect of her. Furthermore, he will know that in any mixed marriage the Negro partner suffers the more severely. Don't you think you are exaggerating the risk?"

"Perhaps I am," he replied. "But it's still a risk that we don't dare take."

In three-quarters or more of such mixed marriages as do occur, a Negro man is wedded to a white woman. Southern and border states and a number of northern states west of the Mississippi have criminal statutes forbidding such marriages. Indiana is the only northern state east of the Mississippi with such a law.

In these areas it is usually necessary for the white partner to pretend to a portion of Negro blood and for the couple to enter the Negro community, where they almost invariably are subjected to ostracism and ridicule. Their children are always classed as Negroes in segregated situations.

Robert E. T. Roberts submitted a master's thesis to the University of Chicago in 1940 on mixed marriages in Chicago, and in 1956 was awarded his doctor's degree in anthropology on a thesis discussing mixed marriages in the United States and in other countries with white-colored caste systems, including South Africa, India, the Caribbean islands, and Central America.

"When a Negro-white couple do break the rule of endogamy [marriage within one's own class or caste]," he wrote in his earlier work, "they are not treated as other families but as violators of the moral code. . . . Unless the marriage is concealed, a white who violates the rule of endogamy is made an outcaste and a Negro who does so is more or less ostracized by his group. In addition to being shunned by both Negroes and whites, the Negro-white couple are subjected to ridicule, humiliation, and petty annoyances, as well as to a severe employment handicap, and other threats to their security."

Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, made inquiries of sociologists and anthropologists on a number of university faculties a few years ago. His conclusions were that mixed marriages are rare, and that the participants could usually be classified in one of three groups.

These were people of unstable emotional habits—the screwballs; extreme radicals, usually Communists and people in whom the marriage had some linguistic bond overriding the difference of color, i. e., marriages of Negro Puerto Ricans to persons of Spanish or other Latin descent. Roberts confirmed the influence of the Communist party in promoting mixed marriages, tho he did not find a large number of such unions, and listed a fourth influence, which was the unfamiliarity of recently arrived European women with American mores.

Dr. Roberts' conclusion was that social prejudice in the north is almost as effective a deterrent of mixed marriages as are the statutes which reflect the same prejudice in southern and other states.

When he sat down to write "The Mind of the South," 16 years ago, Wilbur J. Cash demolished with a few well chosen statistics the fiction so dear to the traditional southerner that in his veins flows the blood of the English Cavaliers. Few came across the ocean to begin with, he noted, and those who did were far too few to father even the limited class of wealthy planters —5,000 families or fewer—in whose hands rested almost the entire political power of the south at the outbreak of the Civil war.

But the southerner, he said, was an incurable romantic who practiced, and practices to this day, the code of chivalry to which he aspired by fictitious descent. Combine this, observed Cash, with widespread miscegenation, as a result of which only an estimated 20 per cent of American Negroes today are of pure African blood, and something had to be done.

"And the only really satisfactory escape here, as in so many other instances, would be fiction," wrote Cash. "On the one hand, the convention must be set up that the thing simply did not exist, and enforced under penalty of being shot; and on the other, the woman must be compensated, the revolting suspicion in the male that he might be slipping into bestiality got rid of, by glorifying her; the Yankee must be answered by proclaiming from the housetops that Southern Virtue, so far from being inferior, was superior, not alone to the North's but to any on earth, and adducing Southern Womanhood in proof.

"The upshot, in this land of spreading notions of chivalry, was downright gyneolatry. She was the South's Palladium, this Southern woman — the shield-bearing Athena gleaming whitely in the clouds, the standard for its rallying, the mystic symbol of its nationality in the face of the foe."

It is not necessary to accept Cash's analysis, which assuredly has been denounced by a thousand southern orators and critics. It is useless to dismiss the southern white man's fear of "mongrelization" as other critics have, as a mere rationalization of other and less noble fears of Negro economic and political competition.

The important, essential fact is that this belief exists. It is based on emotion. Neither logic nor all the paratrooper bayonets in the nation are going to eradicate it soon from the collective mind of the south. Right or wrong, true or false, this intangible is the most important barrier to white southern acceptance of desegregation in the schools or anywhere else.

TOMORROW: The South follows the great American theory that when anything goes wrong, it is time to pass another law; state legislative attempts to preserve racial segregation in the schools, or delay its end.

WATCH ON THE POTOMAC

Segregationists Beaten In Arlington and Little Rock

By ROBERT G. SPIVACK

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The election report that seemed to me badly underplayed by newsmen around the country was the outcome of the vote at Little Rock, Ark. After all the fuss by Gov. Faubus the people of that city elected six moderates, pledged to back the Supreme Court integration decision. This was in a race for the seven-man city Board of Directors. The White Citizens' Councils and the local junior Klansmen went in for considerable rabble-rousing—but they still lost and so did Faubus. In Virginia, too, an anti-Byrd Democrats was elected to the Arlington County board after the Byrd machine pulled out all the stops in racist demagoguery. These events, had the press given them the attention they deserved, were our little Sputniks for all the world to see.

SPIVACK

The Red Myth

While all the world is agog at Sputniks I and II, there are other aspects of the Soviet revolution that we seem to have gotten all about. Forty years ago, Lenin and Trotsky told the angry, disheartened people of Russia not to reach for the moon—but they did promise heaven on earth. Now, four decades later, what is the score? The Soviet government still does not enjoy the free allegiance of its people, nor those of its satellite neighbors. The 200,000,000 citizens of the Russian state live under the watching eyes of the secret police. The forced labor camps have not been emptied. The Russian people remain ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-housed.

IT IS TRUE that they have gone far in the race for outer-space. Totalitarian governments have many short-range advantages over the free, more relaxed Western democracies. Other dictatorships have also done well, in the short run. With slave labor the Pharoahs built pyramids, Hitler built super-highways and Mussolini made the trains run on time. Where are they now?

Krushchev is a more picturesque dictator than Stalin and maybe there are great internal changes for the better coming inside Russia. But I cannot share the end-of-the-world attitude that's been so prevalent here since the Sputnisk went up into outer space. The Russian Communists still haven't conquered the heavens, and life in Moscow is still hell on earth.

Upper Level Humor

During the recent dispute over the acceptance of gifts from King Saud by the State Department's Deputy Chief of Protocol, Victor Purse, the Washington wits had a field day. Everybody had something to say, but the crack we like best was supposed to have been made at Secretary Dulles' staff meeting. Said one punster:

"You can't make a silk Purse out of a Saud's ear."

Will Get Nowhere

Sen. William Langer (R., N. D.) has come up with a suggestion that will get nowhere in Congress, but merits public discussion nonetheless. In view of all the feigned indignation about "conflicts of interest" cases in the Executive branch he thinks all Congressmen, Senators and other government employees earning more than $10,000 a year should be required to disclose their incomes, assets, and dealings in securities or commodities.

And why not?

Stepin Fetchit Says South Friendlier Than the North

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Stepin Fetchit, who earned and lost a huge fortune portraying a lazy, shuffling, sleepy-eyed comedy character in the movies, called the South friendlier than the North for Negroes.

Fetchit, now retired, made the surprising statement to a Memphis reporter and blamed the NAACP partly for his retirement.

The ex-comedian, whose real name is Lincoln Perry, said the Negro will find more friends and help in the South than they will "among the supposed to be liberals posing as his greatest friends" in the North.

HE SAID he had always been treated well by Southern whites.

"My only trouble has come from fellows supposed to be liberal out of New York City," he continued. "The Negro will find that some of his greatest friends have been and will be Southerners."

STEPIN FETCHIT

Fetchit, who symbolized carefree laziness in his career as an actor, said the NAACP played a part in his retirement several years ago.

"My wife got me to retire," he said, "after they said the lazy character I portrayed belittled the colored race."

Racial Gains In U. S. Told By Whitney

Ambassador In Talk to Britons

By Gaston Coblentz

From Herald Tribune Bureau

LONDON, Oct. 7.—John Hay Whitney, American Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, told a British audience tonight that "sweeping and fundamental" progress is being made in race relations in the United States despite the flare-up at Little Rock.

He said that the United States has probably not yet seen the end of trouble of the Little Rock type but that this is an inevitable accompaniment of the efforts of a free society "to maintain and expand individual freedom and individual equality."

Mr. Whitney analyzed the Arkansas turmoil in an address on "The Pathway to Better Understanding" between the United States and Britain at a joint meeting of the Cardiff Business Club and the English-Speaking Union at Cardiff, capital of Wales.

In other parts of the address he accused Syria of "blatant opportunism" in accepting arms from the Soviet bloc and chided some British exporters for not being aggressive enough in seeking to sell their products in the United States.

On America's race problem, he said that he has been heartened in the last few days by "the understanding and thoughtful approach of the British press to these events despite the pictures (of Little Rock) which have been vividly but incompletely captioned."

"And our impression of the reaction of the British people, through letters and calls, is one of great sympathy and understanding of the problem confronting our nation."

Issue Not Unique

However, Mr. Whitney said that Americans abroad are being asked many worried questions by sincere friends of the United States about American handling of the race relations problem.

Noting that the race issue is not unique to the United States, he said:

"Almost every country in the world knows from its own experience of the stresses and strains that go along with the adjustment to progress and social advancement. Countries which have worked to diminish differences in the economic and social standing of its citizens, based on either racial or national origin, have experienced friction and disturbances much like these and often more serious.

"The kind of change this represents—and I submit it is a sweeping and fundamental change in racial relations marking one of the most important reforms in American history—takes time. In a free country it allows its opponents to be heard—and rightly so—and permits photographs to be taken."

On the Middle East Mr. Whitney strongly criticized the government of Syria for co-operating with Moscow and playing into the hands of the Soviet imperialists.

"The Soviets are using, in the Arab countries, the technique that Stalin and Lenin prescribed for bringing about 'amalgamation' of the so-called 'colonial and dependent peoples' into the Soviet orbit," Mr. Whitney said. "This technique, as Lenin specified, involved inciting nationalism to break all ties with the West and thus create so total a dependence upon the Soviet Union that it can take full control.

Onus on Russia

"The onus for this threat to peace in the Middle East clearly belongs on the Soviet Union and the Syrian regime, which has succumbed to blatant opportunism without regard for the fact that it is destroying Arab unity and betraying true Arab nationalism. No country has maintained as close relations with the U. S. S. R., as Syria now does and remained free."

On Anglo-American trade, Mr. Whitney said there has been improvement in British dollar-earning exports to the United States in the last year and a half but that "there is room for considerably more."

"We hear the argument that British sales to America are often held back by United States tariffs," Mr. Whitney said, "that the competition from Japan and elsewhere places British goods at a disadvantage in the American market, and so on. These arguments seem to be deemed sufficient to justify a propensity in certain British export circles to be rather passive about trying to win American consumer acceptance for their products.

"In saying this I echo British leaders like Sir William Rootes (the auto manufacturer), who has emphasized that Britain is not living up to its possibilities in selling to the American market. He urges British exporters to go after the business instead of waiting for it to arrive."

Tariff Obstacles

Regarding tariff obstacles to British sales in the United States, Mr. Whitney said that American tariffs are "quite moderate" on a wide range of industrial products—and that it is precisely this range of goods which makes up the greater part of British exports to the United States.

He added that the British were excessively concerned about the United States exercising its "escape clause" rights under the 1947 General Agreement on Tariff and Trade (GATT). The escape clauses permit a government to restore lowered tariffs to their former levels if a domestic industry is seriously threatened by foreign imports.

"In the case of the United States," Mr. Whitney said, "this escape clause is applicable to over 3000 groups of dutiable products. Yet in the ten-year period since 1947, this clause has been used only to restore duties in exactly seven cases. Of these only two, bicycles and linen toweling, affected the United Kingdom.

American Foreign Policy Hurt By Racial Incidents

Norfolk, Va.

Sat. 12-14-57

RICHMOND, Va. — Race relations in the United States have a tremendous effect on American foreign policy in Asia, John Scott, foreign correspondent and assistant to the publisher of Time Magazine declared recently.

p. 20

Speaking to some 500 Virginia Union University students on "The Crisis in Asia", Mr. Scott said incidents such as occurred at Little Rock, Ark., adversely affect our efforts to win the colored people as Asia to democracy.

• • •

HE SAID THE principal problem facing the retarded nations of Asia is a lack of capital and that this capital should be supplied by the private American investor. Mr. Scott said that Russia is winning many nations to communism by supplying the capital we are failing to offer.

He described retarded nations as those in which the annual average income fell below $200 a year and the illiteracy rate rose above 50 per cent. cent.

"PREMATURE democracy is not a boon, but a liability," Mr. Scott declared, he said the United States does a disservice to these nations when it rushes them into democracy before they are prepared for it and suggested that a United Nations trusteeship guide the nations for a decade or so until they are financially and educationally prepared to accept democracy.

Mr. Scott is an author, a world traveler, and an expert on Asian affairs. From 1938 to 1941 Mr. Scott was a journalist in Moscow, Paris, the Balkans, Berlin, the Near East and Japan.

Dont Force Integration, Ga. Editor Warns North

Constitution p. 14 Fri 11-15-57

Atlanta, Ga.

BENNINGTON, Vt., Nov. 14 (AP)—A newspaperman from segregated Georgia proposed a solution to the thorny racial integration problem tonight in this New England college town.

Editor Joe Parham of the Macon, Ga. News observed first that Vice President Nixon himself had been unable to suggest a solution when asked about white children being forced to go to a school where they were outnumbered by Negroes four to one.

But, Parham continued, white Southerners have a solution, even if the vice president does not.

"It is," he said, "to desegregate only when a community is ready to accept desegregation willingly and is not intimidated into it by a federal court order or a soldier's rifle."

In a speech prepared for delivery at Bennington College, the Georgian warned of dire results from use of force to disrupt Southern social patterns established over many generations.

The editor was invited by Thomas P. Brockway of the college to present the Southern viewpoint in conjunction with a speaker from Yale University giving the Northern view.

In an effort to gain a New England understanding of the South's problem, Parham pointed out that Vermont has only 443 Negroes but his own state of Georgia had 1,062,762 at the last official count. Some Georgia counties, he added, have from 75 to 80 per cent Negroes in the total school population.

Compounding the seriousness of the dilemma, he recounted, is the fact that instead of integration "the separate-but-equal concept was the 'law of the land' for 58 years."

Finally in 1954, after "continuous and massive" efforts, he said, the legal interpretation was shifted and integration decreed in the public schools.

Considering these and other circumstances, said the Southerner:

"No matter what the reasons for moral or health or intellectual deficiencies with which so many Negroes are afflicted, there is an understandable reluctance among white parents in the South to have their children bear the brunt of integration."

Parham likened the South to a "cornered man holding a hand grenade."

"If he is rushed," the editor said, "the pin will be pulled. Blood will be shed, some lives may be lost, Southern education may be gravely harmed and national unity may be seriously disrupted."

Morally, he held, the issue is whether it is right to force an unwanted law on an entire region and overthrow practically overnight long-established conventions and social patterns.

Negro Leaders Urge Ike's Help

Post and Times Herald

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (AP)—Sixty Negro leaders, asserting that "a state of terror prevails," urged President Eisenhower today to come South immediately and use the "weight of his office" to bring about Southwide compliance with integration rulings.

The Negroes' call for Presidential help followed the hurling of "Molotov cocktails" at a Chattanooga bus.

A statement issued after a two-day meeting of Negro integration leaders from nine states also called on Vice President Richard M. Nixon to make a "tour of the South" similar to the one he made in Europe on behalf of Hungarian refugees.

Pastor Leads Fight

The question of federal responsibility in the crisis should be discussed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell and representatives of the Negro group, the leaders said.

Heading the Negroes was the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the year-long Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott whose followers finally won vindication when the Supreme Court overthrew Alabama Jim Crow seating laws.

The group disclosed it had sent a letter to the President asking him to come South at once and make a major speech in a major southern city urging "all southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decisions as the law of the land."

"American citizens have been unjustly and brutally attacked at home," the letter said, referring to the bombing of integration leaders' houses, particularly at oMntgomery.

Repeatedly the Negroes stressed the "terror" prevailing in the integration struggle.

Meantime, a new showdown was shaping up at Tallahassee, Fla., which with Montgomery has been one of the main integregation test centers.

Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida revoked his emergency order which suspended Tallahassee bus service on New Year's Day as a safety measure.

Despite a new city ordinance making bus drivers responsible for assigning bus seats, the Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee Negro integration leader, told the Atlanta meeting the Negroes planned to ride where they pleased.

Happy Over Progress

"I am happy that the buses are again in operation and as long as they remain nonsegregated, we have nothing to fight," Steele said.

No buses were running meanwhile in Montgomery, where Thursday's series of bombings prompted a cancellation of service.

About midnight last night, a man crouching in a culvert hurled two gasoline-filled bottles at a Chattanooga bus near Rossville, Ga., a suburb. The driver, Frank Bailey, said one hit the road in front of the bus and the other bounced off the rear bumper without doing damage. Six or seven white passengers were on the bus at the time.

In Mobile, Ala., police kept a nightlong watch on the home of a Negro integration leader who said anonymous callers warned him dynamiters would return to do "a better job." The Rev. J. L. LeFlore found a bomb on his front porch yesterday morning and decided to call off a mass meeting of Negroes to discuss bus integration.

Why Do Negroes Want Integration?

Constitution

The past two days I have listed reasons why some white people insist on segregation. From my mail and observation I find there are some Negroes who insist on integration. Why do they want integration? I am sure I do not have the full answer and perhaps some of my readers will give me further light. But it seems to me they wan integration because:

(1) They resent the restrictions that segregation imposes on them. A Negro bishop illustrated t thusly: A baby will sit on your ap happily. But if you place your hand on its head and hold it firmly, the baby immediately will begin to struggle to get free. It isn't that the baby expects to go anywhere; it just doesn't want to be held down.

Negroes have written me they prefer to live in Negro communities but do not like to be told they cannot live elsewhere if they so desired; that they prefer their own churches and schools but do not like to be barred from other churches and schools merely because of their race; that they prefer their own social functions but do not want to be told they are not welcome in any society. If given the freedom of choice they would still choose their own people, but they do want the freedom to choose.

(2) Some Negroes want integration because they have not fared too well under segregation. They feel that jobs should be filled on a basis of ability, training, willingness to work, etc., and not on a basis of race. That "separate but equal facilities" is more talk than truth and that their educational, economic and cultural opportunities are grossly unequal. They do not think it right for one of their children to be forced to leave the state of its birth in order to study medicine, law and make other preparations for life. They feel that if two people pay the same fare for a bus ride, then they ought to have the same right to sit where they desire in the bus. Under segregation they feel their race has been forced to live in the poorest houses, standing back until the white people have taken the best.

(3) Some Negroes oppose segregation because they believe it presupposes inferiority and they strongly believe they are not inferior. That given equal opportunities in an integrated society, they will be equal to the white man in every respect.

(4) Contrasted to the above, and this will cause argument, some Negroes want integration because they do feel the black man is inferior and they want to escape from their own race.

But whatever the reasons for and/or against either segregation or integration, we will never solve this—the greatest social problem of our time—except in an atmosphere of good will, calm reasoning, a willingness on the part of each race to understand and sympathize with the other, and above all, without the grace of God in our hearts.

Tomorrow we will look at reasons why some white people want integration.

Intermarriage Fear Bolsters Segregation

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed 1-2-57 p. 4

Yesterday I mentioned five reasons why some white people insist on maintaining racial segregation: Economic competition, fear of Negro control of the local government, desire to maintain a servant race of people, inferiority complex, resistance to any social change. There are three other reasons why some believe in segregation:

(6) Some believe the Negro race actually is inferior to the white race and they do not want to live on an equal level with them. They do not feel the Negro has equal mental ability with the white man, that the Negro has moral or spiritual principles as high, that physically he is as clean as the white man or that in any way the Negro race is equal to the white race.

Those who believe thus feel it would contaminate them to associate as social equals with Negroes. (While I have not indicated either approval or disapproval with any of the reasons stated above, I must go on record here. I do not believe that any one race is either inferior to or superior to any other race. I believe persons of all races are children of the same Father.)

(7) Some white people insist on segregation because they fear intermarriage. Their reasoning: If children go to school together, they will participate in athletics and social events together. If they go to parties and play together, it is possible young persons of different races will become romantically attracted to each other. If so, marriage is the logical result. If so, then "half-breed" children will be born. This line of reasoning, whether it be false reasoning or not, drives some parents to great fear and strong resistance to any change in the customs of segregation.

(8) Some insist on segregation, not because they have any prejudice toward the Negro as a race or as a person, but because they sincerely believe that all races are better off segregated.

Many believe that each race has distinctive contributions to make to society and to the world and to break down their separateness as races would cause humanity to lose much that is good.

These do not feel that one race is superior to another race, they simply feel the races are different in many ways—color of skin, emotional drives, mental and physical abilities, etc., and that to reduce the several parts of humanity into one homogeneous whole would cause the human race to lose much that is wholesome and good.

Perhaps my readers will suggest other reasons why some insist on segregation. But the point is this: No matter what our personal feelings are, we never arrive at satisfactory solutions until we better understand why we feel as we do. I list the above, not to say I either agree or disagree with them, but rather as a basis upon which to think more clearly.

Southern Publisher Reveals Why He Favors Integration

Commercial Appeal
Ins. 1-15-57 Memphis Tenn.

By KENNETH BEENE
United Press Staff Writer

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Jan. 14.—A soft-spoken, Southern-born newspaper publisher who believes segregation is in conflict with American democracy has put his position boldly and frankly before the public in this area of die-hard opposition to integration.

But Buford Boone of the Tuscaloosa News (circulation 14,811,) does not consider himself a hero or martyr for the cause of desegregation. Rather, he believes people in responsible position in the South must adopt a positive approach to the "inevitable," lest the region is overrun by the house-bombers and political demagogues.

Tuscaloosa is the site of the University of Alabama, where one of the first serious outbursts of violence over integration occurred last year. Autherine Lucy Foster, a Birmingham Negro woman, won admission to the all-white school under Federal court order, only to be excluded after police said they feared adequate protection of her life could not be provided.

Climax To Crusade

Perhaps the climax to Mr. Boone's newspaper crusade for "law and order," however, came last week when he accepted an invitation to speak to a meeting of a white citizens council group. The council also scheduled a pro-segregation leader and tabbed Mr. Boone on the program as an "outspoken advocate of integration."

Chairman of the council is a 20-year-old former University of Alabama student who was expelled from the campus for fiery pro-segregation activities during the Lucy incidents. Most persons would have cringed from making such an appearance but Mr. Boone said he wanted the chance to "explain" his views.

Before the often jeering crowd Mr. Boone said he thought the Supreme Court's school segregation ruling "had to come and that it was morally right."

Easy To Condemn

Mr. Boone said also it is easy to condemn the Supreme Court and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People but "Our problem is with ourselves and what we are going to do as responsible American citizens to recognize, or deny, privileges which our courts have said are the proper rights of Negroes.

"All whites are not honorable, upright and fair. All Negroes are not dirty, ignorant, shiftless and lazy. In fact, one of the very greatest things about our country is the privilege of any person to be judged on the basis of what he stands for and what he can amount to."

Mr. Boone speaks and writes with the gamble he may get wholesale subscription cancellations from his readers. But a week after he had explained his stand, he said he had counted only eight cancellations.

Dem Group Proposes Bill To Kill Poll, Labor Bias

Sat. 1-19-57

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA). — Twenty-eight Democratic Representatives last week proposed a legislative program for House Democrats in the 85th Congress.

The proposed program commits the signers to propose and work for the enactment of legislation designed to eliminate illegal and unconstitutional discrimination affecting the right to vote and the right to engage in gainful occupations, and designed, also, to insure full protection of the law of the enjoyment of the security of person and of the rights of citizenship."

"Instead of indiscriminate condemnation of colonialism." the program proposes that "the positive aid to countries holding Eisenhower Administration offer colonial possessions so that the economic shock of abandoning such possessions can be cushioned and at the same time protection given to persons and property in the colonial areas during the transition to independence."

The Democrats signing the statement said they will support such efforts.

They also said they favor an expanded Point Four (economic aid to undeveloped countries) program and they hope that the Administration, "after four years of hesitation and contradiction will develop such a program."

They favor the same type of Federal aid to school construction legislation which failed to pass the House last year, but said they are opposed to the Eisenhower formula for the distribution of funds to the states on the basis of need and to the method proposed by the Administration for financing school construction.

The Administration proposed that the Federal Government purchase bonds issued by school districts which are capable of financing their own school construction but cannot obtain financing from ordinary sources on reasonable terms and credit assistance to state school-financing agencies to provide schools in states where such agencies exist or are created.

The program omits any mention of the Powell amendment. That amendment, sponsored by Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat, of New York, would deny funds to school districts which are not complying with the Supreme Court decree against segregated public schools.

The proposed program was issued by the following Democratic Representatives: Jugh J. Addonizio, New Jersey; Thomas L. Ashley, Ohio; Wayne N. Aspinall, Colorado; John A. Blatnik, Minnesota; Thomas M. Ebernarter, Pennsylvania; Edith Green, Oregon; Wayne L. Hayes, Ohio; Chet Holifield, California; Frank M. Karsten, Missouri; Eugene J. McCarthy, Minnesota; Thaddeus M. Machrowica, Michigan; Ray J. Madden, Indiana. Also Lee Metcalf, Montana; John E. Moss, California; Carl D. Perkins, Kentucky; Gracie Pfost, Idaho; Melvin Price, Illiois; Henry S. Reuss, Wisconsin; George M. Rhodes, Pennsylvania; Peter W. Rodino, Jr., New Jersey; Byron G Rogers, Colorado; James Roosevelt, California; Frank Thompsin, Jr., New Jersey; Stewart L. Udall, Arizona; Charles A. Vanik, Ohio, and Sidney R Yates, Illinois.

Need 'Protection' in Dixie—

Courier Houston, Tex.
Sat. 1-5-57

ADAM CLAYTON POWELL

NEW YORK — Congressman Adam Clayton Powell has demanded that the Department of Justice immediately swear in more marshals to give protection to those men and women in the South who are trying to uphold the Supreme Court's decision on segregation.

Congressman Powell spoke at the all-day legislative conference at his church, Abyssinian Baptist, which met to lay out a civil rights program to offer to the new Congress.

Mr. Powell also asked the conference that it request that the escapee and refugee program be enlarged to include those from areas other than Hungary.

ON THE LOCAL level, he demanded that the City Council withhold funds and tax-exemptions from hospitals that still do not allow Negro doctors to practice.

He also called upon local authorities to put into immediate effect the recommendations on school integration made by the zoning committee.

Mr. Powell urged the creation of a temporary committee of Negro and Puerto Rican leaders to work out some basic and permanent form of cooperation in New York City.

Negroes Threaten Their Own Race By Their Demands For Integration

Commercial Appeal
Memphis Tenn.

To The Commercial Appeal:

I have read the letter of Mary Lee Jones, regarding the Negro. It is well to remember what the late Dr. J. B. Gambrell told a Baptist meeting in Ohio, many years ago: "What the Negro needs most is letting alone."

Sun 3-24-57

It is my honest opinion that Mary Lee is honest in her appraisal of the situation; but there is one thing she needs to consider: Where did she learn to read and write? Was it in the North or in the South? It is true that we were slow in the South in providing educational facilities for both Negroes and whites. In my early days in school, we had two months in the winter and two months in the summer; and our school house was built of logs; with one log cut and the open space used as its only window.

In the early years after the Negroes were freed, they wanted and asked for separate schools and churches. They wanted to be to themselves. Their wishes were granted; and since they owned no land, those who did own it gave land and helped the Negroes build the same kind of school houses and church houses as the whites had. There had been little change in attitudes for nearly 90 years, until Northern agitators came South and created trouble for both negroes and whites.

Five years ago, if Mary Lee had come to my door, I would have invited her to come in; today, if she had anything to say to me, she could stand outside and say it, and then go away. The distance between the two races is far greater today than it has been throughout my long life; and the more pressure that is brought to force the whites to accept the Negroes, the greater will be the resistance, regardless of consequences to the white race.

Integration means mongrelization: The white race will never agree to, nor submit to it, regardless of any law, court order or any other pressure from any source.

We keep our Herefords separated from our Aberdeen-Angus cattle to enhance their value. If the Negro is to climb, he must keep his racial purity, and he cannot or will not do that with integration, on any level.

If he has the brains which Mary Lee believes he has, he will take steps to keep the races apart, thus making it possible to build up and improve the strain, rather than to destroy both races.

"Let South Solve" The Problem

Journal & Guide P.8

SENATOR STENNIS, of Mississippi, told the Senate sub-committee considering the President's civil rights proposals to "let the South solve our race relations problems." "When the agitation ends, and the outsiders leave," said MR. STENNIS, "then we will have to go back to rebuilding good relations."

Pit. 2-23-57

What SENATOR STENNIS probably meant, was that we would go back to the status quo ante the legal crusade of the past fifteen years for civil rights for Negroes.

Norfolk Va.

If by any chance everyone would agree to leave the matter in the hands of the Southern political regime, where it now rests, the first thing that SENATOR STENNIS and his colleagues would do would be to annul the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, which Mississippi, Virginia, Georgia and other Southern States have sworn to do.

Then they would reincarnate their theories on education for Negroes. We quote a standard authority, no less than the Daily News, published in Jackson, the capital of MR. STENNIS' State:

> There has been deliberate neglect of school facilities for Negroes in Hinds county, and in all counties throughout the State, and in the South generally. This negligence has been quite bad enough in Jackson, but in the rural portions of the county, where we have a white population of only 5,331, compared with a Negro population of 24,094, school facilities for Negro children are pitifully inadequate.
> Despite the fact that our enrollment of educable children is 43 per cent white and 57 per cent Negro, the Negro schools get only 9 per cent of the budget and the white schools get 91 per cent. This is not only shameful, but in flagrant violation of decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

The above was published more than five years ago in the editorial columns of Mississippi's leading white newspaper.

It offers every reason why the people who are in political control in the South still need to be nudged forward by court decisions. This proves that if the "race relations" of which SENATOR STENNIS spoke are left to the politicians only, Negroes have nothing for which to hope.

The "good race relations" about which SENATOR STENNIS spoke have never really existed. To colored people good race relations mean that they will be treated fairly in the administration of government and all that it means.

To SENATOR STENNIS and those for whom he speaks "good race relations" mean complete satisfaction on the part of Negroes with such educational conditions as were pointed out by the Jackson Daily News.

The Negro's Leadership

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I am alarmed over the continued complaint that the present racial unrest is communist-inspired. From my point of view, the Negro in his efforts toward full democracy in America has turned to his ministers for guidance and direction.

Montgomery Ala.

Suppose, instead, he had turned to communism or to some left-wing radical organization in our country.

The NAACP itself is standing altogether on the decision of law, and to my way of thinking, there is nothing radical, wrong, illegal or un-American in that. If there is, I should like to be informed how it can be so considered.

The use of lawlessness and of violence against a legal position is not entitled to public sympathy and can not be defended in any way.

BROOKLYN, N. Y. — (ANP) — A record was set when 1,500 persons attended the annual dinner meeting of the Brooklyn Urban League last Saturday at Concord Parish Church. Edward L. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League of Greater New York said it was the largest gathering that had ever attended any borough meeting of the League.

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, substituting for Martin Luther King as principal speaker, was rushed to International Airport by police escorted car to make plane to get back to Montgomery in order to be in his pulpit at First Baptist Church Sunday. He had made 12 speeches in a week. Dr. King was in Africa for inauguration of the British Colony of Ghana on the Gold Coast as an independent nation with Kwame Nkrumah as prime minister.

Speakers included Catherine Alexander, Fr. William Cullen, Atty. Harold Goldberg, Austin Henry, Rabbi Benjamin Kreitman, Doctor Sandy F. Ray, Bernard Reswick, Dolly Robinson and Dr. Taylor. Music was offered by Eugene Brice, baritone, accompanied by Jonathan Brice.

Rev. Abernathy traced the history of the Negro's struggle for freedom since his forced arrival in America. He said that a new spirit of independence was now accelerating the largest minority group in the country for its full rights to citizenship.

"When the Negro in America is truly free then the President can call the house to order, and not until then will they cease to fight for freedom," said the vice president of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

Iowan Says South's Position Confuses Him

The newspapers here in the North tell of violence in Southern cities because Negroes won't ride in segregated portions of city buses. I have never been in the South, so I was puzzled when I read that there was no segregation on elevators. If true, why is it all right to travel vertically in an unsegregated manner and so terrible to travel horizontally in that same manner? I wish someone would explain this to me.

"Southern Gentlemen" and Southern Hospitality" are familiar phrases here in the North. I have difficulty trying to fit those terms to the manner in which Southerners react to the desegregation issues. Perhaps I don't understand the meanings of "gentlemen" and "hospitality." I would like some clarification on that, too. WALTER GORMLY.

Shrinking the Segregated South

Sat. 1-19-57 Pittsburgh Pa. 38a

Despite all of the obstructionism, threats and violence attending efforts to end racial segregation in Dixie, the fact remains that the segregated South is shrinking.

To get the full effect of this movement, you have only to compare the limits of the segregated area in, say, January, 1952, with the same area today.

Negroes down South today are almost everywhere becoming a political factor to an extent almost unimaginable in the 1948 election and far greater than in 1952.

School desegregatiton has swept all of the so-called border states except Virginia and invaded Tennessee, Arkansas and Texas.

Government-supported colleges and universities in all but a half-dozen states have Negro students enrolled.

Segregation on railroads has almost vanished and has been dealt a mortal blow on both local and intercity buses, with prospects quite good for complete abolition within the near future.

Significant is the latest report of the Southern Regional Council that 21 cities in five Southern and border states have ended racial segregation on buses without violence, and what incidents there have been are few.

Thus, we find that the segregated South is growing smaller almost every day and the desegregated areas growing.

This does not mean that the millenium is even close but we are approaching it much faster than anybody imagined 10 years ago.

More Uncle Toms Greatest Need Of The Southern Negro

The one thing that is causing many a responsible Negro citizen in Jackson, in Mississippi, and the rest of the south to withhold their opinion in regard to the issues now of the greatest concern to the future of the race, especially if such an opinion, if expressed, would be contrary to the manners and opinion of the new crop of Negro leaders who have come forward since the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court is the fear of being called and designated an "Uncle Tom." A name calculated by this new Negro leadership, to subject the designated to all manners of ridicule, derision and contempt of the Negro Community.

Advocate

In the minds of this new Negro leadership any Negro is an "Uncle Tom" who, whatever the issues involved, seeks to maintain a friendly and respectful attitude toward the responsible white people of the community.

Looking back at the history of the Negro in Mississippi as well as in the rest of the south it will be found that it was those Negro leaders of the past who would be, and are being, called "Uncle Toms" by the new crop of Negro leaders who, by maintaining a friendly and respectful attitude toward the responsible white people of the community were able to secure their help and cooperation in laying the foundation for the great progress of the Negro since his emancipation from slavery.

P. 4 Jackson Miss

Heading the list of the Negro leaders of the past now being designated by the new Negro leadership as an "Uncle Tom", because his philosophy and manner runs counter to that which they have employed is Booker T. Washington, the founder of Tuskegee Institute, a man whose works and thoughts have brought him world renown. Also among their list of "Uncle Toms" would be the late Mr. Spaulding, founder of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co., with its subsidiaries, including the Farmers & Mechanics Bank, making it the largest Negro Financial Institution in the world now giving employment to hundreds if not thousands of Negroes, and with Mr. Spaulding would be the founders of the Atlanta Life Insurance Company, and the other large Negro owned financial institutions of Atlanta which is largely responsible for its reputation as the "Negro Capitol" of the United States.

Sat. 1-5-57

Among the Mississippi Negro leaders of the past which the new Negro leaders would and do designate as "Uncle Toms" are the McKissacks and Walkers, founder of the Mississippi Beneficial Life Insurance Company, now the Universal Life Insurance Company, organized at Indianola, Mississippi, now with headquarters in Memphis, Tennessee, out of which has come the Tri-State Bank of Memphis. This group would also list among its "Uncle Toms" the late W. H. Holtzclaw, and the late Prof. J. E. Johnson, Founders of Utica Institute, and Prentiss Institute, two institutions which gave educational opportunities to Negroes at a time and in places when it would otherwise have been impossible.

Among contemporary responsible Negro leaders in Mississippi this group would also designate as "Uncle Toms," T. J. Huddleston of Yazoo City, founder of the Afro-American Sons and Daughters, and Sir. P. M. Smith of Mound Bayou, Founder and head of the Knights and Daughters of Tabor and organization now operating in nine states, and their prime target for such a designation is Prof. Laurence C. Jones, Founder and head of the now world famous Piney Woods Country Life School, at Piney Woods, Mississippi.

What this new and brash Negro leadership has succeeded in doing more than anything else is losing whatever welcome they might have had in the councils of authority, by vituperative, vindictive, calumonous speeches and newspaper statements, directed towards the responsible white citizens who form the councils of authority in the community.

Where there are any responsible Negro leaders in Jackson, in Mississippi, or any place else in the south, who by their manners, and attitude of respect towards the responsible white leaders of the community, still finds welcome in the councils of authority, they should no longer fear being called or designated an "Uncle Tom."

Though somewhat slowly, the masses of Negroes of the south are beginning to see that they are being led over a precipice by the sirene calls of the New Negro leadership to be repeatedly submerged in a ever maddening whirlpool of hatred, fear, frustration, and bewilderment.

In conclusion, looking backward at Negro history, in the light of present conditions as they effect the masses of Negroes, the greatest need of the Negro in Jackson, in Mississippi, and in the rest of the south, is more and more "Uncle Toms".

Urge Ike to tour Dixie terror spots

Sat. 1-19-57

Baltimore Md.

By S. F. YETTE
Staff Correspondent

ATLANTA — The Southern Negro Leaders' Conference on Transportation and Non-Violent Integration Friday called upon President Eisenhower to visit and take note of the "state of terror" prevailing in the South.

Mr. Eisenhower was also asked to use the weight of his office to bring colored Americans the "rights guaranteed every American citizen by the U.S. Constitution."

The conference of leaders issued a statement at the end of its two-day meeting here in which it labeled Civil Rights, "the most crucial issue of our (American) culture," and pledged to "stand firm" in its non-violent revolt against racial segregation.

The conference was called by the Rev. Martin L. King Jr., leader of the Montgomery bus boycott, and was attended by approximately 60 other civil rights leaders from nine southern states comprising 29 communities.

THE GROUP sent letters also to Vice President Nixon, Attorney General Herbert Brownell and two outstanding religious leaders whom they asked for moral support in their "struggle for freedom in the South."

The letter to Mr. Nixon stated that "all persons of good will were impressed with your deep concern for the suffering of the Hungarian people which expressed itself in your trip to Austria."

It then urged the Vice President to "make such a fact-finding trip to troubled areas of the South" to observe the violence here.

"If you were to make the trip to explore the facts, and to talk with victims of racial oppression you could recommend to the President and the American people a course of action that might be as effective as your efforts on behalf of Hungarian refugees," the letter stated.

Afro-American

THE LETTER to Mr. Brownell cited an earlier statement by the Attorney General that bus segregation is "a crime against the U.S." and asked a hearing with him "at the earliest possible date" to determine "the extent to which we can rely upon the Federal Government to carry out these plans to have the law complied with."

To Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, and Dr. D. Ward Nichols, AME Bishop, the Conference sent identical letters asking them to encourage "every church in the nation" to "beseech almighty God to restore law and order to our land."

The 1,500 - word statement, drawn up by the leaders, said they "are convinced that the great majority of white southerners are prepared to accept and abide by the Supreme law of the land."

* * *

BUT, THE statement continued, "a small, but determined minority, resorts to threats, bodily assaults, cross-burnings, bombings, shooting and open defiance of the law in an attempt to force us to retract . . .

"But we cannot in clear conscience turn back. We have no moral choice but to continue the struggle, not for ourselves alone, but for all America.

"We have the God-given duty to help save ourselves and our white brothers from tragic self-destruction in the quagmire of racial hate.

"We must continue to stand firm for our right to be first-class citizens. Even in the face of death, we have no other choice," it stated.

* * *

THE CONFERENCE called upon colored citizens to:

1. Assert their human dignity;

2. Seek justice and reject all injustice;

3. Refuse further cooperation with the evil element which invites them to collude against themselves in return for bits of patronage;

4. Reject segregation, no matter how great the obstacles and suffering;

5. Accept Christian love in full knowledge of its power to defy evil; and

6. Remember that non-violence is not a symbol of or cowardliness, but as Jesus demonstrated, non-violent resistance transforms weakness into strength and breeds courage in face of danger.

* * *

THE CONFERENCE statement further asked all white southern Christians to "realize that the treatment of colored people is a basic spiritual problem" and to work "to see that all persons, regardless of color or creed, who seek the saving grace of Christ are accepted as equals in their churches."

It further asked them to encourage schools and colleges controlled by the church to set an example of brotherhood.

Finally, the statement asked all white southerners to "realize that the major choice may no longer be segregation or integration, but anarchy or law."

* * *

DR. KING said that the organization of leaders was to be a continuing group, and that they had elected him as chairman. The next meeting of the leaders will be at New Orleans. No time has been set for the meeting.

He said he thought the statement issued by the first meeting "will serve to coordinate the leadership of colored southerners and give the race a new determination to struggle for freedom."

The 27-year-old Montgomery minister said he also felt that it would "arouse the good white people to get behind the colored man and serve as his ally in his struggle."

Absent during the first day of the conference to attend the problems growing out of six bombings in his city, Dr. King called the bombings and other accompanying violence "tragic and unfortunate."

"But," he added, "I believe God can bring good out of evil. I still have faith in the South. I believe that God has something good for this section of the country."

* * *

THE REV. C. K. STEELE, leader of the integration movement in Tallahassee, Fla., expressed the hope that the statement (given by the conference) will move some of the good white people who have been silent to speak out on the matter.

Other leaders at the conference included:

Pastors T. J. Jemison, Mt. Zion Baptist, Baton Rouge, La.; F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham; Frank Gordon, Shiloh Presbyterian, Knoxville; S. A. Baker, Tabernacle Baptist, Knoxville; Kelly Smith, First Baptist, Nashville; W. T. Crutcher, Mt. Olive Baptist, Knoxville; Owen D. Pelt, Shiloh Baptist, Chicago; R. E. James, Mt. Zion Baptist, Knoxville and J. L. Ware, Trinity Baptist, Birmingham;

Also present were Mrs. S. A. Baker, Knoxville; J. Arthur Brown, NAACP, Charleston, S.C.; Robert D. Robertson, NAACP, Norfolk; John Hall, United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, Atlanta; Charles Hayes, United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, Chicago; Russell R. Lasley, International vice president of United Packinghouse Workers, AFL-CIO;

Wilson McLaughlin, Atlanta; the Rev. Avery Alexander New Orleans; Whitney Young, dean, Atlanta University, School of Social Work; Gus Courts, Belzoni, Miss.; the Rev. Henry C. Bunton, Memphis; Edward P. Smith, NAACP, Jackson, Miss.; and the Revs. Davis A. Dennis of New Orleans, and Julian Smith of Atlanta.

Fourth View Given On Racial Problem

Constitution P. 4

Sat. 1-5-57 Atlanta Ga.

Why do some Negroes prefer segregation? In previous columns we have looked at various reasons people give either for segregation or integration. In the last column in this series let us consider the reasons of one other group—the Negroes who prefer segregation.

(1) Some Negroes prefer segregation because they believe they have a better chance if their competition in life is limited to their own race. They think that as long as Negroes maintain their own churches and schools, look to each other for professional services, trade with each other, etc., they will get along better.

But if integration were a fact, they fear that in competing with the better-trained white people they would suffer. They feel that in time this objection would be overcome but it would be a long time and would displace many Negro people from their means of livelihood and their positions in their communities.

(2) Some Negroes prefer segregation because they want to maintain their own race. They fear that because they are such a minority group in this country that, as a race, they would be swallowed up. They believe in the sanctity of each race and fear intermarriage with equal concern as do some white people. They contend that many Negroes "cross the line" every year and under integration the number would multiply rapidly until finally only the very lowest class of Negroes would be left.

(3) Some Negroes prefer segregation because they prefer their own society and do not want the white man coming into it. They say they like their own churches and schools better as they are, that they prefer Negro neighbors to white neighbors and that generally they are freer and happier with their own people.

(4) Some prefer segregation because they feel it is a lesser evil than the fighting, ill will and hardships that come through efforts to do away with it. Some Negro people say they prize their friendships with the white people, live in good relations with them and wish to continue as they are. Some are satisfied with the situation as it has existed in past years. Some do not feel the gains are as great as the losses that integration would bring.

Well—as clearly as I could, I have given some reasons why some white people prefer segregation; why some Negro people prefer integration; why some white people prefer integration; why some Negro people prefer segregation. Many of the reasons I have stated are not valid, but they are reasons people give. As one looks at this matter from four sides, he sees there is some merit in each side as well as wrong thinking on each side.

This is a social problem that must be honestly faced and worked at intelligently. On one occasion the Lord said to Peter, "Put up thy sword" (John 18:11). I feel that is advice we must follow here. Nothing is solved through violence but all things can be solved through love. "Love never faileth."

Science vs. Segregation: World Battle Waged

By BEM PRICE

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 19 (AP) – Some of the nation's top experts on what makes people tick think the South's cherished beliefs in natural white supremacy is unscientific bunk.

They believe racial prejudice is something learned, not ingrained in man's nature.

They don't believe desegregation will contribute to "mongrelization" of the races. They suspect segregation has.

They don't believe anyone can prove conclusively that Negroes as a group are less intelligent than whites.

Social psychologists joined the public debate over segregation when one of their colleagues, Dr. Frank C. J. McGurk, associate professor of psychology at Villanova University, stated flatly that as measured by psychological test performance Negroes as a group do not possess as much capacity for education as do white people.

Based on Tests.

The Villanova psychologist, who once taught at West Point, said his views were based on tests administered during World War I and since.

McGurk also said, "There is ample evidence that there are psychological differences between whites and Negroes . . . These differences are not the result of differences in social and economic opportunities and they will not disappear as the social and economic opportunities of Negroes and whites are equalized."

Further, McGurk maintained, "as far as psychological test performance is a measure of capacity for education, Negroes as a group do not possess as much of it as whites as a group."

To this, 18 social scientists, most of them members of the American Psychological Association, said in essence, "Nuts."

In a formal statement the 18 subscribed to the belief that:

"The available scientific evidence indicates that much, perhaps all, of the observable differences among various racial and national groups may be explained in terms of environmental differences . . .

"It seems clear, therefore, that fears based on the assumption of innate racial differences are not well founded."

This statement is closely akin to the one submitted by 30 social scientists to the U. S. Supreme Court prior to the May 17, 1954, decision which held public school segregation unconstitutional.

No Proof.

Freely translated, the statement means that nobody has proved there are natural differences in the ability of groups to learn, whether they are divided racially or otherwise.

Further, it means that any apparent differences generally can be attributed to the surroundings in which they were reared.

The comparative intelligence of whites and Negroes has occupied social scientists since 1897 and, as a result, there is an enormous mass of material on the subject.

Dr. Robert D. North, a native of Pascagoula, Miss., and now assistant director of the Educational Records Bureau in New York City, has just completed an exhaustive study of much of this material.

North, former psychologist at Columbia and Long Island universities, concluded, "If the nation's school systems were segregated on the basis of ability to learn, color lines would be crossed in a way that would bewilder advocates of the theory of white mental supremacy.

"There is no scientific evidence that inherent intelligence is higher or lower in any group of people who can be separated from another by anthropological racial distinctions."

There is general agreement on the subject of intelligence between North and Prof. Otto Klineberg, psychologist at Columbia University.

Klineberg is author of the standard textbook "Social Psychology," which he has just revised and brought up to date.

Aside from arguing that Negroes are inferior to whites, some Southerners express fears that desegregation, especially in the public schools, will lead to intermarriage and eventually to a "mongrelized race."

Klineberg's View.

On this subject Klineberg said, "If we regard our own group as biologically superior, we shall probably consider any mixture with an 'inferior' group as equivalent to mongrelization or degenration. Our survey of the material pertinent to the question . . . has indicated the lack of evidence for the innate inbred superiority of any one group over another . . .

"From the sociological point of view, however, the problem is a more serious one. If there is general objection to miscegeneration race mixing the effect upon the individual may be unfortunate . . . It is clearly the attitude toward hybrids the offspring of interracial relationships, not their biological makeup, which determines their place in the community."

Dr. Marie Jahoda, New York University psychologist, said in an interview that "the inequality between the races has contributed heavily to the mixing of the races rather than equality of status."

By this Dr. Jahoda meant that white men in a position of social and economic superiority long have taken advantage of Negro women, an advantage that would be impossible, or at least unlikely if whites and Negroes enjoyed the same economic, social and legal status.

She said sexual exploitation of Negro women by white men has been going on for more than 200 years.

When asked if she thought an end to legal segregation in the South would lead to intermarriage, Dr. Jahoda said, "You must remember that studies show that well over 90 per cent of marriages are made between people from similar social and economic backgrounds."

As for other aspects of the Southern problem, Dr. Jahoda observed that attitudes boiled down to prejudice and discrimination carried forward from generation to generation.

"The theory that attitudes are innate or inherited," she said, "goes against all systems of psychology. Attitudes are learned most often in the family."

North Carolina Man.

One of the leading authorities in this country on intergroup relations is Prof. Robin M. Williams of Cornell University here. He is a native of Hillsboro, N. C., and a graduate of North Carolina State College.

While many sociologists have been content to theorize from studies made by others, Williams and a team of researchers have been doing actual field work since 1947 on the relations between various groups, divided on the basis of race, culture and religion.

Their often fascinating studies, unpublished because of a lack of funds, have been conducted in Elmira, N. Y.; Steubenville, Ohio; Bakersfield, Calif.; Savannah, Ga.; and several other cities.

As a Southerner, Williams has a deep understanding of the Southerner's problems. He was asked how long he thought the region could maintain its current attitude against any change in the racial patterns.

"Right now," he replied, "there is a total crisis psychology in the South and a great deal of latent good will is immobilized. How long can it be maintained? The South has shown a capacity to sustain hostility over a long time, but over a generation? I doubt it. My best guess is that eventually a lot of white Southerners are going to say, 'Let's stop beating our heads against a stone wall.' "

Williams has concluded that the more contact there is between the races, the less prejudice there is generally.

He feels that the South's decision to maintain separate school facilities for whites and Negroes, while at the same time struggling for real equality between the two sets of schools, is in the long run a self-defeating operation.

"As the Negro gains more education," he said, "it is less likely to seem reasonable to him to be put outside the main stream of American life."

Williams added that the Negro is gaining pride of race and thus becoming more aggressive when he feels his rights are involved.

In conclusion, he had a word of caution for the South and especially for other minority groups in the region. The prejudice now directed against the Negro might spill over—as it did in the late 1920's against Catholics and Jews.

"When feelings are whipped up as they are, no matter what the leaders say, it is difficult to keep those feelings in neat compartments."

Mobile, Tallahassee Police Slap at Racial Violence

Constitution Jan. 1-27-57
Atlanta, Ga.

By United Press

Police in Mobile, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla., Saturday began a crack-down on integration violence.

P. 2-a

Mobile Police Chief Dudley E. McFadyen threatened his officers with emergency measures if they don't come up with some arrests in an outbreak of violence that resulted in 20 cross-burnings, one explosion and two attempted bombings.

McFadyen called a special meeting of all Mobile officers and announced that "all cross burnings and dynamiting in Mobile" are going to be stopped or policemen will be working longer hours, seven days a week and without special privileges such as outside jobs.

AT THE SAME time, the Mobile city commission offered a $250 reward for the arrest of parties responsible for such violence and announced that "these hoodlums, these rabble-rousers should not be put in the jails. They should be put under the jails."

At Tallahassee, Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said 18 white high school students believed to "know something about" recent acts of vandalism against Negro integration leaders were warned that further action might land them in jail.

Stoutamire said no charges were made against the youghts because of insufficient evidence. However, he said he warned the students that police "were going to make every effort to catch the people who are responsible" for the violence.

Stoutamire said two of the youths told him that they had heard rumors that city policemen would not arrest anyone who violently resisted attempts by local Negroes to end segregation on city buses.

"I TOLD THEM if I could get the names of any policeman who made such a remark, they would be fired on the spot," Stoutamire said.

At Birmingham, where segregation leader Asa (Ace) Carter was arrested and charged with intent to murder two Klansmen who were shot during a dispute at a rally of some 50 robed and hooded Klansmen, police made three more arrests.

Two men and a woman were arrested in connection with the shooting, but police would not reveal the details of the connection.

Louey C. Currey, 27, and Ira N. Evans, 33, were charged with assault with intent to murder and Mary Nell Tatum, 32, was charged on two counts of being an accessory to the fact.

One of the wounded men, J. P. Tillery, 24, charged that Carter shot him after three men had grabbed him because of his objections to the "one-man rule" of the KKK. It was presumed that the two men arrested were the Klansmen who held Tillery. Chad Bridges, 52, was also shot and wounded when he tried to help Tillery.

BIRMINGHAM police also revealed that a pick-up order had been issued for Harold W. McBride, a salesman, who is believed to have suffered a flesh wound in the shooting. Police said McBride has not turned up at his home or his office since the incident.

'New Negro' On The March

Weekly, Sat. 1-19-57

New Orleans Sat.

For the first time in the history of New Orleans Negro citizens last week witnessed the birth of the spirit of the "New Negro" which has suddenly surged forth on the horizon during the past several months with a hungering thirst for complete freedom akin only to that of the courageous Hungarians. Never before has there been such solidarity in efforts by clerics and laymen as the united move here by these leaders to bring about compliance with the United States Supreme Court bus desegregation ruling. The Crescent City has produced many outstanding leaders, but the cause has often been thwarted because of the wave of dissension in the ranks of the laymen as well as the clergymen. But last week, in the wake of the rising tide of a common goal, there were no differences of opinions. The task was there, and they rolled up their sleeves together and stood up to be counted in one of the most heart-warming displays of enthusiasm the community has ever recorded.

The overall effect of this open declaration of support by local ministers can be partially measured in terms of the tremendous followers they command. For alone, the Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance represents upwards of 200,000. And there are still non-members uncounted for. When considering the fact that ministers have long been the pillars of strength and backbone of community life, the action taken here last week is by far the healthiest sign of enlightenment, proving that the hopeful prayers of an oppressed people can, in troubled times, bring forth the leadership which will lead them out of the wilderness of despair, injustice, and inequality.

That this was not the hour of indecision was evidenced in the fact that over 150 ministers and laymen met last Wednesday afternoon at the YMCA for a single purpose. There was no filibustering . . . no screaming or yelling . . . or bickering over petty things . . . no, not from this group of dedicated souls whose hearts had known only deprivation and limitations during the time of peace and war . . . No, there was no thought of voluntarily continuing the days of shining teeth and scratching heads in public . . . it was a group which knew what it was doing, its direction, and went into action. This leadership was cognizant of the fact that the road ahead led to complete freedom in all things and once under construction, there would be no letup until the goal was achieved.

It is a sad day when Americans pretend not to understand what and why another American is no longer willing to be "pushed around" and treated as a misguided juvenile. It is high time that others realize that Negroes are concerned about their welfare in terms of their own choosing and not what miserly crumbs are thrown their way from the table of democracy. If the time is ripe for Negroes to sacrifice their lives in defense of the high ideals of fair play and righteousness in America, then the time is ripe, now and forever, for them to partake of the fruits of their combined efforts from the same table. There can be no "two-facedness" in the operation of the affairs of this country if it is to maintain its status of world leadership. From the lips of these Negro leaders came the aspirations of a people whose past exemplifies faith and belief in a country which has been slow in granting relief to undo this long standing wrong. Therefore, we doff our hats, and lend our support to this splendid leadership guiding us toward the dawning of a new day, life and better community in which to live.

Last Chance For Non-Violence

WASHINGTON.

CONGRESSMAN JOHN BELL WILLIAMS, 38, an Air Force pilot in World War II and since then Mississippi's Fourth District Congressman, is an all-out segregationist. He believes in white supremacy as a fact of life. He helped to write the scathing majority report on public school conditions in the integrated District of Columbia.

He was named (it can't be said that he "ran") as Vice Presidential candidate on independent electors' tickets in South Carolina and Mississippi. He refused to support the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket because of its anti-States' Rights position. Altogether, Congressman Williams is about as Southern a Democrat as you'll find, and I hope non-Southerners will not stop reading here.

I hope non-Southerners will read at least the Williams quotation I'm trying to set up. I have an advance excerpt from speeches the Congressman will make before the South Carolina Citizens' Council on Feb. 7, and before the Alabama Citizens' Council, Feb. 8, 1957. After reciting some recent progress made for the Southern cause, Rep. Williams will say:

"All this can be swept away by one shotgun blast, by one explosion of dynamite touched off in the heat of passion. The Citizens' Councils do not fight lawlessness with lawlessness. The Citizens' Councils offer peaceful resistance within the framework of law, and will never condone or place the stamp of approval on violence."

LAST JUNE, Congressman Williams was asked to come to Arlington, Va., to introduce Asa (Ace) Carter as the main speaker before that chapter of "Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties," which is the "Citizens' Council" of Virginia. Williams had heard of Ace Carter's growing reputation as a racist spokesman and he did not like it. The Congressman declined the invitation, saying that he disapproved of Carter and suggesting that the Defenders write to Alabama and find out for themselves. The fact is that Carter, despite the publicity he gets, is persona non grata in his own community of Northern Alabama. Carter is associated with another trouble maker, John Kasper, whom the respectable Citizens' Councils of the South deplore. I have before me a copy of a telegram, dated last June 6, addressed to Kasper and signed by Jack Rathbone, president of the Arlington chapter of the Defenders. It reads in part:

"Sponsorship of an Ace Carter meeting, Friday, June 15, 1956, and our offer of $55 toward Carter's expenses is herewith withdrawn."

What the North does not thoroughly understand is that the South is trying to avert the shooting and bombings that have happened. The resistance to forced desegregation is still in the hands of respectable people whose organized efforts are non-secret and non-violent. I have asked for authorized statements from the three most powerful Citizens' Councils in the South—those in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi. Here are the answering telegrams in part:

"Citizens' Council leaders often are asked hostile, loaded questions, designed to place us in the position of defending violence. The Citizens' Councils of Alabama, representing lawful, responsible, local organizations dedicated to preserving the Constitution, oppose violent and strong-arm racketeering." Sam M. Englehardt Jr., Executive Secretary, Montgomery, Ala.

"Citizens' Councils of Mississippi are dedicated to the maintenance of good order and peaceful relations." W. J. Simmons, Editor, Citizens' Council, Jackson, Miss.

THESE STATEMENTS are typical of persons now in charge of the Southern resistance movement. But, there are other persons with other ideas waiting to take over if the non-secret, non-violent organizations fail. Some of these have urged me not to speak disparagingly of Carter, Kasper and leaders of that type. The argument is that if non-violence fails in the South, violence will prevail. The methods which are condemned in these telegrams today may be in full vogue tomorrow. The South, like the Wild West, will set up its own vigilante movement before it will permit chaos to envelope its civilization.

But it occurs to me that the present leadership and the non-violent policy must not be allowed to fail. The Southern resistance movement today is going forward on the hope that American public opinion, as well as the American government and Federal courts, are subject to a change of heart and mind.

There are two factors involved here. If there is to be change in public sentiment and public law, the South must present a good case. But if the case is to be heard on its merits, the non-South must present an open ear.

Refugees of South Fleeing Oppression, While Country Bringing Hungarians Here

Bystander Lance 1-3-57
Des Moines, Iowa
P. 1

((Thomas A. Webster, Urban League Secretary of Kansas City, Mo., has written the following appeal for Negro refugees from the South, like Hungarian refugees, who "like millions of others, want a change to a way of life with no distinction or restrictions based on race, class or creed." The article appeared in Dec. 21, 1956, issue of The Call).

By THOMAS A. WEBSTER

Daily the plight of European refugees seeking asylum in the United States is seen on television in the press and heard on the radio. An editorial recently said "the Air Force planes will be bringing 500 a day to this country with three Navy transports adding to the total." It referred, of course, to displaced Hungarian persons.

The heartfelt sympathy of Negroes go out to them because they have a common bond with these people, for many Negroes are homeless, and are seeking a shelter of haven from oppression. They, too, are seeking a better way of life. But not as much is heard or known about these refugees of darker hue within our own borders, who are uprooted from their homes in southern states and are finding their way in steady streams to northern cities.

It is believed that more than a million Negro persons have left the South in recent years. During World War II, it was often said, "the nation went to war, and the Negro went to town." Some accounts indicate that Negro migrants are pouring into northern cities like Detroit and Chicago at such terrific rates that the local facilities cannot properly meet their needs. In some cities, free clothing stations and free luncheons are being provided in schools for children of needy migrant families.

Flee From Mississippi

Kansas City is beginning to experience a small but steady trek of Negro families from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana. This week I heard in detail the sad story

Family Needs Help

The Williams family is not eligible for local agency assistance since they have only been in Kansas City one month. Any person wishing to assist the family should contact —

Reverend Lee Nall
Church of God in Christ
2615 East 18th Street
2801 Brooklyn—UN 1-1258

of a Hungarian refugee family. I also saw a Negro family from Mississippi that left home under the cover of darkness, with nothing but the clothing on their backs.

They had no time to sell their home or pack their belongings. In the same week I visited and talked with a second family from a place near Cleveland, Miss. Like the refugees across the sea, they too were victims of oppression and terrorism.

Basement Apartment

The Williams family, of husband, wife and 11 children is living in a small basement apartment in the Santa Fe area for which they were asked $60 a month for four small rooms heated only by a stove on masses of people on a scale and in a manner never before equalled in the history o fthe world. These displacements and scatterings of peoples themselves create tensions.

These people cast to the winds of chance, torn from traditional moorings, pose problems and represent challenges whether they come from Hungary or Mississippi. Our boldness and our courage in finding answers to the problems and tensions at home or abroad leave but few choices. By finding solutions to these problems we may provide fuel for the torches of freedom in many dark corners of the world, or in not finding answers we can destroy freedom everywhere and perhaps civilization itself.

(Reprinted From The Call).

which they cannot properly cook their meals, the few times they have food. The former landlord wanted to take this stove when she recently sold the building but the police delayed such action. But a stove is being sought. The children, six girls and five boys range from six months to 18 years of age, An older girl girl still in Mississippi hopes to join the family later.

Bystander P. 3

The recent stir about school desegregation made their already miserable condition worst and they left home. The Williams family was a sharecropper family. At the end of the cotton season, (and after the crop was made), the settlement was determined, and they found that they were in debt to the plantation boss instead of having a profit.

When the crop was made, both the landlord and the Williamses figured they were due around $1,000 from their share of the crop and for the labors to the plantation owner. They had received monthly "furnishings" in the form of food and clothing. The boss and the family sat down to figure. The boss said the plantation expenses amounted to 1000 for spraying the cotton by airplane, for payment to the tractor driver, and for maintenance of the Williams family.

Had Nothing Left

According to Mrs. Williams, the landlord told them after they finished figuring, "it looks like you folk ain't gonna come out on this crop." "It looks like you gonna owe me about $200." As Mrs. Williams recalled, he went down that list and just said "It was so and so for food, so and so for this and so and so for that and pretty soon he had just "it us out of everything."

Seeing the two older girls eagerly leaving for school, the conversation turned to the controversial topic of desegregation of schools. The children had been in schools which opens late in Mississippi because of the cotton season. School had just opened the first of November when the family had enough money for train fare and called a Kansas City minister and asked him to find a place for them as they were on their way to Kansas City.

Met Minister

The minister, whom they met when he visited Mississippi last year, was their only contact here. When they arrived, the two boys 16 and 18 years old, went to enroll in high school, but the mother and principal agreed because they were late for enrollment, behind in school work and the family was in need, the boys should try to find work to help the family. Knowing only farm work, they and their father are doing odd jobs by the day to feed the family.

Mrs. Williams returned again to the plantation boss, who told her when school opened, "Now that you colored folks are trying to get grown up and want to go to school and you don't wanna work unless I give you ice water in the fields, I don't think I can give you another crop."

He continued, "I don't need you to hoe no more. I gotta grass burner to do that now." "I got a hay bailer, corn presser and I can rent a cotton picking machine." "But you can stay on the place and work for me by the day for 75 cents but you can't make no more crops."

Works Out of Debt

Gently rocking her 6-month-old baby girl, Mrs. Williams told how she worked out her debt of $300 to the plantation owner for the "free.... medical care in the county hospital when the baby was born. The owner she said, supplied them with everything else they used, fertilizer for the crops, food, the house, furniture and clothing.

Mrs. Williams "worked out" for other farmers when the boss had no work and saved her earnings for railroad fare for Kansas City. When she was asked why they left she said, "Mister, you can't feed my family for 75 cents a day." "We couldn't make a crop and there was talk about putting all of the colored people out in the road and driving us off just like cattle, so we up and left."

She continued, "I want these children to stay in school as long as they can and we are used to hard work, and with the Lord's help and the Reverend's we'll try to make it the best we can."

Hope Not Different

The Williams hope, like that of the Hungarian refugees, is not different from the increasing cry in Asia, Africa or India for rice, shelter or education. They all want, more than food, shelter or learning to read, respect and human dignity. They, like millions of others, want a change to a way of life with no distinction or restrictions based on race, class or creed.

Here or abroad people are seeking a more positive quality of human relationships. They want those things spelled out in the Declaration of Human Rights, the anniversary of which is being observed this month. The Declaration of Human Rights proclaims the right to freedom of movement and residence, the right to the protection of the family by society and the state.

The right to own property, work, to education and the right to an adequate standard of living are also basic.

Great Change

Great change, whether it is the decision to pull up stakes and leave home, to give peopde simple justice, or equal education, requires courage and boldness in order to adjust and adapt to a new pattern of living. It is easy to cling to the past, but it takes courage not only to be willing but also to be ready to change.

Intermarriage Fear Bolsters Segregation

Wed. 1-2-57 P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

Yesterday I mentioned five reasons why some white people insist on maintaining racial segregation: Economic competition, fear of Negro control of the local government, desire to maintain a servant race of people, inferiority complex, resistance to any social change. There are three other reasons why some believe in segregation:

(6) Some believe the Negro race actually is inferior to the white race and they do not want to live on an equal level with them. They do not feel the Negro has equal mental ability with the white man, that the Negro has moral or spiritual principles as high, that physically he is as clean as the white man or that in any way the Negro race is equal to the white race.

Those who believe thus feel it would contaminate them to associate as social equals with Negroes. (While I have not indicated either approval or disapproval with any of the reasons stated above, I must go on record here. I do not believe that any one race is either inferior to or superior to any other race. I believe persons of all races are children of the same Father.)

(7) Some white people insist on segregation because they fear intermarriage. Their reasoning: If children go to school together, they will participate in athletics and social events together. If they go to parties and play together, it is possible young persons of different races will become romantically attracted to each other. If so, marriage is the logical result. If so, then "half-breed" children will be born. This line of reasoning, whether it be false reasoning or not, drives some parents to great fear and strong resistance to any change in the customs of segregation.

(8) Some insist on segregation, not because they have any prejudice toward the Negro as a race or as a person, but because they sincerely believe that all races are better off segregated.

Many believe that each race has distinctive contributions to make to society and to the world and to break down their separateness as races would cause humanity to lose much that is good. These do not feel that one race is superior to another race, they simply feel the races are different in many ways—color of skin, emotional drives, mental and physical abilities, etc., and that to reduce the several parts of humanity into one homogeneous whole would cause the human race to lose much that is wholesome and good.

Perhaps my readers will suggest other reasons why some insist on segregation. But the point is this: No matter what our personal feelings are, we never arrive at satisfactory solutions until we better understand why we feel as we do. I list the above, not to say I either agree or disagree with them, but rather as a basis upon which to think more clearly.

Segregation Desire: How Does It Arise?

Tues. 1-9-57 P. 7B

Atlanta, Ga.

During the past months almost 1,000 letters have come to me in regard to segregation and integration of the white and Negro races. I read these letters with the following questions in my mind: Why do some white people insist on segregation? Why do some Negroes insist on integration? It is difficult even to discuss so controversial a subject without generating more heat than light but the question of "why" is one that interests me.

Here I would like to put down some answers without injecting my own personal feelings or drawing conclusions as to what should be or should not be. This discussion will cover five columns the remainder of this week so hold on until you have read them all.

In regard to why some white people insist on segregation, I find from my own correspondence and observation eight main reasons:

(1) The economic factor. Many white people fear Negroes will compete successfully for their jobs and take away their means of livelihood. This fear is not limited to industrial workers, to day laborers and to various types of physical labor, but to some extent you see it in the various professions, white-collar workers, politicians and others.

(2) In certain areas where the Negro population exceeds the white race, there is a fear that the Negroes will gain control of the local governments and elect the sheriff and other officers. Some white people feel that should that happen, it would be intolerable for them to continue living there, thus they would lose their homes, farms, businesses and be ruined financially.

(3) Some white people feel it essential to keep the Negroes as a servant people in order to have farm labor, domestic help and to fill many menial jobs. However, with the increase in labor-saving machinery, this reason rapidly is becoming a minor one. Though there are many servant-type jobs to be done, many realize these need not be limited to any particular race of people.

(4) Some of the letters I have received from white people indicate clearly an inferiority complex on the part of the writer. There are many people who, frustrated in their own lives, find satisfaction in having a race of people they can look down upon. It gives to them a certain degree of self-esteem and importance.

(5) Resistance to change in custom. Some have no deep feelings on the subject except they just naturally are opposed to change. They have grown up with the social custom of segregation. There are many who resist any sort of social change. They are satisfied with things as they are.

But these are not the main reasons why some insist on maintaining segregation. Three other reasons we shall put down tomorrow.

Third Group Views Integration Problem

Tue. 1-4-57 P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

For several days we have been looking at the reasons why some white people want to maintain racial segregation and why some Negroes want integration. There is a third group to hear from. Why do some white people want integration? From my own correspondence I find six main reasons stated: (1) They believe that integration is certain to come and that it would be better to work out the various problems involved in a calm, intelligent, friendly manner than to fight against it.

They maintain that integration is the law of the land and to refuse to accept it as such is like some who continue to fight the Civil War. They also believe that no race of people can forever be held in bondage, that a study of history reveals that sooner or later a people will gain freedom.

(2) Some white people believe in integration because they believe it is simple justice. They point out that Negroes in the U.S. have equal responsibilities as citizens—they must obey the same laws, pay taxes, fight in defense of the country—and equal responsibilities call for equal opportunities and privileges.

(3) Some white people believe in integration because they feel that our practice of segregation weakens our position in world affairs and robs us of our opportunity to provide moral and spiritual leadership for the world. They feel that the race question is a world question and that the peace and prosperity of the U.S. are dependent upon our being able to make and keep the friendship of the other nations of the earth.

(4) With many integration is a matter of religious faith. They believe that the doctrine of the fatherhood of God carries with equal force the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. They maintain that the two are wings of the same bird and cannot be separated. They sing with John Oxeham: "Join hands, then, brothers of the faith—Whate'er your race may be—Who serves my Father as a son—Is surely kin to me."

(5) Many white people believe in integration because of their faith in the Negro race. They believe that, if given equal opportunities, Negroes will be equally good citizens and equally fine people. They point to countless individual Negroes who represent the very highest in character, who render conspicuous service to the nation and world, who maintain their homes as beautifully as any people, who appreciate the finest things in life equally with any other race.

(6) Some believe in integration because of the costs of segregation. They say that blighted housing areas and unsanitary living conditions hurt the entire city; that when a people is held back, the cost in crime, disease, ignorance, etc., is too high a price to pay; that Negroes would be a much greater asset to the nation economically and culturally if they were not segregated.

Tomorrow we look at reasons why some Negroes prefer segregation.

Trend Towards Integration Seen Despite Disturbances

World Wed. 1-2-57 P. 1

Birmingham, Ala.

Although the South's reaction toward the Supreme Court's decision on school segregation has been mixed in the South and border states, the basic trend toward integration which has been evident for some years has undoubtedly been speeded by the decision. Such is the major conclusion of a survey of recent developments on the segregation front by Harold Fleming and John Constable of the Southern Regional Council published today as a 25-cent pamphlet by the Public Affairs Committee. 22 E. 38th St., New York City under the title WHAT'S HAPPENING IN SCHOOL INTEGRATION?

"The Supreme Court's school decision set the stage in law for a major revision of racial practices in this country," Messers Fleming and Constable write. "Yet, for all of its far-reaching implications, the decision was not an abrupt departure from current trends. In the years immediately preceding the decision, segregation had been steadily crumbling."

"Through court action, Southern Negroes had won the right to cast their ballot in the all-important Democratic primaries, to serve on juries, to enroll in the graduate schools of state universities, and to ride unsegregated on inter-state trains. Whites and Negroes in the Armed Forces had served side by side for several years, many of them at Southern military posts."

"Not all of the Negro's advances were the result of court rulings or Executive Orders, the authors point out. Many private and church-related colleges in the South had voluntarily opened their doors to Negro students. Professional associations had begun accepting into membership Negro doctors nurses, lawyers, and ministers. Sixty-odd Southern cities had opened the doors of their main public libraries.'

"The trend toward integration is the result of various forces," Fleming and Constable explain. They include: "the war-inspired concern for minority rights which has been enhanced by a growing awareness of the effect of our racial policies on world opinion; action by Negroes themselves, human relations agencies, church and civic groups, enlightened school adminstrators and public officials; and the growing realization that it is often cheaper to integrate than to provide new or improved facilities.'

Thus, "the school decision did not mark a sudden change of direction,' they add. "But the decision did extend the principle of equal citizenship farther than ever before....It challenged a'way of life' in the South traditionally based on subordination of the Negro."

The pamphlet reviews in some details the differing reactions in four main areas of the South and border states. Five states and the district of Columbia have undertaken school integration as a matter of official policy. Four states--Arkansas, Delaware, Tennessee, and Texas—have been divided in differing areas within their boundaries policies. Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia have shown a stiffening resistance to desegregation. The remaining five states of the deep South or "black belt" -- where Negro population tends to run the highest -- have committed themselves to a last-ditch defense of segregation. It is in these states that the Citizens' Councils and the Klan have flourished more or less openly.

The Supreme Courts decision was also found to have encouraged the trend toward desegregation in Northern schools as well as in housing and employment in the North. The continued existence of vast areas of segregated housing was cited however, as a persistent and difficult problem.

WEAK AFTER WHATTA WEEK-INTEGRATION? is the 244th in the Public Affairs Pamphlet series which is now in its 21st year. The series has included many other distinguished titles covering social and economic problems, family relations, health and intergroup relations.

Integration Is Issue Of The Year

Our paper here picks the leading stories for the year recognizing that more fundamental changes have occured in this year than in any year of the century, and that integration and civil rights have been the issue in the nation and generally in the world in the year of 1956:

Courier Journal 1-1-57 P. 1

1. The Montgomery boycott, which showed surprising unity among Negroes, surprising courage in the face of difficulties, and a pattern of non-violence.

Houston Post 1-1-57

2. The Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation on buses, also brought about by the Montgomery Negroes fight.

3. President Eisenhower's victory authenticated the break in the Solid South, which began in 1952, and inevitably means that politics in the South must shape around local and national issues other than segregation in the future.

Sat. 1-5-57

4. The revolt of the Russian satellite countries, a harbinger or sign of the crumbling of the Soviets and Communism, if not breaking.

5. Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal.

6. England, France and Israeli's attack upon the Suez Canal, and their subsequent withdrawal because of world opinion,--victory for the United Nations.

7. The South's rebellion against the Constitution and the Federal government, both by enactment of illegal laws in the Legislatures, and by violence.

8. The Federal government's answer to the South's rebellion, at Mansfield and Clinton and Montgomery, indicating the will to stick by integration.

9. Negroes begin to leave the Democratic party, indicating that the Democratic party must stand up for civil rights, or shrink to the minority party of the nation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission's order ending segregation in interstate travel. (The order was issued in November 1955, to be effective January 10, 1956.)

11. The South's attack upon the NAACP, in an effort to stifle the Negro's fight for civil rights, only to show that the NAACP had as many heads as a Hydra.

Opinion Up Slightly for Integration

Sun. 1-13-57

Atlanta Ga.

By GEORGE GALLUP
Director
American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N.J., Jan. 12 — The number of Americans who approve of the Supreme Court's historic decision on segregation has increased in the last year.

As of today, 63 per cent of all adults in a nationwide survey by the institute are in favor of the action taken by the Supreme Court nearly three years ago. Three adults in 10 oppose the measure.

In February of last year, 57 per cent of all adults in an institute survey approved of the decision and 38 per cent disapproved.

Sentiment in the 13 Southern states—where the problems of integrating public transportation are presently plaguing local officials—continues to run strongly against the outlawing of segregated public schools.

Two out of three Southern adults today disapprove of the Court's decision.

Furthermore, Southerners are looking for the situation in Dixie between the races to get worse during the coming year.

Nationwide, the weight of sentiment is that things will get better in the South.

EVEN A MAJORITY of those adults who approve in principle of the Supreme Court decision adopt the viewpoint of "gradualism" when it comes to setting a schedule for putting integration into effect.

Institute reporters in all parts of the country, from Boston to Los Angeles and from Minneapolis to Mobile, put the following three questions to adults from coast to coast:

"The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Here is the trend of the vote since the first survey on the subject, following the court's decision in 1954:

	Approve	Disapprove	No Opin.
July, '54	54%	41%	5%
May, '55	56	38	6
Feb., '56	57	38	5
Today	63	31	6

The second question was asked only of those who approved of the court's decision:

"Do you think integration—that is, bringing Negro and white children together in the schools—should be brought about gradually, or do you think every means should be used to bring it about in the near future?"

The vote of those who approve of integration in principle:

Gradually	69%
Near future	26
No opinion	5

The third question, asked of everyone in the survey:

"Do you think the situation in the South between the races will get better or worse during the coming year?"

The vote of all adults:

Better	41%
Worse	35
No difference	11
Don't know	13

Here is the vote in the South today on the Supreme Court's decision and on the outlook for the race situation during the next year:

Sociologists Look At Segregation

Sun. 1-20-57

By BEM PRICE
AP Newsfeatures Writer

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 19 (AP) — Some of the nation's top experts on what makes people tick think the South's cherished belief in natural white supremacy is unscientific bunk. P. 4-B

They believe racial prejudice is something learned, not ingrained in man's nature.

They don't believe desegrgation will contribute to "mongerlization" of the races. They suspect segregation has.

They don't believe anyone can prove conclusively that Negroes as a group are less intelligent than whites.

Social psychologists joined the public debate over segregation when one of their colleagues, Dr. Frank C. J. McGurk, associate professor of psychology at Villanova University, stated flatly that as measured by psychological test performance Negroes as a group do not possess as much capacity for education as do white people.

The Villanova psychologist, who once taught at West Point, said his views were based on tests administered during World War I and since.

McGurk also said, "There is ample evidence that there are psychological differences between whites and Negroes. . . These differences are not the result of differences in social and economic opportunities and they will not disappear as the social and economic opportunities of Negroes and whites are equalized."

Further, McGurk maintained, "as far as psychological test performance is a measure of capacity of education, Negroes as a group do not possess as much of it as whites as a group."

'PERHAPS ALL'

To this, 18 social scientists, most of them members of the said in essence, "Nuts."

In a formal statement the 18 subscribed to the belief that:

"The available scientific evidence indicates that much, perhaps all, of the observable differences among various racial and national groups may be explained in terms of environmental differences . . .

"It seems clear, therefore, that fears based on the assumption of innate racial differences are not well founded."

This statement is closely akin to the one submitted by 30 social scientists to the U. S. Supreme Court prior to the May 17, 1954, decision which held public school segregation unconstitutional.

Freely translated the statement means that nobody has proved there are natural differences in the ability of groups to learn, or otherwise.

Furthr, it means that any apparent differences generally can be attributed to the surroundings in which they were reared.

MASS OF MATERIAL

The comparative intelligence of whites and Negroes has occupied social scientists since 1897 and, as a result, there is an enormous mass of material on the subject.

Dr. Robert D. North, a native of Pascagoula, Miss., and now assistant director of the Educational Redords Bureau in New York City, has just completed an exhaustive study of much of this material.

North, former psychologist at Columbia and Long Island universities, concluded, "If the nation's school systems were segregated on the basis of ability to learn, color lines would be crossed in a way that would bewilder advocates of the theory of white mental supremacy.

"There is no scientific evidence that inherent intelligence is higher or lower in any group of people who can be separated from another by anthropological (racial) distinctions."

There is general agreement on the subject of intelligence between North and Prof. Otto Klineberg, psychologist at Columbia University.

Klineberg is author of the standard textbook "Social Psychology," which he has just revised and brought up to date.

Aside from arguing that Negroes are inferior to whites, some Southerners express fears that desegregation, especially in the public schools, will lead to intermarriage and eventually to a "mongrelized race."

On this subject Klineberg said, "If we regard our own group as biologically superior, we shall probably consider any mixture with an 'inferior' group as equivalent to mongrelization or degeneration. Our survey of the material pertinent to the question . . . has indicated the lack of evidence for the innate (inbred) superiority of any one group over another. . . .

"From the sociological point of view, however, the problem is a more serious one. If there is general objection to miscegenation (race mixing) the effect upon the individual may be unfortunate. . . It is clearly the attitude toward hybrids (the offspring of interracial relationships), not their biological makeup, which determiies their place in the community."

Dr. Marie Jahoda, New York University psychologist, said in an interview that "the inequality between the races has contributed heavily to the mixing of the races rather than equality of status."

By this Dr. Jahoda meant that white men in a position of social and economic superiority long have taken advantage of Negro women, an advantage that would be impossible, or at least unlikely if whites and Negroes enjoyed the same economic, social and legal status.

She said sexual exploitation of Negro women by white men has been going on for more than 200 years.

When aked if she thought an end to legal segregation in the South would lead to intermarriage, Dr. Jahoda said, "You must remember that studies show that well over 90 per cent of marriages are made between people from similar social and economic backgrounds."

As for other aspects of the Southern problem, Dr. Jahoda observed that attitudes boiled down to prejudice and discrimination carried forward from generation to geneation.

"The theory that attitudes are innate or inherited," she said, "goes against all systems of psychology. Attitudes are learned most often in the family."

One of the leading authorities in this country on intergroup relations is Prof. Robin M. Williams of Cornell University here. He is a native of Hillsboro, N. C., and a graduate of North Carolina State College.

While many sociologists have been content to theorize from studies made by others, Williams and a team of researchers have been doing actual field work since 1947 on the relations between various groups, divided on the basis of race, culture and religion.

Their often fascinating studies, unpublished because of a lack of funds, have been conducted in Elmira, N.Y.; Steubenville, Ohio; Bakersfield, Calif.; Savannah, Ga.; and several other cities.

As a Southerner, Williams has a deep understanding of the Southerner's problems. He was asked how long he thought the region could maintain its current attitude against any change in the racial patterns.

"Right now," he replied, "there is a total crisis psychology in the South and a great deal of latent good will is immobilized. How long can it be maintained? The South has shown a capacity to sustain hostility over a long time, but over a generation? I doubt it. My best guess is that eventually a lot of white Southerners are going to say 'Let's stop beating our heads against a stone wall.' "

Williams has concluded that the more contact there is between the races, the less prejudice there is generally.

H feels that the South's decision to maintain separate school facilities for whites and Negroes, while at the same time struggling for real equality between the two sets of schools, is in the long run a self-defeating operation.

"As the Negro gains more education," he said, "it is less likely to seem reasonable to him to be put outside the main stream of American life."

Williams added that the Negro is gaining pride of race and thus becoming more aggressive when he feels his rights are involved.

In conclusion he had a word of caution for the South and especially for other minority groups in the region. The prejudice now directed against the Negro might spill over —as it did in the late 1920s against Catholics and Jews.

"When feelings are whipped up as they are, no matter what the leaders say, it is difficult to keep those feelings in neat compartments."

THREE STATES STUDY SEGREGATION LAWS

Commercial Appeal

Tennessee Bill Modeled On North Carolina Plan

Sun. 1-20-57

OTHERS PATCH CHINKS

Memphis, Tenn.

By ROBERT H. DENLEY
International News Service Writer

ATLANTA, Jan. 19.—As state legislatures move into full swing, it becomes apparent that the lawmakers' groping for a legal bar to racial integration is unending. P. 2.

Three Dixie assemblies are presently in session, and before them all are a number of pro-segregation bills.

In Tennessee, this is the first time that any real attempt has been made to pass such legislation. At week's end it clearly seemed to be on its way to approval despite the legislators' reluctance in past years to make a stand.

Chinks Patched Up

In both South Carolina and Georgia, however, the new proposals represent chinks for the cracks, real or imaginary, in legislation passed long ago. Both states had launched "keep segregation" legislation even before the United States Supreme Court made its 1954 decision against discrimination because of race in the public schools.

Considerable interest is focused on the pupil assignment plan being steered through the Tennessee Legislature by Administration forces because a similarly named plan was ruled unconstitutional in Virginia only a last week.

Tennessee leaders insist their plan is not the same as the stricken Virginia plan. Gov. Frank Clement said, "Our plan is the Tennessee plan and not any other state's plan. I believe it is constitutional."

The Tennessee model is closer to the North Carolina assignment plan which was upheld, at least in part, by the Supreme Court. Florida and Arkansas also have pupil assignment plans on the law books, on which those states base confidence public school segregation can be maintained, at least for a time.

Five-Part Program

The Tennessee bill is part of a program which also includes bills permitting assignment of students to school transportation, providing for a sort of voluntary segregation, clarifying the law concerning transfer of students from one school system to another and authorizing two or more local boards to operate schools jointly.

All five bills sailed through the House this week, and will go to the Senate early next week. In addition, the lower chamber voted 71-7 for a "Tennessee Manifesto" deploring Supreme Court rulings on school segregation.

This manifesto is similar to others, some going so far as calling for "interposition" or "nullification," previously approved in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Georgia, which long ago keyed its keep-segregation legislation to a potential private school system, has four more measures pending at the moment in the Legislature. One would repeal the compulsory attendance law, and is stirring controversy.

Another would extend retirement benefits to teachers who might come into the "private school" plan, while a third gives the Georgia Education Commission subpena power in its assigned duty of planning pro-segregation moves. The fourth would give the Governor power to control public transit systems or other public facilities in any threatened breach of the peace.

South Carolina Bills

South Carolina, which also laid the groundwork for a private school plan years ago, is now considering these bills:

—A detailed program of closing schools to preserve segregation and the placing of students in other schools.

—Punishment of any state, county or municipal officer who assists Federal officers in carrying out a Federal court integration order.

—Defining the state's part in any court actions on segregation.

—Barring the use of any county or municipal jail to house anyone arrested by a Federal court order in an integration case.

Want President To Show Concern For Negro Americans

Weekly Sat 1-19-57 New Orleans, La

WASHINGTON (ANP) -- President Eisenhower was urged Saturday by Negro leaders of the South to visit that area immediately and to use the "weight of his office" to bring about Southwide compliance with integration rulings.

The request came just as the President was making plans to visit the drought areas of this country. None of the White House officials could be reached Saturday for a statement on planned action in the terrorizing situation of the South.

The plea for help was sent to the President in the form of a telegram signed by 60 Negro leaders. It pointed out that "a state of terror prevails" in Alabama and other southern states and urged the President to come to their assistance.

Vice President Richard Nixon was also urged to make a "tour of the South" similar to the one he made in Europe on behalf of the Hungarians.

A plea was made to Attorney General Herbert Brownell to meet with Negro leaders and discuss the question of Federal responsibility in the crisis. The Justice Department has done a complete "clam-up" on the question. A spokesman for the Department told an ANP reporter Friday that the Attorney General had no comment on the Southern situation "We have absolutely nothing to say at this time," he emphasized.

It might be recalled that this reporter expressed disgust at the Attorney General's position on the bus integration question some weeks ago. Shortly after the Supreme Court had ruled that segregation on intra-state buses is unconstitutional, Mr. Brownell called a conference in Washington of Southern District Attorneys. He had previously announced that any state laws on segregation were now dead since the high court ruling. But when he was faced with the southern officials he called upon them for "voluntary compliance" to the anti-segregation ruling.

This writer reminded the Attorney General that "voluntary compliance" was not likely and asked what he planned to do in case officials did not comply with the law voluntarily.

He replied, through his spokesman, that everybody was expected to comply with any law voluntarily. In reply to the latter part of the query he said this was a "hypothetical question" and they never comment on an assumption.

Not only have southern officials refused to comply with the law of the land as predicted, but have gone still further to shoot into the buses, bomb homes of citizens and blast Negro churches. But the Federal Government has remained silent on the home front while condemning aggressors in other countries.

This deplorable situation lead to an emergency meeting of Negro leaders in Atlanta which lasted for two days. It was at this meeting that the group, headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the year-long Montgomery bus boycott, agreed to lay their problems on the doorstep of the White House and the Justice Department.

The letter reminded the President that "American citizens have been unjustly and brutally attacked at home," and urged the Federal Government to do something about it.

People Are Aroused Over Jobs For Hungarians, Bombs For Negro Policy'

Weekly P. 6

Sat 1-19-57

New Orleans, La

The wave of telephone calls reaching the Louisiana Weekly during the past several days in face of the royal treatment accorded Hungarian refugees while American tax-paying Negro citizens met with violence and near death was alarming. A great deal of criticism was leveled at local daily newspapers. One irate reader quoting the first paragraph of an editorial appearing in an afternoon edition read: "The Hungarian refugees are entitled to all the sympathy and encouragement they have been given by this country and the rest of the world."

"This," the voice added, is food for thought. And the average man of intelligence, he continued, can obviously notice the assistance accorded non-tax-paying invaders by officials who are not only elected to office by Negro American taxpayers, but also receive their salaries through taxes collected from Negro citizens. And yet these same officials are opening their arms to refugees whose loyalty has not been tested while the proven fidelity of Negroes is shoved into the background, he concluded.

The constant stream of comparisons pictured the "accepted" Hungarians and the "REFUSED" American Negro taxpayers in many lights. One fast talking housewife said: "I think its a shame when others can come into our country and immediately become open to equal opportunities in jobs, education, housing and others while Negro citizens are threatened, bombed, beaten, shot, and many times killed if they attempt to go to a school of their choice, sit where they want to on buses, live in any home they are able to buy, seek any employment they are qualified to fill, justice and fairplay in local and state courts, and others too numerous to cite."

An elderly woman angeredly spoke of the photos carried by newspapers of the "New Way of Life" for many refugees arriving here. She pointed out that many of these Hungarians arriving in the Southland can get another look at the type of life they left by observing the Negro's plight in a country he (the Negro) rose to defend in times of war and returned in peace time to learn that his life was still in danger if he asked for the very thing he fought for so sincerely.

A disgruntled barber, who asked that his name be withheld, expressed the hope that some of the glowing tributes sympathies given the Hungarians by the press would certainly awaken these same reporters and publishers of the paralleling situations in the lives of the home-standing American Negroes, whose undying loyalty has still left them in the shadows of first-class citizenship, while the mere presence of these refugees means first-class citizenship entitlement.

One reader wrote: Photos of Hungarian destruction advertised alongside of photos of the Alabama bombings of Negroes would show the same conditions as that in Hungary. Both are being persecuted equally.

"I searched the dictionary to define the word 'hero' in view of recent nationwide television and radio campaigns describing all Hungarian refugees as 'heroes' because they are fleeing their homeland and in some cases leaving mother, father, sister, brother, children and others. If this is the case there, then I feel the definition will have to be re-arranged shifting the words a bit."

DIXIECRAT SEGREGATION ---IDIOT'S DELIGHT

Weekly P. 11

By Marcus Christian

Sat. 1-19-57

Poet, Writer and Historian. Unit Supervisor, Federal Writers' Project, 1939-42; Rosenwald Fellow, 1943-44; University Librarian, 1944-50.

New Orleans, La

I once had a white man working for me who had suffered some kind of illness in his childhood and was never quite normal mentally thereafter. Until the day he died, he was always treated as a child by the people who lived in his neighborhood. Yet, to me the child-man seemed quite as normal as some of the whites I have known--particularly in his regard of himself as a white, superior being. I once saw him spit repeatedly upon the muddy backs of Negroes working eight feet below street level to make the street on which he lived a finer thoroughfare. When reprimanded, he insisted that he had meant no harm. He had never been to school and could not read or write, but in the everyday school of life he had learned aptly all of the little racial attitudes and taboos so dear to intolerant whites. Although he worked for a Negro and went on errands for other Negroes, he could on necessary occasions spit out the word "N----r" with the proper white contempt and disgust.

I remembered my former employee some years later when out Gentilly way I saw a waiting station for bus and street-car passengers. There was no difference whatsoever in the construction of any part of the shed. The two stone seats under it were identical. Same shed, same seats, all resting on the same space of concrete. But upon the middle joice was the world "colored" on one side and "white" on the other. And painted on the pavement in white was the admonition, "VOTE DIXIECRAT", between the benches.

Unfortunately, many of us accept these day-by-day aspects of segregation as some of the facts of life without even noticing the incongruous situations which develop. Psychiatrists are presently concerned over the response patterns of POWs living in Communist concentration camps, but a work that would be of greater value and subject to wider application would be a study of response patterns of Negroes and whites in regard to bus and street-car segregation.

An odd fact is that more visiting whites than Negroes appear to be confused by the screen, or closely observe--often with open smiles or comments--the hourly ritual which so many patrons perform day after day. In many instances Nordic-looking whites have refused to take their seats in front of the sign or else, obeyed reluctantly. Those of the latter group have remained seated far back of the screen until the conductor or driver asked if they were white and then bellowed preemptorily: "Well, can'tcha read? You can't sit there!" And that powerful little piece of wood called "the screen", can, in anyone's hand, make him an arbiter of estiny; it immediately confers upon one the office of a distinguished ethnologist, though that person has earned no college degree and can name no Alma Mater. Humble Negroes will sometimes take that magic piece of wood and place it in front of one of their race without even asking if that is what the other wanted. Conductors and drivers will likewise place it behind a person presumed to be white without even asking their advice in the matter. Sometimes laughable situations take place.

On one occasion the white conductor, seeing a little blonde girl sitting behind the screen, went down the aisle and picked it up to place behind her, whereupon her blonde curls did such a violent dance of negation that he was forced to desist--amidst the open giggles of Negro passengers. In mor than one instance, weary whites, seeing an empty seat in the Negro section, sat down, regardless. Afterwards, when the known Negro sitting before them, alighted they placed the screen behind them.

Here is one from away back. An ash-blonde girl of Jewish descent was at one time attending evening classes in downtown New Orleans. For several nights she noticed a young white man watching her as she boarded the car in the neighborhood of Canal Street. One night, standing on the rear platform with the conductor and two or three other white men, he saw her board the car and when she had taken her seat, he walked into the vehicle and sat down beside her. He began to talk pleasantly and reached over and took some of the books from her lap to discuss them. Never thinking that the girl was colored, he had, in his eagerness, overlooked the fact that she had always sat in one of the cross seats behind the screen. Now, as conversation progressed pleasantly, he looked from her freckled face, acquiline nose, and blue-gray eyes and noticed that there was a screen before them. The girl, following his gaze, saw him reach out to place the screen behind them and as his hand fell upon the screen, hers landed beside his, holding it fast. He looked at her in disbelief and blurted out: "Oh, no!" The girl, smiling into his face, answered firmly: "Oh, yes!" The young man, red-faced, arose and walked plungingly to the rear platform where the open laughter of the conductor and his former companions added to his embarrassment. Said the white-Negro girl afterwards: "I really felt sorry for him--he turned so red in the face and they laughed at him so."

Ike, Nixon Invited South To Help With Integration

Sun. 1-13-57

ATLANTA, Jan. 12 (AP) — President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon have been asked to come South to aid Negro leaders in the fight against segregation.

The requests, along with one to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell requesting an interview "at the earliest possible date," were made by the Southern Negro Leaders Conference on Transportation and Nonviolent Integration.

Winding up a two-day meeting, the 60 Negro leaders from 29 communities in nine Southern states and the District of Columbia wired the President:

"We ask you to come South immediately to make a major speech in a major Southern city urging All Southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decision as the law of the land."

Nixon was urged to make a trip through the South similar to the one he made on behalf of Hungarian refugees and report to the President on "economic boycotts, and reprisals, and bombing and violence directed against persons and homes of Negroes who assert their rights under the Constitution."

The conference leaders told Brownell in their wire that "the confused state requires that we talk with you in order to secure a clarification from the highest legal authorites of the land. . . ."

Meanwhile, the case of six Negro ministers who yesterday were arrested and released under $1,000 bonds for breaking state segregation laws by riding in seats normally used by whites is expected to be presented to the Fulton County—Atlanta—grand jury next Tuesday.

If the grand jury returns an indictment on the charges the way would be cleared for a court trial. However, A. T. Walden, Atlanta Negro attorney, said he and other members of the defense counsel are considering the possibility of requesting a district federal court to declare unconstitutional the segregation laws prohibiting mixing of the races on public conveyances.

The Rev. M. L. King, Jr., of Montgomery, Ala., who called the Southwide meeting here, said the action in Atlanta had no direct connection with the conference.

King was asked at a news conference how long he thought it would be before all bus systems throughout the South would be integrated. The questioner mentioned "by 1960?"

"I don't think it will be that long," King replied. "We are now in a shock period. As soon as that is over integration will boom all over the South."

King declined to be more specific, but said "It won't take so long."

Others taking part in the news conference were the Revs. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee, Fla.; F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham, Ala.; and T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge, La.

Third Group Views Integration Problem

Tue. 1-4-57

For several days we have been looking at the reasons why some white people want to maintain racial segregation and why some Negroes want integration. There is a third group to hear from. Why do some white people want integration? From my own correspondence I find six main reasons stated: (1) They believe that integration is certain to come and that it would be better to work out the various problems involved in a calm, intelligent, friendly manner than to fight against it.

They maintain that integration is the law of the land and to refuse to accept it as such is like some who continue to fight the Civil War. They also believe that no race of people can forever be held in bondage, that a study of history reveals that sooner or later a people will gain freedom.

(2) Some white people believe in integration because they believe it is simple justice. They point out that Negroes in the U.S. have equal responsibilities as citizens—they must obey the same laws, pay taxes, fight in defense of the country—and equal responsibilities call for equal opportunities and privileges.

(3) Some white people believe in integration because they feel that our practice of segregation weakens our position in world affairs and robs us of our opportunity to provide moral and spiritual leadership for the world. They feel that the race question is a world question and that the peace and prosperity of the U.S. are dependent upon our being able to make and keep the friendship of the other nations of the earth.

(4) With many integration is a matter of religious faith. They believe that the doctrine of the fatherhood of God carries with equal force the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. They maintain that the two are wings of the same bird and cannot be separated. They sing with John Oxeham: "Join hands, then, brothers of the faith—Whate'er your race may be—Who serves my Father as a son—Is surely kin to me."

(5) Many white people believe in integration because of their faith in the Negro race. They believe that, if given equal opportunities, Negroes will be equally good citizens and equally fine people. They point to countless individual Negroes who represent the very highest in character, who render conspicuous service to the nation and world, who maintain their homes as beautifully as any people, who appreciate the finest things in life equally with any other race.

(6) Some believe in integration because of the costs of segregation. They say that blighted housing areas and unsanitary living conditions hurt the entire city; that when a people is held back, the cost in crime, disease, ignorance, etc., is too high a price to pay; that Negroes would be a much greater asset to the nation economically and culturally if they were not segregated.

Tomorrow we look at reasons why some Negroes prefer segregation.

GENERAL

The Only Answer Left

Courier

Events last week, the bombings and assaults of Negroes in various parts of the South, are pathetic demonstrations of the fact that the unreconstructed South can dish it out but can't take it.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

For decades the Ku Klux element, now joined by the "respectable" White Citizens Council element, has enjoined Negroes to be self-respecting and law-abiding, and thus eventually be accepted on their worth as citizens.

However, this element at the same time enforced discrimination and segregation, with resultant Negro humiliation, thus making it difficult, if not impossible, for Negroes to do what was asked.

Sat 1-5-57

In desperation the Negroes have joined the NAACP and resorted to the boycott and lawsuits, which they have, without exception, won, to the enraged discomfiture of their enemies.

Having no other recourse, the unreconstructed Southerners (who undoubtedly have been telling their children to be good citizens and church members) have reverted to type and resorted to violence in the hope of scaring Negro leaders into abandoning the fight for freedom and justice.

Of course, this "answer" to the U. S. Supreme Court's decision will not work, but it is the only answer they have left.

What could be more illustrative of the intellectual and moral poverty of the South that looks backward instead of forward?

Biblical Background On Segregation

News P. 10-A

Sun 1-6-57

It has been stated many times that the basic reason for our country's true greatness is the fact that our Constitution is founded upon the Holy Scriptures. This we think, is entirely true. All our laws have been founded upon either a direct passage of the Holy Scriptures, or else an accepted interpretation of the same. It is quite obvious that the Supreme Court's decision regarding racial segregation was based upon the often quoted Bible verse, Acts 17:26: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations."

God has decreed that there shall exist bounds to the habitations of the various races; and it has been so during these thousands of years until the Communistic deceiver began clamoring for universal brotherhood as a substitute for Christianity and existing laws governing Christian practice. Brotherhood is not an end; it is not an objective; it is no more than a by-product of Christianity, and obtains without any effort on the part of the Christian. Beware of those who speak often of universal brotherhood. Many of them are colossal deceivers.

Our colored friends of the South have enjoyed more freedom, owned more wealth, and have had more kind treatment from white people than any place in the world. The colored have been content to have equal but separate facilities on buses and elsewhere. But the last few years the colored have fallen prey to godless propaganda which is calculated to lower the moral behavior of all races, and create internal strife and trouble. The enemies of our country are counningly devising a nefarious plan that is calculated to engulf the whole world into a rage of hate and chaos. All the freedom, contentment and peace, and the lifting of living standards of the colored people obtain because of their close contact with the white people. But sad to say, he (the colored) is leaving an oasis, and is on a vain quest for a mirage that he can see in the catastrophic distance; all because he has become the tool of the greatest deceiver on this globe.

There is no man nor set of men who can usurp the authority of almighty God and think to change the inexorable laws of the Infinite. For one to say that God has made of one blood the white and the colored races, therefore there shall be no bounds of distinction, is openly and flagrantly to defy the God who made us. This is an incorrect sylogism. Correct reason is: the white and colored are different because God has made them different by a line of separation. Therefore they shall be separate in accordance with God's inexorable law. Another good reason for keeping the races separate is promiscuous mixing will give power to the Communistic world.

RABBI FINDS CURBS ON LIBERTY IN SOUTH

Times Sat 1-5-57

Pittsburgh Pa.

A Southern rabbi said last night that racial tensions in the South were "undermining" the American doctrine of freedom of thought and freedom of speech.

Preaching at Central Synagogue, Lexington Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, the Rev. Dr. Jacob M. Rothschild of Atlanta said that "threats—vague and not so vague—of economic boycott and physical violence have been directed against those who seek a peaceful solution, or—worse still—bravely dare to counsel compliance with the Supreme Court decision because it is the law of the land."

"There is a macabre and disquieting parallel between the South today and a totalitarian state," Dr. Rothschild declared. "There is the curtailment of the right to speak freely and openly if what you say disagrees with the popular point of view. Law is abrogated. Constitutional government is challenged. Interpretation and enforcement of law is transferred to respectable—but self-appointed—leaders. Soon control passes to the hands of not so respectable extremists and rabble-rousers."

For ten years spiritual leader of the Hebrew Benevolent Congregation in Atlanta and a long-time resident and community worker in the South, Dr. Rothschild urged Southern Jews to persist in working for the implementation of the Supreme Court decision with "patience and idealism."

Montgomery Bus Integration And School Desegregation Drew Top Attention For 1956

By BAKER E. MORTEN

CHICAGO.—(ANP)—The historic ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court ending segregation on city buses in Montgomery, Ala., and the desegregation of more than 671 public school districts in 17 southern and border states loomed as highlights of the year as 1956 came to a close.

Though focal points for the year, these two unprecedented turning points in history were by no means the only significant occurrences for 1956, which produced a multiplicity of eventful circumstances in the lives of Negro Americans.

The following is a month by month table of developments during the year:

JANUARY Black Dispatch p. 2

A St. Louis judge ordered an end to segregation in low rent public housing in that city . . . Russian audiences gave thundering ovation to an all-Negro cast who staged "Porgy and Bess" . . . The University of Alabama lost its fight to bar Negroes from attending the school . . . Dixie railroads began integration of its Negro and white passengers . . . A Mississippi judge refused to reopen the Emmett Till lynching case . . . President Eisenhower received the U. S. delegation to Liberia . . . Negro Leaders Urge President To Act in South

Evening Star

P 42

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 12 (AP).—Southern Negro leaders are continuing their integration fight with appeals to President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon and Attorney General Brownell for assistance.

Washington

About 60 Negro leaders representing nine Southern States yesterday telegraphed President Eisenhower "to come South immediately to make a major speech in a major Southern city urging all Southreners to abide by the Supreme Court's decision as the law of the land."

The group, concluding a two-day meeting here, asked for a conference with Mr. Brownell "at the earliest possible date" and said "the confused state requires that we talk with you in order to secure a clarification from the highest legal authority of the land."

1-12-57

Nixon Tour Urged

The Vice President was urged to tour the South and report to Mr. Eisenhower on "economic boycotts, and reprisals, and bombing and violence directed against persons and homes of Negroes who assert their rights under the Constitution."

The Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., of Montgomery, Ala., who called the conference here, said it had no connection with the arrest Thursday of six Negro ministers on charges of riding city buses in seats normally reserved for white persons—a violation of State segregation laws.

Cases against the six, all free in $1,000 bonds, will be presented to the Fulton County (Atlanta) Grand Jury Tuesday. If the grand jury returns indictments the way is cleared for a court test of the segregation laws.

"Now in Shock Period"

A. T. Walden said he and other Negro attorneys are considering a request to Federal District Court to declare the bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

Mr. King told a news conference that bus integration should be accomplished in the South before 1960. "We are now in a shock period," he said, "as soon as that is over integration will come all over the South."

States represented at the meeting were Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Film code revision bans racial epithets

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 1-5-57

HOLLYWOOD (ANP)—A revision in the Motion picture production codes prohibiting any picture from public showing that "tends to incite bigotry or hatred among poeples of different racial, religious or national backgrounds," was approbed last week by the Motion Picture Association of America.

The new provision explains that such words as "dago, chink, hunkie, kike and all deregatory terms for different races of peoples "should be avoided.

The code was approved at the New York meeting of leading motion picture houses.

Segregated Audiences Should Be Abolished!

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By GEORGE E. PITTS

PITTSBURGH — It's about time high-salaried Negro entertainers started doing something about being forced to play before segregated audiences in the South. It seems that these artists would have injected into their contracts a clause that would make null and void any concerts booked where the audience must be separated into racial groups. It is greedy agents who are largely at fault because they book the tours. Yet, the Negro performers who carry through these Un-American practices are responsible, too. I hope the general feeling of most Negro entertainers wasn't summed up Louis Armstrong, who reportedly said when dynamite was exploded outside a segregated audience in Knoxville, Tenn.: "Man, the horn don't know anything about it. I'll play anywhere they'll listen." It was the same Armstrong who reportedly made a similar statement recently when accused of playing a dance in Indianapolis from which Negroes were banned. Statements like this are sickening. They make me think some Negro stars are so "hungry" for the dollar that segregation is made a secondary issue. It makes me think that people like these have lost their self-respect and pride. When a Negro loses these he has nothing.

Pitts

The ones who persist in going through with these Southern tours should ask themselves these questions: "Would an Italian play before an audience in which his people were forced to sit in special seats? Would a Jew? Would a Japanese — a Chinese?" I'm sure they wouldn't. Then why do we? It's about time a concentrated effort was made to get agents to refuse to book Negro acts in the badlands of the South or anywhere else the Negro must sit in humiliation because he has been put off to the side like an unwelcome dog. It also is high time Negro entertainers got together and demanded that this evil be stopped.

Louis Armstrong

speaking: "I'd say folk music is enjoying a tremendous revival because some of us like melody in our music. Rock and roll goes the other way. It's purely rhythm and noise. That is why 'Shenandoah' and 'John Henry' and hundreds of other pieces will be heard and loved when the 'Heartbreak Hotels' and the 'She-Booms' are forgotten . . . J. J. Johnson and his trombone artistry are a refreshing treat at Pittsburgh's Crawford Grill.

• IN ANSWER TO the Louis Armstrong bombing incident, Mark Olds, program manager of Cleveland's KYW, instructed all disc jockeys to feature at least one Armstrong recording per show, stating: "We hope to show that such actions as the bombing do not represent actions of average Americans but rather a small, lunatic fringe." . . . Clyde McPhatter has 26,000 autographed photos to hand admirers on the current 80-city R&R tour.

Injustice Not Limited To South

Call 1/4

Kansas City, Mo.

Discrimination In Housing And Schools Cited

By Irwin Safchik

NEW YORK.—(INS)—New Yorkers who thought racial segregation was a problem limited to the South have been learning that the issue is a hot one in their own city.

There are no laws requiring separate neighborhoods or separate schools for whites and Negroes in New York, but the divisions nevertheless exist in many parts of the world's largest city.

And with them has come the isolation of minority groups in virtual "ghettos" and a strong disparity between educational facilities available to whites and those offered Negroes and Puerto Ricans.

Attempts to rub out these conditions— to make New York the true "melting pot" it has been called— have been going on for many years. Today, however, attention is focused on two particular areas.

Would End Housing Bias

In the state legislature a bill is being pushed by many Democrats and Republicans alike to outlaw discrimination in most of the state's four-million private housing units.

This would extend the present ban on bias which applies only to housing that benefits from any form of public aid. The federal government announced recently it would deny mortgage insurance to violators of this law.

At the same time, the attack on segregation in New York public schools is being waged in the city's board of education, which has been asked to rezone school districts and to reassign teachers in order to permit more widespread integration of the races.

Arguments Are Different

Few if any of the arguments offered against integrated housing and integrated schools in New York are based on warnings against the breakdown in social traditions that is feared in the South.

Opponents of the proposed bill to end discrimination in private housing, for instance, contend that such a move would represent an unconstitutional invasion of private property rights.

Others fighting desegregated neighborhoods insist property values would plunge sharply wherever Negroes or Puerto Ricans are admitted into "white" sections.

The proposed rezoning of school districts has raised fears among many parents otherwise friendly toward the principle of integration that their children would suddenly be required to attend schools far from home. Some Negroes as well as whites are in this category.

Fear Lower Standards

Then, there are white parents— some of whom already send their youngsters to one school when another is nearer, but predominantly colored— who are afraid their children will suffer by having to associate with classmates of a lower economic standing.

Meanwhile, the teacher reassignment plan is being fought bitterly by almost all of the city's faculty groups.

They warn of lower morale, resentment and defiance if there is an end to the policy of allowing teachers with the most seniority and ability to choose their schools.

The board of education has been asked to reassign teachers so that more of the good ones will be placed where they are needed most —in the so-called "difficult" or "deprived" schools 90 per cent of which are attended almost exclusively by Negroes and Puerto Ricans.

Call 1/4

Not All Full-Time

A recent survey showed, for example, that while 96 per cent of the city's predominantly white elementary schools could report that at least half of their teachers were full-time, fully- accredited employes, only 46 per cent of the non-white schools could do the same.

Mi. 3-1-57

The rezoning plan is largely aimed at ending a situation in which there are 178 cases of a predominantly white elementary school being adjacent to a school made up almost entirely of Negro and Puerto Rican pupils.

This situation in itself does not particularly alarm pro-integrationists. They realize the composition of a neighborhood greatly determines the make-up of its schools and that ethnic groups would tend to live among themselves, even if there was no bias in housing to keep them from doing otherwise.

"White" Schools Better

What does disturb them is the fact that the white schools are so much better than the non-white. The statistics show:

The average age of elementary school buildings used by predominantly white students is 31 years, compared with 43 years for non-whites. On the junior high school level, the figures are 15 years and 35 years.

Ninety-one per cent of the "white" school buildings on the elementary level are fireproof only 78 per cent of the "non-white" are.

Average floor space per child is 89 square feet in the first category, only 59 square feet in the second.

Meanwhile the city of New York has invested an average of $65.50 in capital expenditures for each child going to a predominantly white elementary school, but only $21.10 for each pupil in schools where Negroes and Puerto Ricans are in the large majority.

Anti-segregationists realize that the answer is to raise all schools to a higher level, not merely to force white children to attend inferior schools so that there will be room for Negroes and Puerto Ricans in the superior ones.

But, in the meantime, they charge that the city of New York has not even lived up to the standard set by most southern cities— to provide facilities that are equal though separate.

'Mind Own Business,' Gerber Says

Anti-Defamation Group Scored on Integration

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Fri. 2-22-57

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb. 21 (AP) Attorney Will Gerber has advised the national chairman of the Anti-Defamation League to stick to his own business and let the "NAACP take care of the Negroes."

Gerber was chief counsel of a House subcommittee which recommended that District of Columbia schools return to racial segregation.

The ADL chairman, Henry Edward Schultz of New York, said last Sunday that the subcommittee report was "one-sided and negative." The League has released its own report on D. C. integration, calling it a "miracle in social adjustment."

Gerber wrote Schultz:

"The Anti-Defamation League was created for the purpose of preventing the defamation of Jews. If you will let the NAACP take care of the Negroes and confine the best efforts of the Anti-Defamation League along the line for which it was created, we will all be much better off."

Gerber, who is Jewish, said his letter was in answer to Schultz's "continued meddling in this highly controversial matter in the name of the Anti-Defamation League . . . which is resented by thousands of American Jews."

Southerrn 'Manifesto' Hits Snag

Herald P. 10-a Thurs. 2-21-57 Miami, Fla.

By EDWIN A. LAHEY
Chief of Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Some enterprising reporting by David Kraslow, Miami Herald correspondent and member of the staff of the Washington bureau of the Knight Newspapers, has put a serious crimp in another Southern "manifesto" about the race issue.

KRASLOW

Kraslow discovered last week that the new "manifesto" was being privately circulated among Southern congressmen to put them on record as protesting the system of racial integration of patients in Veterans Administration hospitals.

The text of the "manifesto," which was published in a dispatch by Kraslow, called upon the Veterans Administration chief, H. V. Higley, to permit "state and local laws relating to segregation" to become applicable to hospitals under his direction.

Following publication of Kraslow's dispatch, members of the Florida delegation made haste to disown the "manifesto," and some who had signed it withdrew their signatures.

"I was in a rush to get to a committee meeting when someone handed me this letter to sign," said one Florida member, Rep. Charles Bennett. "When I had a chance to study it later, I decided I didn't want to sign it.

Wilkins Tells Washington Negroes Are Restless

P. 2 Advocate Sat. 2-23-57 Jackson, Miss.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, testified today he cannot predict what mood might be engendered among Southern Negroes if they do not get a minimum guarantee of constitutional rights.

Up to now he said, they have followed a course of non-violence in the face of extreme provocation.

Wilkins testified at a Senate Judiciary Sub-Committee hearing on Civil Rights legislation.

He said Negroes have shown great patience though recent months "have been marked by almost continuance violence directed at Negro citizens and groups in the South who seek elimination of discrimination and segregation."

But he indicated this mood might change if Congress does not approve President Eisenhower's civil rights proposals. These measures are "meaningful" he said, and would serve as a starting point for congressional action in this field.

Eisenhower's program would permit the attorney general to seek injunctions to protect voting rights and allow the Justice Department to initiate civil suits in cases involving alleged denial of civil rights.

It also calls for creation of a civil rights division in the Justice Department and a special presidential commission to investigate complaints of rights violations.

In a move to speed subcommittee hearings on the program, Wilkins served as spokesman for 26 organizations allied in their support of the proposals.

Speak Deliberately

Wilkins said, however, that the separate groups would ask to be heard separately should the Senate hearings develop "into a forum for . . . anti-law and order forces."

Sen. Hennings (D-Mo.), the subcommittee chairman, said yesterday's decision by the group to wind up hearings March 5 was "a great victory" for supporters of civil rights legislation. And he said he would oppose any move to force more hearings before the parent judiciary committee.

Backers of the bills want to get the proposals to the Senate floor early in the session, when there would be less chance of a successful Southern filibuster against them. Southern lawmakers have adopted a strategy of delay.

Two Southern senators, Ervin of North Carolina and Olin Johnston of South Carolina, debated with Wilkins for more than a hour at today's hearing. The discussion was without acrimony and Ervin told Wilkins later, "I have enjoyed this discussion with you."

Wilkins conceded, under questioning by Ervin, that there are some "Ghettoes of the North" in which Negroes are more segregated than in some Southern communities. But Wilkins said there are "some compensations" for Negroes who live in them—"they know they can always get out . . . and go to other sections . . . to a theater or a restaurant."

The Negro leader also told Ervin he was sure Negroes have more rights in North Carolina than in the South generally. Ervin's state, he said, is a "golden example by comparison with many of its sister Southern states."

Maryland Governor Lauds Negro For Restraint, Patience

Morning Sun 2-24-57

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — High praise for the restraint, obedience to law and fidelity to tolerance by the Negro citizens in America "under grave provocation" was uttered last week in a Brotherhood Sunday observance by Maryland's Governor Theodore R. McKeldin.

Speaking to a Howard University gathering in Rankin Chapel, Gov. McKeldin stated: "Almost without exception the barbarities have been on the other side.

"So when a foreign observer asks, who then, is the civilized man, the question is embarrassing to the majority."

He continued: "With pleasure and admiration I testify to my belief that the course of the Negro minority for the past two or three years has been, on the whole, directed toward the aim of brotherhood. The respect for law, the patience, the self-restraint that this minority has exhibited, with exceptions so trifling as to be hardly worth mentioning, have been remarkable."

He declared, "This fidelity to tolerance and reason under grave provocation is, in fact, that minority's strongest claim to first class citizenship."

Dr. S. D. Proctor States Negroes Only Fair Deal

Nashville, Tenn. Tues. 3-1-57

KINSTON, N. C.—

Colored Americans want to be judged as individuals and not as a group, Dr. Samuel DeWitt Proctor, president of Virginia Union University, declared in a recent address here.

P. 4

Speaking to some 600 colored and white persons attending the Second Annual Institute on Human Relations, Dr. Proctor said:

"Divide us on any basis except color. We have no more to do with our color than a blonde burnette has to do with the color of her hair."

He pointed to statistics frequently quoted to prove that Negroes have more disease and crime than whites and added:

For the sake of argument, let's admit that these statistics are true. They are the result of economic and social conditions and not of race.

Dr. Proctor spoke on "Brotherhood in a Changing America." He commended the citizens of Kinston for their efforts to solve social problems over the conference table. In order to be recognized as first class citizens, he said, Negroes must first "get rid of the stereotype."

The three-day institute, held in Lenoir County Courthouse, was sponsored by the Lenoir County-Inter-racial Committee. Dr. Proctor was introduced by Harvey E. Beech, Kinston attorney.

Georgia Court Resolution Is Poor Gesture

News Leader Bham, Ala. Sat. 2-23-57

The resolution which the Georgia Legislature has approved calling for impeachment of six members of the U. S. Supreme Court is a poor gesture. It evidently is mainly intended to express feeling against racial and sedition decisions of the court.

Its supporters apparently do not expect to get far toward actual impeachment. One said that the resolution was "not going to turn the world upside down," but that it said to the Supreme Court justices, "we read your decision and our blood boiled."

In both Senate and House of the Georgia Legislature there was some resistance to approval of the proposal. Perhaps there would have been more if the action had been regarded as likely to result in actual impeachment proceedings. The criticism of some opposing legislators was sharp.

Great numbers of other Southerners who deeply regret the court's decision also, we believe, regret this kind of expression. We do not believe it well serves either opposition to desegregation or respect for law.

Says Treatment Of Negro Is A 'National Sin'

Register P. 1 Des Moines, Iowa

Washington, D. C.—A Southern Senator John Stennis (Dem., Miss.) said nobody can solve the problem of the South "the patient leaders of both civil rights groups in the south."

"When the agitation ends and the outsiders leave," he said "then we will have to go back to rebuilding good relations."

The two senators testified before Douglas said.

Senator Paul Douglas (Dem., Ill.), who urged the anti-lynching bill, also asked a measure to make bodily attacks on unformed members of the armed forces a federal offense.

"Our treatment of the Negro is a national sin," Douglas said.

The two senators testified before hearing administration proposals for civil rights legislation. The sub-committee may set night hearings next week to speed the bill to the senate floor, where it faces a possible filibuster.

South Africans Define Problems

Wed. 3-20-57 Atlanta, Ga.

BY WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

Some aspects of the social and political problems of South Africa were clearly defined Tuesday by a young educator and his wife as they took a brief look at some of the educational institutions here.

Dr. and Mrs R. E. van der Ross of Wynberg, Cape, Union of South Africa are currently touring the United States in the interest of public and private education.

"We are primarily concerned with obtaining information about the general social pattern of your teaching program and the function of your educational institutions."
CARNEGIE FUND

Dr. van der Ross is principal of Battswood Training College. His wife is in secretarial work. The two are here under the auspices of the Carnegie Foundation in cooperation with the U. S. State Department. While in Atlanta, they are the guests of Dr. B. R. Brazeal, dean of Morehouse College. Dr. Brazeal has arranged a series of tours for the couple.

The couple will spend four months touring the United States, before returning to South Africa, the two will also visit parts of Europe.

The position of the Colored people of South Africa is more restricted than that of the Negro in America, the couple pointed out. There is a little voting strength maintained by either the Coloreds or the natives of South Africa.

POLITICAL STRENGTH

The political structure is such that the one and quarter million Coloreds in South Africa can elect only four members to Parliement to represent them. The more than nine million natives can elect only three people to represent them, while the whites may have as many as 150 representatives for only two and one-half million.

The young educator stated that voting among the natives of South Africa is usually restricted to the chiefs and a few of their tribal officials. No native African can be elected to Parliment. A white person has to represent them.

Daily World

The colored people in South Africa have a monopoly on the jobs in the section where they live, but few of them have control of the businesses and industries. There was a time, Dr. van der Ross said when a few Coloreds had some of the businesses, including building and transportation.

P4

Today, about 23 per cent of the labor force is employed in farming.

SECONDARY INDUSTRIES

"The whole pattern of industry is changing in South Africa," the young educator said.

Dr. van der Ross added the secondary industries are also coming to that section of the continent. He said previously, gold has been the chief product, but with the value being lewered in the world market, the region is resorting to other types of industry.

Education is still a difficult problem, the couple mentioned. The fact that there exist no compulsory education laws may have some bearing. Aside from this is the fact that no scholarship programs are in effect and the cost of education is much higher than it is in America.

Dr. van der Ross said sometimes groups, teachers or interested people may pool their resources and send a deserving youngster to school, but that a program similar to some in the United States is unthinkable.

An African native as well as a Colored person may attend the two remaining mixed universities, he said. These are Witwaterstrand University in Johannesburg and Cape Town university. "But I don't know how long this will be possible," he pointed out.

He said that when natives enter the universities, if they are to study medicine, they must make a promise to work within the policy and with certain recommendations made by the South African government.

SOCIAL LEVEL

There is the tendency to play the Coloreds and the natives against each other, it was indicated. The Coloreds are given a slightly higher degree of social recognition, but are still kept in the position where they can also be controlled, politically and economically.

The Coloreds are not allowed to seek service in white restaurants. They may visit bazaars, but cannot sit down to be served food or tea. While on shooping trips into the cities, they either take their food with them or have it prepared by someone in the group.

The couple seemed impressed with the progress of Negroes in America. But they were somewhat critical of the "use of values" they said.

Like many people, coming to America for the first time, they question why the people here are constantly so busy. They seemed amazed at the progress of businesses run by Negroes along Auburn Avenue.

"The great advantage you people have over us," they said, "is that your Constitution already states there should be equality. It gives the courts a basis on which to rule."

In South Africa, the government has passed a Separate Amenities Act, which limits the judiciary in using its discretion on cases dealing with segregation and equality.

Says Present Difficulties Of South Not Created by Supreme Court Decision

Bystander p.1

Des Moines, Iowa

Thurs. 4-4-57

New York—A statement by Bernard M. Shanley, appointments secretary to President Eisenhower, "that feelings engendered by the (Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, anti-segregation) decision have resulted in the dropping of Negroes, especially graduate students, from universities in the South where previously they had been accepted," has been called "erroneous" by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

'Erroneous Statement'

Mr. Shanley's remarks were made following an address he delivered on March 21 to students at Fairleigh Dickinson University in Rutherford, N. J. Queried about the Supreme Court ruling during a question-and-answer period, the White Hose aide is quoted in The New York Times as having said the "Supreme Court decision on segregation has set us back many years." Later he is reported as having said that the decision had done "incalculable harm."

In a telegram dispatched to Mr. Shanley on March 22, Mr. Wilkins said that the NAACP regretted Mr. Shanley's "erroneous statement" and declared that "there are more Negroes enrolled in southern universities today than at the time of the ruling. For example the University of Texas last year opened all undergraduate schools to Negro students as against only graduate schools in 1954. Also, additional church-connected and other private institutions have enrolled Negro students since 1954."

Only in Louisiana, the NAACP leader told Mr. Shanley, has an attempt been made "to get rid of Negro students at the state university and this attempt has thus far been thwarted."

Bystander p.4

The present difficulties in the South, Mr. Wilkins continued, were not created by the Supreme Court ruling, "but by the White Citizens Councils, the Ku Klux Klan and other elements openly and contemptuously preaching defiance of the Supreme Court. Whatever your de- of these groups." 4-4-57

clared intention," he asserted, "your Moreover, Mr. Wilkins said, "as a statement has given White House lawyer, your statement places you staff approval to the oft-stated views on the side of expediency in the law rather than in support of the constitutional morality expected of the nation's highest court."

Missionary in Argentina Says That Reports Of Violence in State Echo in South America

Thurs. 3-21-57 Atlanta, Ga. P. 4

Buenos Aires, Argentina—I have just read in the Christian Century of Feb. 13 and 20 about the action of some of my fellow Georgians against Koinonia Farms.

In 1950 my wife, three sons and I left the comforts of the United States to share with our good neighbors of South America the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ.

We soon learned that the effectiveness of the work of the missionary was hampered in several ways.

Perhaps the greatest hindrance we face is the propaganda in the daily newspapers about the way we treat Negroes. Every shameful attack on the Negro makes a prominent place in the news.

The many good things done by the Southerners are never mentioned but when paranoiac men fire machinegun bullets into Negro homes, etc., this is headline news.

How long will the thoughtless actions of Georgians annul the work of the 430 missionaries they are helping send to South America?

Ethel, Jackie's Views Differ On Racial Fight

Defender Chicago, Ill. P. 1

By LLOYD L. GENERAL

Bot. 2-2-57

Two famous Negro Americans, one a singer and the other a retired baseball star, apparently have widely differing points of view on how the racial struggle affects them and what support they owe to organizations fighting for civil rights.

The singer is Ethel Waters, who recently said on a television interview that she is not a member of the NAACP, because she is "just not interested."

The sports figure is Jackie Robinson, who recently quit organized baseball and now heads a drive to raise a million dollars for the NAACP.

Bot. 2-2-57

SHIES FROM ISSUE

Miss Waters, like most entertainers who have reached the big time, tends to shy away from the question of racial relations.

Big name entertainers appear in clubs frequented exclusively or chiefly by white patrons. Should they engage too vigorously in civil rights matters, they fear it would hurt their chances to work in many well-paying jobs, especially in resort hotels.

And, despite the fact that some big stars have stated they would not appear before segregated audiences, hotels and night clubs in Florida and Las Vegas — where few, if any places welcome Negro patrons — never suffer from lack of top flight Negro entertainers.

Defender

Nat King Cole was a victim of this unique type of pressure last year when he was attacked on an Alabama stage while appearing for an all-white audience. His attackers were quickly caught and punished, but Cole found himself the target of angry Negroes who thought he should have refused to sing to an all-white audience.

JOINS NAACP

Cole, caught between the rock and a hard place, hurriedly joined the NAACP.

Perhaps the principal difference in the attitude of Miss Waters and Jackie, however, lies in the fact that they engage in entirely different types of occupations.

Robinson had a tough row to hoe when he first went up to the Brooklyn Dodgers as the first Negro to play on a major league team.

He was the victim of abuse and bitterness, the object of racial slurs, and it is a tribute to his determination that he managed to weather the sttorm. In his first years, he was on constant display as a social experiment.

SAW CRUELTY

It is a fact that he learned then as he could never before imagine how cruel and descrutive race hate can be.

He knows with a knowledge born of bitter experience that much remains to be done to break down the remaining barriers of race hate and intolerance, and he feels that he can best serve that cause by joining the NAACP.

There is some truth to the contention by entertainers that they help to break racial barriers simply by fraternizing with whites, who under other circumstances would hardly ever share the same table with a Negro.

But few Negroes are able to agree with Miss Waters, who told the television interviewer that what she has attained in life, no white person can take away from her.

And they are even less inclined to agree with her when she states:

"I don't miss what (white people) have, because I don't desire t and don't want it."

Maybe, at that time, being just a little upset, Miss Waters wasn't hinking about complete freedom and equality.

Race Problem Hampers Prestige, Historian Says

Daily World Tues. 3-12-57 Atlanta, Ga.

HAMPTON, Va. — Dr. John Hope Franklin, Chairman of the Dept. of History at Brooklyn College, N. Y. asserted in a speech last night at Hampton Institute that "Europeans lack faith in the United States primarily because we fail to make human equality a concommitant of political democracy".

P. 6

MINOR PROBLEM

"To our European neighbors", Dr Franklin stated "there is no North and South. All sections of the country are equally responsible for the outrages and indignities against the Negro".

Admitting that Europe also has a minor race problem, the eminent historian was quick to emphasize that the European has a real desire and stake in seeing the American Negro become a first class citizen. "Europe has learned to expect from the U. S. what it cannot do itself, because of the brilliant and positive history this young nation has had", he said.

A member of the Board of Directors of the American Council of Learned Societies, Dr. Franklin Further contended that "the U S cannot continue to urge free elections in Hungary and Bulgaria whey we do not yet have them in South Carolina and Mississippi. We cannot continue to crack down on gangsters and kidnappers but ignore violent racists."

In concluding, the author of From Slavery to Freedom and The Militant South warned that "if we see ourselves as others see us, the picture may be so shocking that we will be forced to change, for as an official of NATO recently said with reference to the appointment by President Eisenhower of Senator George as a NATO representative, 'a lot of help Walter George of Georgia can be in telling us how to get along with each other".

We're Waiting For A Word

Afro-American Sat. 1-26-57

For the second time within a ten-day period, an agonizing distress call has gone out to President Eisenhower. Baltimore, Md.

A group of leaders meeting in Atlanta called upon Mr. Eisenhower to use the tremendous weight of his office to "bring colored Americans the rights guaranteed every American citizen by the United States Constitution." P. 4

The call was accompanied by the sensible suggestion to Vice President Nixon that he make a trip through the terror-ridden areas of Dixie, just as he had done in Eastern Europe.

Such a tour, it was pointed out, would allow the Vice President to explore the facts and to talk with victims of racial oppression.

Acquainted with the raw truth about the Southern way of life, Mr. Nixon would be in a position to recommend to the President and the American people a way to alleviate a situation which daily grows worse.

* * *

THREE DAYS later from Montgomery, where, under the cover of darkness, six bombs had shattered four churches and two homes of ministers, came the second pathetic appeal.

"Just a word, Mr. President," implored the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, whose home and church had been wrecked by the dynamiters, "would be such a help. Just a word to this city would be of great value."

Thus far, there has been no word.

Of course, it is possible that a busy President didn't hear these pitiful outcries for assistance.

It may be, although it would be difficult to believe, that the President of the United States is unaware of the rebellion that grips so large an area of the nation.

He might well have been too busy arranging further aid and refuge to the oppressed Hungarians.

Further he has been pushing for adoption of his newly proposed Eisenhower Doctrine for the Middle East.

And, too, he had the urgent business of touring the drouth-stricken areas of the Southwest and Midwest to claim his attention.

Farmers and cattlemen of those sections are in dire need because nature has withheld rain in any appreciable quantities since 1949.

* * *

BUT WE SUBMIT none of these matters are of greater urgency and importance than the shocking outbreak of violence in such places as Montgomery, Tallahassee, Americus, Mobile, Chattanooga, Camden, Clinton, Lamar, Mansfield, Sturgis, Henderson and Clay.

The President's indifference shown by his continued silence to this threat of anarchy sweeping the Southland is disappointing, disheartening and indefensible.

Battle Against Jim Crow

Will Ike Answer Ministers' Plea?

Courier P. 2 Sat. 1-19-57

Pittsburgh, Pa.

(By Courier Press Service)

Nearly 11-million pairs of human eyes in the South are looking prayerfully toward Washington, D. C., to see what effect, if any, the fervent appeal of Negro ministers to President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Vice President Richard M. Nixon will have toward persuading the nation's chief executive to tour areas in the South torn by racial violence.

• The eyes were those of the South's distraught Negroes. The cry for help was voiced by some 60 Gideons in the Negro's battle for full citizenship from nine Southern states.

Guiding the group was the modern Joshua, the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala.

THE INTEGRATION drive was beamed at the White House through a telegram to the President which pleaded, "We ask you to come South immediately to make a major speech in a major Southern city urging all Southerners to abide by the Supreme Court's decision as the law of the land."

• Mr. Eisenhower was not the only high official to receive a telegram.

Vice President Nixon was urgently called upon to make a tour through Dixie, similar to the one which he had taken to Europe on behalf of the Hungarians and to subsequently report to the President on "economic boycotts and reprisals, and bombing and violence directed against persons and Negroes who assert their rights under the constitution."

Attorney-General Herb Brownell was also wired that "the confused state requires that we talk with you in order to secure a clarification from the highest legal authority in the land."

THE APPEALS were sent from Atlanta where the pro-integrationists had organized and elected the Rev. Mr. King as chairman.

• They were voiced amid the rumblings of bombs which shook Montgomery last week as racists lived up to predictions made earlier by bombing four Negro churches and the homes of a Negro and a white minister.

Also in Montgomery there were reports that a new all-white private "bus club" would be organized with rides available on the city's buses only for "club members."

IN TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Gov. Leroy Collins ordered the resumption of bus service with the hope that "the good-will prevailing among and between the people of both races and the ability of the bus company to furnish a needed public service with due regard to every citizen."

• And in Birmingham, Ala., the "Rev." Alvin Horn, a white Baptist minister who is a leader in the Ku Klux Klan, "warned" that the Klan would "not give another inch or another concession" in the fight against desegregation.

The "Rev." Horn's remarks were directed to a crowd of 235 men, women and children who were bedecked in KKK regalia.

NAACP Leader Says Ike Silent On Race Violence

Daily Word Thurs. 1-24-57 Atlanta, Ga.

By THADDEUS T. STOKES

President Dwight D. Eisenhower was criticized by a national executive officer of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Wednesday evening for "remaining silent" about the recent wave of racial upheavals launched against southern Negro leaders in their fight for first class citizenship.

The NAACP official, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, also spoke out against Gov. Marvin Griffin and State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, for their "persecution" of the NAACP and their utter disregard of the U. S. Constitution. The secretary also attached other high southern officials.

Wilkins "blasts were released while he was addressing about 200 persons at a "Freedom Dinner," sponsored by local branch NAACP at Waluhaje apartments.

"President Eisenhower chooses to remain silent while American citizens (Negroes) are being bludgeoned out of their freedoms and their rights, said Wilkins. "He can see the plight of the Hungarians. He can hear their cries for help in Washington, but no one hears the cries of (Negro) American citizens from Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia," he continued.

He said the President pays personal attention to soil drought areas, but he does not reply to appeals from human beings in the "Dixie Disaster" belt. "They (Negroes) only ask that he speak out from his high office against lawlessness and violence. If not by tanks and armies, he could say at least what he said of the Hungarians last December 10," said Wilkins.

He said that Negro Americans are only asking for equality under law, as written by the Constitution and interpreted by the Supreme court.

He said Gov. Griffin would sweep away the last 100 years and try to pretend that they never existed when he "order the preservation of segregation" no matter what any court may rule. Wilkins said such statements "explains the cause of the South's racial tension today."

Wilkins, told about the southern states which have outlawed the NAACP. Here, he said Cook is attempting to prove the NAACP was a Communist-front organization. He accused the White Citizens Councils of trying to help spread the rumor. "The NAACP has never been Communist," he said.

The NAACP will still fight for the Negroes civil rights. However, "they are now trying to take away our right to fight for our rights."

Wilkins assure dthe audience that the NAACP has not been frightened but are more determined to continue.

Daily World

"Southern school bonds are being snubbed by financial houses. Those that are being purchased are at an all-time high interest rate. Who wants to invest in the bonds of a school system in a state where legislators pass laws which virtually abolish the system" if integration occurs, said Wilkins.

P. 3

In conclusion Wilkins said, "the NAACP has never espoused violence and we do not intend to start now."

He was introduced by Mrs. Eunice Cooper, secretary of the Atlanta NAACP branch. Atty. Donald L. Hollowell was toastmaster.

John H. Calhoun, president of the local branch, was presented a scroll by E. M. Martin, vice president of the Atlanta Life Insurance Co., for "outstanding branch work."

Among others appearing on the program were: Rev. H. I. Bearden, Calhoun, John G. Gloster, Rev. Samuel W. Williams, who told about how "determined Atlanta Negroes are to obtain civil rights," and Rev. T. C. Lightfoot.

Ike Says Speech In South Studied

Thurs. 1-24-57

(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23—President Eisenhower said today that a proposal that he speak in the South against racial violence had been turned over to the Department of Justice "for study and advice to me."

The President had been asked by a reporter at his news conference whether he had responded to an appeal by Negro leaders of Montgomery, Ala., that he "come South and speak out against the growing violence of the pro-segregationists."

Hungary, Alabama And Pres. Eisenhower

Afro-American P. 1

Sat. 1-19-57

AN EDITORIAL

President Eisenhower sent his No. 1 traveling salesman, Vice President Nixon, all the way to Austria to see how the Hungarians were faring and to bring back recommendations as to how the free world, with particular emphasis on the United States, could help them.

The record does not show that the President sent the Vice President, or any other high official, to Alabama or Florida to see how a large segment of our own citizens was making out in the same type of struggle that concerns the Hungarians.

Both want freedom. Both are entitled to it. Both have legitimate claims upon civilized humanity.

The President is a humanitarian. He has said so himself. Certainly, he must know that charity is supposed to begin at home.

It is only just that we should concern ourselves with the plight of those who are being willfully deprived of their rights. This goes for Hungarians, Poles, Czechs, anyone else enmeshed in the same outrageous situation.

It also goes for American citizens, regardless of race, creed, or color. Afro American

Is it more urgent for a citizen of Hungary to attain freedom or for an American citizen to be allowed the identical privilege? P. 2

Neither is more urgent. They both have the right to make the same demand, and to have it heard and acted upon.

The vice president is back home again, all full of statistics, ideas, ideals, and suggestions for alleviating the very real plight of the Hungarian refugees.

Both he and the President have found a splendid sounding board for a civil rights plea. But why are they walking so carefully around a disgraceful mess that is right under their noses?

When President Eisenhower makes another of his frequent jaunts for a little golf, he will be even closer to the Southern imbroglio. Apparently that's as close as he cares to come.

We know the answer, of course. No one gets politically hurt by espousing the Hungarian cause. In fact, everyone gets a pat on the back, big, fat headlines, and assurances that he is doing a fine job in the cause of humanity.

The administration is aghast at the notion that Russians should fire upon unarmed Hungarians. It is strangely quiet about bullet-riddled passenger-laden buses in Montgomery, Alabama.

The President and his "team" may not like the inference, and they may choose to ignore it. Other Americans will not be quite as indifferent.

NEGRO PUBLISHERS URGE IKE SPEAK OUT ON RACE TENSION

Advocate P. 1 Jackson, Miss.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 29 — Negro publishers from across the nation have called on President Eisenhower to take the lead in guaranteeing "every American citizen that his constitutional rights shall be freely exercised, protected, and preserved in every section of the nation."

P. 1.

The call to the White House came last week during the mid-winter meeting of the National Newspaper Publishers Association in Nashville, Tenn.

In a resolution passed by the group, the President was urged to give "his assurance to the American people that the law of the land must be observed."

The resolution also said, in part:

"In view of the breakdown of interracial amity and understanding in some parts of our nation, we believe that all Americans of good will must speak out and act, without delay, to bring about the end of violence, terrorism, bombings, disregard for human and civil rights, and contempt for Constitutionally-guaranteed law and order.

Advocate P. 7

"Our country has developed the philosophy that all men possess indisputable dignities and rights. It now faces the responsibility of proving to itself and to the world that such a philosophy can be guiding principle in man's search for security and peace.

"The keystone of any civilization adhering to these belief's is observance of law and order. The foundation of American law is the constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court . . .

"The governors and legislatures of the various states have a corresponding obligation to guarantee that all Constitutional rights may be fully and freely exercised. The first step is to bring about an immediate end to disorder and violence within their respective states.

"The American people have an equal responsibility to insist that their elected officials, their civic and religious leaders, in every community, take immediate action to restore confidence in the principles of freedom, equality, human dignity and government under law.

"Only in this way can our nation earn the respect of other nations and secure domestic unity necessary to preserve our civilization."

NEGROES TO CONSIDER EISENHOWER DECISION

Commercial Appeal

Refusal To Talk In South To Be Meeting Topic

Thu. 2-8-57

Memphis, Tenn.

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 7—(AP)—Negro leaders will meet in New Orleans Feb. 13-14 to consider President Eisenhower's "refusal to come South to appeal for law and order," a pro-integration spokesman said Thursday.

P. 37

Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth said he was speaking for Negroes who met at Atlanta recently, and urged the President to make a personal appeal from a Southern platform.

Rev. Shuttlesworth, whose home and church were wrecked by a dynamite blast, issued a statement criticizing Mr. Eisenhower for failure to make the trip.

"At a time when our churches and homes are being bombed, when the darkness of each night brings physical danger to our people, President Eisenhower has decided not to come South to put the moral weight of his office against the breakdown of law and order," said Rev. Shuttlesworth.

"It is ironic that less than three weeks ago millions of dollars were spent on an inaugural ceremony, the climax of which was the oath by President Eisenhower 'to uphold the Constitution of the United States.' We Negro leaders of 29 communities and 10 states ask for nothing more than this—and we ask for it here in the South, and now."

Rev. Shuttlesworth said widespread disappointment at the President's decision has been expressed by Negro leaders in both Northern and Southern communities.

"Significantly," he said, "many of these leaders were prominent supporters of President Eisenhower in 1952 and 1956."

Rev. Shuttlesworth said the meeting will be held for two days at the New Zion Church in New Orleans. He said working sessions will be closed to newsmen but a news conference will be held when the talks end.

The Negro minister is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, formed after the National Association for Advancement of Colored People was ordered to halt operations in Alabama.

Why Won't Eisenhower Speak?

SIXTY Negro leaders, mostly clergymen, from 29 communities in 10 Southern states, met in Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 10-11 to discuss transportation and non-violent integration. At the conclusion of the conference a statement was issued.

These leaders made three requests: (1) that the President come South to make a major speech in a major city urging all Southerners to accept and abide by the decisions of the Supreme Court as the law of the land; (2) that Vice President Nixon make a tour of the South similar to the one he made on behalf of Hungarian refugees, and (3) that the Attorney General of the United States meet with some of these leaders to discuss the responsibility of the Department of Justice in maintaining order in several areas where Negroes and whites, who stand up for justice, fear for their lives.

The President has declined the invitation to go South to speak. The Attorney General has rejected the request for a conference.

This amounts to an amazing desertion of not only the welfare of some 17 million Negroes but also of all Americans who believe in law and order.

We believe the action of the President and of the Attorney General to be both inexcusable and indefensible.

Council Asks Ike To Visit South

Defender Sat. 2-9-57

Chicago, Ill

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — President Eisenhower has received a certified copy of a resolution unanimously passed by the Philadelphia city council urging him to make a personal visit to the South to end anti-Negro violence there.

The resolution, introduced by Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander, prominent Negro lawyer committee on recreation:

"Memorializes the President of the USA to issue a proclamation to the Southern states that have persisted in refusing to obey the decisions of the Supreme Court of our land to integrate transportation facilities, and

"That it is the will and desire of the President that the supreme law of our land must be respected; that violence, intimidation, the burning and bombing of the churches and the homes of the Negro people, and others who support them; the assaults upon and beating of such law-abiding and innocent people must cease immediately.

"Whereas our President, during the course of his first political campaign, in referring to another emergency which faced our country at that time, the then candidate for President proclaimed to all America, in a spirit of great courage and resolution that "I will go to Korea . . . .'

"We ask the President, who has just beam overwhelmingly indorsed for a second term as President of this great country to proclaim: 'I will go to Alabama' 'I will go to Georgia'; 'I will go to Florida,' and use the great power and the moral persuasion of his office to speak out for the moral conscience of America as he spoke out to allay the fears of the 'mothers in Korea'

"And in so doing, to lend the power, the weight and moral bulwark of the great office of the President of the U. S. to those in the moral wastelands of our country, where everywhere the cries of the Negro people and their religious leaders are to you Mr. President, saying:

"Come and see us in the hours of our travail . . . . . Come and speak to our white brethren who deny our lawful rights, and yet when we do not hate, for we love them as we pray to God for them that they heed the word of God and treat us as brothers. . . .' "

Plays golf, but he can't deliver speech in South

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower has plenty of time to play golf in Dixie but "will not be able" to make a major speech deploring violence and urging obedience to law in the South, it was disclosed Friday.

At the same time Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams was sending a telegram to the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., rejecting his invitation for the President to speak in the South, Mr. Eisenhower was making plans to spend the weekend on the National Golf Course at Augusta, Georgia.

The request for the President to speak out against the reign of terror being visited upon colored citizens grew out of a Southern Leadership Conference of about 60 prominent ministers held in Atlanta last month.

The invitation to the President was over the signature of the Rev. Mr. King, brilliant young leader of the successful Montgomery bus protest. It has been in Montgomery where a wave of dynamitings has damaged four churches and a number of homes.

* * *

THE RESPONSE to Dr. King's bid was made public by the Department of Justice.

The White House note said "it not possible for the President to schedule a speaking engagement such as you asked."

The Justice Department also turned down an "urgent" request of Southern leaders for a conference with Attorney General Herbert Brownell on the refusal of Southern cities to respect the Supreme Court ruling on segregated city buses.

Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney III wired Rev. Mr. King that "the Department well understands your interest and position in this matter and no conference is needed to make this clear.

"WITH RESPECT to specific incidents of violence, a conference at this time would not be helpful or appropriate."

Mr. Olney requested of Dr. King on whose porch just last week was found 12 sticks of dynamite, that any evidence of Federal offenses be reported promptly to the FBI or the local U.S. district attorney.

The Justice Department's position in a related civil rights field was made clear last week by Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers.

Asked what his department intended to do to implement the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration, Mr. Rogers said:

"The Department of Justice does have an important role to play in this area, but they want to move deliberate and careful."

Sat. 2-9-57

HE POINTED out that the Department was willing to assist any counties when the opportunity presents itself. He contended that considerable progress had been made in school integration.

As an example he pointed to the part the Federal Government played in the Hoxie, Ark., and Clinton, Tenn., cases.

The Federal Government is trying to assist the courts in every separate school case, claimed the Deputy Attorney General. But it does not wish to make a general comment.

"In our enthusiasm to do the right thing it is so easy to do the wrong thing," he commented.

These observations were made at a Women's National Press Club breakfast held at the Capitol, Wednesday, where Rogers was guest speaker. The Deputy Attorney General spoke on the subject of "Modern Republicanism."

ANP Writer Says President Won't Recognize Negroes

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Speaking before a Washington audience, Sunday, Franklin Williams, West Coast secretary-counsel for the NAACP recalled a sort-of "March on Washington" which took place more than 30 years ago. During that visit, he said, the late Roscoe Simmons, one of America's foremost orators, made a speech on the White House steps urging the President to see the group.

Herbert Hoover, who was President at that time wouldn't even talk to a Negro. "President Eisenhower will talk to us," he said, "but we wish he would talk to the world."

Won't Recognize Them

Williams' statement has been borne out time and time again, by the President's refusal to recognize Negro reports at his weekly press conferences.

The only advantage of Negro reporters being accredited to White House press conferences is to be able to ask the President questions of interest to the Negro population, and to give him an opportunity to express his convictions to the world.

It has not become perfectly obvious that Mr. Eisenhower purposely and deliberately ignores Negro correspondents whom he apparently believes will ask him some embarrassing questions regarding civil rights.

Reporter Gets Brush-Off

The most recent example was demonstrated Wednesday when the ANP reporter bounced up-and-down for the duration of the half-hour conference trying to get some recognition from the President. But each time the President would look away to the other side of the aisle, or would recognize someone at her back, at her side, or in front, but never the ANP gal.

The reporter had planned to remind the President of Jackie Robinson's address in Washington Sunday, in which he praised Vice President Nixon and Governor Adams for recent statements condemning discrimination and prejudice in this country. Call

"To remain silent indicates endorsement on these actions' said Robinson. Therefore, he believes that the President would soon come out with a forthright statement opposing violence in certain sections of this country. The reporter planned to ask Mr. Eisenhower if Jackie was correct in his prediction.

This question would have given the President an opportunity to speak out to the world without putting forth any undue effort to issue a formal denouncement of the bombings, cross burnings, jailing and even murdering of Negroes in the South who dare speak up for their civil rights.

The old "silent-treatment" given Negro reporters by President Eisenhower is nothing new. It has been going on now for far over a year. The first few times that the ANP reporter failed to be recognized was passed off with the thought that someone is always left out at each conference, and just by coincidence she seemed always to be among that number who failed to get recognition.

The reporter said she wanted to be fair with the President and did not wish to carry a "chip on her shoulder" feeling that every unfavorable incident was based on race. But as time went on it became more apparent, that she was deliberately being ignored over and over again.

The ANP reporter is not the only Negro who has been by-passed at the President's conferences. The same treatments has been accorded the Chicago Defender reporter who tried on several occasions to get in a question only to be overlooked by Mr. Eisenhower.

Asks Ike: Practice What You Preach

Rivers Urges U. S. Tell Dixie True Story Abroad

By Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Oct. 22—President Eisenhower was urged by Rep. L. Mendel Rivers today to practice what he preaches by ordering the United States Information Agency and its Voice of America to tell the true story of what the South is doing to educate and advance the Negro.

Rivers, just back from an official swing through Europe, said he had found the foreign press presenting a distorted picture of the South. In it, he said, the South's opposition to racial integration is painted as opposition to education for the Negro.

"You know, and I know, that nothing could be further from the truth," Rivers said in a letter to Eisenhower.

Recalling that the President, in an address before an international press group here a few days ago, had urged the press to carry out its duty to present "both sides of every story," Rivers called on the President to do likewise, through his own efforts and through USIA.

Rivers pointed out that South Carolina has in recent years built for Negroes "the most up-to-date school system in the country;" that the state has more Negro teachers than New England, New York and New Jersey combined, and that North Carolina Negro teachers get higher average pay than white teachers.

The reporting by USIA and VOA of "facts such as these," Rivers said, would do much to offset the distorted picture that foreigners the world over now are getting of the South through their newspapers, the congressman suggested.

Rivers said that Mr. Eisenhower, "as President of all Americans, white as well as colored, Southerners as well as non-Southerners," had an obligation to see to it that USIA and VOA deal alike with all areas of the country.

He told Mr. Eisenhower he was satisfied that USIA presents non-Southern areas of the country in the best light possible, ignoring "scandals, gangsterism and race riots," while presenting data giving the impression that Southerners are united in an effort to deny to the Negro his right to an education.

In the light of Mr. Eisenhower's own urgent recommendation to the press that it carry out its obligation to present both sides of every story, Rivers said, it would appear appropriate that "you recommend to USIA that it tell the truth about the South, too."

Rivers, while overseas, had cabled Mr. Eisenhower from Heidelberg, Germany, about the European press' distortion of the Southern picture, and when he returned he had a reply from Mr. Eisenhower discussing only the Little Rock situation and defending his use of troops to compel integration in schools there.

This led Rivers to assume that the President had not seen his cablegram, which did not mention Little Rock. But, he said in his letter to the president today, "since you have brought up the question, I think your decision to use troops was most unwise." He added that "it has shocked not only Southerners, but thoughtful and responsible people throughout the United States. . ."

TWO GOVERNORS SEE BIAS AS ISSUE IN '60

ALBANY, Nov. 14 (AP)—Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan and Governor Harriman of New York agreed tonight that the Democratic Presidential candidate in 1960 would have to take a strong stand for integration.

Some quarters as a potential nominee, declined to say whether he thought he might be.

"I have no clairvoyance," he said.

Mr. Harriman and Mr. Williams met with reporters after conferring on milk-marketing problems. Mr. Williams said he came here to determine why New York farmers were paid a higher price for milk than Michigan producers.

He brought with him Prof. Noel P. Ralston of Michigan State University, chairman of a commission studying the Michigan order.

Mr. Williams said Michigan producers received only about $5 a hundredweight (46½ quarts) for their milk, while New York farmers were paid more than $6.

He discussed the Pennsylvania order in Harrisburg yesterday with Pennsylvania Gov. George M. Leader and other officials.

Tribune Gets South's Story of Segregation!

BY JOSEPH ATOR

"Segregation is the biggest story in the country," said the editor on that September, pre-sputnik afternoon. "Go down south and find out all you can about it."

The 17 southern and border states that separated their white and Negro pupils by law when the Supreme court issued its 1954 opinion are a vast territory, even to a person with a fistful of airplane tickets. There is no typical southern state; there is no single community within any of these states that can be taken as typical of its state. The tour was extended to six weeks. Even so, the area of inquiry had to be curtailed.

Six weeks did suffice for visit to 10 states; inquiries in some 30 communities, extending from St. Louis to Tampa, from Dallas to Raleigh; conversations, often lengthy, with people in all walks of life, but principally with leaders of the white and Negro communities. These included governors and school administrators, manufacturers and planters, lawyers for the National Association for Advancement of Colored People and leaders of Citizens Councils, school teachers and housewives, old friends and many new ones. And also editors and reporters. [This last process, essential to any newspaperman who wanders off his home grounds, is known in the trade as ear biting.]

Broad Outlines of Problem Familiar

During 18 years as an editorial writer, the reporter considered himself familiar with the broad outlines of the problem. He had read the orders laid down by the Supreme court, tho some of the arguments he received forced him to reread those opinions. He had read at length the noble pronouncements of northern Democratic and northern Republican politicians, each seeking, by beating the white south to a rhetorical pulp, to convince the northern Negro voters that his party was their only true friend. He was familiar with the equally nauseating bombast and race baiting of southern politicians.

"The politicians are only aggravating the situation," said one southern editor. "The northern politicians aren't really interested in the Negro. They only want his vote. Our southern fire eaters know that we will have to come to some accommodation some day, but they figure that white supremacy is good for two or three more elections, and they are laying it on thick. If they wanted to perform a genuine political service, they would keep still at home, where their remarks are discounted because they are expected. The northerners should come south, the southerners should go north, and both should state in reasonable terms, to a hostile audience, the side of the case that it hasn't heard."

In these circumstances, it is obvious that the laws passed by various southern states in the effort to circumvent the Supreme court are only that portion of the iceberg that shows above the water. An excellent summary of all that legislation, and of the progress of desegregation, whether token or real, could be written right here in Chicago from the files of the Southern School News. This is a comprehensive monthly bulletin written by southern newspapermen who are able enough at their craft to suppress their personal opinions and attain real objectivity. Such a summary also would be dull as dishwater, and meaningless except as a fever chart means something to a physician.

Tells Essence of Queries

Accordingly, most of the inquiries in the South were directed toward one of these ends:

Since southern public education lagged until recently behind the national average, how much is taught [measured most conveniently but never quite accurately by expenditures] is not as important, perhaps, as how it is taught, whether to mixed or segregated groups.

Many white southerners will admit that "separate but equal" was more a legal shibboleth than an actuality until the earlier Supreme court opinions on admissions of Negroes to white colleges spurred the region, tragically late, to conform the boast to reality. But how equal can "separate but equal" ever be? More important, to what extent will mixing classes remove these inequalities, as the Supreme court and its philosopher, Gunnar Mydral, maintain the process will?

Education Means to End

Education is primarily a means to an end, to the intelligent exercise of citizenship, of course, but more immediately and pressingly to earning a living. To what extent has the economic progress of the southern Negro, and of his community, been hampered by poor education? In particular, has his education failed to fit him to get ahead in a factory?

For more than a half century it has been recognized, more thoroly in the south than elsewhere, that if that region is to attain the same standard of living as the rest of the country, it must find jobs for its surplus labor in factories. Assuming that the southern states mean what they say when they threaten to close their schools rather than desegregate them—as at least four of them assuredly at this time—won't that mean economic suicide? The greatest disaster since Reconstruction? Modern factories have few jobs for illiterate or semi-literate workmen.

Answers to these questions will appear subsequently. Frequently these answers will be contradictory and contentious. The writer offers no resolution of these contradictions. He will be content if he can give an impartial report of what he was told, leaving his readers to draw their own conclusions.

Finds No White Hostile

Two general observations may be in order. The reporter's apprehensions that he might encounter hostility were groundless. He could not have been more cordially received, nor been granted more cheerful assistance. This was true despite the fact that he arrived late in a stream of northern writers, some of whom have misquoted and misrepresented, while others tarried only long enough to embellish their prejudices with a little local knowledge.

The white south has a story to tell, and is anxious to tell it. What hurts it most is the impression ,widely cultivated in the north, that segregationist sentiment is confined to the white trash and the blatherskite politicians who pander to them. No white southerner was encountered who welcomes desegregation, tho many of them regard some for mof it as inevitable. What they propose to do is, of course, a longer story.

Negroes Equally Cordial

Negroes were equally cordial, and it was notable that the closer their dealings with the problem had been, the more moderate their views tended to be. Even the N. A. A. C. P., widely denounced as it is thruout the region, is a different N. A. A. C. P. from that in the north. Its leaders are no less resolute, but they have a better conception of the barriers that face them than obtains in New York. They do not expect perfection next week, or next year.

This reporter did not xisit Littl Rock, but Little Rock had preceded him whereever he went. It requires no decision wether Gov. Faubus fomented a riot or President Eisenhowed violated the constitution to recognize that what happened was ten times as damaging elsewhere in the south as it was in Arkansas.

Hardens Lines Immesurably

It hardened the lines immeasurably, subjected every moderate man of whichever color to the charge of being a traitor to his race if he voiced his moderation, and damaged individual and group race relations tragically.

There remains, as Editor Hodding Carter of the Mississippi delta country maintains, a moderate minority in the south, but it will now be almost voiceless for a year, or a decade.

Integration

ENDICOTT, N. Y. — Here are excerpts from an address made at Harpur college, State University of New York recently by Dr. George Edmund Haynes, noted sociologist and co-founder of the National Urban League.

He has also been a prime mover in the National Association of Christians and Jews. A founder of Dilliard university in New Orleans, he has taught at Fisk university and is a special lecturer at City College of New York. He is a former member of the State University Board of Trustees and served on the Young Commission which recommended establishment of a State University of New York, in 1948.

". . .The question we have about integration today is: "What if we do not integrate? What if we go on tolerating the inequalities?

Perhaps this nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal, never had such a challenge as it has now. Our basic view of democracy and all that we hold more precious than life is challenged by the communist system. We are the leaders of the Free World.

Perhaps this issue of integration has been no better stated than in President Eisenhower's letter to the Episcopal Bishop Robert R. Brown of Little Rock, Ark., who led in organizing the prayer meetings held in that city, Saturday, October 12.

The President said: 'Today the very concepts of freedom are under relentless attack by an atheistic ideology that denies any right or any dignity to the individual not accorded him by the state. The liberties we so much love, that we can practice among ourselves because of the basic belief that we constitute one brotherhood under the fatherhood of God, demand that we stand together steadfastly against the relentless assaults of international communism.

If we ourselves defy the instruments by which our liberties have been and are being preserved, our vulnerability to the outside threat will be vastly, even terrifyingly, increased.'

Another fact which makes the issue of integration so crucial is that three-fourths of the world's population is colored. Our children in school today must have the opportunity to learn to live in harmony alongside each other irrespective of race or color.

Transportation by air and transmission of knowledge over telephone, telegraph, radio and TV are so swift today that peoples and ideas from all parts of the world are coming to our communities and we are going everywhere.

The white women at Dover, Del., who refused a glass of orange juice to Mr. Gbedemah, Minister of Finance of the Ghana Republic of West Africa, shook the sensibilities of millions of Africans on that Continent, to say nothing of Indians and Chinese in Asia.

It was so crucial that the President of the United States, as you can recall, invited Mr. Gbedemah to breakfast at the White House the next day to show our national attitude.

But what if Mr. Gbedemah had been an African student, who would not have been known? The treatment might have embittered him and ten years from now he might be a prime minister or president in one of the growing African nations. Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana was a poor student in America ten years ago.

Today we are in a race for survival in a world three-fourths colored and a communist bloc of nations controlling hundred of millions of people and denying the very meaning of the democratic way of life discovered and striven for in our country through blood and tears and tons of treasure.

To sum up: Integration is understood to involve contact and communication between groups with varying differences and social distance. It has become an integral part of our basic law. It stems from our democratic equality.

It is threatened by the cultural lag of folkways and mores of inequality built up from a slave type of society. The survival of the Free World is involved because the overwhelming majority of the world is colored and because a Godless communist regime is bidding against us for their loyalty.

What do these issues mean to all of us. Integration is a principle upon which there can be no neutral ground for those who believe in the American democratic way of life. All who so believe must act in no uncertain way to change the practices and beliefs of those North or South who are still controlled by the inequality ideology inherited from the past.

Integration is a must in public schools and other areas of civil and political rights, liberties, and privileges. This is not a denial of private choice and personal liberty but a guarantee of them.

Especially in education is action imperative. In every social science department including psychology there should be courses of study and research on race prejudice and scientific principles and methods of interracial and other intergroup relations.

The study and research of the biological and social inheritances, and the light they can throw on this world problem of racial and cultural contacts is a MUST for our colleges and universites.

Our leadership in the Free World depends upon men and women who possess understanding and know-how. The call is for Americans to settle in the South who will join the forces there working for the equality of our democracy."

Eisenhower Target of Attacks

Viewed as Maneuvered Into Position By Moderate Stand on Integration

By his continued insistence on middle-of-the-road moderation in the Southern integration rebellion, President Eisenhower has got himself maneuvered into a position where he now is drawing the fire away from the Southern Democrats and to himself.

This shift of the target to himself, which it was hard at first for Democratic leaders to grasp, opened the way for Northern Democrats to take the initiative, which they have done in two quick maneuvers we have observed this week. They have been aided and abetted by attacks on the President by Negro leaders.

Northern Democrats are, as we know, most vulnerable to the anti-civil rights bellicosity of the Southern wing of the party, since Negro voters constitute the balance-of power vote in constituencies where there are big urban centers.

Their first maneuver was in the statement issued by 15 of the 24 members of the Democratic Advisory Council, which includes former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson. It was created at a Democratic National Committee session several months ago but was boycotted and snubbed by the Southern party leaders in Congress.

In this statement, issued on Sunday after the Saturday meeting at Newport between the President and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, the Democratic leaders declared the President had failed to use the prestige and power of his office to rally the moral force of the country against defiance of law." He had, the statement said further, "lost the opportunity to exert leadership in behalf of law and order."

The description of this intervention of Democratic Party leaders as being "funny, if it were not so tragic" by James Hagerty, the President's press secretary, had a certain validity. That is, when you consider that it was an important part of the Democratic Party, the Dixie contingency which speaks with so strong a voice in Congress, that was responsible for all of the mischief in the first place.

But an attempt was made to take care of this inconsistency by no less a Democratic Party personage than its national chairman, Paul Butler. He took the occasion of a regional meeting of party officials from nine Southern States at Raleigh, N. C., to try to isolate the Southern wing of the party. He proclaimed the intention of the "national party" to stick by the Supreme Court's school integration decision, and, indeed, to extend civil rights, and openly defied threats of a third party in the South.

The political pertinency and timeliness of this Democratic attempt to put the President on the spot quickly became apparent when prominent Negro leaders began to speak out in criticism of the President's attitude.

Representative Adam Clayton Powell of New York, who jumped the Democratic Party to support Eisenhower last November, seemed to have some reservations now about the man in the White House. He pointed out that the President had not conferred with any Negro leaders, though he had talked to Senator Richard Russell of Georgia, leader in the fight against the administration's civil rights bill, in the midst of the battle in the Senate, and had talked with Gov. Faubus. The Negro Congressman got quick action when, at the President's instructions, the White House staff here was delegated to arrange a meeting with him.

Another Negro nationally and internationally known, Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong the trumpet player, was very blunt and direct with his contribution, which included a charge that the President is "two-faced" and "has no guts," which is about the strongest language heard so far.

What President Eisenhower is finding out is what Harry Truman knows so well from experience—that in a confused situation such as now exists in the Southern school integration matter, the people turn to the President in the quest for leadership.

In reaching out to President Eisenhower they are unable to take hold of anything firm and positive, with the result that he satisfies neither side.

Real Reconstruction History

(From The Nashville Globe)

Alert students of History get a big "kick" out of reading and informing themselves about the part which Negroes played in making the United States the great Republic it is.

What they learn from diligent research is that the persistent enemies of the Negro have deliberately falsified that part of the nation's history which if truthfully told in the school books that are required study for young people, would do much to ameliorate many of the harsh conditions under which Negroes suffer.

Far more that is published as history dealing with the Negro, is sheer false propaganda. This is especially true of most of what has been put out about the Reconstruction Era in the South.

What many of the writers in newspapers and magazines do not realize that they have been victimized by the kinds of history they have studied about the Reconstruction, Era. They could, if they actually desired to know the truth about Reconstruction, study some of the scholarly treatises on the part of Negroes played in the era as published by eminent Negroes who have specialized in research for facts about the Negro during Reconstruction. Scholars like Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, one of the early graduates of Fisk University; Dr. A. A. Taylor, long time Dean of Fisk; J. A. Rogers, columnist of the Pittsburgh Courier, who has traveled far and wide in the world gathering facts about the Negro and several other scholars. They can add much to the sum total of knowledge that present day editors and writers possess.

In one of Dr. Woodson's enlightening books is the following paragraph:

"On the whole, the reconstruction was a success. Unfortunately it tended to intensify the feelings of the races against each other, but much good was accomplished. Social reforms which the conservative element had frowned upon were inaugurated. The whipping post was abolished, branding with irons was discontinued, land monopoly was attacked, education at public expense was provided for, suffrage was extended to "poor whites" and representation in the government was based on population rather than on interests. More consideration was given the laboring man. The good things of life under the new regime were treated as belonging to the many rather than to the few. The Negro was later eliminated from the equation, but the good which he helped to accomplish has been retained."

There were frauds committed under the reconstruction governments, Dr. Woodson concedes. But about these he says:

"Negroes concerned in frauds were merely used as a means to an end. In most of the state, local and national officers were honest men like Cardozo, State treasurer of South Carolina, and Dubuclet, State Treasurer of Louisiana. The former ruling class however would not have it so and organized the Ku Klux Klan, and extra legal body, a hooded order, which instituted a regime of terrorism and drove the Negroes and their sympathizers out of office—in fact, out of the South, for large numbers of white and black reconstructionists had to flee for their lives."

Further the Carter Woodson history says:

Whites handled most of these funds and committed most of the abuses. After the restoration of the former white ruling class to office, moreover, there was as much fraud in two of these states as that under the Negroes and the carpet-baggers, but writers fail to refer to these later abuses."

According to DuBois, many Southern scholars went North after the Civil War, got jobs as history teachers in the big universities and worked at giving a false impression of Reconstruction. In addition, the returning element that got back into the court houses Down South busied themselves in destroying the records which showed the truth as to how the state governments were run by the white and Negro office holders. Many of the Negro office holders, it is said, had been educated in Northern colleges but came back to their home Southern States after the war and were elected to office. False historians find it convenient to omit mentioning that fact.

What many of the writers in newspapers and magazines do not realize that they have been victimized by the kinds of history they have studied about the Reconstruction, Era. They could, if they actually desired to know the truth about Reconstruction, study some of the scholarly treatises on the part of Negroes played in the era as published by eminent Negroes who have specialized in research for facts about the Negro during Reconstruction. Scholars like Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, one of the early graduates of Fisk University; Dr. A. A. Taylor, long time Dean of Fisk; J. A. Rogers, columnist of the Pittsburgh Courier, who has traveled far and wide in the world gathering facts about the Negro and several other scholars. They can add much to the sum total of knowledge that present day editors and writers possess.

In one of Dr. Woodson's enlightening books is the following paragraph:

"On the whole, the reconstruction was a success. Unfortunately it tended to intensify the feelings of the races against each other, but much good was accomplished. Social reforms which the conservative element had frowned upon were inaugurated. The whipping post was abolished, branding with irons was discontinued, land monopoly was attacked, education at public expense was provided for, suffrage was extended to "poor whites" and representation in the government was based on population rather than on interests. More consideration was given the laboring man. The good things of life under the new regime were treated as belonging to the many rather than to the few. The Negro was later eliminated from the equation, but the good which he helped to accomplish has been retained."

There were frauds committed under the reconstruction governments, Dr. Woodson concedes. But about these he says:

"Negroes concerned in frauds were merely used as a means to an end. In most of the state, local and national officers were honest men like Cardozo, State treasurer of South Carolina, and Dubuclet, State Treasurer of Louisiana. The former ruling class however would not have it so and organized the Ku Klux Klan, and extra legal body, a hooded order, which instituted a regime of terrorism and drove the Negroes and their sympathizers out of office—in fact, out of the South, for large numbers of white and black reconstructionists had to flee for their lives."

Further the Carter Woodson history says:

Whites handled most of these funds and committed most of the abuses. After the destruction of the former white ruling class to office, moreover, there was as much fraud in two of these states as that under the Negroes and the carpet-baggers, but writers fail to refer to these later abuses."

According to DuBois, many Southern scholars went North after the Civil War, got jobs as history teachers in the big universities and worked at giving a false impression of Reconstruction. In addition, the returning element that got back into the court houses Down South busied themselves in destroying the records which showed the truth as to how the state governments were run by the white and Negro office holders. Many of the Negro office holders, it is said, had been educated in Northern colleges but came back to their home Southern States after the war and were elected to office. False historians find it convenient to omit mentioning that fact.

Thank The Lord, And Pass The Ammunition. . . .

Reprint from issue dated: November 16, 1956

Another day has rolled around for the American people to cast aside many of their daily problems and give thanks. Under the Roosevelt administration, the fourth Thursday in November was set aside as the national holiday. But in Arkansas we are lost as to what day will be designated as the day for turkey eating and giving thanks. We are not sure that Arkansas will go along with the nation in its observance of the holiday, for during the past administration, the state seems to let Mississippi set the pattern for Arkansans to follow.

But that is neither here nor yonder, what we are concerned about most, is just where does the Negro fit in, in observing Thanksgiving day. Irrespective as to what day it falls, the Negro has little to be thankful for, unless he can put a special prize on being alive. He can't be thankful for his status in a country to which he has given his life's blood to develop and protect, yet receives less of the privileges to enjoy opportunities it offers than any other human being. The Negro cannot be too thankful for living when he has to live in fear in a land that advertises itself as the "Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave." The Negro cannot be too Thankful when he gets the stark realization that the only part of America's Patrotic song applies to him is Where My Father Died."

Little Rock, Ark.

From where we stand Thanksgiving offers little time for observance for the Negro when he is living in a land that is controled by Klanism, and whose officials encourage acts of violence hurled directly at the Negro to keep him in a state of confusion, and from exercising his full rights guaranteed him under the precious document that he died so valiantly to preserve.

Gazette 11-22-57

In Arkansas, the Negro has far less to be thankful for this year than he had during past administrations. A few years ago he was thankful that he was part of a commonwealth whose executives were striving to bring Arkansas into the union where its populace would be citizens of these United States, and enjoy every privilege and opportunity that America offers.

Today, as we face Thanksgiving, all we can visualize is strife, mob action, cross burnings, threats, court actions, not thruout the world, but here in a land, with a so-called democracy, that it is striving like hell to get other nations of the globe to accept.

This Thanksgiving should find the Negro, instead of using all of his time giving thanks for his status in life, preparing to better himself, where he can enjoy the rights of full fledged citizens.

Sovereignty Group Tells Of Public Relations

HEADWAY MADE WITH TV

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 3.—Mississippi's "watchdog" agency over racial segregation has reported it has been able to win better treatment of the South in the nation's hometown newspapers and one national television network.

The state Sovereignty Commission in a report to the special session of the Legislature said it had spent $65,466.95 of its $250,000, mostly for public relations.

Direct Mail Sent

"Over 200,000 pieces of direct mail have been sent outside the South to hometown radio and television stations, newspapers and in some cases state legislators," the report said.

The mailings and personal contact by Hal DeCell, commission public relations director, have resulted in "more fair treatment given the state editorially in hometown newspapers," the commission said.

Mr. DeCell has attended meetings of and worked with the National Editorial Association, the New England Press Association and other newspaper groups.

The commission said one of the more difficult problems is to gain "less slanted reporting" from the television networks but that "some headway has been made by at least one of the three major networks." The network was not identified.

Fund Withdraws

The report said the Fund for the Republic with 15 million dollars to spend was "one of the richest organizations opposed to us" and "concentrated through at least 28 different projects toward attempts to integrate and aid integration in the South."

"In an effort to get the facts and our side of the story to these people, Mr. DeCell was successful in obtaining a meeting with President Robert Hutchins and other officials of the Fund for the Republic in Los Angeles and Pasadena, Calif.," the report said.

"As of last July, the Fund for the Republic has withdrawn from the integration picture in the South with the exception of one financial grant which they continue to make to the Southern Regional Council, an organization which is not active in Mississippi."

The commission said Mr. DeCell acted as adviser in production of an NBC television show on Clarksdale, Miss., schools, exercising "advisory rights in ascertaining the complete objectivity of the complete film."

Race Problem Is National Says Hodges

Mobile Press Reg. 11-24-57

MOBILE (AP)— The South "has often been subjected to thoughtless and inaccurate criticism," North Carolina's governor said last night, adding that "the greatest misconception . . . revolves around the question of segregation in our public schools."

Gov. Luther H. Hodges said, however, that "the race problem is a national problem" and now "the basic attitudes and feelings of the average person in those states outside the South . . . are not a great deal different from those of the Southern citizen.

"Any difference is largely explained by the difference in the degree of problems facing different sections of our nation."

Hodges spoke at a banquet ending the 20th annual convention of the Alabama Chamber of Commerce. About 300 attended.

All Steps From The South

Informer Sat. 2-23-57 P.12

Advocates of the so-called "Southern position" on race and segregation take great joy in pointing to the difficulties in race relations in Northern and Western states where there is no legal segregation. They point, for instance, at the practical situation in New York's Harlem, where all or most of the pupils in a school may be Negroes, due to the fact or neighborhoods where only Negroes live.

Houston, Texas

It can be said with reasonable certainty that most, if not all, of these racial difficulties in states where there is no legal segregation have stemmed from conditions in the South. The arrest and mistreatment of Negroes as fugitive slaves outside the South during the days of slavery was due entirely to the institution of slavery in the South and the laws which Southerners in the Congress had caused to be enacted. When slavery came to an end in the South, these difficulties due to slavery disappeared in the North.

The same is true of the difficulties based upon race which now exist in any acute form in places where segregation does not exist by law. In the first place, Negroes who migrate to other sections of the country have been denied equal educational opportunities in the South. They are therefore without the training and the experience which are necessary for assuming the responsibilities of citizenship and making proper adjustment to the civilized processes.

White people have also migrated in very large numbers to other sections of the country, and they have carried their racial hatreds with them. In positions of power in schools housing and industry, these white Southerners in other sections of the country have done all they could in many instances to consign Negroes to the kind of opportunities which would have been accorded them in the South.

What is happening, for instance, in the matter of the schools in New York City in this era of desegregation and integration indicates what may be expected. Recently the New York City Board of Education has begun to take steps to make assignments of pupils and teachers in such a way as to provide practical integration and to avoid the injustices which have befallen Negro children. These steps would not have been taken if historic school segregation was still in full bloom in the South.

It is not unreasonable to predict that, as and in the proportions that legal segregation gives way under the impact of Federal law in the South, the racial difficulties of the era of legal segregation will disappear in other sections of the country. Just as in the days of slavery, it has been the legal pattern of segregation which has tended to mirror its injustices and proscriptions to other sections of our fair America. When legal segregation goes in the South, its poisons will not be able to contaminate the rest of the nation.

GENERAL

Says Long Patience of Negro in Face of Terror 'May Be Nearing An End'

Yesterday Thurs. 2-28-57

Des Moines, Iowa

P.1

Washington.—The Negro's long patience in the face of "continuous violence" may be nearing an end, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, told a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee here this week.

Supplementing his testimony before the committee on behalf of 25 national organizations, Mr. Wilkins, on Feb. 19, warned the committee members that he could not "predict what mood would be engendered" among Negro citizens if Congress failed to pass legislation assuring them "a minimum safeguard of the constitutional rights which have been so long denied them."

Measures

Mr. Wilkins testified on behalf of pending civil rights measures which would provide civil remedies against interference with the right to vote, authorize the Department of Justice to initiate civil suits on behalf of persons deprived of their civil rights, set up a special civil rights division in the Justice Department, and establish a bi-partisan commission to investigate violations of civil rights.

Queried by Senator Sam J. Ervin (Dem., N. C.), the NAACP leader agreed that the voting rights of Negro citizens in North Carolina are more secure than in Mississippi or Alabama. However, he pointed out, there are only about 145,000 registered Negro voters in the state out of a potential of 550,000. This is far below the national average, Mr. Wilkins said, and would seem to indicate restraining factors which keep nearly three-fourths of Negro citizens of voting age away from the polls.

Outraged but Patient

Recalling that "the period from last September up until last week has been marked by almost continuous violence directed at Negro citizens and group in the South who seek the elimination of discrimination and segregation," Mr. Wilkins told the senators that "Negro citizens have been outraged, but they have been patient."

Yesterday 7-8

Thus far, he said, "our people have maintained their hope in spite of specious talk, rebuffs and violence. Under advice of some dedicated men they have followed a non-violent course in the face of extreme provocation. Under advice of others, notably the NAACP, they have placed their trust inthe law, the courts, in legislative bodies, and in the orderly processes of government.

"What they are asking of this Congress, and what sincere men of both parties are seeking to give them, is a minimum safeguard of the constitutional rights which have been so long denied them. But in the face of this patience, in the face of these provocations, even this minimum is being challenged."

NAACP Head Says Negroes May Not Remain Patient

WASHINGTON. — The Negro's long patience in the face of "continuouis violence" may be nearing an end, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, told a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary committee here last week.

Wilkins suggested that if Congress fails to pass civil rights legislation, Negroes may be tempted to answer violence with "defensive action."

The NAACP head told the Senate subcommittee that although there have been shootings and bombings of Negro homes and churches, Negroes have been patient and resisted the temptation to talk "overt defensive action."

He added: "I cannot predict what mood will be engendered if the system which has prevailed for 80 years should, through machinations of any sort, be perpetuated in this enlightened middle of the 20th century."

Wilkins attacked as a "vicious circle" and "an obscene comedy" what he termed "incredibly lengthy discusions of technical language" aimed at blocking anti-racial discrimination measures. He said some persons have made careers out of denying Negroes their constitutional rights.

Wilkins was Tuesday's only witness. Sen. Jacob B. Javiss (R) N.Y., was to testify but his statement was distributed instead. It was clear that the subcommittee's decision to have a showdown vote on March 5 had taken the steam out of the hearings.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D) N. C., said that Congress "might well consider broadening" civil rights legislation to cover equality for woman and Indians.

Southern senators have protested the subcommittee's 4 to 2 decision to end hearings and vote March 5. They may try to hold up a subsequent showdown on the program in the full committee.

Ervin proposed a possible broadening of the legislation after Sen. Barry Goldwater (R) Ariz., testified late Monday in support of an amendment which would add a "right to work" provision to the bill.

The North Carolinian told reporters he did not know if he would favor such an amendment. But he said he has been asked by a number of women's groups to include an "equal rights amendment" for them. He said also that "we might put in amendments to protect the rights of Indians—they have been discriminated against."

Ervin, who has been leading the opposition to the bill in committee, was asked if he thought such amendments would be "one way of killing the bill." He replied: "I wouldn't think so."

Javits in a statement prepared for delivery before the subcommittee said that New York still has civil rights problems, principally in integratng some of its schools and in raising the qualty of educatonal facilities for Negroes and Puerto Ricans.

But he said its 1945 law providing equal job opportunity has worked well as have other state acts outlawing racial discrimination. He said the same technique could be applied to other states and at the federal level.

Javits declared the administration's program protecting voting rights of Negroes and setting up a commission to investigate offenses, is the "minimum which should be enacted at this time."

Russia Lashes Out at America's Treatment Of Her Negro People

State Press Little Rock, Ark.

Fri. 3-1-57 P. 1

According to a release Sunday by the Associated Press the Soviet news-paper Trud charged last week that freedom for Negroes in the United States exists only in the pages of the American "propoganda publications," such os Ameriko.

This was the first official Soviet criticsm of the State Department's Russian language monthly magazine since it resumed publication in Moscow last month simultaneously with publication of the English language Soviet magazine in the United States.

Trud said Amerika portrayed Negro jazz musicians Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington and others "smiling and dressed in the latest styled clothes, looking happy and prosperous."

"But is all this actually so " it asked. "What freedom and privileges does he actually have at home?"

The newspaper said the question could best be answered by citing an incident February 19 in Knoxville, Tenn., when Armstrong played before an audience of 3,000. It said the hall was split into two sections for white and Negroes and bombs were exploded in the hall by "racist demonstrators." (Actually the blast, apparently from a single stick of dynamite, exploded about 20 yards from the building.)

"Knoxville racists, the Council of White Citizens," Trud said, "called the presence of Negroes at the concert 'freedom for mongrels,.'"

"And where is the real freedom for 15 million Negroes in the United States—it exists only on the pages of American propaganda publications."

Clinical Observations On Yankee Abolitionists

Advertiser

WHY IS the Northern intellectual so hostile and so dogmatic in his attitude toward us Southern white devils and the race problem? The hickory-headed dogmatism of which we speak is well known to Alabamians through the incompetent, faithless reporting of Northern newspapermen.

Sun. 3-10-57

It certainly is not any essential humanitarian solicitude for the colored man, for these newspaper intellectuals are characteristically vexed, rather cold and often cynical wise guys.

P. 2

There is, we should say after more than a year of interminable contact with them on this, the Jim Crow Flyway, no single explanation of their locked & bolted minds, their narrow insistence upon making the struggle a simplistic one between hero and villain.

But after unending contacts with these stereotypers and scrutiny of their astonishing mental processes and unworldly reporting of the Southern circumstance, we recently commenced to have a glimmer of recognition, of a facet of something old and familiar. Behold the same characteristics in your officious, stewpot "liberal" patterer in politics; those who believe that what is good for General Motors is ruin for the country and that a person's political viewpoint is governed entirely by his means.

Montgomery, Ala.

IN THE WORK, The Anti-Capitalist Mentality, by Dr. Ludwig von Mises of New York University, you find an arresting passage on the anti-capitalist bias of American intellectuals:

. . . . European society is open to everybody who has distinguished himself in any field. . . Society in this sense is foreign to the American scene. . . There is little social intercourse between the successful businessmen and the nation's eminent authors, artists and scientists. Those listed in the Social Register do not meet socially the molders of public opinion. . .

American authors or scientists are prone to consider the wealthy businessman as a barbarian, as a man exclusively intent upon making money. The professor despises the alumni who are more interested in the university's football team than in its scholastic achievements. . . The men whose research has given rise to new methods of production hate the businessmen who are merely interested in the cash value of their research work. . . [The American rich] fail to see that their self-chosen segregation isolates them and kindles animosities which make the intellectuals inclined to favor anti-capitalistic policies.

THAT APPLIES to the political "liberal" who adheres to the left because the left takes the corporations and the rich down a notch or two. They cast their views in light of solicitude for the submerged third, but more often it is an officious itch to chastise the rich by regulation and taxation.

You see something of the same mentality in Northern intellectuals and many reporters in the face of the Southern race problem. They do not want to see that our problem was a long time growing and will be a long time expiring. They make it tidy and simple. They think of a mass of colored men oppressed and exploited by a class of snobbish Southern aristocrats.

They don't care particularly about the colored man. But they want to get their own back on that fanciful Southern aristocrat. In the case of some of the newspapermen, they probably equate the aristocrat with a pot-bellied stuffed shirt publisher.

Ike calls for equal opportunity

Afro-American

Sat. 11-30-57

Baltimore

AUGUSTA, Ga. (NNPA) — From the deep South, President Eisenhower Monday called for the elimination of "all artificial discrimination" which keeps an American from advancing on the basis of merit."

In a formal White House statement issued from the Augusta National Golf Club, where he was vacationing, Mr. Eisenhower proclaimed Nov. 19, the anniversary of President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, as "Equal Opportunity Day."

P. 2

The text of the President's statement follows:

"One of our ringing pronouncements of our American Declaration is that 'all men are created equal.'

"Today, when our national strength is being tested at every point, this tradition takes on added urgency. Our nation's economy can ill afford to waste the talent and abilities of any individual because of discrimination against him on the basis of his race, his color, or his creed.

* * *

"EVERY CITIZEN who helps to make legal and economic equality a living fact is helping America.

"November 19, the anniversary of the Gettysburg Address, has been designed Equal Opportunity Day.

"In Lincoln's words, 'it is altogether fitting and proper' that we should use this day to rededicate ourselves to the firm establishment of equal opportunity for all.

"Let every citizen of the United States, whether an employer or employee, farmer or business man, join in the effort to abolish all artificial discrimination which hinders the right of each American to advance in accordance with his merits as a human being and his capacity for productive work."

Book Tells! 'Deep South Says Never'

Eagle Thurs. 8-8-57
Tulsa Oklahoma p. 1

"For the sake of your children, your children's children, talk white, think white, hire white, buy white and remain white."

"They couldn't send enough bayonets down to compel the people to send their children to school with Negras."

"I am pledged to the separation of the races at all costs."

These are but three of the answers John Barlow Martin got in his journey through the South gathering material for his new book, "The Deep South Says Never." The first is an exhortation written by Robert Patterson, leader of the White Citizens' Councils in Mississippi, and published in a circular distributed by the Council. The second is the answer made by Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia to a question put by Mr. Martin. The third is a statement from the inaugural address of Governor Cole of Tennessee.

Book is Result of Research

"The Deep South Says Never" is the outstanding result of extensive research in the field, faithful recording of direct conversations with key people, scrupulous adherence to the reporter's obligation to present as complete a picture as possible.

Here are factual descriptions (often in the words of the men themselves) of segregation leaders: Sam Englehart, Executive Secretary of the Citizens' Councils of Alabama; W. J. Simmons, organizer of the Council in Jackson, Mississippi; Attorney General Cook of Georgia, who claims he would sell the state parks rather than desegregate them; Robert Patterson and Asa "Ace" Carter, two of the strongest figures in the White Citizens' Council groups.

Mr. Martin records events little known outside the South: Emmett Till and Autherine Lucy were focal points of incidents given world-wide publicity; but how many people outside the state of South Carolina are aware of the school board struggle in Summerton, a "black belt" town? Mr. Martin is aware of it, and his report on the activities of W. B. Davis, local Council leader; School Superintendent Hugh B. Betchman; Charles Plowden, town banker; the Reverend Henry Rankin, Presbyterian minister and head of the Council's Race Relations committee; the Reverend Mr. Richberg, spokesman for the Negroes and minister of the Liberty Hill Methodist church, shows with brilliant clarity the practical problem facing the whole nation.

"The Deep South Says Never" is more than a record: it is a weapon, and a warning. It is a warning against complacency, the attitude that tensions have subsided, and the tendency to be deceived by the pictures in the border states where desegregation is working out. It is a weapon in its sharp and accurate delineation of the progress which is being made by desegregation forces, and the pressures which are being brought to bear by the hard-core South.

John Bartlow Martin has three times won the Benjamin Franklin Magazine award for exceptional reportorial jobs he has done. "The Deep South Says Never" is another such report: an invaluable handbook for anyone who wants to know what is actually happening in the South, while the Civil Rights debates make front page news through the nation.

CHANGES IN LIFE OF NEGRO NOTED

(Editor's Note: The author is The Associated Press correspondent at The Hague, Netherlands. She came to this country with some European conceptions of America, including the Negro problem. In this article, she tells how she feels now, after a cross-country tour.)

By NEL SLIS

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (AP)—The Belgian film producer recognized me for a fellow European and spoke frankly.

"The situation over here is not ideal," he said, "but it's vastly different from what the average European thinks the position of the Negro in America is."

His voice reflected his surprise—the surprise most foreigners feel when they visit the United States for the first time. In Europe, it is generally believed that American Negroes are repressed and kept in a semi-primitive standard of living.

Europeans who have traveled, of course, know better.

And some of us were treated to an education in our own backyard last year when a colored troupe toured Europe in "Porgy and Bess."

Impressed by Culture

On the stage they portrayed what most of us thought was typical Negro life in America. Then we met the actors socially at cocktail parties. In the Netherlands, as must have happened elsewhere in Europe, we were overwhelmed by their culture, sophistican and sharp business sense.

During my four months' visit here in America many Europeans—and Far Easterners too — have talked to me in astonishment about the Negro's share in America's cultural, political and social life. They were impressed by the mutual tolerance, by the eagerness of both white and colored to improve the situation. By the Negro's fervent patriotism.

Remarked a French mystery writer: "The position of the average Negro in the South is still miserable, but in the North they are very much a part of the picture.

An Indonesian parliamentarian observed: "Housing conditions for the Negroes in the bigger cities are excellent."

Negro Is White House Aid

Visitors are amazed to learn a Negro is holding down a $12,900 a year job on President Eisenhower's executive staff—E. Frederic Morrow, 48-year-old lawyer and first Negro White House aid.

To see how the Negro fared all over the country I traveled from East to West coasts and came back through the South.

Everyone told me that life for the American Negro is slowly but surely changing. Two major reasons seem to be: he participates in the postwar prosperity boom and he gets a lift from the fact his African brothers are being recognized formally and politically by the Western World, notably by the American government.

Increased earnings of colored workers have brought prosperity to publishers of some 150 to 200 Negro newspapers and magazines.

Progress Being Made

The most important magazine is probably "Ebony," which resembles "Life" in format. Its articles have particular appeal for colored people: profiles of well known Negroes such as Ralph Bunche and Sugar Ray Robinson, and stories such as the independence of the African Gold Coast under the name of Ghana.

Talking with Negroes, I found that while they acknowledge their race doesn't have equality, they are making progress and certainly could be far worse off then they are. Of course, there are exceptions.

A New York cab driver I rode with said he had gone to elementary school with the present premier of Ghana, Dr. Kwame Nkruhmah.

"He was wiser," said the cab driver, "and had the opportunity to come to Columbia University, and then back to his own country."

Trend Found Upward

The driver still felt Africa was his home. He was a seaman, and only driving a taxi because his wife was sick and he wanted to stay with her until she recovered.

"Next month I am going back to sea," he said, "and I always manage to get to Africa, which is my own country."

But some of the other things I learned were:

More and more Negroes are working in white collar jobs. And many white firms employ them in advertising products for the more than 15 million Negro customers. In science, sports and the arts, the trend is upward.

For example, one of the vice presidents of Union Carbide, one of the world's largest chemical firms, is a young Negro, Lloyd Cook of Chicago.

Heads Chemical Society

He told me that he was accepted socially so long as he remained in the field of science. He is president of the Chemical Society in Chicago, a purely social organization.

"But," he said, "I could never be a member of Chicago's leading golf and country club."

Cooke discussed the alleged tolerance foreigners are supposed to feel toward Negroes. He said that in Chicago it was the European immigrants who were especially anti-Negro. Foreigners may be shocked by American segregation problems, he pointed out, but "they don't have one of their own."

In the nation's capital, I found whites and Negroes mingling freely. But it is very difficult for Negroes to find living accommodations in the sections tradionally white.

Tells of Visiting South

Visiting the South I got the feel that the issue of civil rights is more and more becoming emotional, rather than political.

On a bus going down into Virginia, a distinguished looking white woman sat talking with a Negro woman. At the first stop, Richmond, the waiting rooms and rest rooms are distinctly marked "for whites only" and "for colored people."

The two women went their separate ways, but getting back onto the bus they again fell into conversation.

Max Ascoli, editor of the magazine "The Reporter," in an editorial said: "Ultimately the sharper differences and conflicts dwindle, and lines are established that go beyond all groups. He was referring to other people who have had to overcome similar obstacles, the Irish, the Germans, and Jews.

"This is the way America has been made and is being made, thanks to the toughness and fairness of American politics. This will certainly happen south of the Mason-Dixon Line. Both white and Negroes know that it will happen. It will never be too soon," Ascoli wrote.

This year, 1957, is important to Negroes. It gave them their first great tennis star—Althea Gibson from Harlem, who won the women's singles at Wimbledon and was hailed as a national heroine.

Singers Harry Belafonte and Nat King Cole, among others, are riding the crest of popularity.

And constitutionally, this year may decide on their civil rights in the South, including their right to vote, and the further education of their children.

It was in the Deep South that people told me: "Of course segregation is unconstitutional, but the North must give us time."

Visitor Calls Nigeria Alert To Integration

Courier-Journal

Tues. 9-17-57

Says News of Riots Puzzling to Christians

America's integration troubles are followed avidly, but with certain misgivings by the people of Nigeria, the country from which about 90 per cent of America's original Negroes came.

This is the observation of Dr. Patrick H. Hill, who taught for nine years at Nigerian Baptist Theological Seminary at Ogbomosho.

Now on furlough, he will be visiting professor of missions this school year at Carver School of Missions and Social Work. He spoke last night at a convocation opening the school's 51st year.

Dr. Hill said in an interview that news of trouble in racial integration of public schools of the United States is of great interest to Nigerians.

Notes Reports Published

"What happens in Clinton, Tenn., today will be in our paper tomorrow," he said.

By and large, Nigerians are "happy over the progress of integration" in Ame they identify themselves with the Negroes here. But news of violence puzzles some of them, he said, because "many think all white people and all Americans are Christians."

One of his most difficult tasks, Dr. Hill related, was preparing Nigerian students coming to America "for what they will meet in Christian America."

He said that of some 2,000,000 Christians in the 33,000,000 population of Nigeria, about 55,000 are Baptists.

Negro Solon To Ask Ike Recall Congress

Wants Session To Set Referendum On School Mixing

WASHINGTON (INS) — Rep. Adam Clayton Powell has served notice he will ask President Eisenhower to call a special session of Congress on the integration issue when the chief executive meets with Negro leaders soon.

Powell said the legislators should be called back into session immediately to provide for a "national referendum" on the question of whether, and when, Negro and white children should attend school together.

The Harlem Democrat, who threw his support to President Eisenhower during the 1956 political campaign, said the Chief Executive has decided to broaden a conference granted him to include other Negro leaders.

BROAD MATTERS

Powell, interviewed on Mutual radio's "Reporters' Roundup" Sunday, said he was informed the meeting would center on "the broad matters of integration rather than on the specific Arkansas matter."

Powell's appearance on the "Reporters' Roundup" program had been pre-recorded. When he appeared "live" Sunday afternoon on the NBC-TV program "Youth Wants To Know," he sounded the call for an "immediate" session of Congress.

Only the President can call a special session of Congress, so there was no doubt but that the Negro leader would reiterate his proposal in the White House conference.

He said the special session would provide an opportunity for the American people to show their determination to uphold the "law of the land" and implement the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

He also recommended legislation to centralize control of the National Guard in the Defense Department rather than allowing state governors to control the units.

Willkie Views Recalled

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In the light of recent happenings in the South, which have shocked so many of us and which will be exploited to our disadvantage by the Soviet propagandists throughout Asia and Africa, it seems to me that we might all do well to ponder the eloquent words of Wendell Willkie who, in his book entitled "One World," had this to say:

"Our way of living together in America is a strong but delicate fabric. It is made up of many threads. It has been woven over many centuries by the patience and sacrifice of countless liberty-loving men and women. It serves as a cloak for the protection of poor and rich, of black and white, of Jew and gentile, of foreign- and native-born.

"Let us not tear it asunder. For no man knows, once it is destroyed, where or when man will find its protective warmth again."

Bad News for Segregationists

Courier Pittsburgh Sat. 11-23-57

As if the aforementioned court decision slapping down foes of integration in Virginia were not enough, bad news for them comes nowadays from all directions, as well as their colleagues elsewhere.

Former President Harry Truman, the other night in New York City, expressed shock over the actions of Arkansas Governor Faubus and advised Americans to stop worrying over sputniks and to "concentrate on preserving the rights and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution."

At Boca Raton, Fla., that state's Governor LeRoy Collins told the convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association that the members had the opportunity and the responsibility "to develop and defend a public atmosphere free of racial fears and bigotry;" that "we can tear ourselves to pieces in civil strife and become, in effect, a ward of the rest of the nation or we can join hands and provide examples of human relationships and government responsibility for the rest of the nation to follow."

In a University of Notre Dame symposium at South Bend, Ind., veteran North Carolina sociologist, Guy B. Johnson, said that the Southern integration battle would get worse but eventually "defiant states are going to be lonelier and lonelier;" that there could be no doubt as to the outcome of the battle.

Then came the Young Democrats' convention in Reno, Nev., (a notorious jim-crow town) which approved a resolution on civil rights calling for vigorous enforcement of laws guaranteeing registration and voting rights regardless of race, color or creed, and calling racial discrimination "a disgrace."

Not to be outdone, Dr. Walter Prescott Webbs, a history professor at the University of Texas, told a Houston convention of historians that the South "is an island in a rising sea" that might be inundated unless it accepts the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Then, without undue ballyhoo, the Tennessee Board of Education voted at Nashville to allow the admission of "all qualified applicants" to all state-supported colleges but to give individual schools authority to limit enrollments.

It must be extremely frustrating to the segregationist element to read such statements and reports.

We suggest that it adopt as its national anthem that good old Negro spiritual, "No Hidin' Place."

Desegregation Called Basic To South's Future

PRINCETON, N.J., Dec. 8 (AP)—Urbanization and industrialization will change the social structure of the South far more than desegregation, says a report issued today by Princeton University.

But desegregation is viewed in the South as the "fundamental distorter of the traditional way of life," the report stated.

The report is the second of a seven part survey conducted by the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs under the direction of Dr. Melvin Tumin of the Department of Economics and Sociology.

Interviewers spent three months conducting research with a panel of leading citizens from Greensboro, N.C., before releasing their findings.

"Barring unforeseen catastrophes, the South will become more urban, more industrial, and more desegregated," according to the report. The continued active role of "enlightened leadership" is indispensable to these future developments.

This leadership will prevent "hard-core anti-desegregationists from organizing in the absence of other leadership," the report added.

Desegregation will triumph quickly and with low costs if liberal and conservative leaders are allowed to compete against each other "within the scope of legitimate legal action."

The presence of a legal command to desegregate is a "vital ingredient" to the outcome of the racial problem, the study concluded. This would give the advantage to those favoring desegregation because opposing forces would have to use anti-legal devices to counter desegregation moves and would thus lose some of their power.

Georgia Governor Talks Of Forced Integration

Kansas City Mo. Times Sat. 11-23-57

NEW ORLEANS. — (INS) — Gov. Marvin Griffin said Monday night that President Eisenhower will never force school integration with Federal troops in Georgia.

He spoke at a mass meeting before the citizens council of New Orleans together with Sen. James Eastland (D) Miss. The Governor declared:

"The President or no one else will ever march citizens of Georgia down the street."

Griffin added that if Federal troops are ever brought in, "they'll walk up and down in front of an empty school house."

"There are some who say," he continued, "they are going to force us to integrate our (school) lunch rooms by threatening to cut us off from Federal surplus commodities.

"If they do, I'm going to tell them to take their black eyed peas and stew pots and get out of Georgia."

Sen. Eastland attacked the President's newly created Commission on Human Rights and said its chairman, former U. S. Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed, was a one-time character witness for Alger Hiss.

He asked:

"What kind of justice can you expect from an outfit like that?"

NATION SPENDS 12 BILLION FOR WHISKEY SAYS GARY

Sobriety and Temperance is Greatest Problem of American People Says Governor Gary

"Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord," said Governor Raymond Gary Sunday afternoon at Tabernacle Baptist church before a capacity audience, during an elaborate program, at 3:30 p.m.

J. W. Simmons is president of the Brotherhood, and the chief executive was introduced to the audience by Thomas McNeeley, the program chairman. The governor and McNeeley were both delegates to the Democratic National Convention last year, and there was constant banter during the services about experiences enjoyed by both on that trip to Chicago.

The program opened with the audience singing "My Eyes Have Seen the Glory," and following the invocation the Male Quartette of the Dumas Avenue Baptist church sang a number, accompanied by guitar music.

"Many of you might not agree with me" said Governor Gary, as he arose following a fulsome presentation by Mr. McNeeley, "but I believe one of the greatest problems facing the world today is the excessive use of intoxicating liquor. The governor went on to point out that last year whiskey drinkers in the nation spent twelve billion dollars for the consumption of spiritous drinks.

"You might not know just how much money twelve billions dollars is" said Governor Gary, but I am going to give you a general picture so that you can carry some idea of this fabulous sum."

Reciting to his audience the many hugh sums Oklahoma spends annually for education, health, highways, agriculture and other items in the budget of state, Governor Gary pointed out that Oklahoma could run state government forty years on the annual whiskey purchases of the nation.

"It is terrible to think that such debauchery of men and women goes on daily in what we are prone to call a Christian nation," said the speaker.

Turning to current problems, in which he knew the audience would be interested, Governor Gary said "Racial problems are not confined to the United States(and he said his hearers should pause to note what is going on in the Middle East, that might throw the entire world into an ocean of blood and tears. "These problems regarding race are distinctly different to simular problems we have in the United States, and he pointed out that race problems are world problems.

The governor said imemdiately following the decision of the supreme court of the United States, outlawing segregation, newspapermen, television operators, radio men, and those who represent all forms of modern communications and intelligence agencies decended one morning upon his office and said:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has outlawed segregation. We want you to tell us governor what do you plan to do about it? What will be Oklahoma's approach to this controversial subject?"

" As I looked at my audience that morning I thought of the challenges that face our time and age. I thought of the Bible you and I read, and I thought of the Golden Rule, and quickly, I whirled upon my interrogators, and said "The Supreme Court has issued a mandate regarding segregation. I regard that mandate as the law of the land, and it is going to be carried out. In that trying moment, I felt that I should steep myself in that age old morality "Do unto others as you would that others would do unto you."

The governor said he was pleased to knew that the majority of people in this state thought just as he did. "When we put the matter up to the citizens, they voted three and one half to one to support my position. "This nation" said the Man from Madill, "in its travail and sorrow needs to turn to God, realizing that the greatest challenge of all time is resting upon our shoulders."

The governor commenting upon the problems of his office said they were heavy, and often he faced questions and issues that seemingly were beyond his reach, and beyond human solution.

"But," said Governor Gary, "when that time comes I always reach for my trusty Bible, for I believe as President Eisenhower did, when he took his oath of office on the capitol grounds last month. When President Eisenhower took his oath his hands were resting upon a particular scripture which read "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord." The governor concluded his address with the exprest belief that like Eisenhower, he feels that solution of all our troubles rested within the lids of the Bible.

The audience extended the governor a standing ovation at the conclusion of his notable address. Remarks and felicitation were made by Editor Roscoe Dunjee, Mr. John Simmons and Rev. E. W. Perry. The male chorus of New Hope Baptist church rendered two numbers.

South's Democrat Leaders Show Negroes Their Place Is Outside Looking Inside

Globe Fri. 3-22-57

Nashville, Tenn. P.16

But "Hopeful" And Dwindling Ex-majority Comfort Themselves By Continually Nagging President Eisenhower To Go Down And Speak To South About Something Or The Other

Washington, D. C.—Whereas the "White Wing" of the National Democrat Party is getting along just tolerably well, these days, [illegible] and the Negro wing of the Party of Roosevelt and Truman is worse than ever right about this time, it seems.

When, if ever the Negro had recovered from the shock it got at Yalta is really a very acute problem. The Negro Democrat leaders here right now, that this sep contrive to come up with a single issue calculated to win the masses of colored voters, as was their good fortune back in [illegible] when they [illegible] the emergent minority of colored citizens North or South would admit that they were Republicans and intended to vote that way in the election in which Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, a Republican, would go to the country against the man, Adlai Stevenson, Democrat.

The masses of colored voters were being easily persuaded that the Democrat Party was the Negro's best friend. The well paid Negro leaders found it easy to arouse Negroes with the claim that Republican Party was the friend of Big Business only, while the Democrat leadership was dedicated to taking care of the poor and needy.

In 1952 it was easy to arouse the Negro masses with a scare over another depression, such as occurred back in 1929, and to tell them that it was President Herbert Hoover, a Republican, who caused that depression; the same would be true with a man like Eisenhower in the White House, they said.

The Negro Democrat leaders surely did "get theirs" during the depression and hoped it would never end. It will be recalled that whereas the Democrats first elected Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932, along with a Democrat congress, because of the depression which they claimed the Democrats would "cure" by the simple device of selling beer, the fact is that while beer-selling did come in as soon as the Democrats took over in 1933, it was not until 1939 that any relief from the depression came and that was because the Democrats "got us into another foreign war" and deliberately so.

The Negro Democrat orators were warmongers in those days and proudly offered up lives of your sons in behalf of "their" country on political platforms all over the country. War was the only thing the Democrats could point to as a cure for hard times. That is the only cure they have now. In war times the money flows freely and nobody questions the cost of anything.

When in 1952, twenty years after the Democrats had their fling at trying to run the country Eisenhower a hero of World War II, went to the country advocating peace. Negro Democrat orators had only one comment. That was to charge the Republicans had plans for another "Hoover depression" up their sleeve. They had Vice President Alben W. Barkley to help them publicize the "awful way Republicans neglect the poor and needy when they are in office."

But nevertherless, and notwithstanding, Eisenhower was elected in 1952. In his first term he kept the country out of war and at the time brought the greatest wave of prosperity in the history of he country. It came as a result of the Republicans showing a sensible attitude toward the great captains of industry and the thousands of stockholders whose savings had created the great corporations. Democrats can always promise good times for everybody but they never tell the people they expect to get the money to make times good out of the hides of the very poor and needy they are pledging to give good times. But that is all Democrat prosperity ever means--higher and higher taxes.

AS TO CIVIL RIGHTS

The Negroes of the United States are farther along on the highway of progress toward getting their civil rights under the Republicans than ever before. Being committed to the principle of civil rights for all is, "in the Republican blood." The intelligent minority of Negroes have known that all along. That is why, when the plea to get them to swing over to the Democrat party has always left them singing "I Shall Not Be Moved."

Negro Democrats are almost wholly confined to a large contingent of Negro men. Negro women cannot now be induced to swing over to the Democrats. Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune did her best to corrall all Negro women of the country for the Democrats but signally failed in the 1952 election.

The masses of Negro men know that it is from Republicans the downtrodden masses may expect civil rights. The masses of Negro women not only know what their men know, they also know that it is from Republicans they can expect determined efforts to keep the nation at peace, with prosperity maintained by good jobs in private industry.

Of course there are still a good number of Negro orators trying to create a climate in which Democrat propaganda can thrive. They try to get the thoughts of the masses off he fact that all of the trouble the Negro is having over civil rights is coming in states under the full control of Democrat legislatures governors.

The Negro orators still have the "gall" to charge the Republicans with the responsibilty for filibustering, which is all set for scuttling President Eisenhower's civil rights program. Democrats showed they could get together at the beginning of the present congress, name all of its officers and put their men at the head of all the committees. But they could not use the same congressional votes and put loyal Civil Rights supporters in charge of civil rights measures.

Democrats do not believe in civil rights for the Negro and never have. They had twenty years control of every branch of the government with which to prove they believe in civil rights. But they did not do a frazzling thing.

And so that is why Negro Democrats are making curious noises in favor of the President delivering a special speech in favor of justice for the Negro Down South.

Why don't the Negro leaders address the South with the kind of speech they want Eisenhower to make? They could just say to the Southern Democrat leaders "If you don't do something to help us out now, 'Negro Democracy' is a gone gosling everywhere in the country."

Religious, civic, labor leaders ask aid for victims of southern 'squeeze'

Afro American Baltimore, Md. p. 3
Sat. 4-20-57

NEW YORK—Top religious, civic and labor leaders renewed their appeal this week "to all Americans of good will" to aid victims of economic reprisal and racism in the Deep South.

The call for stepped up financial assistance to critical southern areas was issued from "In Friendship," 122 East 57th St., New York City, the organization which has become a clearing house for emergency aid to victims of reprisal.

A spokesman for "In Friendship" said funds are needed now as never before to sustain the leadership in the Deep South fighting for freedom, justice and first-class citizenship.

IT WAS POINTED out that representatives of the organization have made a number of "on-the-spot" investigations in areas of the South where terror and violence have erupted.

In recent months, both Rev. George Lawrence, executive chairman of "In Friendship" and Miss Ella J. Baker, executive secretary, have made extensive tours of the troubled areas. In addition, Dr. Thomas Kilgore, Jr., chairman of the disbursements committee, and other officials of the group, have gone into the South to make investigations.

Quoting from a secret document circulated among members of the White Citizens Councils, the Rev. Mr. Lawrence said the continuing aim of the race-baiters is to discredit the NAACP and all racial and militant leadership.

The White Citizens Councils, he stated, hope to accomplish their goals by applying economic pressure against colored and social and political pressure against liberal white Southerners who refuse to cooperate.

AN URGENT APPEAL was made for funds to be sent to three critical areas—Tallahassee, Florida; Montgomery, Alabama; and Americus, Georgia. The situation is so serious in Mississippi that a special appeal is being issued to citizens of goodwill all over the nation.

Contributions may be sent through "In Friendship," 122 East 57th St., New York City 22, or directly to the following organizations:

Inter-Civic Council, 803 Florida St., Tallahassee, Fla.

Montgomery Improvement Association, 530 South Union Street, Montgomery 8, Ala.

Koinonia Farm, Americus, Ga., care of the Rev. Clarence Jordan.

Contributions for the Mississippi Fund, for reasons of security, should be addressed to the offices of "In Friendship" for disbursement. All contributions will be acknowledged when complete names and addresses are given.

Psychiatrists Report After Two-Year Study

By ROBERT GOLDENSTEIN

CHICAGO, May 15 (AP)—A national group of psychiatrists contended today that segregation injures the practitioner as well as the target individual, the community and the nation as a whole.

A report on the psychological aspects of desegregation was issued by the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, after a two-year study. Dr. Dana L. Farnsworth, president, said it represents the pooled observations and findings of more than 235 psychiatrists and social scientists representing every section of the country.

Taking up the Supreme Court's decisions against segregation, the authors said members of a segregated group always suffer from "unrealistic inferior feelings, a sense of humilation and constriction of the potentialities of self-development."

'Lower Level of Well-Being'

Persons condoning segregation practices, they went on, gain a "feeling of superior worth...merely from the existence of the downgraded group.

"This leads to an unrealistic and unadaptive kind of self-appraisal based on invidious comparison rather than on solid personal growth and achievement."

At the community level, the report said, segregation is directly related to high disease and death rates, some types of crime and delinquency, poor housing, substandard living conditions and disrupted or poorly organized family life. They added: "These social ills, however, do not remain confined to the segregated segment of the population; they inevitably lower the level of well-being for the community as a whole. For example, where a local government must provide duplicate sets of 'separate but equal' welfare and educational services, the budget of each must be lowered by the expense of the other."

Spread of Disease Possible

Poor living co n nnnnnnnnnnn o, can breed the spread of disease from "menial to boss" as easily as from schoolmate to schoolmate because "contagiousness does not discriminate."

For the nation, the authoris said, the existence of a large proportion of the population in an "economically, educationally and socially under privileged state robs the country as a whole of a substantial part of its human resources."

They contended segregation also is "extremely damaging to our prestige and friendships abroad, especially among the nonwhite people."

Meany Tells World Of U.S. Race Progress

Baltimore Afro American
Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 10-2-57

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Oct. 1 (AP)—The United States told the U.N. today it is fighting successfully against racial discrimination despite opposition such as experienced in Little Rock.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO and a member of the U.S. delegation, declared the controversy over school integration in the South "is only one episode in a peaceful revolution which has been going on in recent years." He said there is no question of its outcome, and the present episode "must be seen as one phase of a great advance."

Meany spoke before the 82-national Social and Humanitarian Committee, which is considering world social conditions.

U.S. POSITION

In the past the United States has taken the position that racial problems are an internal matter outside U.N. concern. Meany's mention of integration signified no change in the U.S. position, nor any desire to have the matter discussed in the U.N.

Meany repeated excerpts from his speech before TV and movie newsreel cameras this afternoon, thus underscoring that he spoke in order only to inform the world about U.S. policy. The subject was not mentioned by speakers who followed Meany.

Meany asserted that the United States has been making encouraging headway by eliminating racial discrimination in the armed services and federal employment. He said it is vanishing in private employment.

Meany noted the subject has been in the international spotlight "for a number of reasons."

"No statement on this problem would be adequate without reference to the present controversy over school integration in certain of our Southern states. This controversy shows there is still much to be done," he added.

"Nevertheless, to put the problem into perspective I would like to point out that 31 of our 48 states now have completely integrated school systems. In 10 other states integration is progressing and in most cases without difficulties."

Women in top role in integration fight

Afro American, Sat 5-11-57

Baltimore, Md.

By LULA JONES GARRETT

NEW YORK — Calling attention to six women being nationally acclaimed, here, Saturday, Miss Doris Fleeson, Washington correspondent, termed their achievement over racial and sex discrimination the most hopeful sign in the world today.

The women honored were Dr. Minnie G. Gaston of Birmingham, Ala., Mrs. Ruby Hurley of New York, Mrs. Juanita Mitchell, Baltimore, Miss Leontyne Price, New York; Miss Hilda Simms, New York, and Mrs. Maida Springer, New York.

Said Miss Fleeson:

"In the light of their accomplishment and their present status and distinction, let us not forget that it took more effort and more courage, and doubtless more ability for them to rise under the circumstances than it would have taken many of us.

"The fact that these women have risen to significant places in the nation is one of the things which give me hope. It can be done.

"WE ARE facing some critical problems whose answers lie principally in the realm of morality. There is the over-riding question of war and peace which faces all living creatures. At home there is the tense question as to whether all citizens are to have the benefit and protection of all and not just selected articles of the Constitution.

"The problems of segregation and integration are, at base, moral problems. And it is here that women, white and colored, can exert an influence great enough, if we will exert it, to bring about the solution in a just, reasonable and humane fashion.

"That we will reach a solution, is, of course, inevitable. It is inevitable that the solution should be in accord with the Constitution. What is at stake, it seems to me, is the way in which we reach that solution and the time it takes to reach it.

"Women the world over have always been the keepers of tradition. They still are and always will be because of our own natures and the nature of the society in which we live.

"WOMEN ARE, by the same token, the protectors of morality. Because we are the keepers of morality to a large extent we are the bulwark of religion in this nation. We need to make always clear the moral nature of the choices which lie before as individuals.

"It is the moral strength of many individuals in concert which enables our cities, our states and the nation as a whole to act on moral principles.

"We shall never make all men and women equal in capability. We can make all men and women equal before the law. We can make a society in which there is equal opportunity for all. And I believe deeply that woman can, should and must take the lead in bringing these things about.

"We are all the Children of God and we stand before Him as brothers. Can we do less than this for each other in the United States of America?

THE LUNCHEON was given by the Friends of the National Council of Negro Women, in the Sert Room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. According to Mrs. Henry Lee Moon, chairman of the executive committee, it is to be an annual affair.

Miss Mary Margaret McBride was mistress of ceremonies, and Miss Lena Horne, chairman of the organization, presented the awards.

MRS. JUANITA MITCHELL, in accepting the award, told the group that she had every hope in the final overcoming of segregation evils. The disturbances attending desegregation she likened to birth pains.

"America is undergoing the birth of a great new freedom," she said. "Every mother, who has been so fortunate as to, with the help of God, bring into the world a new life knows that at such a time she isn't told to relax or to take it easy, but to PUSH," the Baltimore lawyer declared.

Mrs. Mitchell, attorney, wife of Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau, NAACP, and daughter of Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, president of the Baltimore branch and the Maryland State NAACP branches, told the group that the award was not to her alone.

The award, she said, belonged to the many who have inspired her, such as the late Dr. Mary M. Bethune, Walter White, and Charles Houston, who urged her forward. "But most of all it belongs to my mother, Mrs. Lillie Jackson, who, equipped me with what she didn't have so that I might carry on the work she has begun."

* * *

MISS HILDA SIMMS, star of stage, screen and T-V, said, "Despite all the headlines, the magnificent contribution of colored artists abroad, plainly indicates that they are able and ready to compete with other peoples of the world.

"Here, it is imperious that we invest our art with dignity, wisdom and integrity, and when we are offered roles that erroneously portrait us to answer with a firm 'No!' "

IN RECEIVING her award, Mrs. Hurley, talked of her recent experiences in what she termed the "deep, dark and unholy South," and urged more women to lend their time and talent to human welfare.

Mrs. Hurley received the award for her courage and devotion to work with the NAACP. Because of a court injunction against the NAACP in Alabama, Mrs. Hurley now works out of Atlanta. She is Southeastern regional secretary of the association.

DR. GASTON is head of the Booker T. Washington Business College in Birmingham, Ala., first vice president of Smith and Gaston Interests, which consists of Smith and Gaston Funeral Directors, the Booker T. Washington Insurance Company, New Grace Hill Cemeteries, Inc., the A. G. Gaston Motels, Inc., and the Vulcan Realty and Investment Corporation.

She has worked diligently every year in the sponsoring of the Smith and Gaston Kiddie Klub, a public service feature of the Smith and Gaston interests to curb juvenile delinquency, and with the Smith and Gaston State Wide Spelling Bee, another public service feature to encourage better spelling among the elementary school children of the state.

MRS. MITCHELL was the first colored student elected to the editorial board of the Maryland Law Review of the University of Maryland Law School.

She was a special assistant to Walter White and National Youth Director, NAACP.

Mrs. Mitchell directed citizens march on State Capitol in Annapolis by 2000 citizens in 1942, resulting in the appointment of Governor's Interracial Commission, appointment of a new Police Commissioner, uniforming and appointment of additional colored policemen, and the investigation of police brutality.

She was director of the first registration campaign which put 11,000 new voters on the books in 1942. Counsel in Maryland recreational suits filed in 1950 to eliminate racial segregation in municipal and state beaches and swimming pools which were won in U.S. Supreme Court, Novembr 7, 1955.

Served as counsel in Baltimore school segregation suits filed in 1953 which resulted in Baltimore city school board being first southern city to integrate schools after Supreme Court decision on May 17, 1954.

In addition was vice president of National Council of Methodist Youth; founder and president of City-Wide Young People's Forum; founder of NAACP youth movement; secretary of Legal Redress Committee, Baltimore Branch, NAACP and the Maryland State Conference of NAACP Branches.

She is a life member and chairman of the Legal Committee of the National Council of Negro Women. Member of FEW Harper Temple, Elks. YWCA; Council of Churches; Baltimore Urban League; Women's Bar Association of Baltimore City; Monumental Bar Association and American Bar Association.

MISS PRICE, rated by critics as a great soprano, had her first important role in Virgil Thompson's "Four Saints in Three Acts." She scored a triumph last year as the star of NBC's T-V Opera Theater's presentation of "Tosca" and "The Magic Flute."

Miss Simms won the 1947 Critics' Award for outstanding actress of that year while playing in London. In 1953 she played opposite Coley Wallace in "The Joe Louis Story" film. Since 1954 she has been commentator and hostess for "Ladies Day" on WOV in NYC.

MRS. SPRINGER is internationally known in the labor field. Since 1955 and 1957 she served as an A.F. of L. representative to the International Confederation of Trade Union meetings in Accra, the Gold Coast and British West Africa.

NEW LAWS DESIGNED TO KEEP SEPARATION

Public Schools In 8 States Hold To Tradition

Fri. 5-17-57

ONE TENNESSEE BREAK

Memphis Serv.

By International News Service

ATLANTA, May 16. — Deep South states are holding firm in opposition to racial integration in public schools, three years after the United States Supreme Court's ruling that segregation is unconstitutional.

The historic court decree, issued May 17, 1954, brought violence to sections of the South, general unrest throughout the vast region and was followed by adoption of hundreds of new, stringent laws designed to maintain traditional separation of the races.

Negro To Be Graduated

In eight Deep South states today, not a single Negro child attends a public grade school or a high school with white students. In one other state — Tennessee—only one high school has been integrated.

At Clinton, Tenn., where rioting this fall accompanied forced integration of the high school, some of the old tenseness remained on the eve of the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision.

High school Principal D. J. Brittain Jr. asked Thursday that a policeman be stationed at every door of the school Friday when 17-year-old Bobby Cain becomes the first Negro student graduated with white students.

Young Cain's path to the senior class was cleared by National Guard bayonets when 12 students were admitted under Federal Court order. The move to integrate brought a series of riots and spasmodic dynamitings have followed. Five of the Negro students have left school, for one reason or another.

Number Relatively Low

Desegregation is now in effect in parts of nine states of the 17 which maintained dual systems under the long-standing "separate but equal" doctrine. Action in these states, however, has put only a relatively few of the region's nearly three million Negro children — some 300,000 — into integrated situations.

In Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, and in Tennessee with the exception of Clinton, the segregation line remains unbroken. Five of these states have maintained segregation also at the college level.

New state laws, including measures allowing governors to suspend some civil rights to keep down integration violence, have given impetus to litigation and agitation for an end to segregation in other aspects of Southern life. The Supreme Court decision outlawing transit system segregation in Montgomery, Ala. — followed by a series of devastating dynamite blasts against churches and ministers' homes—brought similar integration moves at Birmingham, Tallahassee, Miami, Atlanta, New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

Golf Courses Integrated

Since the Supreme Court decree, golf courses at Atlanta have been desegregated, and other decisions have applied the desegregation principle in scattered situations to bathing beaches and public park facilities. A Federal Court at New Orleans this week outlawed transit and park segregation.

More than 100 court cases are now pending, dealing with the segregation question. A major case in a few field under attack —public housing—will be heard in Savannah, Ga., beginning Monday.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, who said the 1954 decision opened the door to "100 years of litigation" still maintains the Deep South will not relent and end segregation.

Along The Integration Front

Weekly

Integration's Progress in Southern States. (Part III)

By Marcus Christian

New Orleans La

MISSISSIPPI, as we have already pointed out, is the only Southern state that has remained free of integration-desegregation suits thus far. True, Georgia talks loudly, but those lawless Mississippians want it known far and wide that theirs is the state which contributed the one and only president to the Confederacy. And as the native state of the official head of that tragic rebellion it has set the example of rebellion to U. S. authority--not only during Reconstruction, but in this more modern period. It is the classic example of one maladjusted child poising the minds and democratic principles of almost one-third of an otherwise good family. We say this because much of Southern action against the Constitution has been patterned upon "Mississippi Plans." Its state authorities seem never to have considered that the very fact of its lack of integration suits is a blasting commentary upon the political and economic condition of both its whites and its Negroes. Yet, even in Mississippi, the rumble of the Integration Train draws nearer. The trouble at Alcorn is fully indicative of the determination of dominating whites to show all and sundry just who is running the state. It may take some years to accomplish, but it seems a safe bet that the state of Bilbo and Eastland will at last be assigned to its proper niche in the Union.

MISSOURI now has only four high schools that have not complied with the Supreme Court's decision. Even more heartening is the statement that 300 whites are now enrolled at Lincoln University--a former all-Negro school. The state legislature is, in the meantime, considering a Human Rights Commission bill. A few scattered elementary schools have not complied, but it is generally conceded that full compliance is only a matter of time. Thus far, there have been no incidents, no friction; Negro students are "generally accepted by whites," and several have been elected to class offices or play on school teams. Two Negroes have served on the St. Louis Board of Education, but none has ever been elected, as yet.

NORTH CAROLINA seems to have eluded, for a time, full desegregation through the enactment of a pupil assignment law which passed its initial test before the U. S. Supreme Court. It apparently upheld an earlier ruling of the N. Carolina Supreme Court which ruled that pupils, seeking assignments to other schools, must apply individually "and not as a group or race." On the other hand, Negroes have already been admitted to, and given dormitory rooms in North Carolina State College, a formerly all-white institution. A student from the University of Florida admiringly declared that integration at liberal Chapel Hill "unquestionably has been successful."

OKLAHOMA, with slight proddings from NAACP leaders, seems to be making some integration progress. Its municipal and transportation facilities have been fully integrated; public facilities, such as hotels, etc., still appear to be in segregated columns. Despite urgings by the governor, no steps have been taken to consolidate state training schools for both races. Oklahoma now claims that it has saved its taxpayers one million dollars a year by its elimination of segregated schools. James Crow, Esquire, has only one school district left in which to die his final death.

SOUTH CAROLINA is the birthplace of the famed Southern firebrand, John C. Calhoun, whose state sovereignty views and nullificiation propensities still serve as beacon lights for all good states righters. It is also the home of ill-fated Fort Sumter, which fired the powder-barrel of the Civil War. Like Alabama and Mississippi, this state has a reputation to maintain--a record of hostility to U. S. institutions. It is therefore no surprise when state authorities seek to strengthen segregation laws by fair means or foul. Under its segregationist Governor George Bell Timmerman state authorities go gaily dancing down the treacherous Pied Piper road of States Rights.

TENNESSEE has its hands full with John Kasper, but it is still free enough to fight integration to the last ditch. Devious methods of non-compliance with the Supreme Court's decision is the talk of the day. Clinton made headlines, but there is still a world of desegregating to do. One federal judge took a hand by making permanent an injunction opening golf courses to Negroes. At Fisk, formerly an all-Negro university, one of its few white students now attending heads a student group boycotting racially-segregated public places. The Nashville school board has one Negro member.

TEXAS began a late effort against integration when its legislature passed bills opposing same. Unlike Louisiana's citizens, whites and Negroes closed in on the legislature to oppose the bills. African Methodist, Catholic and Jewish leaders had their say. Other Protestant denominations and labor leaders chimed in. Meanwhile, the first Negro player in the history of the state basketball championship tournament grabbed the spotlight.

VIRGINIA, the "home of presidents," still takes its embattled stand against integration. When two counties were ordered to desegregate by the Supreme Court, one state official declared that they were "helpless to obey" in the face of Virginia law. Students of history may reflect sadly that Virginia was the home of presidents, and also the home of slaves sold South, and that several presidents were reputed to have been the fathers of mulatto children sold into Southern slavery.

WEST VIRGINIA marches proudly forward in its desegregation program. Not only is this state removing its last racial restrictions, but racial designations as well. Its elementary schools are still segregated, but no one is screaming to keep them that way. An all-Negro sanitarium was closed in March and its patients transfered to what was formerly an all-white one.

In the foregoing summary we have not meant to imply that full integration is just around the corner. There are many more stubborn struggles facing Negroes in at least four states--Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi. This generation may not even live long enough to see full, smoothly-working integration in all Southern states, but we firmly believe that the next generation will.

Biracial Discrimination

Advertiser Fri. 4-5-57

The nation abounds in experts on the South. But though they profess to be the instrument of God, Freud and Myrdal, a fundamental fact about Southern education continues to elude them: that Negro children, like white children, are being denied equality of opportunity, compared with the rest of the nation, by the South's poverty.

Montgomery, Ala.

P. 4-8

The effects of this economic "discrimination," if you want to call it that, hits both races. The results, in terms of denied opportunity for good educations, are infinitely more grievous than could ever be the alleged psychological harm of segregation.

The South just hasn't enough money to spend on educating its children. True, we could do better than we have done. Here in Alabama, as has been amply demonstrated, local units of government have abdicated their school responsibilities. Even so, the tax potential of the South, because of the small per capita income, is poorest in the nation. In general Southerners pay a higher percentage of their per capita income for schools than taxpayers of other sections.

Illustrative of the hard problem facing Southern legislatures is the desperation displayed by the South Carolina legislature a few days ago. The Senate finance committee surprised everyone by giving a favorable report to a bill which would abolish the 12th grade. The savings would be used to raise teachers' pay.

Men who voted for the bill were mindful that it would make South Carolina the only state in the nation with an 11-year program. But their action was an expression of frustration and desperation. The plain truth is that many students in Southern schools are getting much less than a 12-grade education now because of overcrowding, reduction in standards, migration of good teachers, etc.

The effects of this situation on Southern children—white and Negro alike—cannot be mentioned in the same sentence with the supposed effects of segregated classrooms.

MAKES SPEECH 'FLUFFS'

Tired Eisenhower Skips Paris Fete

PARIS, Dec. 16 (UP) — President Eisenhower abruptly canceled plans to attend a gala NATO summit banquet tonight because he was tired after a day at the conference table.

White House press secretary James C. Hagerty said the President decided himself that he should go to bed early and that "medical decisions" had nothing to do with it. The President's official reason was "the lateness of the hour."

Some observers said the President appeared sleepy as he appeared for the opening conference session in the Palais de Chaillot this morning.

Mispronounced Words

Although he delivered his 18-minute address at the opening session in a forceful manner, he mispronounced at least 10 words, including "assumption . . . dictat . . . inevitable . . . decay . . . irresistible."

No two White House reporter agreed on the number of slipup in the President's delivery. Experienced Washington newsmen said 10. Others said as many as 22.

Eisenhower suffered difficulties in speech briefly after his mild stroke Nov. 25.

But White House physician Maj. Gen. Howard McC. Snyder said the President was "fine" today. He said his trouble with words was "not necessarily" connected with his illness.

Counted Four Fluffs

Hagerty said he counted "four fluffs, at least two less than the average the President makes when he broadcasts from the White House."

The President got genuinely tangled in the word "abhorrent." He made two tries at it, smiled fleetingly, and skipped over it.

The 37-minute morning session, taken up mostly by his speech, was followed by a secret session that lasted four hours and 26 minutes—one hour and 26 minutes longer than scheduled. It started at 3:30 p.m. and ended at 7:56 p.m. The dinner was scheduled for 8:30 p.m.

The President apparently did not feel up to attending the state dinner for the NATO chiefs which followed at the Palais de Chaillot

Human Relations Group Will Present Top Editor Here

Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite, will be the featured speaker at a Public Meeting of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations at the Life of Georgia Auditorium Friday evening, Nov. 22 at 8:00.

Daily Herald

Mr. Golden is nationally known as a writer, speaker and editor. He has championed the cause of good human relations throughout the South and is in demand throughout the country as a speaker who handles "difficult subjects with irrepressible humor."

The Greater Atlanta Council and its predecessors has a long history in Atlanta, having been organized in 1919 to promote good human relations. The Council is composed of citizens in the Greater Atlanta Area who are interested in furthering good human relations and in keeping the lines of communication open.

The Rev. Edward A. Cahill, acting chairman of the Council, and minister of the United Liberal Church, will preside. The invocation will be given by Dr. Lester Rumble, District Superintendent of the Atlanta West District Methodist Church. Rev. Lamar Clements will present a brief report of activities.

Segregationists Meet In Atlanta; No Action Taken

Atlanta, Ga. Mon. Nov. 26 '57

ATLANTA, Oct. 26 (AP)—Segregation leaders from eight Southern states held a meeting last night but did not take any action on reported plans to set up a regional organization.

Roy V. Harris, president of the States Rights Council of Georgia and Augusta political leader, reported after the closed session that it was "purely a social affair."

He said "we took no action . . . just talked and chatted. We discussed everything from Little Rock to Brownell and even Rogers." He referred to former Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell and his successor, William P. Rogers.

Harris said representatives from eight states were present, "about half of them" public officials in their states. He did not identify them but said they came from South Carolina, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas.

Gov. Griffin Declines To Talk

Governor Marvin Griffin, after being selected as one of the governors to confer with President Eisenhower decided at the last moment not to be included in the committee with those Southern governors whom the President showed a willingness to meet.

This was a company designed to talk with the President relative to the removal of the federal troops from the Little Rock school. Of course the governors did not choose to limit any discussion the President might engage in addition to their special mission.

Journal & Const. Atlanta Ga

This is a crucial period in the lives of the nation and the world; every avenue forming the artery of this nation's and state's health should be carefully guarded and any statement or gesture of high elected officials would fall under great scrutiny.

Governor Griffin possibly missed an enviable opportunity to spell out to the President the attitude of his people. Being the emissary between them and the great powers with whom many of them disagree, surely no harm could have come to the interests of the people for their governor to sit in on a discussion that sooner or later every state affected in the nation will have to face.

The closing of avenues of communication and the spirit of the isolationist truly belong to an age that will never return.

There are members in the UN Congress whose religious, governmental philosophies and peace measures are as far apart as the poles. Still they would not for anything relinquish their seats around the big table where the panels undergo various discussions relating to world problems.

Wed. 10-2-57

It is assuredly evident that the people will feel the sharp sting of a disservice in the governor's gesture.

Wendell Willkie, the prophet, who was probably without honor in his own lifetime, envisioned after a trip around the world, one world and one people. He died literally loving the nations into the one world philosophy and we have come to see an era in which mediums of communications are the greatest assets to our national security.

Surely this is no time for a state within the confines of the high apostle of this one world philosophy to make an open declaration that it is seceding from the arena which provides the artery to open covenants for all the people, openly arrived at.

No state in an hour like this can afford to secede from its social compact and expect a united front in whatever course it proposes.

2nd Manifesto OKs Integration

Defender, 11-23-57 Chicago Ill.

ATLANTA — (ANP) — A new Southern manifesto, uniquely different from the one issued some months ago by die-in-the-wool segregationists and legislators, was issued here last week by a group of 80 white minters.

It called for an end of prejudice and maintenance of communications between white and Negro leaders. It also asked for prayers, obedience to the law, and preservation of the public schools and protection of free speech. It refuted the idea that school integration would lead to physical race mixing.

Segregation Fund'

BRUNSWICK, Ga. — Three "great Americans" have been proposed as trustees for a million-dollar fund which would be used to "convince the nation of the necessity of preserving segregation." Representative Charles L. Gowen, a state legislator from Glynn County, is the author of the proposal.

Representative Gowen stated that the arguments in favor of segregation would be "presented without big-ly or prejudice, on a high plane, addressed to the good judgement of reasonable people."

Courier P. 3

THE GEORGIA solon asserted that the South's stand on the issue is founded upon a firm, constitutional basis. As a result, he maintained, "It is time for concerted action under the leadership of such great Americans as Richard B. Russell, Herman Talmadge and Sam Erwin.

"I suggest we proceed to raise by popular subscription a fund of at least one million dollars to be given to Senator Russell as trustee to be used to carry the truth about constitutional government."

Pittsburgh

HE ALSO predicted that Georgia's public schools would never be integrated, adding that the nation's founding fathers had never intended to give the Federal Government authority over local matters.

Sat. 11-30-57

The three "great" Americans proposed by Gowen are all Democrats. Talmadge and Russell are U. S. Senators from Georgia. Erwin is a U. S. Senator from North Carolina.

In the meantime, the voices of other pro-segregationists in this state have been raised. Gov. Marvin Griffin told a White Citizens Council meeting in New Orleans that communistic propaganda inspired the Supreme Court to hand down its edict against segregation in public schools.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook addressed a letter to all of Georgia's mayors in which he asked for curbs to be slapped upon the NAACP.

And, before the Georgia Court of Appeals, the NAACP lost its appeal against a $25,000 fine and a one-year sentence handed out to the Atlanta chapter president, John Calhoun.

Griffin Studying Status Of Guard

Post-Herald Birmingham Ala.

ATLANTA, Oct. 1 (AP) — Gov. Marvin Griffin said today he is checking to determine what the role of Georgia's National Guard will be in the future.

Wed. 10-2-57

"I believe that in peacetime the National Guard is the Army of the state to keep the national tranquility," he said.

"If the National Guard can be federalized at every whim of the President," Griffin said, "the integration question is just one" of the problems to be faced.

Griffin said the "South has been occupied by federal troops twice in history . . . the only time they have been down here we've had a great military chief-tain." He referred to the occupation by federal troops during the administration of U. S. Grant and "they haven't been back until 1957."

He said President Eisenhower is a captive of Republican politicals strategists. "I don't think he realizes the seriousness of his action in federalizing the National Guard in Arkansas."

Christian Solution Of Race Problem Urged By Leader

ATLANTA, GA. — (NS) — Christian should cultivate love, humility and good will, and not wait for politicians to solve the race problem, a high figure of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. has warned.

And the race issue, which has received great interest in other parts of the world, should not be considered merely a domestic issue, Dr. William Elliot, Jr., moderator of the church, declared.

The minister, in Atlanta for a series of talks at Columbia Theological Seminary and Morningside Presbyterian Church, praised the recent manifesto by 80 local ministers and declared "I am in full accord with their statement. I would have signed it myself if I were still a minister here.

CONCERN OF CHURCH

"I feel that anything that touches any people—regardless of color, sect, or situation in life is the concern of the church," he said.

Dr. Elliott added: "While the General Assembly hasn't the power to tell the local congregation who may join or be dismissed from membership, I believe most of our churches are giving serious consideration to the pronouncements of the church."

The most recent of such pronouncements came this year from the church's general assembly with a condemnation of all forms of racial discrimination.

WHAT IS CHURCH DOING?

Dr. Elliott said that "on a recent tour of Japan, Taiwan and Korea the very first question asked me was 'What your church doing about easing racial tensions in the South?'

The minister, who made it clear he was speaking his personal opinion, declared that most important is the "cultivation of the Christian virtues of love, humility, patience, good dwll and above all self control.

"Every Christian has a responsibility to pray first for a knowledge within himself to know the will of God, also for the school boards, governors and president that they will seek God's will and finally that we may be kept from saying anything that would injure our relations in our countries.

NO UNFAVORABLE ACTION TO MANIFESTO MINISTERS

There has been no "unfavorable reaction" in the congregations of 13 of the 80 local white ministers who last week presented a declaration of their beliefs on race relations, according to an Associated Press survey.

The ministers who were queried reported receiving from two to 3 letters on the subject from outsid their churches. Only a small par of these was critical, the survey said.

All of the churches whose ministers signed the declaration are believed to have received a letter of commendation which said: "A breath of fresh air wafted over the South Sunday (Nov.) and it was needed urgently. I have felt that this is something which was needed to be done by the Christian leaders of this community."

The 80 ministers indicated in their joint statement that the views expressed were their own and did not represent the official position of any congregation.

Plan Calmly To Halt Integration, Allen Says

VALDOSTA, Ga., Oct. 7 (AP)—A slightly new approach to the problem of maintaining racial segregation was suggested today by Ivan Allen Jr. of Atlanta, a potential candidate for governor.

Allen, who has just returned from a trip through the Midwest, said that irreparable harm is being done to the boys and girls of both races where school integration is being attempted. He asked that Georgia leaders "with calmness and wisdom plan to prevent any such disastrous consequences in Georgia."

"Our position," he maintained, "must be proved morally right to those who do not live in the thickly populated Negro areas as we do. This is necessary not only to protect our segregated way of life but also to promise the peace and tranquility necessary to continue our economic development program."

"Many, many people in other parts of the country who are sympathetic to our problems in the South," he went on, "feel the President had to take the decisive step of sending troops into Little Rock. Consequently, our ability to maintain our position without federal interference depends on our level-headed approach to the problem and our determination to prevent violence and the hatred which follows in its wake."

In an address prepared for delivery before the Exchange Club, the Atlanta businessman praised Lowndes County for its large investment in education. He also noted a $44 rise in per capita income and saw in it evidence of sound progress.

Vandiver Lashes High Court Racial Decision

Constitution P.5
Wed. 4-3-57
Atlanta Ga.

ATHENS, Ga., April 2 (AP)—Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver said today that Georgia would continue to fight for constitutional government, and against integration in every legal way possible.

At the same time, he told a meeting of the Athens Kiwanis Club that he hoped "we never have any violence in Georgia" over integration which he described as one of the greatest problems facing the state today.

"Integration like communism cannot be rammed down the throats of people who are free," he said. "You can't pass laws and pass down political edicts to make people be good to one another."

Turning to the U.S. Supreme Court decision on the subject, Vandiver said:

"May 17, 1954, is a day which will live in infamy as the day on which the court usurped the delegated powers of Congress. It is the date the court decided to amend the Constitution and make a new law, although they did not have that power."

As a result, he said, "We have entered into an age of judicial tyranny."

When Irving Berlin's song, "God Bless America," was published 20 years after he wrote it, he assigned all royalties to the Boy and Girl Scouts of America. Their income from the song has passed the 100 thousand dollar mark.

Cook To Attend Racial Hearing

Constitution P.3
Wed 3-6-57
Atlanta Ga.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook Tuesday accepted the invitation of the Louisiana Legislature to attend a hearing on subversive influences in the race situation.

Cook said he would attend Thursday and Friday as an observer. The attorney general was not asked to testify. A representative will attend the hearings if they go beyond Friday, Cook said.

Georgia Acts to Ban Negroes in Baseball

Times Union
New York
Thu 2-15-57

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTA, Feb. 14—In a move to drive Negroes from the South Atlantic Baseball League, Georgia's Senate unanimously adopted today a bill to outlaw interracial athletics.

The measure, which would bar racial mixing on the practice field as well as in contests, was sent to the House. It will have to be acted on in committee there before going to the floor. Last year, a similar bill died in the House without coming to a vote.

While most baseball men were wary of comment pending House action, one Sally League manager expressed belief its passage would break up this Class A southeastern league.

The various baseball leagues below the majors are classified according to the calibre of their play and the price of drafting players from one league to another. The classification starts at E and goes up to Triple A. The Pacific Coast League now is an Open Class League.

Times Pic-C

Sees League Disrupted

Phil Howser, general manager of the Charlotte (N. C.) Hornets said he fell such a ban would disrupt the league since the majors now were committed to using it for training purposes. He said few would consider an agreement with or the ownership of clubs that could not use Negroes.

Fate of the bill in the House was uncertain but there seemed to be a general feeling that if it came to the floor it probably would win on a roll-call vote.

Gov. Martin Griffin has sponsored some pro--segregation bills that have been passed but has not expressed himself on this this one. Senator Leon Butts of Lumpkin, who sponsored the sure, contends it has the Governor's tacit approval.

The measure also would prohibit all interracial dancing, social functions and other such activities and would call for separate seating and other facilities at public entertainments witnessed by both races. Anyone guilty of violating the law could be punished for a misdemeanor with a fine of $100 to $1,000 and imprisonment for sixty days to a year. Religious gatherings would be exempt from the ban.

The state's colleges already follow a policy of banning home games with teams having Negro players but Georgia and Georgia Tech teams have competed against Negroes outside the South and have commitments making it likely they will do so again.

In speaking for his bill, Mr. Butts said "when Negroes and whites meet on the athletic fields on a basis of complete equality, it is only natural that this sense of equality is translated into the daily living of these people."

This he said is dangerous because "the social relationship that arise is the source of the problem and it is not possible for races to be thrown into interracial social contract without races thereby being corrupted."

Mr. Butts has made it clear that is move was inspired largely by the presence of Negro players on the Sally team at Columbus, Ga., which is near his home town. At the time he introduced his bill he said use of Negro players was keeping white fans away from games.

A survey at that time indicated, however, that, in most towns, Negro players had increased attendance or had had no noticeable effect.

Other members of the Sally League are Macon, Savannah and Augusta in Georgia, Jacksonville, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Knoxville, Tenn.

Of these, Macon, Columbia and Savannah declined comment pending House action. John Duncan, president of the Knoxville Club, said "we will be guided by instructions from our league office and George Trautman, commissioner of minor league baseball."

William (Bill) Terry, Sally League president, declined comment. Mr. Trautman was out of the country.

Since the measure would ban interracial training contacts, as well as actual games, it apparently would have a strong effect on four big minor league training farms conducted on South Georgia by major teams. Thomasville is the site of a Baltimore camp while Cincinnati sends hundreds of hopefuls to Douglas. St. Louis uses Albany and the Milwaukee Braves operate their big one at Waycross.

Impeachment Move Gains

ATLANTA, Feb. 14 (UP)—A Georgia legislative committee gave approval today to a resolution calling on the United States House of Representatives to impeach six United States Supreme Court justices. But the move failed to gain support in Mississippi, one of three southern states that had been expected to back the proposal.

The State of the Republic Committee of the Georgia House cleared the measure without opposition. The resolution accusing the justices of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was introduced yesterday.

State Attorney General Eugene Cook had expected Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana to act favorably on similar impeachment resolutions.

But Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said he was opposed to the resolution and vowed that there would be no official cooperation from his state.

Georgia Pastor Says Colony Lives in Peril

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.
Sat. 4-6-57

A church pastor of the racially integrated community of Koinonia, Ga., yesterday voiced fears here that a "reign of terror" conducted by neighboring segregationists may some day lead to bloodshed.

The Rev. Clarence Jordan told a Hotel Statler audience that so far the conflict between the two groups has been bloodless. But, said the religious leader, "I am not at all sure it will stay that way."

Mr. Jordan emphasized, however, that his unique Georgia community of Koinonia will continue to meet violence with passive resistance, even though personal tragedy may result.

Koinonia, named with the Greek word for "community," was formed in 1942 by Mr. Jordan and several associates as a spiritual and agricultural experiment. Situated about 130 miles southwest of Atlanta, the tiny settlement achieved two notable firsts, its founder told a National Civil Liberties Clearing House conference:

It introduced commercial egg production to that section of Georgia, and it became the first—and only—community of the area where whites and Negroes lived and worked side by side.

No Violence at First

Although the demonstration of workable integration drew rumblings of disapproval from pro-segregationist neighbors, there was no show of violence for years, Mr. Jordan said.

But after the Supreme Court decision, "the entire South stood stunned," he said. And then came the "reign of terror."

It started in April, 1956, when Mr. Jordan announced he would indorse applications for admission of Negro students to the Georgia State College of Business Administration. And the initial move was cancellation of insurance policies held by Koinonia.

Not even Lloyds of London would insure them, the 44-year-old former Baptist clergyman declared.

The reasons soon were apparent, he added.

Koinonia was boycotted economically. Its inhabitants—45 whites and 15 Negroes—could not buy goods or services from the people they had been dealing with on easy terms before.

Child Camp Attacked

A summer camp for children, also inter-racial, that had been conducted by Koinonia, was declared unlawful as a menace to health. After a long legal wrangle, the case for the camp was ruled moot in court, said Mr. Jordan.

Finally, there was violence.

"First, automobiles drove by at night, shots coming from them.

"A few weeks later, a pistol bullet was fired into our roadside market, and we knew what that bullet was saying. But we heard other voices, telling us to stay," the tall, ruddy-faced man recalled.

Eventually, that roadside market was blown up. Gas pumps, fed from underground tanks Koinonia bought to beat the boycott, were smashed with rapid gunfire.

Periodic raids were staged on the co-operative farm, even on Christmas and New Year's Day.

The home of a Negro family was burned.

Mr. Jordan's own house was fired upon, with a bullet whizzing past his 20-year-old daughter, a student at the University of Georgia.

His daughter typified the Koinonia attitude minutes after she missed being shot, he commented. She asked to stand watch outside the house the rest of the night.

Mr. Jordan's eldest son had to be withdrawn from the public high school in the nearby town of Americus when fellow students attacked him repeatedly.

Barred by Church

The minister said the Baptist Church in Americus refused him worship privileges, even though he received a doctorate from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky.

Before attending the seminary, he said he obtained a bachelor's degree in agriculture from the University of Georgia.

In a short talk lightened with a ready display of wit, he gave his shocked audience a word picture of the reactions of a man who has been rejected by his own kind because of his beliefs. Mr. Jordan was born, brought up and educated in Georgia.

Appeals Made to State

On the brighter side, he pointed out, is his observation that there "is by no means 100 per cent hostility toward us there."

He said many religious groups have asked the State government to "do something" about the violence at Koinonia. But nothing has been done as far as he knows.

In January he wrote to President Eisenhower, saying if help did not come soon, his community faced annihilation.

Today, he still has that feeling.

Early Morning Shootings Are Probed In Americus

Daily Herald Thurs. 4-25-57
Atlanta, Ga
P. 8

AMERICUS, GA.— (INS) —Two early morning shootings at Koinonia farm were being investigated Wednesday. By the Georgia Bureau of investigation and Americus' Sheriff.

The latest incident occurred early this morning, according to Clarence Jordan, Farm Co-Founder He said five bullets had been pumped into a recently vacated tenant farm house tearing through two walls. The other one shot incident happened yesterday.

Sheriff Fred Chappel said night watchman Chris Drescher, 71, told him he had been a witness to both shootings.

Drescher said someone in an automobile had fired once yesterday, hitting the fender of a car he was sitting next to. He said today he heard shots "and saw the tail-light of a car about a half-a mile away."

The last shooting at the farm, where burnings, bombings, and Rock throwing incidents have caused insurance firms to refrain from underwriting the community, was in March, when another night watchman had a flashlight shot out of his hands.

The investigators said they had no important clues as to who might have done the shooting. Sheriff Chappel said he could not so much find a tire track to indicate any automobiles had been in the vicinity.

The little 15-year old community fighting to remain in Georgia, was accused last month by a Sumter County grand jury of perpetrating some of the incidents themselves Koinonia officials however, have vigorously denied these and other accusations made against the farm

Shots Fired at Home In Mixed Community

By the Associated Press.

AMERICUS, Ga., March 21. —Norman Long, president of Koinonia Farm, a religious community of Negroes and whites, today reported two or three shots were fired into the home of a Negro employee living on the property.

Mr. Long said two watchmen reported two men fired from an automobile about midnight last night. The employee and his wife were not injured. The farm also has been the target of bombs, cross burnings and an economic boycott.

Bi-Racial Farm Cleric Asks For Protection

Call 3-21-57
Kansas City, Missouri
P. 20

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Despite bullets, bombs, boycotts, and cross-burnings, a Georgia minister of the Interracial Koinonia Farms near Americus, Ga., last week told newsmen that with the help of God he hopes to keep the communal farm operating.

At the same time he and 23 other Georgia ministers asked for protection for the farm, which has been the target of violence ever since Negro and white persons began dwelling together there in harmony.

Speaking to the reporters at a session of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, composed of delegates from educational, labor, religious and other groups, the Rev. Clarence Jordan expressed the desire for President Eisenhower to "use his moral influence" to halt a reign of terror that has plagued the Georgia community for the past year or so.

Rev. Jordan described conditions at the farm as serious stating that persons on the farm lived under the constant threat of dynamiting, legal reprisals, shotgun blasts and numerous other dangers.

He said Koinonia Farms get along well with its neighbors until last year when it started an interracial summer camp for children.

Since then, he indicated, violence has ensued, the community can no longer get insurance, the farm has lost much of the market for its produce and is shunned in business matters by people of the community.

Meanwhile in Georgia, 23 ministers released a letter Sunday denying charges that the Farm is connected with the Communist party; stressing that Koinonia is a Christian community and asking protection from acts of violence that have come from persons outside the group.

The letter said in part: "We pray that God's truth and Christ's redeaming love may be revealed in this present crisis in Sumpter County."

Norman Long, Koinonia farm president stated: "We emphatically deny participation in this violence." It's cause is identical with that of the boycott (economic) and the legal pressures."

He declared that members of the farm had vowed to continue their way of life "despite the constant awareness that one of us or our children may be injured or even killed".

Interracial Ban Affects Few Clubs, Sponsor Says

Constitution P. 16
Wed. 4-24-57
Atlanta, Ga.

A member of the State Board of Education said Tuesday only a few organizations will be affected by a resolution banning student groups that hold integrated state or national meetings.

William T. Bodenhamer of Ty Ty, sponsor of the resolution adopted by the board Monday, said it appears that 4-H Clubs, Future Farmers of America (FFA) and Future Homemakers of America (FHA) would not be affected.

W. A. Sutton, state 4-H Club director, said separate national meetings are held for whites and Negro members of the organization. Separate white and Negro clubs are maintained in Georgia.

A Department of Education spokesman said FFA and FHA chapters in the state are for white students only. Separate but similar organizations exist for colored students.

The spokesman said no mixed meetings of the groups are held.

"It appears that not many groups will be affected," Bodenhamer said.

But he conceded there is considerable doubt about the effect of the resolution.

The resolution declared that no student organization or club will be permitted in the future to permit members to attend integrated meetings at the state or national level.

Organizations failing to comply, the resolution said, will be "barred from further participation as a recognized school activity in the schools of Georgia."

Another Shooting Reported At Bi-Racial Koinonia Farm

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 4-24-57 P. 17

AMERICUS, Ga., April 23 (AP)—Another early morning shooting at controversial biracial Koinonia Farm was reported today by Clarence Jordan, cofounder.

Jordan said a bullet from a car traveling toward Americus between 1:45 and 1:50 a.m. plowed into the fender of a machine where Chris Crescher, 71-year-old night watchman, was sitting under a light near the main cluster of buildings at the 1,100-acre farm.

The car, he added, sped away.

Deputy Sheriff Buster Powell and Agent W. T. Beauchamp of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation reported officials of the farm turned over to them a fragment of a bullet.

Koinonia, where white persons and Negroes work, dine and find recreation together, has evoked a furor in this South Georgia community where segregation is strictly observed.

Several previous shootings, burnings and some rock-throwing have been reported at Koinonia. The Sumter County grand jury said it appeared to them that the violence was perpetrated from within to gain sympathy and financial support.

Atlanta, Ga.

WE DON'T KNOW all the facts about Koinonia Farm near Americus and we are always reluctant to discuss the affairs of other communities when there is so much we could write about our own city and county.

Nevertheless the trouble in nearby Sumter County cannot be ignored. Indeed when acts of violence take place anywhere in Georgia they reflect on all of us.

P. 9-C

Koinonia Farm, we are told, is an interracial community established in 1942 and operated according to what its residents believe are the basic teachings of Christianity.

The work on the 1,000-acre farm is shared cooperatively and the proceeds are used to meet the needs of the community and its individuals.

It is our understanding that families at Koinonia (which is a Greek word meaning "community" or "fellowship") live as units in separate houses or apartments.

There apparently has been no violation of Georgia laws on segregation or, if so, they have not been brought to the attention of authorities.

Yet, since April of last year, the farm has been subjected to repeated acts of violence and to an economic boycott in the area.

Buildings have been dynamited, fences have been cut and shots have been fired at individuals and property in the community.

Recently a grand jury investigated the trouble but its recommendations apparently contained little that would lead to the solution of the problem.

We know that the good people of Sumter County are distressed over the situation and that a great majority of people there deplore the outbreaks of violence.

It is our sincere hope that a peaceful solution can be worked out that will take cognizance of the rights of all concerned.

We may not approve of the farm and its unconventional methods, but violence isn't and never will be the answer.

Ga. Senate Votes To Outlaw 14th, 15th Amendments

Courier Sat. 2-16-57 Pittsburgh, Pa.

P. 3

ATLANTA, Ga.—Georgia's State Senate, whose machinery is geared to defy the U. S. Supreme Court's edicts against segregation, has set into motion a direct assault against the vaunted precincts of the U. S. Constitution by demanding that the 14th and 15th Amendments be declared null and void.

• Under attack by the state of Georgia are the following amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

The Fourteenth

"No state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property except by due process of law."

The Fifteenth

"No state shall deprive any person of the right to vote because of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

• The action was formulated in a resolution introduced by State Senator Peyton Hawes of Elberton which claimed that the 30th, 40th and 41st Congresses which adopted the amendments were illegally constituted.

The Senate declared: "The continued recognition of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments as valid parts of the Constitution of the United States is incompatible with the present day position of the United States as the world's champion of constitutional government."

The amendments put under attack by the Georgia lawmakers have formed the basis for the Supreme Court's anti-jim crow rulings.

The 15th Amendment asserts that no person shall be deprived by any state of the right to vote because of his or her race or a previous condition of servitude. The 14th Amendment is generally interpreted as a basic human rights document in that it states that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property except by due process of law.

These laws are interpreted by "state rightists" as being aimed directly at their theories of practical autonomy for the individual state.

THE ATTACK against the amendments is also viewed as an indirect effort to force a detour around the Supreme Court's anti-bias rulings, for if, by any stretch of the imagination, the amendments are declared unconstitutional, then the Supreme Court's rulings, per se, will fall of their own weight because of the cutting away of the constitutional foundations upon which they are predicated.

The Georgia lawmakers sent copies of the resolution to the U. S. Congress, President Eisenhower and Chief Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren.

In the resolution, it was said that the "so-called 39th Congress, which prepared legislation known as the 14th Amendment, and the so-called 40th Congress, which proposed the 15th Amendment, were without lawful power."

The process through which these amendments were ratified was also assaulted by the Georgia solons.

IF THE amendments, as constituted, were stripped from the U. S. Congress, then individual states would have the right to impose whatever restrictions they so desired upon their citizenry, both white and black.

It would take away all powers of the Federal Government dealing with the individual citizen and put the United States in the position of being a federation of semi-autonomous states rather than a Republic composed of inter-dependent commonwealths, some sources believe.

Georgia Secedes Again

Journal & Guide

WHILE PRESIDENT EISENHOWER was shooting quail and playing golf near Thomasville and Augusta, Georgia, last week, the Senate of the Georgia legislature adopted a resolution declaring the 39th, 40th and 41st Congresses which promulgated the legislation setting up the 14th and 15th amendments after the Civil War, excluded representatives of Georgia, and for that reason were illegally constituted.

Norfolk, Va.

Therefore, said the Georgia Senate resolution, the 14th amendment and the 15th amendment are null and void and have no effect in the State of Georgia.

Sat. 2-16-57

Because of its recalcitrance and rebellious acts against the United States Government, Georgia was not re-admitted to the Union until July 5, 1870, but before readmission, its legislative bodies adopted the 14th and 15th amendments.

There is a reason why Georgia had no representatives in the Congress which promulgated the 14th and 15th amendments. In 1867, under its own State government, in the administration of President JOHNSON, Georgia's legislative body adopted a code of Black Laws, which practically annulled the 13th amendment abolishing slavery, which Georgia had previously adopted. All the civil rights Negroes had been given were eliminated by these Black Laws which re-established slavery under a new name, so the Federal Government again placed the State under military government.

In a free election held under this military government, with 96,333 whites and 95,168 Negroes participating, there was an election of a governor and a state legislature, and Georgia was given the go-signal by President JOHNSON's plan of reconstruction, minus the right to re-enslave the freedman.

But in September, 1868, a coalition of Democrats and Republicans in the State legislature expelled the 27 Negro members of the two bodies and seated their defeated opponents on the theory that the right to hold office belonged only to the whites. After this took place, the 41st Congress excluded the State's representatives on the theory that the Government of Georgia was a provisional organization.

The Congress passed an act requiring the ratification of the amendments before the readmission of Georgia's senators and representatives.

This action required making Georgia a military district again, and resulted in the 14th and 15th amendments being adopted. Then the state in 1870 was re-admitted to the Union.

The constitutional amendments which Georgia's senate has just declared null and void, were ratified while the state was in rebellion against the United States.

Georgia Negro preachers urged the President to come to some point in the South and make an address, calling upon all the people to obey the laws. MR. EISENHOWER said his agenda was full but he took a week out to visit Georgia for the purpose of hunting quail and playing golf. While the state was playing host to him its legislature annulled, as far as Georgia is concerned, the 14th and 15th amendments which completely divest all Georgia Negro citizens of civil rights and equal protection of the laws.

Georgia's legislature has done some funny things before. In 1836 it passed a resolution posting $5,000 reward for anyone who would kidnap WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, the slavery abolitionist, and bring him into the state, to be tried on charges of inciting slaves to riot. The penalty was death by hanging.

MR. GARRISON'S only offense was that he was opposed to human slavery.

In 1937 Georgia's legislative body passed resolutions which permitted cotton mill and other manufacturers to work white children, 14 years of age, ten hours a day and 60 hours a week.

By 1930 Georgia had a list of 465 mob murders committed since 1899. PRESIDENT EISENHOWER attended church in Georgia last Sunday morning, and heard a Georgia Presbyterian preacher say that "racial tension was hanging over the South like a thunderhead." We think the President could feel it from where he sat.

GEORGIA REVISED HISTORY

Times 2-16-57

No doubt the Georgia State Senate accepts the fact that it was General Lee, not General Grant, who surrendered at Appomattox. What the Georgia lawmakers do question, in a resolution passed on Friday, is the authority of the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses. These bodies, we are now asked to believe, were "nothing more than private assemblages unlawfully attempting to exercise the legislative power of the United States."

The new Georgian school of historians has, therefore, asked Congress to declare the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution null and void. Frankly, we hope Congress will not do this. The Fourteenth Amendment amplified the Bill of Rights by forbidding the states to "abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States," and so on. Without this Amendment the segregation decision of the Supreme Court of May 17, 1954, would not stand. The Fifteenth Amendment stipulates that neither the United States nor any state shall deny any citizen the right to vote "on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

To those who are attached to such rights as these Amendments guarantee, repeal would be extremely inconvenient. Repeal might be confusing to some of those technical "persons" known as corporations, for these, too, get some protection out of the Fourteenth Amendment. On the other hand, for any majority of any other race, creed or color wishing to injure and exploit a minority of any race, creed or color, both Amendments are annoying obstacles.

We suspect that the late Robert E. Lee, revered commander of the Army of Northern Virginia, would be the last man to have any patience with the Georgia State Senate at this moment. He knew what happened and why it happened. Now, ninety-two years after Appomattox, the Georgia legislators seem to have forgotten what Lee knew. Perhaps they should go back to school for a week or so—a segregated school, if that is the way they feel about it.

Panel Okays Migration Aid To Integrators

Constitution Feb. 2-7-57 Atlanta, Ga.

The House Education Committee Wednesday approved a bill authorizing state subsidies to persons who want to attend integrated schools and will go to other states to do so. P. 1

The measure, by Rep. David C. Jones of Worth County, proposed education grants for students and subsidies to families for moving to states with integrated schools.

Rep. William Bodenhamer of Tift County, committee chairman and executive director of the States Rights Council of Georgia, Inc., took the lead in seeking favorable committee action on the bill in order to get it on the calendar.

"It will just open the gate," Bodenhamer said. "I don't believe there will be any flock of people leaving the state. But it lets them go if they want to and the state will help."

Bodenhamer also said the bill would serve notice that "we are not holding them in peonage here in Georgia and making them go to segregated schools."

Georgia Wants 14th And 15th Amendments Declared Unlawful

Call Fri. 2-15-57

ATLANTA.—(INS)— The Georgia Senate has asked the Congress to declare the 14th and 15th amendments to the U. S. constitution invalid.

Kansas City, Mo.

The post-civil war amendments, guaranteeing due process and universal suffrage, were approved the Georgia senate resolution claims, by congressional sessions from which duly elected representatives from Georgia and ten other southern states were barred.

The amendments were ratified, the Georgia senate resolution claimed, by "puppet governments" set up "by use of military force."

The 14th amendment is the article under which most court actions to end segregation in the South have been brought.

Georgia And Old Lace

World (From The New York Times) P. 6

If some of the white citizens of Georgia prefer 1857 to 1957 there is nothing we Yankees can do about it. We do assume, however, that those citizens of Georgia whose ancestors were held in servitude in 1857 would probably not like to go back to that date. Wed. 2-20-57 B'ham, Ala.

It is, we assume, the white population of Georgia which has been speaking through Gov. Marvin Griffin and the State Legislature. On Jan. 15 Governor Griffin, half way through his term of office, said in his annual message that he was for preserving racial segregation in Georgia "no matter what any court may rule." Three weeks later the Georgia Senate unanimously declared the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Federal Constitution null and void. On Wednesday of last week the Griffin administration presented to the State Legislature a resolution asking impeachment of six United States Supreme Court justices on the ground that they were guilty of "high crimes and misdemeanors."

Recently the Georgia Senate continued on its merry way, adopting unanimously a bill offered by Senator Leon Butts of Lumpkin, which is a small county seat situated in the badly eroded land of Stewart County in southwest Georgia. Senator Butts said, and we quote: "Anything that tends to break down the bulwarks of segregation must be forbidden by this General Assembly." To avoid this catastrophe Senator Butts, as the Associated Press informs us, would prohibit "all racial dances, social functions, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other such activities."

It is possible, of course, that Governor Griffin and his legislative associates are too modest in their approach to what they consider their problem. It may well be that the winning candidate in 1860 was not Abraham Lincoln but Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois or John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky, and maybe the Dred Scott Decision still stands and free land does not make free men. We don't know, we just wonder.

Braves' operation in balance— Interracial sports bill passes Georgia Senate

News P. 33 Fri. 2-15-57 B'ham, Ala.

ATLANTA, Feb. 15—(AP)—The Milwaukee Braves will close down their big baseball farm operation at Waycross if a racial bill passed yesterday by the Georgia Senate becomes law.

John Mullen, Milwaukee farm director, said "We would simply have to pack up and leave Waycross" if the Georgia House passes and Gov. Marvin Griffin signs the measure, which would outlaw interracial athletics.

Last year a similar bill died in the House without coming vote.

Another major league farm director, Bill McKechnie Jr., of the Cincinnati Redlegs, said if the bill is enacted "We'll abide by it." The Reds use Douglas, Ga., as the site for training six of their minor league clubs.

"WE WOULD HAVE to adopt a policy of segregation," said McKechnie, if the bill affects the teams that train at Douglas. The Redleg official indicated that his organization has no intention of moving of of its South Georgia training site.

Other major league clubs with minor league training bases in Georgia are the St. Louis Cardinals at Albany and the Baltimore Orioles at Thomasville. A Cardinal official said 'We don't make the laws, we merely abide by them" and declined to comment further on how the proposal, if written into law, would affect the club's operations at Columbus and Albany, Ga. There was no comment from Baltimore.

The measure, written by Sen. Leon Butts, is admittedly aimed at driving Negro players from the Class A South Atlantic (Sally) League. Butts, a former University of Chattanooga football player, has told newsmen that his move was inspired largely by the use of Negro players at Columbus, a Sally member near his little home town of Lumpkin.

THE BILL WOULD prohibit race mixing on the practice field as well as in contests.

Besides Columbus, the league has members at Charlotte, Augusta, Macon and Savannah, Ga., Columbia, S. C., and Knoxville, Tenn.

Biracial Chief Says Farm 'Under Siege'

Constitution Fri. 4-26-57 Atlanta, Ga.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 25 (UP)—Norman R. Long, a head of the racially integrated Koinonia Farm at Americus, Ga., says his controversial community has been "under virtual siege" for the past year. P. 6

Long, addressing the Conference on Christian Faith and Human Relations sponsored by Southern church leaders, said last night that an economic boycott by residents of Americus has made it almost impossible for members of the farm to buy or sell anything in the area.

But he said that the whites and Negroes living together on the farm would prefer death rather than give up their principles of "Christian brotherhood."

He said the farm had been "integrated in reality" for five years and "in the last year we have been under virtual siege."

Segregation Bill Ready for Griffin's Pen

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 2-1-57

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The first of the administration's segregation bills was readied for the governor's signature Thursday as the 1957 General Assembly reached its halfway mark.

Both houses adjourned after brief business sessions in preparation for the annual "tour of inspection" of Jekyll Island.

Major legislation introduced Thursday included a bill to place automobile finance companies under the regulation of Comptroller General Zach Cravey and a constitutional amendment requiring car owners to pay property taxes when purchasing license plates.

Sen. James D. Gould of Brunswick formally introduced a previously announced bill to allow the State Toll Bridge Authority to build up to 60 miles of highways, including a connector to Florida.

A bill similar to Gould's was defeated last year after bitter debate in the House.

Legislative action was completed on one of the governor's segregation bills with 28-0 approval by the Senate.

The measure would protect retirement funds of city-system school teachers if schools are ever placed on a "private" basis to avoid segregation. County-system teachers' funds are already covered by law.

Three other segregation bills have already cleared the House and probably will come to the Senate floor next week. These would expand the governor's police powers, give the Georgia Education Commission subpoena powers and empower the commission to advertise the "Georgia way of life."

One other segregation bill, a proposal to abolish the compulsory school attendance law, is stalled in the House but will probably pass in amended form next week.

Fri. 2-1-57

During a lightly attended session the House gave unanimous consent for a rehearing of Rep. Jack Ray's bill relating to prosecution of unwed mothers. The bill was defeated 84-81 Wednesday. For passage 103 votes are necessary.

Ray's bill will be back on the calendar next week.

The "get-tough" car tax proposal was offered as a constitutional amendment by Reps. Roger Budd and Fred H. Walker of Lowndes and Louis T. Rauleson of Echols.

If approved, the amendment would exempt motor vehicles from county and state ad valorem taxes. It would graduate registration fees according to value of the vehicles. Counties would retain a proportionate share of the fees.

Walker said auto owners pay "$5 to $10 for state license plates and then up to $60 in property tax. We just propose to put it all in one package like many other states do now."

The auto loan bill set up interest rates ranging from 8 to 20 per cent. New cars would carry the 8 per cent rate; a scale would set up increasing percentages with increasing age. Minimum charges of $25 would be authorized.

It was introduced by Rep. John P. Pickett of Polk and several others.

Rep. John Nilan of Muscogee proposed a constitutional amendment to exempt school teachers from paying state income tax.

Thought-Control In Georgia

Advertiser 2-4-57

THE Georgia legislature has been pretty active in recent weeks invalidating sections of the U.S. Constitution and impeaching the Supreme Court, but this kid stuff stopped short of a measure which might have been really dangerous.

Montgomery, Ala.

The resolution, reluctantly withdrawn, would have set up a thought-control investigation committee with powers of subpoena. It was of course aimed at the NAACP, but it also extended to all organizations which "direct thought." This wording, without much stretching, could have been interpreted to include churches, political groups, newspapers—almost anything, in fact.

The Alabama legislature, which convenes in May, should be cautious lest in its anxiety over the segregation controversy it expend its energies on fantasies and enact laws which could weaken the fundamental freedoms of all of us.

Fri. 2-22-57

The Georgia legislature fortunately realized in time that the thought-control committee did not belong in America.

U.S. House Unlikely To Consider Impeachments

Advertiser 2-26-57

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 (AP)—While there has been no formal decision by Georgia members of the House, prospects remained remote today for House consideration of the Georgia Legislature's demand for impeachment of six justices of the Supreme Court.

Members of the Georgia delegation in Congress said the group has taken no official action on the Legislature's resolution calling for impeachment proceedings. Some of them pointed out that such an undertaking would be foredoomed to failure at this time.

"I do not think that it is possible to impeach these justices with the present personnel of the Congress," Rep. Davis (D-Ga), for one, said.

"I believe it would be a mistake to file the proceedings knowing in advance they would be defeated."

But Davis said at the same time that he congratulated the Legislature for its action in calling for impeachment of Chief Justice Warren and Associate Justices Black, Douglas, Reed, Frankfurter and Clark in connection with school segregation decisions.

Rep. Lanham (D-Ga) has said that even if there was evidence to show some Supreme Court members were guilty of improper conduct, "we simply could not command the votes at this time even to vote an indictment of impeachment."

Davis said today he could not speak for other members of the delegation but doubted if any resolution would be presented to Congress.

Rep. Forrester (D-Ga) said he has not yet received a copy of the Legislature's resolution.

Talmadge Confounds Critics By Shunning Demagoguery

Fri. 3-8-57 Atlanta, Ga.

P. 4

In the Washington Post

Georgia's Herman Talmadge has been positively fascinating fellow Southerners and mildly confounding some of his liberal critics by a complete change of pace since coming to the Senate.

Instead of teeing off on the racial question in the old-school Dixie tradition, as all hands plainly anticipated, Talmadge has been deliberately playing down the issue.

True, the change has been largely a matter of tone or emphasis. Certainly Talmadge has not weakened in the slightest in his opposition to the administration's civil rights program. But he doesn't shout his opposition from a cracker box, as one might have expected from a son of "Old Gene."

A demagogue of the Bilbo type almost certainly would have seized on Eisenhower's civil rights proposals, along with the still pot-boiling antisegregation issue, to make a rip-snorting speech before the echoes of his Senate swearing-in ceremonies died away.

Talmadge waited nearly two months before even opening his mouth on the Senate floor. When he finally spoke, he chose as the subject of his maiden speech, not the civil rights issue, but the completely nonsectional issue of President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution.

On the day the 42-year-old Georgian was booked to deliver his first Senate speech, he had also been scheduled to appear with other opponents of the administration's civil rights program before the House Judiciary Committee and to deliver his opposition views.

Talmadge did not keep the engagement. He sent Kenneth H. Turner, his administrative assistant, before the committee instead, with a copy of the statement he had previously prepared. When the time came for Talmadge to testify, Turner simply asked that his civil rights views be included in the committee record.

By a curious coincidence, Talmadge's first and only other statement on the civil rights issue since coming to Washington received almost no publicity either. It was delivered before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, also holding hearings on the issue.

Talmadge went on the witness stand after a clash between Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell and Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D-NC) had stolen all the headlines. There wasn't anything sensational about what Talmadge had to say. Somehow his testimony got lost in all of the news stories.

A few days later, Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga) introduced a copy of the prepared statement in the Congressional Record. A close examination of it shows Talmadge just as unrelenting in his opposition to the civil rights program as his more outspoken Dixie colleagues.

But in the place of inflammatory oratory Talmadge had substituted a cold but hard argument that the legislation "not only is unnecessary but also would be duplicative of and perhaps in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights."

Talmadge's argument may be vulnerable, but it is a far cry from the emotional "bloody-shirt" type of speech Southern orators of another day used to roadblock civil rights measures.

Jim Crow Dies

Eagle

ATLANTA, Ga. — (ANP)— A bill designed by Georgia legislators to ban all social and athleti cactivities involving the white and Negroe races, went to its death last week in the Georgia Legislature after much debate and numerous parliamentary maneuvers by a small entourage of lawmakers.

Tues. Atla.

The bill, which even had provisions to ban Negro and whites from drinking water out of the same fountain, was termed "ridiculous and vague" by its opponents who insisted that if the measure became law, it would spell the end of the South Atlantic (Sally) League, a class A baseball league which first accepted Negro players in 1953. Four Sally League teams are in Georgia.

Thur. 3-7-57

The Georgia Senate passed the bill without a dissenting vote and the death blow to the legislation was dealt by a small band of opponents in the Georgia House.

The bias law would have prohibited "any dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training games, sports or contests, and other such activities involving personal and social contracts of the white and Negro races."

Proponents of the bill had enough votes to pass it, but opponents of the measure kept debate going and prevented a vote.

Georgia Smear

Post + Times Herald

The propaganda campaign against six Justices of the United States Supreme Court, which has been launched under the guise of an impeachment move by some of Governor Griffin's supporters in the Georgia Legislature, must be regarded as another effort to smear the high tribunal because of its decision against segregation in the schools. If there were any substance in the allegation that these Justices are guilty of "high crimes and misdemeanors," their foes in Congress would long ago have started the impeachment machinery in motion. So far as we can determine the Georgia court-baiters do not pretend to have discovered anything new. Rather, they have tried to create a sensation by distorting facts, hurling innuendoes and questioning motives.

This newspaper has disagreed with some of the court decisions which the firebrands assail. But no sensible person talks of impeaching judges because of differing views about the constitutional and legal issues which they must decide. These latest fulminations from Atlanta will not do much to injure the reputations of members of the Supreme Court, but they will do a good deal to besmudge the name of the Georgia Legislature.

Atlanta Subject Of Racial Survey In Article Series

Daily World

Wed. 7-23-57

Atlanta, Ga.

Andrew Tully, a Scripps-Howard Staff Writer, came to Atlanta recently to survey the racial conditions here. In a series of articles he told what he saw and heard.

One of his articles devoted many lines to W. L. Calloway of the Alexander and Calloway real estate company; G. R. Yates, chairman of the board of Citizen Trust Co. and the Mutual Federal Loan Co., as well as the operator of a drug-store chain.

Tully told how the two men felt about racial segregation. He also called Gov. Marvin Griffin a "racist" as well as most legislators. He called Mayor William B. Hartsfield a "moderate."

Georgia's Controversial Dr. Joseph W. Holley

By TREZZ ANDERSON
(Courier Staff Writer)

ALBANY, Ga. — These words thundered out at you in stentorian tones:

"The pitiable part of the Negro's condition is his economic condition! He's hungry! And you can't enjoy no kind of 'rights' on an empty stomach!"

The voice, which went from sub-crescendo to super-crescendo, was that of Dr. Joseph Winthrop Holley—born 1874—founder and president emeritus of Albany State College and consultant to the Board of Regents of the University of Georgia system.

He wasn't born Joseph Winthrop Holley, but "Joel" . . . it was many years later that he asked the right authorities to grant him use of the name "Joseph."

Now let this reporter, with your indulgence, be just another guy talking with and about another guy. But, by all means, let that "other guy" be Joe Holley educator, pioneer, crusader, thinker, preacher, son of a slave, protector of his race and "friend of the white man."

It takes all those terms to describe Dr. Joseph W. Holley, 83, who is living now in a small cluttered "shack" on Holley Blvd. in Albany—and "cluttered" isn't really the word for it!

Dr. Joseph W. Holley is one of the most profound thinkers of the Negro race and his thoughts are based upon his 50 or more years of slaving and laboring day and night to bring education for Negroes into sharp focus for the whole world! He accomplished just that!

Because of that background, the words and opinions of Dr. Holley carry weight. He has authored three books, two of them dealing directly with the race problem of the South.

IN MOST Negro quarters Dr. Holley is considered to be against integration. Some of his own words have thrown off that impression, whether true or false.

As a matter of fact, this elderly educator is not opposed to integration as such, but he is definitely of the opinion that now is not the time for it.

In other words, Dr. Holley feels that the Negro isn't quite ready for integration and what integration truly means. While he will not espouse the cause of desegregation, Dr. Holley will come vigorously to the defense of the right of Negroes to enjoy economic betterment.

That, as a matter of fact, is the foundation upon which all his views are built. That is why he thundered out the words: "You can't enjoy no kind of rights on an empty stomach."

"From the beginning," says Dr. Holley, "the South treated both the Negro and the poor white man wrong. It didn't give either of them a fair deal. It didn't give them the right application of training: to make things with their hands.

"Today, too many people are riding in Cadillacs and living that high-life," he challenges. "It's at the expense of other people."

FROM HIS point of view, Dr. Holley is of the opinion that the average person—white and Negro—doesn't understand "integration." "It's a new word," he says, "since the Supreme Court decision. It's only temporary."

He had caustic words of comment about former Gov. Herman Talmadge and his much publicized remarks about mongrelization of the races.

"Talmadge is talking about mongrelizing of race. The poor fellow doesn't know the finest stock in the world is produced by cross-breeding. The poor fellow doesn't know the Anglo-Saxon race is the biggest demonstration of cross-breeding the world has ever seen."

All of which indicates that Dr. Holley indirectly is encouraging integration even at the race-breeding level. That is something he has not publicly supported in his speeches, but the feeling appeared to come from within his inner heart as if he were unable to restrain it any longer.

This Dr. Joseph W. Holley—like many Southern white segregationists—is a somewhat contradictory paradox. Publicly he speaks against integration as such, saying the Negro isn't ready for it—yet.

But in his every word you can hear the ringing pride in the accomplishments of his race, which seems to indicate the opposite.

For many, many years Dr. Holley spent his life working to build the school he founded under the name of the Albany Bible and Manual Training Institute. To do that required help and plenty of it—from the white people. As a result, most of Dr. Holley's life was spent in close contact with white people and his thinking, naturally, was shaped accordingly.

His views of the present scene are steeped in such a background and his views consequently represent a side of the picture not often seen by the average Negro. This explanation is necessary in order that too harsh a view might not be taken toward Dr. Holley by those who favor integration across the board—and want it now.

THIS REPORTER was unable to find anything intemperate in Dr. Holley's views. His insistence that Negroes have a great deal of self-improvement and self-preparing before they should be integrated has merit as any impartial observer can readily see. Of course, the same is equally true of many whites, especially their lower echelon.

When Dr. Holley points to material accomplishments of some of his old students, he emphasizes that merit and ability will reap their own reward. But many will take exception when he says: "It's been so that here in the South where the Negro can do the work, he can get it."

He supports that thesis by reminding you that it was he who got an order from former Gov. Gene Talmadge that schools built on Negro college campuses should be built by Negroes if Negroes who could do the work could be secured. Dr. Holley referred to the late Governor Talmadge as "my friend, Gene."

"After Booker T. Washington and the Motens, they (Tuskegee Institute) started getting Ph. D.'s down there," he wryly commented. Then he continued, "Ph. D. is 'Post Hole Digger'; M. A. is 'Master Ass'."

"We just aren't turning out nobody that can do anything with their hands. There are 3,000 women in Albany out of work. What's more, there's no prospect of them getting any work."

HOWEVER, to do what he could to help ease that situation, Dr. Holley has opened a shirt factory, where employment looms for many women. His idea is to do something about a situation other than just talk about it, and he tries to set the example himself.

The factory is located next to his humble home. The present president of the college lives in the luxurious mansion once occupied by Dr. Holley.

Does he feel that the ballot in the hands of Negroes can help ease the problem?

"The ballot has never helped either the Negro or the poor white," he declares. "The poor white gets a kick out of rapping the Negro and the Negro out of rapping the poor white. The bigger white man plays both ends against the middle and runs off with the loot.

"They're doing it now," he opines, "telling the poor white man: 'Give the Negro the ballot and he'll marry your daughter.' Humpf! Negroes aren't thinking about marrying whites."

His support of economic betterment for his race instead of integration is based upon this thesis: "As long as a Negro has got money he can get anything he wants."

Which reminds you of that passage of scripture which says: "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness and all things shall be added unto you."

Vandiver, Lawson Share Rostrum, Hit Integration

Constitution P. 3
Sat. 8-17-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Constitution State News Service

JACKSON LAKE, Aug. 16—Two prospective candidates for governor shared the same platform here Friday and vowed their unyielding opposition to efforts to break down segregation in Georgia.

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver and former Highway Chairman Roger H. Lawson told the state's 4,000-strong School Bus Drivers Assn. that the integration threat poses a grave crisis for Georgia.

Each declared that strong leadership is a must to cope with the crisis that lies ahead.

Lawson said:

"We must always have at the helm of our state government a man who fully believes in constitutional government, state's rights and preservation of our traditional separation of the races, and who is willing to stand up and be counted regardless of the cost."

REQUIRES FIRMNESS

Vandiver declared:

"It is going to require absolute firmness and unyielding determination on our part if we are to meet the challenge hurled against us. . . . I am unalterably opposed to any breakdown at any time and at any place in the existing pattern of segregation in Georgia."

Vandiver spoke to the association Friday morning and Lawson in the evening. The bus driver group is generally rated as a potent force in the state's politics.

Lawson said the Communists are behind efforts to destroy constitutional government in this country. He said he learned much about their activities as an FBI agent.

CALLED LIBERTY FOES

"They (the Communists) would destroy liberty, justice and free enterprise, the cornerstones of free people," Lawson said. "They operate through groups like the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council."

"The dangers we face are broader than just the right to maintain separate schools," Lawson added. "The whole broad structure and framework of the constitutional government are at stake."

Vandiver said the South's fight against integration must be based on upholding "constitutional processes." He said the South's fight should be patterned along the lines laid down by Sens. Russell and Talmadge in their Congress battle against civil rights legislation.

"Every action that we take and every measure that we support must be both fair and effective and well calculated to achieve the desired results," he said.

ALL-OUT SHIELDING

"I favor utilizing to the fullest extent, with no ifs, ands or buts, all of the strength and resources of the state in the fight to protect our sacred institutions and our cherished way of life," Vandiver declared.

On other subjects, Lawson said highway safety has become one of the state's foremost problems. He praised the drivers for their safety record in transporting the state's 950,000 school children.

He said the highways built under the Rural Roads Authority have played a part in providing safer transportation.

Vandiver devoted much of his talk to a discussion of future state finances. He said he was convinced that the people of Georgia don't want any new or higher taxes.

He said the people are demanding that the state government be operated economically and without a "hint of fraud, graft or corruption."

Faith Bests Firearms On A Farm In Georgia

Defender Sat 4-20-57 Chicago, Ill. P. 11

By EDWARD MURRAIN

Clarence Jordan is a marksman and a man of God. There have been times since May 1956 when this white Southerner was stripped of everything save a consuming faith; the only weapon at his command to deter an itchy trigger finger.

With the same kind of faith and courage needed to establish the interracial Koinonia Farm in Americus, Ga., Rev. Jordan has survived with philosophical resignation, death threats, economic reprisals, bombing, the near murder of his daughter, and an almost nightly reign of terror for 10 consecutive months.

"At best, teaching the gospel can be a precarious vocation," he noted wryly Thursday afternoon. "Even Lloyds of London has refused us insurance. They consider me a peculiar kind of risk."

Rev. Jordan was in New York at the invitation of In Friendship, the fledgling Brotherhood organization, which sponsored him in a rally at the Community church auditorium Thursday evening.

Sharing the sponsorship were several civic and church groups, including Friendship Baptist church, the Mid-Harlem Community Parish, the Modern Trend Group, and the Salem Methodist church.

NEEDS HUMOR

Facing reporters earlier in the day, Rev. Jordan exhibited rare charm, disarming frankness, and a refreshing ready wit. "When you've been through what we face day after day," Jordan mused, "you'd better not lost that last link with sanity — a sense of humor."

The round table of discussion, held at the Utopia Children's Center, 170 W. 130th st., was attended by ministers and laymen of the Harlem community. Among these were the Revs. Joshua Williams, William H. King, Thomas Kilgore, jr., M. L. Wilson, Joseph Elmore, David Licorish, Shelton Hale Bishop, S. Gary Onike, Malcolm Evans, Ralph L. Ray, George Lawrence, Warren Scott, Mrs. Ella Baker and Bayard Rustin.

Rev. Jordan, a native of Americus, Ga., brought that wit and much more back to his home town after earning a degree in agriculture from the University of Georgia nearly 20 years ago. "I felt the need to experiment in religion and brotherhood with the same freedom as I had experimented in agricultural chemistry at school," he recalled.

Rev. Jordan received his Masters' degree and Ph.D. from the Southern Baptist Seminary in Louisville, Ky.

"Another student and I decided to found a new kind of fellowship, a new kind of church in the state of Georgia." Thus, in 1942, a most unique venture, the Koinonia Farm was started in the little town of Americus.

"We started with 10 families on a four-acre plot," he recalled, "and then, as now, there are about one-third Negro families working and living on the farm," which now commands more than 1,000 acres.

HUMAN EXPERIMENT

"The idea was frankly experimental and simple," Rev. Jordan admitted. "We brought together a body of believers, and helped them to hurdle the barriers of race, religion and property rights.

"We decided that a man must not be burdened with the prejudices and jealousies which accompany the acquisition of wordly goals. He therefore had to give everything to the church. Pe pass the collection plate just once, and the members give everything; be it a dime, a hundred dollars or a $50 bet slip.

"As a result," Rev. Jordan continued, "none of us owns a thing. All worldly goods belong to the church, and the church distributes them to the members on the basis of need, without regard for race or origin.

Relaxing on his big frame, Rev. Jordan declared: "God is a God of love, and His method is the method of love. In all our years we have followed His teachings, and have attempted to love our enemies.

"Frankly, we didn't think of the dissenters in our community as enemies. We felt that we must pray for them, teach them. Our intent and purpose hasn't changed, not even in 1950, when we were excommunicated from the Southern Baptist church for inviting an East Indian to speak at one of our church meetings. Locked out at every turn, we simply started our own church."

POLITE WARNINGS

The petty annoyances and economic pressures against Koinonia Farm gave way to violence last May.

"Some blame the Supreme Court decision against segregated schools for all the trouble in the South, but that is by no means the only reason," said Rev. Jordan. "I think the growing stature of the Southern Negro, and his increasing determination to speak out for his rights, is also a great underlying reason for the unrest. However, I see hope in the fact that the white Southerner is also growing up."

This faith was tested on a hot night in May, 1956 when shots were fired on the Koinonia Farm's market building, located on a four acre plot on U. S. highway 14, about a half mile from the main farm. Again in June, a blast of gunshot was aimed at the roadside store.

"You see," Rev. Jordan smiled, "the Southerner is above everything else polite. He believes in giving a warning."

GOT TOUGH

When Jordan and his families deigned to heed the "polite" warnings, the bigots got tough. On a night in July, a charge of dynamite was exploded near the market, tearing out one whole wall and damaging some of the machines used to cure and store the goods produced for sale on the farm.

"We patched it up," said Jordan, "and by November we were operating again, despite the warnings, and another buckshot siege on the market just before Thanksgiving.

"For a Christmas present, four high-powered bullets were slammed through our gasoline pumps, on the oil reservoir we had set up when local companies refused to supply the farm. We were hoping that these people would make some New Year's resolutions. They did, but firing on the farm proper for the first time.

"Later in Jaunuary," Jordan continued, "the big blow fell. A terrific stack of dynamite and later a fire, completely destroyed the market and thousands of dollars worth of produce. Shortly after that, one of the buildings in the main community was burned to the ground, and a night watchman was fired upon by a machine gun, loaded with tracer bullets.

BRUSH WITH DEATH

"My 20-year-old daughter, home on spring vacation last month, narrowly escaped death when a high-powered bullet was fired at her as she went to pull down the shade in her bedroom. The bullet plowed through three walls, over the top of a chair I had vacated 15 minutes before, and into the closet of my younger children's bedroom.

"I must admit," Jordan said admiringly, "that was some shooting. The sniper had to be at least 50 yards away from the house when he fired towards my favorite chair. In all my years as a marksman, I never did better myself."

Despite the amazing courage of the people of Kiononia Farm, and their determination not to return violence, the pressure is beginning to tell. "What can you expect when even little children are under fire night after night?" Jordan asked. "We decided to establish another farm, in New Jersey, so that some of our people can come up here for a few months respite. Oh yes, they'll go back to Georgia.

"Although we have suffered heavy damages, the farm has been able to survive, through the gifts of many people in our own state and elsewhere, who abhor the violent trend. Faith in God will carry us through."

There was no bravado in his voice, as Rev. Jordan related how he has countered violence and hatred with penance and hope. He left his listeners inbued with an even greater hope, as he declared:

JIM CROW DYING?

"The violence of the past ten months has been a convulsion. It reminds me of a chicken with its head cut off, fighting and scratching more than at anytime in its life. Jim Crow is like that. It is not dead, but its head is cut off. The convulsions of violence is the last gasp of this Southern way of life."

Klan Claims Negro Elks March Permit in Macon Is Discrimination

Constitution P. 6
Atlanta Ga. Sun. 4-30-57

MACON, Ga., April 29 (AP)—A Ku Klux Klan spokesman says Macon city officials showed "discrimination" by permitting Negro Elks to hold a parade and convention after prohibiting a Klan parade and meeting.

Lee Davidson, who identified himself as Grand Klokard (district manager) of the U.S. Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said Sunday in an interview the Klan would take up the matter at the Tuesday night meeting of the City Council.

Davidson issued his statement shortly after Negro Elks staged a parade through downtown Macon in connection with a district convention in the city.

No Mixed Events For Ga. Students

Sat. 5-4-57
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ATLANTA (ANP)—In a resolution last week designed to maintain segregation in its strictest forms, the Georgia Board of Education made it an offense for public school students to take part in interracial meetings of any organizations such as the YMCA, 4-H Clubs or YWCA.

The resolution proposed by staunch segregationist, William Bodenhamer, stated "no organization having extra curricula status shall be allowed to invite Georgia members to racially mixed events and any group doing so will thereafter be barred from the state's schools."

The measure added, "all presently recognized organizations shall be required to affirm their intention to comply or else shall not be allowed to operate any local club or chapter in the schools."

An amendment to the resolution also made it an offense for teachers to participate in racially mixed meetings of various groups.

Gowen's Out to Show He Is 'Right' on Race Issue

Constitution P. 9
Atlanta Ga.
Mon. 5-6-57

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

"Charlie Gowen," said one of Georgia's shrewdest political operators recently, "has got to show the people he's 'right' on the race question to be elected lieutenant governor."

Translated, what the politico meant is that Rep. Charles L. Gowen of Brunswick, a potential candidate for the state's number two office next year, must be able to answer any charge his foes might make that he is "soft" or "weak" on the issue of segregation.

William M. Bates

To be "sound" on this most sensitive of issues, even to the satisfaction of the most doubting of Thomases, seems to be the political norm in Georgia politics today.

And Rep. Gowen appears out to remove any doubt of his "soundness" on the issue.

NO UNCERTAIN TERMS

He spelled out his position, in no uncertain terms, in an address at the University of Georgia Saturday. Among the points he made were these:

That the Supreme Court relied on "psychological concepts not supported by law" in declaring public school segregation to be unconstitutional.

That the people of Georgia are "simply not going to have" mixed classrooms.

That the power to abolish the public schools is the "most effective" weapon the state possesses to maintain segregation.

That the Legislature is not bluffing about closing the schools before bowing to integration.

SLASHING ATTACK

Gowen also made a slashing attack on current civil rights proposals that pose a threat to jury trials. And he praised the fight that Sens. Talmadge and Russell and Macon attorney Charles J. Bloch have made against the proposed civil rights legislation.

How could Gowen's foes point the finger of suspicion at him? The answer lies in his political background.

He was, for many years, identified with the anti-Talmadge faction of Georgia politics at the time when race charges were being hurled back and forth with a great deal of abandon. The anti-Talmadgeites as a group were subjected to charges of being too soft on the Negro question.

Also, Gowen comes from urban, politically sophisticated Glynn County, where racial politics have never predominated. He is not now—nor has ever been—a race-baiter in any sense of the word; he is not a "hater" by nature and did not have to appear to be so for political reasons.

BACKS ADMINISTRATION

During the last session of the Legislature, for example, he supported all of the administration-sponsored segregation bills and the resolution calling for impeachment of six Supreme Court justices. But he opposed a bill obstensibly designed to ban integrated sports in Georgia. He said he was opposed to mixed sporting events, but said the bill under consideration was "ill conceived" and would do far more than the sponsors intended.

Finally, there is Gowen's 1954 race for governor. Some of his critics say he made certain statements in that campaign that will prove embarrassing when played back in the future.

Ironically, that 1954 race for governor will probably cost Gowen the support of many of the one-time anti-Talmadge leaders if he decides to make the race for lieutenant governor. Some of them are openly bitter; they think his presence in the race helped bring on the defeat of M. E. Thompson. Most of these leaders will probably rally behind Rep. Downing Musgrove of Clinch County if he decides to enter the race.

To offset that, Gowen is known to be looked upon with favor by some leaders high in the Talmadge camp. He is also expected ot prove popular among so-called independent voters.

One area of potential Gowen weakness is probably the small rural counties.

But speeches such as he made at the university won't do him any harm there.

Georgia Minister Warns Dixie On Race Issue

Defender Lit. 5-18-57 Chicago, Ill. P.2

NEW YORK — A prominent Georgia minister Monday warned Southerners they are no longer thinking clearly on most fundamental issues because of their extreme sensitivity to the racial question.

This sensitivity, declared the Rev. Robert B. McNeill of Columbus, Ga., prevents Southerners from making judgements about fundamentals like freedom, democracy and justice on an absolute standard of right and wrong because of "the presence of a people from whom he must always make an exception."

Writing in the new issue of Look Magazine, the minister said:

"The Southerner is acutely sensitive these days. He will accuse you of dragging in the race issue when you honestly meant no such implication.

"The issue is in every phase of his life--the kind of wage scale he will establish, to whom he will sell his merchandse, whom he will support for public office, where he buys his house, what he thinks about education, what preacher he will listen to. . .how far he will go in public welfare."

As a solution to the problem, Rev. McNeill offered a program of "creative contact" between the races in which Negroes would have representation on city councils, grand juries, school boards, medical societies, ministerial associations and other public agencies.

Such a program, he said in Look, would prevent the destructive contact between the races that some fear would occur with complete integration.

The clergyman predicted "there will be a breakthrough eventually" in the race problem, for "even a Southerner can't hold out forever against the irrefutable testimony of his own experience, especially as it is tempered with the relentless persuasion of the Bible."

Commission Votes Money To Advertise Segregation In Ga.

Daily World Wed. 5-29-57 Atlanta Ga. P.1

In a move to further promote segregation, the Georgia Education Commission has agreed to spend approximately $376,000 to maintain bias, it was disclosed Tuesday.

The Commission, headed by Governor Marvin Griffin took steps to set up an advertiising plan inorder to promote "The Georgia Way Of Life."

In an executive session at the Capital City Club, the group met with advertising representatives and approved the idea of spending about $126,000 this year and $250,000 next year.

Roy Harris, subcommittee member denied that this amount would be spent on the program. He said the figures of the above amount were discussed but denied this amount would be spent.

Gov. Griffin's Comment On Agitation Scored

Constitution Wed. 1-23-57 P.17

Tuskegee Institute, Ala.—Gov. Griffin's statement concerning the agitation from outsiders of affairs in Georgia relating to segregation is a bit hypocritical. COAG Hears Vandiver Pledge To Maintain Segregation

Constitution P.20

SAVANNAH, June 13 (AP)—Lt. Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver told members of the County Officers' Association of Georgia as they opened their annual meeting here today, that he intended to work for preservation of the segregation of whites and Negroes and the county unit system of voting as long as he remained in public life.

Atlanta Ga.

Vandiver, principal speaker at the opening session of the two-day convention, was introduced as "the next governor of the state of Georgia" by W. B. Caldwell, clerk of Greene County Superior Court.

Jrn. 6-14-57

Vandiver gave no hint of his plans in the next governorship race but bitterly attacked the United States Supreme Court saying the nation had entered "an age of judicial tyranny."

A number of other state officials were expected at the convention headquarters, the Manger Hotel, during the day to swell the attendance of some 200 visitors.

The convention will elect officers tomorrow. The annual banquet will be held tonight.

The convention sessions are being presided over by T. H. Rivers of Louisville, tax collector of Jefferson County.

Vandiver said there were certain elements in power today determined to penalize the South in one way or the other. He said the U.S. Supreme Court decision on the desegregation of public schools was a "political" one. The court, he said, had "prostituted the letter and the spirit of the law."

The "so-called 'civil rights' is an ugly sore that can't be cured by the use of force," he said. The speaker said "You can't change the way of life ingrained into the hearts of people for 300 years by passing a law."

There were remarks of welcome from Mayor W. Lee Mingledorff Jr. and Judge Victor B. Jenkins Jr., presiding in the court of ordinary.

Gov. Asks Funds To "Safeguard" Race Segregation

Daily World Wed. 1-23-57 Atlanta Ga. P.1

Gov. Marvin Griffin stood staunchly behind his "hold the line" advice to the Georgia Legislature Tuesday, as he outlined plans for $20-Million in additional state spending, and lashed out at attempts to limit his power over Georgia's fiscal affairs.

The Governor's budget message, delivered before a joint session of the House and Senate yesterday, met with mixed reaction from lawmakers.

The Governor linked efforts to switch control of the budget matters from the Chief Executive to the Legislature as part of a "vicious scheme" to spread kusunity, fostered by "those who are determined to destroy constitutional progresses in this state." And he said:

"Let me say in clear and unequivical terms, that the proposals to strip the Chief Executive officer of your state of his proper supervision over Budgetary matters are part and parcel of this vicious scheme."

Griffin termed the Governor's power over budget affairs "an indispensible safeguard if we are to assure a continuation of separate schools and colleges for Georgia young people, if we are to preserve order and if we are to maintain domestic peace, harmony and tranquility."

Sen. Bobby Lee Cook, of Sommerville, said the Governor's observation, linking efforts to give the Legislature control of the budget to the move to end segregation "ridiculous." Cook said:

"It so happens that when somebody disagrees with you now, the tendency is to label them communist. This statement is comparable — that anybody who does not want to give him budget powers are part of a 'vicious scheme .....'"

Sen. George Jackson said that, in general, he thought Griffin made a good speech "but I certainly take exception to that statement."

"I don't go along with the idea of vesting so much budgetary power in the hands of the Governor," Sen. Asa Kelley said.

Officers Chase Cafe Customers

Daily World Sun. 8-4-57 Atlanta Ga. P.1

Police officers J. R. Watkins and H. A. Grave reported Saturday that they chased several Negro customers from a white restaurant on Memorial Drive, SW, at about 3 a.m. although the proprietor's wife explained that her business license authorized her to serve Negroes.

The officers said they were alerted by three white youths who said Negroes and whites were eating in the same restaurant and that the proprietor's wife told them she would rather serve Negroes than "them" because they were more polite and that their money spent just as well.

When they arrived at the restaurant, the officers reported seeing several Negroes drinking coffee at the counter along with white patrons.

Daily World

"We proceeded to run the Negroes off fter paying their bills," the officers reported. P.5

They said they talked with the woman who also gave them the same explanation for serving the Negroes.

Says Race Should Mix Leadership

ATLANTA, Ga. — "The day is coming, is probably here now, when leaders of the Negro group should not all be Negroes, "President Rufus E. Clement told the first Atlanta university summer school assembly this week. "If we are to have effective social change, we must forge race and follow people with ideals with which weare in accord".

Dr. Clement said that the day has passed when any group will have but one leader. He compared the present, when Negro leadership is drawn from many areas and occupations with the time of Booker T. Washington, who, in spite of protests of DuBois and others, occupied a unique position wherein other Negroes served only as his cabinet or sponsors while he occupied alone the position of leader.

The type of leadership needed and the strategy to be followed now differ from location to location and effective leadership is based on a knowledge of local conditions, Dr. Clement said.

He defined a leader as one who has certain basic qualifications, such as organizational connections, sound judgement, unselfishness, devotion, dedication, and courage, but not as one aspiring to be a leader, not one who runs and puts himself at the head of what people want.

Lawson Hits Vandiver on Racial Issue

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon 7-1-57

Roger Lawson, retiring head of the State Highway Department and avowed candidate for governor, said on television Sunday afternoon that Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver has made statements showing that Vandiver favors a "middle of the road policy and gradual racial integration."

Lawson appeared as a guest of the Constitution sponsored program, "Press Gallery." He was interviewed by the Constitution's political editor William M. Bates and state Capitol reporter Bruce Galphin. Moderating the program was editorial associate George Boswell.

Can Lawson "catch up" with Vandiver? See Bill Bates' Political Notebook on Page 5.

Also on the program was M. L. Shadburn, chief engineer of the highway department.

"I got in the governor's race on my own hook and at the urging of friends all over the state," Lawson said. "I expect no organized support in the administration, but I believe that Gov. Griffin will vote for me."

Lawson said he would spend the next 12 months "practicing law and going all over the state making as many friends as I can."

Lawson made his statement about Vandiver's policy in answer to a question by political editor Bates who asked Lawson to elaborate on his statement that Vandiver was "soft" on the question of integration.

Lt. Gov. Vandiver late Sunday night had the following to say about Lawson's charge on the television program:

"The statement of Mr. Lawson is so obviously ridiculous that it does not deserve the dignity of a reply."

The first five minutes of the elevised interview were political, hen the questions turned to the ighway department's plans for ew construction, particularly in nd around Atlanta.

Lawson said 18.3 miles of the orth-south leg of the Expressway vere at present under contract and would cost in excess of $19,000,000.

He said the University avenue-Richardson street section of the Expressway would be officially opened by July 15. The Spring street-Baker street section will be completed within a 12-month period, the chairman said.

The downtown section — Baker street to Richardson street—has not been let to contractors yet, Lawson said.

"This has been our big headache," the highway chief said. "The highway department has had to reconcile the interchange and connectors, but I believe the plans now on our drawing boards are entirely satisfactory to all concerned."

Engineer Shadburn showed the television audience a map of the downtown section and explained that part of the slowness of the development of that part east of the state Capitol section was due to the tremendous amounts of dirt necessary to build up the roadway.

Shadburn said the Piedmont avenue bridge would probably be the first one built in this connecting section. He said all the bridges would probably be completed in a year, and that the connector could be finished by the end of 1960.

In discussing the interstate highway system, Lawson said 1,200 miles would be constructed in Georgia, giving the state fifth place in the nation in number of miles.

Lawson said the development of aerial surveys and electronic computors would materially speed up the engineering part of the highway construction.

Shadburn said that more than 400 miles of Georgia super-highways had already been planned, and that the state was well ahead of the national average on the work done on the highways.

However, Shadburn said the work could not be done in the nationally estimated 15 years.

"More money would speed up the work, but with the funds now available, completion date is still a long way off," the engineer said.

Shadburn said the most needed sections of the roads — those around cities and towns — would be the ones started and completed first.

Chairman Lawson said the state would raise any money necessary to match federal funds in the road building project.

ALBANY, Ga.—The recent revelation that Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus had been the guinea pig for a test run of the Georgia Plan to thwart public school integration was highlighted last week by open admissions from Georgians that their plan had failed.

In Atlanta, high-calibre business executive an former head of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, Ivan Allen, an avowed powerful candidate for Georgia's governorship, didn't quibble or beat around the bush about the matter.

MR. ALLEN called for a special session of the Georgia Legislature to make new laws to cover up the flaws exposed in the Georgia Plan by President Eisenhower's action in the Little Rock school case.

"The Little Rock action has destroyed some of the plans Georgia had hoped to use to thwart integration of the public schools," Mr. Allen said in a public statement.

"We will have to revise our plans," he added.

In Griffin, Ga., Quinby Melton Jr., a member of the Georgia Board of Regents and editor of a Griffin newspaper, called upon the state to abolish its National Guard to prevent its federalization in the event of a school integration order, and also called for strengthening of the State Highway Patrol. He also proposed a third political party.

LIEUT. - GOVERNOR Ernest Vandiver, point blank, asked for abolition of the public schools of Georgia to avoid an integration situation.

"The Georgia Plan" calls for use of the National Guard, the State Highway Patrol and every able-bodied white man in Georgia to safeguard the schools against integration.

Interracial Farm Wins Clergy's Aid

23 Georgia Ministers Oppose Jury Charges It Is Red Front

AMERICUS, Ga., Apr. 7 (AP).—Support for the way of life at Koinonia Farm, an interracial community near here, came Sunday from twenty-three Georgia ministers who made public at Macon, Ga., a letter opposing charges against the farm issued by a Sumter County grand jury Friday.

The grand jury, which had been called upon to investigate bombings, shootings and burnings perpetrated against the 1,100-acre establishment, issued a presentment suggesting that the incidents were caused by residents of the community to attract sympathy and financial aid for the farm. The grand jury also charged that the farm, established fifteen years ago as a religious colony where, at present, about forty-five white and fifteen Negro men, women and children live and work, might be a Communist front.

Sunday's open letter to fellow Georgia ministers was signed by Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian and Lutheran ministers. It said:

"In regard to recent publicity concerning Koinonia Farm, Inc., near Americus, we, the undersigned, in light of our present understanding, express our belief that:

"1. Koinonia Farm is a Christian community.

"2. Acts of violence have come from persons outside the Koinonia group.

"3. No connection exists between Koinonia Farm and the Communist party.

"We pray that God's truth and Christ's redeeming love may be revealed in this present crisis in Sumter County."

Also Sunday, Norman Long, president of Koinonia, denied emphatically the grand jury charges. He said in a prepared statement that members of the community were determined to remain in southwest Georgia regardless of what happened.

"These are our homes," he said. "We shall not leave them. If those who seek to drive us out are so determined that the choice is to leave or die, then we shall have to die."

They Asked For It

Pro-American P.4

The merchants, the bankers, businessmen and other 'decent' citizens of Americus, Ga., have continued to look the other way while hoodlums for more than a year have terrorized the nearby interracial Koinonia Farm.

The 1,100-acre religious cooperative has been machine-gunned, bombed and sprayed with shotgun pellets and tracer slugs.

Baltimore Md.

Arsonists, indifferent to human life, have set buildings aflame at night. Klansmen have dotted the surrounding countryside with fiery crosses.

Mortgages have been foreclosed, insurance policies cancelled and a tight county-wide boycott instituted.

A grand jury spent its time preparing a ridiculous presentment charging residents of the farm were terrorizing themselves and strongly hinted of communism.

Obviously believing they had the green light, the bombers changed their target last week and threw several sticks of dynamite in the heart of the town's business section.

Plate glass windows in the community's largest department store, a four-story bank building and even the courthouse were shattered by the blast.

The 'decent' citizens doubtless now express surprise and alarm. But they shouldn't.

They asked for it. Too late, they have discovered that violence is like a plague. Once lost, it is not easily stopped.

Damage to the contents of the feed store, a grocery store and a dry goods store was termed negligible. About 14 windows were shattered in a four - story bank building across the street. One window was broken in the county courthouse, situated diagonally across the street, and several windows in other nearby buildings were cracked.

A voluntary boycott of Koinonia Farm, where Negroes and whites live, work and play together, has existed for some time among some Americus merchants.

There have been numerous reports of violence directed against the farm.

Eddie Sutton, feed store manager, told authorities that he had been ordered recently by his Macon headquarters to sell products to the farm or anyone who entered the store for purchases. Sutton added that he is resigning his position because of the order to sell to the farm.

The explosion went off in the center of the sidewalk between the feed store and the grocery, tearing a hole 10 inches long, 3 inches deep and 5 inches wide in the concrete.

Koinonian Extends Message of Fellowship

Constitution P.4 Sun. 6-2-57 Atlanta Ga.

Koinonia Farm—The fame of the Koinonia community and its witness has spread through 'our' country and the world. It has attracted many such as I to visit and to participate in Christian fellowship with them. Although sorely oppressed, they continue in every way to bear living testimony to their faith and to extend their fellowship to all who wish to share with them.

This fellowship has always been extended to other residents of Sumter County, especially to those in need of help.

However, there is the fear in the hearts of many Southerners that by sympathizing with Koinonia they will bring violence upon themselves. Is it the democratic answer to run away and hide from the wrongdoer?

Now the eyes of the world are turned upon this area and thousands await the outcome. We have a grave responsibility to them.

Hard decisions were also made in Bethlehem and at Lexington and Concord by the brave and pure in spirit.

The good people at Koinonia Farm have long extended their hands to you in Christian fellowship. Please do not draw away in fear.

Koinonia Farms Almost Overlooked By Church Group

Daily World Tue. 6-7-57 Atlanta Ga.

Koinonia Farms, which has stirred nationwide controversy, was virtually ignored by Georgia Presbyterians during the annual meeting of the Synod of Georgia, Presbyterian Church, U. S.

P.1

In contrast to strong condemnation of violence adopted by other religious denominations, the Georgia Presbyterians adopted a watered down resolution deploring "any resort to violence for settling disagreements among us" without reference to the biracial colony by name.

The amended resolution was offered by Dr. J. M. Dowell, president of Columbia Theological Seminary. The text of the measure viewed as touching on Koinonia Farms read:

"We deplore any resort to violence to settle difference between us, regardless of whether we agree with the views and practices of those who are victims of the violence. We would urge the law enforcement officers of our state to prevent violence by apprehension and prosecution of those who have been offenders.

"We believe that if violence is allowed to continue, here or elsewhere, it will work to the impairment of our cherished principle of freedom of worship and will militate against the freedom of minority groups to express their religion according to dictates of their conscience."

The body deleted a section of the proposed resolution which rebuked the Sumter (Americus,Ga.) Grand Jury for publishing in its presentation "information that residents of Koinonia Farms are a communist front without at the same time giving evidence it has to substantiate such a charge.

New Shooting At Bi-Racial Farm in Ga.

Herald-Tribune Wed. 4-24-57 New York

AMERICUS, Ga., Apr. 23 (AP).—Another early morning shooting at controversial bi-racial Koinonia Farm was reported today by Clarence Jordan, co-founder.

Mr. Jordan said a bullet from a car traveling toward Americus between 1:45 and 1:50 a. m. struck the fender of a machine where Chris Crescher, seventy-one-year-old night watchman, was sitting under a light near the main cluster of buildings at the 1,100-acre farm. The car sped away.

Koinonia, where white persons and Negroes work, dine and find recreation together, has evoked a furor in this south Georgia community, where segregation is strictly observed.

White Georgian Would Move Negroes North and Settle Them in White Neighborhoods

Courier Sat. 9-14-57 Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 5

ATLANTA, Ga.—If State Representative A. A. Fowler of Douglasville has his way, a "State Resettlement Commission" will be established in Georgia with the express purpose of helping Southern Negro families to move into white residential areas of the North.

• Fowler has backed up his proposal by placing ads in Georgia newspapers under the heading of "residential opportunities (colored)."

Fowler has also announced that he is planning to sponsor legislation to create the "commission." Under the terms of Fowler's proposal the commission would send agents into Northern white communities, particularly in well-to-do neighborhoods, for the purpose of quietly buying up property.

THE NEWLY purchased property would then be leased or sold to "carefully, screened, worthy and qualified" Negro Georgians.

Representative Fowler announced that he had already received around two or three hundred offers "of suitable real estate from both private owners and real estate agents in the North and West. It could be that we wouldn't have to hire any real estate agents.

"For example, we have heard from the owner of an apartment house across the street from an all-white school in Senator Douglas' home state of Illinois—he wants to sell it to us."

FOWLER'S PLAN has won the support of Alabama State Senator Sam Englehart, the notorious White Citizens councilor, who says that he is going to have the plan studied by Alabama's solons.

Fowler's aims are not inspired by any great desire to see the lot of his home state's Negroes improved for some of the finest homes in the nation, white or colored, are owned by Negroes in Atlanta, Ga.

Instead Fowler feels that if his plan is carried through, it will lead to the election in the North of white Congressmen who are sympathetic to the South's standards of white supremacy.

SAYS FOWLER: "It strikes right at the heart of the problem—that is, it will eventually help elect Senators and Congressmen in other states who will have good political reasons to agree with our position. It allows us at last to seek the initiative whereas in the past our dealings with the North and West in this general field have been laudatory but defensive in nature."

Representative Fowler feels that his measure will pass when the General Assembly meets in January.

Legislature Calls For Impeachment Of Warren, 5 Others

"Cracker" State's Solons Hot And Bothered Over Law Requiring Orderly Desegregation Good Suggestion: Let Thurgood Marshall Take On State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook In Debate On Authority Of Highest Court To Advise Georgia Who Is Boss In This Country

That there are some men of sound judgment and who are actuated by patriotic motives even in the state of Georgia was proved this week when the House of Representatives of Georgia failed to score a unanimous approval of a resolution offered and passed to memorialize the state's members of congress to start impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Earl Warren and five Associate Justices of the U. S. Supreme Court.

That the action of the Georgia lawmakers will get no farther than passage by misguided men "way down in Georgia" is a foregone conclusion. But passage of the resolution even by a constitutional majority in the Georgia House of Representatives is likely to cause many citizens of the state to become fearful that their state is racing in an effort to get the prize for being the most backward state in the Union, now held by the state of Mississippi.

In addition to Chief Justice Warren the Georgians turned their guns upon Justices Black, Douglas, Reed, Frankfurt and Clark. But before any of these eminent members of the Supreme Court could enter a demurrer or something a Mr. Reed of the legislature arose in his place and declared that Georgia was serving the Communist cause and that the 103 members of the House who voted for the resolution were making themselves ridiculous before the world.

The principal protest the Georgians were making against members of the Supreme Court, of course was that they had taken a stand in favor of doing away with discriminatory schools. Finally, it appears, the Georgians have discovered that the Supreme Court in Washington is empowered to advise Georgians to hit the sawdust trail and begin singing the "Star Spangled Banner" like other good Americans

You have to reflect upon the power of a little teen-age boy to put a scare into the hearts of a heavyweight boxer to get the full impact of what a proposal of a Georgia legislature to frighten the Supreme Court means. The heavyweight boxer would just about say "shoo fly don't bother me to the teen-age challenger. The same is just about what the Supreme Court members will say to the Georgia Legislators.

Impeachment, if it could be voted by the U. S. House of Representatives would have to go next to the United States Senate, be argued, then voted upon favorably before the Georgians could get the soul-satisfaction of having discharged a Chief Justice of the United States and a group of Supreme Court Justices.

What could give you greater satisfaction than to see Attorney General Eugene Cook of Georgia, chief architect of the Georgia resolution, be forced to meet in the great trial, none other than Thurgood Marshall who, unlike Cook, really knows the law of the land, including the power and perogative of the U. S. Supreme Court. No doubt Marshall would like nothing better than to be a participant in the "skinning" party with Eugene Cook, the chosen victim. It would be worth waiting until Mississippi makes up her mind to integrate just to be around when the skinning of Cook takes place.

It is not now recalled what if anything Eugene Cook contributed to the momentous discussions before the Supreme Court hearings on the segregation issues. It certainly wasn't anything to "write home about," because Cook seems to be a lawyer just about on par with our Attorney General McCanless whose batting average in the "big league" is very anemic indeed.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell already has stated that anybody who interferes with the orderly carrying out of the Supreme Court's edict to carry out desegregation in schools with deliberate dispatch would be considered rebelling against the authority of the Government of the United States.

That may mean that right now the FBI has its eye on Mr. Eugene Cook and a number of other reckless lawgivers of the Backward states.

Judging by what recently retired Supreme Court Justice Sherman Minton of the Supreme Court recently implied, some of the Big Shots who are guilty of challenging the Courts are in danger of being brought to justice in due time. Ever so many of his enemies would like to see the courts visit a full measure of tough luck upon Georgia's chief lawyer.

Fri. 2-22-57

The Associated Press' account of the action by the Georgia House of Representatives quotes the floor leader of the House as saying "The time has come when we of the South in our righteous indignation and under our right as a free people should memorialize Congress and ask impeachment of these members of the Supreme Court."

The floor leader revealed that the resolution had been drafted by the Attorney General and had the approval of Georgia's Governor Marvin Griffin.

Governor Griffin is a Democrat and so is the Georgia Legislature. Most any other minority group would call for holding the Democrat Party responsible for standing by and permitting one of its most dependable states to cut loose with so evil an action as is portrayed in the resolution.

But not so with the leading Democrat Negroes. For years they have denied that Demorcats of the backward states, whom they call Dixiecrats, speak for the Great, Grand and Glorious Democrat Party. They say it is the group of Northern liberals many of them in the Americans for Democratic Action.

Mr. Walter Reuther and others supply the leadership of their (the Negro) Democrat Party. That pleases the "liberals" ever so much. It tells them that Negro Democracy is incapable of learning what it is all about.

Negro Democracy can be depended upon to constitute themselves a band of worry warts, always ready, willing and anxious to go to bat for the Democrats and to elect in the North other Democrats to congress, here the Northern Liberals indulge constantly in a shadow boxing contest when it comes to doing anything about Civil Rights for the Negro.

In other words, whereas the Southerners are sinners on the civil rights issues, the Northern liberals almost without exception are hypocrites. Senator Humphrey of Minnesota Dohglas of Illinois and some other "liberals" do not intend to antagonize any of their Southern comrades by passing any civil rights laws.

They will let civil rights bills die in Congress as a result of the forthcoming Democrat filibuster that could have been avoided had the Democrat party itself, with the power to act for civil rights as effectively as they did in organizing the Senate and House, been as honest as they professed to be while they were campaigning last fall.

The simple device of calling the Democrats into a caucus and voting to curtail filibustering could have been used and should have been to prove Democrats wanted to enact civil rights legislation.

There is hardly a chance that any such legislation will pass in the present Congress and Northern Negroes will be more responsible than anybody else. Negroes can expect more of such wicked action from Democrats as was pertrated against the Supreme Court by the Georgia Legislature this week

Gov. Griffin Asks Guard Status, Says Ike Now 'Captive'

Montgomery Ala. Wed. 10-2-57

ATLANTA, Oct. 1 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin said today he is checking to determine what the role of Georgia's National Guard will be in the future.

"I believe that in peacetime the National Guard is the army of the state to keep the national tranquility," he told his news conference.

"If the National Guard can be federalized at every whim of the President," Griffin said, "the integration question is just one of the problems to be faced."

Griffin said the "South has been occupied by federal troops twice in history . . . the only time they have been down here we've had a great military chieftan." He referred to the occupation by federal troops during the administration of U.S. Grant and "they haven't been back until 1957."

He said President Eisenhower is a captive of Republican political strategists.

Hopes Swap for Negroes Will Continue

'Delighted' Georgia Welcomes Chicago Whites

Miami Fla.

WASHINGTON — (UP) — Rep E. L. Forrester, Georgia Democrat, said Tuesday Georgia has been swapping some of its Negro population for white people from Chicago. He said "we are most delighted" to continue the process.

In Tuesday's Congressional Record Forrester took note of a news dispatch saying Chicago's white population has declined since 1950 while the number of non-whites has increased. He said:

"I think that I can say to the people of Chicago that they need have no doubt that this non-white population is going to increase.

"The good people of Chicago may want to know what has happened to so many of their fine white citizens that have seen fit to move from their borders.

"I am happy to tell them that quite a few of them have now become firmly rooted down in South Georgia, and in the district that I have the honor to represent, and that we are thoroughly delighted with those new citizens.

"These people who have left their Chicago homes and come down to live with us are making a splendid contribution to our section, and to our American way of life, and we are most delighted to send them some more of our non-white population in exchange for those fine white citizens who have found that Chicago is no longer congenial to their thoughts and to their traditions.

"Keep it up, Chicago, because we will take all of your good people that want to come and want to be a part of us."

Mixed-Sports Ban Blocked in Georgia

Times Sat. 2-23-57

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTA, Feb. 22—A small, determined band in the Georgia House of Representatives defeated today for at least a year a bill to prohibit interracial sports and social activities in Georgia.

New York

Resisting heavy pressure from Gov. Marvin Griffin's Administration, the House bloc relied on parliamentary tactics to block passage of the measure during the final hours of the 1957 session.

In another action the Legislature called today for the impeachment of six members of the Supreme Court of the United States.

While the bill to outlaw interracial activities was still under consideration the House shouted approval of a Senate resolution to adjourn at 5 P. M., and opponents talked out the final five minutes or so of the session.

The bill as passed by the Senate would have forbidden "any dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other such activities involving personal and social contacts in which the participants or contestants are members of the white and Negro races."

Times P. 30-C

The bill remains pending. It will be the first order of business when the Legislature convenes Jan. 13, 1958.

The opponents of the measure had tried numerous parliamentary tricks to stave off what appeared to be certain passage of the measure on a roll-call vote.

A maneuver by Representative George Bagby of Paulding County and Charles Gowen and William Killian of Glynn County turned the tide.

With Colbert Hawkins, administration floor leader, assisted by Governor Griffin's brother and aide, Cheney Griffin, calling the tune, the House was rolling along apparently with sufficient votes to pass the bill.

Then Mr. Bagby cited a rule discovered by Mr. Killian and Mr. Gowen that required proposed amendments to be printed before they could be considered.

Marvin Moate, House Speaker, ruled that Mr. Bagby's motion to postpone action while the amendments were printed was in order.

Baseball Threat Seen

Late in the afternoon Mr. Hawkins had the bill called up again but he was defeated 87 to 85 on a move to limit debate and the House adopted the Senate resolution to adjourn.

Some opponents of the measure had said its passage would kill the Class A South Atlantic Baseball League. Four Sally League teams are in Georgia—Savannah, Augusta, Columbus and Macon. Others are Knoxville, Tenn.; Charlotte, N. C.; Columbia, S. C.; and Jacksonville, Fla. There were about twelve Negro players in the league last season.

The resolution to impeach the Supreme Court justices had been denounced by minority members as "ridiculous" and a "bit of tomfoolery."

The House concurred 112-13 in an amendment to an impeachment resolution, which the Senate had passed yesterday 37-11. The measure now goes to Governor Girffin, who already has supported it.

"Some of us have for many years been publicly fighting night and day for segregation, constitutional government and the Georgia way of life. I am glad to learn he joins us in our fight," the lieutenant governor concluded.

Williams took his name out of the rumor category last week and announced he was seriously considering the race for governor. If he decides to run, the commissioner promised, he will resign by June 30.

"I have had an excellent reaction to the speculation that I'm running," Williams declared Tuesday.

He said he had received support from people interested in a "strong" segregation candidate and those "interested in my drive on illicit liquor."

The revenue commissioner maintained, however, that he is not a candidate at this time. "As long as I stay over here as revenue commissioner, I'm not going to be a candidate," he said. He said he would not mix politics and revenue work.

Williams Hits Segregation 'Weakness

Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams fired what may have been the first political shot of the 1958 governor's race Tuesday.

He said his announcement as a potential candidate has been well received throughout the state because "the people have been waiting for someone who isn't weak on segregation."

Williams did not directly accuse any other potential candidate of "weakness." In fact, he refused to amplify on his remarks.

But observers considered the remark to be aimed at Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, most prominently mentioned 1958 possibility.

Vandiver from his home in Lavonia told The Constitution that "I am glad he (Williams) joins us in our fight" for segregation.

"It is with pleasure that I learn that the revenue commissioner believes in segregation," Vandiver said.

Even Well-Off Negroes Resent Atlanta Curbs

Jan. 2-15-57

By ANDREW TULLY.

Scripps-Howard Staff Writer.

New York

ATLANTA, Jan. 15.—W. L. Calloway is a slender, light-skinned Negro with a wispy mustache who is a partner in the big Negro real estate and insurance firm of Alexander & Calloway. He drives a new Cadillac hardtop and lives in a $30,000 home in the city's best Negro residential section.

Mayor Bill Hartsfield calls Mr. Calloway "a fine citizen." A white man in the Dinkler-Plaza Hotel bar calls him an "uppity Negro."

Such contradictory viewpoints illustrate why the Negro, although better off in Atlanta than in any other Southern city, faces forlorn hope in his fight for total integration.

Good Paychecks.

With the help of such moderates as Mayor Hartsfield, the Negro works and shops side by side with the white in Atlanta. He takes home good paychecks, he votes without hindrance. But he still is segregated in buses, schools, restaurants and theaters. He resents that.

"Good living is not enough," says Mr. Calloway. "We want our rights. Integration is now the law of the land."

Mr. Calloway and his friends, of course, do not ride buses and they can afford to buy special education for their children. But that is not the point.

"I can't go to plays and restaurants here—I can't spend my money pleasantly," says Mr. Calloway. "I have to go to New York and Chicago. I'm sick of the whites saying 'Don't' and 'You can't.' I bought this Cadillac because it was one of the things they couldn't 'don't' me or 'can't' me about."

Tycoon of Sorts.

There is, too, C. R. Yates, chairman of the board of two Negro banks and owner of a small drugstore chain—a tycoon of sorts.

"I'm sick of this talk about the Negro 'keeping his place,'" says Mr. Yates. "I'm a big taxpayer, but when my son wanted to be an electrical engineer he couldn't go to Georgia Tech, he had to go to Purdue."

Both Mr. Calloway and Mr. Yates pin some hope on the test case upcoming as the result of the arrest here last week of six Negro preachers for riding up front in a bus. They don't want violence or community upheaval; they want to get their rights through legal channels.

It is a dim hope.

For, although the Atlanta city administration is friendly to the Negro, the state is hostile. And segregation is enforced through state laws.

To be sure, the Supreme Court has ruled bus and school segregation unconstitutional. But the state's politicians are prepared to delay integration until the end of time, simply by dragging a legal foot.

To begin with, Gov. Marvin Griffin is an acknowledged racist. So are a big majority of the state legislators. And that kind of people will continue to rule Georgia as long as the state retains its unit vote system of elections because it puts the power in the hands of the rural counties which are almost 100 percent segregationist.

Under the system, the state administration is elected by the unit vote of individual counties, just as Presidents are elected by the Electoral College total. But the result is virtual disenfranchisement of big cities like Atlanta, for under the system one vote in a small, two-vote rural county equals 60 votes in six-vote Fulton (Atlanta) County.

Strategy Simple.

With this power in hand, the racists' strategy is simple. If the Supreme Court rules against the state's bus segregation law, the Legislature merely will pass another. And when that is tested and voided, the Legislature will pass a third—and so on.

Already, Georgia has passed several laws aimed at thwarting the Supreme Court's ruling. One would make public schools private, another would cut off funds from any school admitting Negroes. Others are planned.

This is tough on a city like Atlanta, whose white citizens for the past 20 years have shown increasing good will and tolerance toward their Negro neighbors. It is tough because, if the politicians sustain their delaying tactics too long, there is bound to be violence.

Georgia Told Of 5 Crises By Talmadge

Advertiser P.6-a

Jan. 2-12-57

Montgomery Ala.

ATLANTA, Feb. 11 (AP) — The United States is confronted with five great crises, Sen. Herman Talmadge (D-Ga) declared today, "anyone of which if not met and overcome, will result in the gravest of consequences in the future."

He listed them as: "1. The Constitutional crisis; 2. The farm crisis; 3. The military security crisis; 4. The world crisis; 5. The economc crisis."

"The most serious," Talmadge told a joint session of the Georgia Legislature and a jam-packed house gallery, "is the attack on constitutional government."

He attacked the U.S. Supreme Court for what he termed "a series of partisan political decisions (which) openly flout the Constitution of the United States and, in defiance of established law and precedent, substitute in their stead impractical and unproved socialistic theory."

Talmadge listed the cases in which the court "has invaded and sought to obliterate the reserved rights of the states" as school and other segregation laws in 17 states, antisedition laws in 12 states, Alaska and Hawaii and the forced federal regulation of natural gas production in 30 states.

Home for the first time since he went to Washington as Georgia's junior senator, Talmadge was given a thunderous ovation when he was introduced and again when he finished his speech.

Legislature Bulwarks Griffin Police Power For Segregation Fight

Fund To Tell Georgia Way Of Life Voted

Atlanta, Ga.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The Georgia Senate delivered three more segregation measures to the governor Wednesday over outspoken but outnumbered opposition.

P.1

The legislation would, 1) expand the governor's powers to prevent riots and public disturbances, 2) give subpoena powers to the Georgia Commission on Education and 3) authorize expenditure of funds by the GCE for propaganda material.

Other Legislature stories on Pages 9, 10, 11 and 13.

Passage of the three measures left only one part of Gov. Griffin's segregation recommendations on which legislation action has not been completed.

The one outstanding bill—authorizing the governor to suspend the compulsory attendance law in case of integration orders—was approved by the Senate Education Committee Wednesday. The House-passed bill may be ready for Griffin Friday.

VANDIVER DRIVES ON

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, who expressed fears Tuesday that bills may be "log-jamming," held the Senate through a lengthy calendar Wednesday. Among the major legislation passed were:

1. A watered-down bill requiring the registration of sheriffs' bonded deputies. As amended in Senate, the House bill would require recommendations of two consecutive grand juries to become effective in a given county.

2. A bill making it permissive for a husband or wife to testify in criminal proceedings against his or her spouse.

3. A bill removing the $25,000 limit on campaign spending in Georgia. The Senate rejected an amendment by Sen. Quill Sammon of Lawrenceville setting an absolute limit of $250,000 with smaller maxima for local and district races.

PUBLIC DEFENDER

4. A resolution creating a committee to study the advisability for having an office of public defender.

Sen. Bobby Lee Cook of Summerville led the assault on the proposal to extend the governor's police powers.

"The powers that are given to the governor in this bill are far in excess of those given to the Nazi dictator in Germany," Cook asserted.

Constitution

It would give governors "the power to perfect law by executive fiat," he further stated. "I am opposed to government by proclamation. . . . We cannot remain a strong government of law if a measure such as this is allowed."

P.10

Cook said he was just as opposed as the administration to integration but "this measure is just as extreme" as the Supreme Court ruling.

Griffin's floor leader, Sen. Peyton Hawes of Elberton declared that "this is more than what you call a segregation bill. We are fighting for our sovereign rights to govern ourselves."

Hawes conceded that "we are taking drastic steps" but said the laws were needed and "I know you will vote for them." HB 2 "does grant sweeping powers to the governor," he said, but its purpose is to "promote peace and tranquillity."

Sammon moved to put a Feb. 1. 1960, time limit on the bill. He declared that "the people of Georgia are flatly opposed to giving any more unchecked power to the executive."

The motion on Sammon's amendment failed, 41-7.

On the final vote, only Cook and Sen. Fred Bentley of Marietta opposed the bill.

Cook voted against the propaganda-authorizing resolution, which passed, 43-1. He was out of the chamber when the subpoena-power resolution passed, 38-0.

FIRST RETURN VISIT TO GEORGIA

Sen. and Mrs. Talmadge Arrive in Spring-Like Weather

Georgia Senate Asks Voiding Of Amendments By Congress

Advertiser Sat. 2-9-57

Montgomery Ala.

ATLANTA, Feb. 8 (AP)—The Georgia Senate today raised another legal point in its continuing battle for segregation with a resolution asking Congress to declare null and void the 14th and 15th amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

In a privileged resolution, which was adopted unanimously with no fanfare or debate, the body declared that the two amendments were improperly constituted and never legally adopted. P. 1

The 14th amendment, the so-called due process amendment and the 15th, which deals with voting rights, have been used in efforts to break down segregation in the South.

Sen. Payton Hawes of Elberton, administration floor leader who introduced the resolution, said it was the first direct attempt by any state to invaladate actions of the post-civil war congresses.

"This is an offensive action," Hawes said. "We've been on the defensive long enough. And we hope other southern states will follow."

The Senate resolution was sent to President Eisenhower, Chief Justice Earl Warren, congressional leaders and all Georgia congressmen.

Talmadge Home, Vows Rights Fight

Constitution Sat. 2-9-57 Atlanta, Ga.

By WILLIAM M. BATES

Sen. Talmadge declared Friday he and other Dixie senators plan a vigorous fight against a proposal to change the present filibuster rule. P. 1

But the state's new junior senator, home for the first time since he was sworn in Jan. 3, admitted: "Our prospects are not as bright as I would like them and as they have been in the past."

Talmadge and his wife, Betty, arrived here by plane from Washington Friday and went immediately to their farm near Lovejoy. The Talmadges arrived in sunny, spring-like weather.

On Monday, Talmadge will address a joint session of the Legislature and will return to the nation's capital Monday night.

The former Georgia governor said no hearings have thus far been scheduled on proposals to change Senate rules to make it easier to stop filibusters—the South's traditional weapon against civil rights legislation.

Talmadge is a member of the Rules Committee which will consider the proposed change to make it possible for two thirds of the senators voting to cut off debate. Constitution

Under present rules, two thirds of the full Senate—64 senators—are required to invoke cloture.

"I and most of the Southerners are going to fight to maintain the present rules," Talmadge declared. "I'd like to see as much freedom of debate as possible in the Senate. P. 3

"Under the present rules, it is possible for a strong man to protect the interest of his state or region," he said.

Talmadge conceded that the chances of the Dixie bloc in Congress of preventing passage of civil rights legislation are "darker than they have been in the past."

He said proposals now before Congress would "destroy our form of government." Proponents of these bills, he said, are "trying to abolish civil rights in the name of giving more civil rights."

The senator said he enjoys his Senate role but does not like living in the Washington area. The Talmadges have a home in Falls Church, Va., just outside the District of Columbia.

"In other words, I like my job but I don't like the geography," he said.

Talmadge said he and his wife have to attend to some business—"hams and farming"—on their short visit.

They were accompanied from Washington by three Atlanta friends—Charles Outlaw, the Rev. James P. Wesberry and Charles Ivey Jr.

Georgians Kill Bill Banning Sport Mixing

Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Feb. 22 (AP)—After a uproarious session, the House today withstood strenuous administration pressure and defeated a bill to prohibit interracial sports and social activities in Georgia. Opponents pulled every parliamentary trick in the book to stave off what appeared would be certain passage of the measure on a roll call vote. Finally after numerous delaying tactics, they passed a motion to adjourn sine die at 5 p.m. and then talked out the last five minutes of the 1957 session to kill the bill.

RACE BILL BEATEN IN GEORGIA HOUSE

Sally League Seems Safe For Another Season

Memphis, Tenn.

ATLANTA, Feb. 22. — (UP) — The Georgia Legislature Friday beat down for the fifth time a bill to bar racially-mixed baseball in the state but enacted a resolution demanding the impeachment of six justices of the United States Supreme Court.

Sat. 2-23-57

Opponents of the so-called "Baseball Bill" wore out its supporters through a series of parliamentary maneuvers which climaxed the last day of the 1957 Legislature.

The measure would have prohibited racial intermingling in both sports and social functions but on its introduction in the House of Representatives, the Senate-approved measure was delayed and amended to death.

More than a dozen amendments were proposed and the bill was attacked as "ridiculous," vague, too general, and the possible death knell of the South Atlantic League, the oldest Class A baseball loop in the nation, which first accepted Negroes in its ranks in 1953.

The same bill had been introduced in four previous legislatures but was either passed over or killed.

Georgia has four Sally League clubs, Macon, Savannah, Columbus and Augusta.

Opponents of the bill had also feared it would hurt the state through removal of big league training camps from the state and a possible end to big league exhibition games in the spring.

Meanwhile in Washington, the dean of Georgia's delegation to Congress, Representative Carl Vinson, voiced disapproval of the impeachment resolution, saying he will neither sponsor nor vote for such a move.

The resolution accuses Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Tom Clark, Felix Frankfurter, Stanley Reed, William O. Douglas and Hugo Black of "high crimes and misdemeanors."

Freshman Senator Herman E. Talmadge, (D., Ga.) did not commit himself, saying only that his policy "is to give due consideration to petitions and resolutions directed to me by the elected representatives of the people of Georgia."

IKE AT CHURCH; HEARS SERMON ON RACE ISSUE

Daily Tribune Mon. 2-11-57 Chicago, Ill.

Tensions Being Eased, Pastor Says

P. 4

BY LAURENCE BURD

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Thomasville, Ga., Feb. 10—President and Mrs. Eisenhower went to church today and heard a southern Presbyterian minister say there is a power working for good to ease racial tensions in the south.

The Eisenhowers, in the third day of a week or longer vacation on Milestone plantation near Thomasville, attended morning services in the city's 103 year old 1st Presbyterian church with their vacation hosts, Treasury Secretary and Mrs. Humphrey.

The Rev. H. Allen Gardner Jr., a native of Gulfport, Miss., took as his sermon topic, "When God Speaks to Man." People, he said, must be discerning enough to understand and attentive enough to listen to the word of God.

Ike Thanks Pastor

The Divine Being speaks, the Rev. Mr. Gardner said, "not thru nations screaming at nations and not thru racial tensions that hang heavy over our southland like a heavy thunderhead.

"In spite of all the noise," he said, "there is a power working for good to reconcile man with his neighbors."

The President, on leaving the weathered red brick church, thanked the Rev. Mr. Gardner for the sermon, but did not refer to the pastor's remarks on racial tensions.

Talks with Dulles Again

Before going to church the President conferred by telephone for the third straight day with State Secretary Dulles on the middle east, particularly on efforts by the United Nations to have Israel withdraw its forces from Egypt.

For most of the day the Eisenhowers and Humphreys took it easy, strolling about the big plantation with its piney woods and colorful blossoms. The weather was sunny and in the 80s.

Mr. Eisenhower, on his 16th holiday in Georgia as President, planned to go quail hunting or golfing tomorrow. Yesterday he bagged 10 quail on a six hour hunt with Humphrey at the plantation.

Sports Segregation Bill Stalled 6 Hours and Dies As Legislature Adjourns

Griffin Hails Stand on Tax, Slap at Court

Constitution Atlanta Ga. Sat. 2-23-57

By WILLIAM M. BATES

The Georgia Legislature adjourned at 5 p.m. Friday after winning praise from Gov. Marvin Griffin for "holding the line" on taxes and strengthening the state's segregation defenses.

Appearing separately in both houses shortly before the session ended, Griffin lauded the legislators for their contributions to "expansion and progress in Georgia."

The 5 o'clock "sine die" adjournment came as the House was locked in the bitterest battle in recent years on a Senate bill banning interracial sports in Georgia.

The house fight delayed adjournment 30 minutes past the originally scheduled deadline.

ON STATE SERVICES

In his traditional "farewell" speech, Griffin said the legislators had fulfilled their "constitutional responsibilities" by continuing state services within the present fiscal framework.

"You held the line in refusing to increase or reduce taxation," Griffin declared.

Bills to reduce state taxes by $20,000,000 annually — bitterly opposed by Griffin — were bottled up by administration forces in a House subcommittee.

But the governor devoted most of his brief speech to the General Assembly's action in the field of segregation legislation.

CITES THRUST AT COURT

He particularly lauded the adoption of a resolution calling for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren and five other Supreme Court Justices.

"One noteworthy piece of legislation was the resolution which condemned the Supreme Court of the United States for its usurpation of the inherent and vested rights of the states and the people to determine for themselves the management of their own local affairs," Griffin said.

"To you gentlemen who so forthrightly and conscientiously enacted this important document, I say that such action by this body reiterates and confirms that political conviction held by Thomas Jefferson," he added.

"I compliment you for your position in passing this resolution in the face of great criticism, and rest assured that you are in company with the great of this nation," he said.

Calling a special session, the Legislature will remain in adjournment until Jan. 13, 1958. Under the Constitution the General Assembly meets for 40 calendar days each year.

Griffin got pretty much what he wanted at this year's session.

His main appeal had been to maintain the present revenue laws intact and to prevent any big new spending programs. At Griffin's request no new appropriations act was passed at this session.

RECORD BUDGET

Sat 2-23-57

The Legislature did pass an amendment to the budget act authorizing the governor to spend an additional $22,000,000 if and when additional revenue becomes available. This action pushed the over-all state budget to a record $362,000,000.

In the field of segregation legislation, the Assembly voted to give the governor additional police powers to quell any threatened integration disorder and to permit him to suspend the state's compulsory school attendance laws in the event of integration.

The Assembly also gave the Georgia Education Commission subpoena powers to conduct investigations for needed segregation laws. It also authorized the commission to tell the "Georgia Story" to the nation.

Only the bill banning integrated sports ran into formidable opposition. It was not an administration bill. But Griffin had endorsed it.

ACTED ON JEKYLL

The Legislature also enacted legislation designed to take Jekyll Island "out of politics and give it to the people." The measure abolished the present five-member "businessman" authority to run the island and substituted a five-man board of constitutional officers.

The measure also permits the sale of residential and non-developed commercial lots.

Only Griffin's traffic safety program ran into serious trouble. The House killed measures he recommended to set up driver training courses in the state's high schools and to make state patrol cars harder to recognize.

But the Legislature approved measures to increase the size of the state patrol and to tighten present traffic safety laws.

The major education legislation passed at this session increased the amount of money local school systems must pay into the state school program by $2,500,000 a year. It will affect every county.

The Assembly also approved a proposed amendment to the Constitution, that must go to the people, to set up a system of scholarships to permit deserving youngsters to attend University System units.

Perhaps the most widely controversial bill considered was a House bill that would make unwed mothers subject to criminal prosecution. It was twice beaten in the House by narrow votes.

Other major legislation that failed to pass at this session included the perennial home rule bill, a measure authorizing a toll road from Brunswick to the Florida line, a "Japanese Textile" sign bill, a measure to give the Legislature some voice over budget-making, and a bill aimed at curbing state job holding by legislators.

Vote To Quit Chokes Off Final Ballot

Constitution Atlanta Ga. Sat. 2-23-57

By JACK NELSON

A split in administration ranks and six hours of delaying tactics Friday killed for his session a bill banning integrated sports and entertainment.

Foes of the measure shouted through a 5 o'clock adjournment resolution which choked off a final vote on the measure in the House.

In one of the wildest parliamentary battles in recent years, the House also adopted an amendment which would make the bill virtually ineffective. It provides the law would not be effective in any county until recommended by two successive grand juries.

TURNING POINT

Turning point in the battle, which began at 11:45 a.m., was a maneuver by George Bagby, fiery representative from Paulding County. Bagby had Speaker Marvin Moate invoke a rule providing for amendments to be printed before being considered.

The House voted, 91 to 80, to follow the rule, thus delaying action for two crucial hours. The vote was one of 10 roll-call votes taken on various motions during the debate.

The bill, including four amendments adopted by the House, will be on the first House calendar of the 1958 session. If it passes the House as amended, it will have to go to the Senate for agreement on the amendments.

ASSIST BY CHENEY

House floor leader Colbert Hawkins, assisted by Gov. Griffin's brother and state-paid aide, Cheney, had the House rolling toward apparent approval of the bill before opposing forces organized and gathered momentum in mid-afternoon.

Moate, an ardent baseball fan, obviously opposed the bill. His power as speaker did not help the cause of Hawkins and Cheney Griffin.

Sat. 2-23-57

At 4:50 p.m., Rep. Guy Rutland of DeKalb moved that the House agree with a Senate resolution to adjourn at 5 p.m. After loud shouts from both sides, Moate ruled the motion had carried.

MOATE HELPS OUT

Opponents of the bill discussed amendments until the House adjourned 10 minutes later.

Race-Mixing Sports Ban Is Defeated

ATLANTA, Feb. 22 (AP)—After an uproarious session, the House today withstood strenuous administration pressure and defeated a bill to prohibit interracial sports and social activities in Georgia.

Opponents pulled every parliamentary trick in the book to stave off what appeared would be certain passage of the measure on a roll call vote. Finally after numerous delaying tactics they passed a motion to adjourn sine die at 5 p.m. and then talked out the last five minutes of the 1957 session to kill the bill.

A maneuver by Rep. George Bagby of Paulding County and Charles Gowen and William Killian of Glynn County turned the tide.

With administration floor leader Colbert Hawkins assisted by Gov. Marvin Griffin's brother and aide, Cheney Griffin, calling the tune, the House was rolling along apparently with sufficient votes to pass the bill.

Then Bagby pulled out a rule discovered by Killian and Gowen which requires proposed amendments to be printed before they can be considered.

House Speaker Marvin Moate ruled that Bagby's motion to postpone action while the amendments were printed was in order. Hawkins tried to make a substitute motion to suspend the rule on printing and Moate ruled him out of order.

on printing of amendments, Hawkins tried to make a substitute motion to suspend the rule. Moate ruled him out of order.

"Don't I have the authority to appeal to the House from any ruling of the chair?" Hawkins inquired.

Boos and catcalls greeted the floor leader's inquiry and Moate, red with anger, retorted:

"You certainly have that right and I invite you to do so."

Hawkins hastily withdrew his appeal.

During the printing of 11 proposed amendments, the House took action on several non-controversial bills. A Senate resolution calling for adjournment at 4:30 p.m. was read to the House about 4 p.m., but it was ignored.

MOTION TO GO

At 4:35 p.m. Rep. D. B. Blalock of Coweta moved that the House adjourn. The motion lost by a 97-to-78 vote and on a motion by Hawkins the House again took up the segregation bill.

Gov. Griffin's position on the bill was somewhat in doubt despite his public statements that he endorsed it in "principle." The bill, introduced by Sen. Leon Butts of Lumpkin, was not an administration measure.

Several of the governor's top legislative supporters and some of his aides said privately that the governor wished he had never heard of the bill. He pointed out, however, that the bill put him in a somewhat embarrassing position:

He obviously could not oppose the measure. And if he didn't lend some support to it, it might appear that he was wavering in his strong stand to preserve segregation.

"ORDAINED"

Hawkins argued that the bill would make segregation "all-embracing" in Georgia and Rep. William T. Bodenhamer of Tift said segregation was "ordained of God."

Bodenhamer, a Baptist preacher, said he had an appointment at 11 a.m. Sunday to preach a sermon at Ty Ty Baptist Church, but that he was willing to forego the sermon and stay through Sunday to pass the bill.

Rep. Charlie Gowen of Glynn called the bill "ridiculous and unenforceable." He said he would favor banning integrated sports, but that the bill was drawn poorly and added, "We ought to have enough brains in the House to draw it properly."

Rep. Frank Cheatham of Chatham said that "in a mad, pell-mell rush, the House is trying to act on a bill which is the opposite of what we are trying to do." He said the bill would be declared unconstitutional and thereby break down segregation on several fronts.

Lanham Sees No Chance For Impeachment Move

Journal + Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Sun. 2-24-57

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (AP) — Rep. Henderson Lanham (D-Ga) said Saturday the Georgia Legislature's move to impeach six U.S. Supreme Court justices "has no earthly chance" of being approved by Congress.

In his weekly newsletter to constituents, Lanham said he is "not too sure of the wisdom" of the State Legislature in adopting a resolution urging impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren and five associate justices.

* * *

"FRANKLY, even if there were grounds for impeachment and we had the evidence to show that certain members of the United States Supreme Court were guilty of improper conduct sufficient to support a resolution for impeachment," he said, "we simply could not command the votes at this time even to vote an indictment of impeachment."

Lanham also said if Georgia congressmen introduce an impeachment resolution it would "destroy the favorable results of our efforts to win the understanding of the South's position" on civil rights legislation.

Rep. Carl Vinson, dean of the Georgia congressional delegation, said Friday he will neither sponsor nor vote for an impeachment resolution.

LANHAM SAID: "There is a question in my mind as to whether the decision of the Supreme Court over the past three or four years gradually downgrading the rights and powers of the various states and infringing upon the legislative duties and responsibilities of the Congress have not been due to what may be called stupidity rather than cupidity or any intentional misconduct in office.

"Rather than a fruitless effort to impeach, we should unite in our determination to write into the law adequate standards of eligibility for appointment to the court."

Davis Blames Hypocritical Politicians for Racial Strife

Georgia Solon Testifies at House Hearing
Feb. 2-26-57

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25 (AP)—Rep. Davis (D-Ga.) told a House hearing Monday that "hypocritical statements of politicians seeking votes" are responsible for much racial misunderstanding.

New Orleans, La.

Testifying before a House judiciary subcommittee in opposition to civil rights proposals, Davis said "the race problem is something you can't solve by legislation."

"Don't try to make legal problems out of something that isn't a legal problem," he said. "Let them be settled as human problems by good will on the part of everybody."

Davis testified as the subcommittee resumed what Chairman Celler (D-N. Y.) hopefully scheduled as a two-day wind-up hearing on civil rights bills.

Continue Arguments

Other Southern foes of various proposals to guarantee voting rights and nondiscrimination for minority groups were on hand to continue arguments that have twice resulted in extension of the subcommittee hearings.

Rep. John Bell Williams (D-Miss.), one of those waiting to be heard, told Celler he would "be happy to wait until next week, or next year for that matter."

Southern opponents have sought to delay Congressional consideration of civil rights bills in hope the measures eventually will get bogged down. Supporters have been advocating speedy action.

Davis told the subcommittee "there is no difference in the way people feel about the race problem in any section of the country."

Cites Demonstrations

He cited "riotous demonstrations night after night" in Detroit involving what he said were efforts of Negroes to move into white neighborhoods. And he recounted in detail other racial disturbances in Chicago, Toronto, Cleveland, St. Louis and numerous other localities.

"It is not confined to the South," he said, declaring that Southerners "have dealt with the problem and have lived peacefully with the Negro for generations."

"It is hypocritical of so-called liberals to point an accusing finger at the South and say we are more intolerant than other sections of the country," he concluded.

Impeachment Has No Chance—Celler

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Rep. Celler (D-N. Y.) told a Georgia House member Monday that a Georgia Legislature resolution urging impeachment of six supreme court justices "has no chance" in Congress.

Celler, chairman of the House judiciary committee, interrupted the testimony of Rep. Davis (D-Ga.) to bring up the matter of the resolution passed by the Georgia Legislature. Davis was testifying at a hearing in opposition to proposed civil rights legislation.

Celler asked if Davis took the resolution "seriously."

Davis asked what he meant by "seriously."

Well, asked Celler, "have you introduced an impeachment resolution?"

Davis said he had not and Celler asked if he intended to. Davis replied that he had only this morning received the Georgia resolution and hadn't had a chance to study it. But he added when a state Legislature passed something of this nature "it must be regarded as serious."

"It has no chance. I can assure you as chairman of this committee," Celler commented.

Davis, however, said that the state Legislature and the people of Georgia had "great provocation" for the action.

Georgia Senate Is Pictured As Trying to 'Revise History'

The New York Times

NO DOUBT THE Georgia State Senate accepts the fact that it was General Lee, not General Grant, who surrendered at Appomattox. What the Georgia lawmakers do question, in a resolution passed last week, is the authority of the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses. These bodies, we are now asked to believe, were "nothing more than private assemblages unlawfully attempting to exercise the legislative power of the United States."

NEW SCHOOL

The new Georgian school of historians has, therefore, asked Congress to declare the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution null and void. Frankly, we hope Congress will not do this. The Fourteenth Amendment amplified the Bill of Rights by forbidding the states to "abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States," and so on. Without this Amendment the segregation decision of the Supreme Court of May 17, 1954, would not stand. The Fifteenth Amendment stipulates that neither the United States nor any state shall deny any citizen the right to vote "on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

To those who are attached to such right as these Amendments guarantee, repeal would be extremely inconvenient. Repeal might be confusing to some of those technical "persons" known as corporations, for these, too, get some protection out of the Fourteenth Amendment. On the other hand, for any majority of any other race, creed or color wishing to injure and exploit a minority of any race, creed or color, both Amendments are annoying obstacles.

BACK TO SCHOOL

We suspect that the late Robert E. Lee, revered commander of the Army of Northern Virginia, would be the last man to have any patience with the Georgia State Senate at his moment. He knew what happened and why it happened. Now, ninety-two years after Appomattox, the Georgia legislators seem to have forgotten what Lee knew. Perhaps they should go back to school for a week or so—a segregated school, if that is the way they feel about it.

The News and Courier
Charleston, S.C.

AN OUT-OF-STATE businessman in a grey flannel suit turned to his companion. The Atlanta airport bus had started down Peachtree Street.

"All I hear from a fella in my office back home—a fella who was raised here in Atlanta—is 'Peachtree Street—Peachtree Street.' Before I visited Atlanta," he said, "I had the idea it must be something special. But, you know, it's just like the main street in St. Paul, Minn.!"

The reaction of this Northern businessman to Atlanta and its supposed charms is shared by others, including not a few Charlestonians who visit the booming business hub of Dixie or who live there in what some consider exile.

AIR HUB

Sooner or later, anyone who is going anywhere in the South visits Atlanta. For decades it was a railroad center—and still is. Today, it is also the hub of air traffic in the South. And the Atlanta Municipal Airport is typical of the city. At first sight it is impressive, especially at night. The huge field, with its myriad blue and red marker lights, is dotted with commercial airliners. Big DC-7s take air passengers non-stop to the cities of Texas. Old DC-3s still are workhorses on feeder lines to small Southern cities.

Even as Atlanta is impressive at night, with its tall buildings and brightly-lighted store windows, so is Atlanta airport impressive to those accustomed to the landing fields of smaller Southern towns. But, in daylight, the airport is something else. It stands exposed as a collection of ramshackle World War II wooden buildings—the like of which would shame the city fathers of other American communities. Yes, there is a city sign saying "temporary" air terminal. But that's just another comment on Atlanta.

Atlanta is big and sprawling. It is sprawling to the extent that trailer parks, drive-ins and curbside markets push up against residential districts in a disagreeable way. This observer doesn't know what Atlanta's zoning laws are or whether such laws exist. But the mess is evidence that zoning laws are desperately needed if a city is to be a civilized habitation. It's a lesson that money isn't enough in the development of a great city. For Atlanta has money, plenty of it—new factories and distribution concerns.

INFLUENCE

The very accent of the city testifies to the influence of the new citizen. The soft, Georgia way of speaking these days has an echo of New York. Something has happened to the wonderful Georgia manners—let alone the Georgia tempo of living. The taxicab drivers, the hotel people, the airline personnel—they have lost genuine Southern politeness to some degree.

Perhaps the pressure, dealing with great numbers of persons, has caused a change in people. While every Southern city would like a slice of Atlanta's payrolls, does every Southern city want to lose some of its character? Isn't it possible for communities to grow and prosper without being Manhattanized?

As the Northern businessman said on the bus, "It's just like the main street of St. Paul, Minnesota." He wasn't happy at finding it so. Nor should Southerners be, either.

U.S. House Unlikely To Consider Impeachments

Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 (AP)—While there has been no formal decision by Georgia members of the House, prospects remained remote today for House consideration of the Georgia Legislature's demand for impeachment of six justices of the Supreme Court.

Members of the Georgia delegation in Congress said the group has taken no official action on the Legislature's resolution calling for impeachment proceedings. Some of them pointed out that such an undertaking would be foredoomed to failure at this time.

"I do not think that it is possible to impeach these justices with the present personnel of the Congress," Rep. Davis (D-Ga), for one, said.

"I believe it would be a mistake to file the proceedings knowing in advance they would be defeated."

But Davis said at the same time that he congratulated the Legislature for its action in calling for impeachment of Chief Justice Warren and Associate Justices Black, Douglas, Reed, Frankfurter and Clark in connection with school segregation decisions.

Rep. Lanham (D-Ga) has said that even if there was evidence to show some Supreme Court members were guilty of improper conduct, "we simply could not command the votes at this time even to vote an indictment of impeachment."

Davis said today he could not speak for other members of the delegation but doubted if any resolution would be presented to Congress.

Rep. Forrester (D-Ga) said he has not yet received a copy of the Legislature's resolution.

Boycott Paralyzes Bi-Racial Koinonia

Americus Experiment in Mixed Living Brings Out Both Extremes of Opinion

By JIM LAXSON

AMERICUS, Ga., Feb. 16 (AP)—Is biracial Koinonia Farms a dedicated way of life in the brotherhood of man or a "cancer" on the community which should be eradicated?

Both extremes of opinion are found in this explosive situation where Negroes and whites work, live and play together.

The controversial, all-for-one and one-for-all agricultural undertaking has been rocked with violence after nearly 14 years of peaceful relations with this southwest Georgia agriculture and livestock center.

The unique communal farm of some 60 whites and Negroes has survived bombs, bullets and burnings during the past six months, but now an economic boycott threatens the thriving cooperative.

THE REV. CLARENCE Jordan, cofounder in 1942 of the nonprofit, nondenominational corporation, describes the farm as a religious community "practicing Christian brotherhood."

"Koinonia was founded after deep religious considerations of our commitment to Jesus," the white, Georgia-born Baptist clergyman said. "We are not concerned with integration or segregation, only the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It is in that sphere we find our togetherness."

At nearby Americus, the anger of some of the townspeople has reached a white-hot peak over the farm's "flaunting" its integration practices.

"The people have had it up to here," said Sheriff Fred Chappell of Sumter County (population about 25,000, half Negroes). We get reports of whites and Negroes strolling down the streets together in Americus. One report said a white girl and two Negro boys walked down the street all eating popcorn out of the same bag. They are operating more openly now than ever before and somebody's going to get hurt."

* * *

THE WORD KOINONIA derives from the Greek meaning—somewhat ironically — fellowship or community, or a group holding all things in common.

It has been fired on sporadically with rifles and pistols. A roadside retail market stand several miles from the main farm was dynamited twice. The second blast and fire which followed demolished the 20x30-foot structure. Total damage has been estimated at $14,000. No one has been hurt.

A six-foot cross was burned a week ago before the home of a Negro tenant worker. A vacant tenant house was destroyed by a mysterious blaze.

The sheriff said he investigated the incidents but "I don't find any clues and I don't get any cooperation from those folks."

In Atlanta, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said: "It's a private corporation over which the state has no jurisdiction."

* * *

THE VIOLENCE and the boycotts started after an attempt last summer to establish an integrated youth camp on the farm. An injunction by the county on grounds of health and sanitation delayed the opening of the camp. The injunction was dissolved in September when the question became a "moot" point at summer's end.

What is Clarence Jordan like, the man who has ignored traditional segregation in this deep South rural community?

He is a quiet, highly educated man in his mid 40s. A native of nearby Talbotton, he appears to have a deep religious conviction in his work. He is an ordained Baptist minister, a graduate of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky.

He earned a masters degree in 1936, a Ph.D. in 1939. He holds a bachelor's degree in agriculture from the University of Georgia.

* * *

JORDAN SAID boycotts and economic sanctions grew until now they are complete and effective.

He said townspeople won't buy from the farm and won't sell to them.

"They refuse us services, they won't repair our vehicles, they refuse to do business with us in any way. We have to bring in building supplies, butane gas and feed from the outside—50 to 75 miles away. Our insurance policies have been canceled.

James R. Blair, editor and publisher of The Americus Times-Recorder, said objections to the farm have increased to the point that "more than 90 per cent of our people wish it weren't there.

"It's like a cancer on the community and we ought to get rid of it," he said. "We don't agree with what they are doing but we deplore the violence."

Eugene Horne, head of the Sumter County chapter of the States Rights Council of Georgia, said the sentiment is "universally hostile . . . a very loathsome and obnoxious thing."

AFTER THE roadside stand was leveled, the Americus and Sumter County Ministerial Assn. adopted a resolution deploring "the use of violence in any form against property and-or persons because of their personal beliefs which do not endanger the rights of others. . . ."

The Americus chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has been inactive for five or six years. Sam Weston, a Negro tailor and former active member, said the organization "wouldn't lower its dignity to bother with" the situation at the farm.

"It's none of our business," he said.

Charles Crisp, president of the Bank of Commerce, said he would not do business with the farm "because I have no confidence in them."

Fred Bowen is mayor of Americus and a dealer in a major tractor line. He joined the boycott also.

* * *

"MY BUSINESS dealings were very satisfactory," he said. "They paid their bills, but I have a tractor on practically every farm from here to the county line and public sentiment forced me to quit them."

Koinonia Farms, straddling Highway 49 about 10 miles from Americus, grew to 1,100 acres from an original 400 acres. About 350 acres presently are under cultivation, another 300 are open pasture and the remainder is woodland.

Farm personnel has dropped from about 60 to 35. About 15 persons have been evacuated and another 10 are away on various missions and speaking tours.

There is no question that it is one of the better producing farms in the area. Its value is at least $150,000.

"Tomfoolery" Impeachment Bill Passed

Daily Herald
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 2-22-57

The segregation minded Georgia Senate Thursday passed a measure calling for the impeachment of six U. S. Supreme Court Justices.

The measure, labled by its opponents, "a bit of tomfoolery" that can only make Georgia a "laughing stock," passed 37-11.

The Senate struck out an amendment accusing Supreme Court Justices Black and Douglas of "high crimes and misdemeanors." House concurrence in the amendment will be asked Friday.

The denunciation of the high court members came as House floor leader Colbert Hawkins said he would ask for a House vote Friday on a bill banning Negroes from professional baseball teams in Georgia.

Sens. Fred Bentley of Marietta and Bobby Lee Cook of Summerville, offered an amendment trying to tone down the upper chamber's impeachment measure, but the amendment was defeated.

Bentley, who termed the bill "ridiculous" pointed out that the General Assembly was merely confusing itself by asking the U. S. Constitution's 14th and 15th amendments be termed null and void while at the same time demanding the impeachments on the basis of the 14th ammendment.

The Bentley-Cook amendment had asked for a resolution to push for the resignation of the justices, instead of their impeachment.

The amendment the Senate deleted in reference to Justices Black and Douglas, had charged the two high court officials with accepting bribes from "communist front" and other organizations "dedicated to the overthrow of the Government of the United States."

3 Segregation Bills Speeded To Final Vote

Constitution Tues. 2-5-57 Atlanta Ga.

Three more administration bills sailed smoothly through the Senate Rules Committee Monday.

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver said the measures probably will come up for a vote in the Senate Wednesday. They already have cleared the House.

The bills would extend the governor's powers to prevent public disturbances which might grow out of integration movements, authorize the Georgia Commission on Education to spend money on advertisements to tell the "Georgia story" and give the GCE subpoena powers.

BLOW TO HOME RULE

In other action the Rules Committee, in effect, killed a home rule bill which originated in the Senate. An identical, House-originated bill was killed last week in House.

The committee also killed two tax cut proposals and a bill which would have abolished "early" county primaries.

The segregation measures raised almost no debate in the committee.

Lt. Gov. Vandiver said House Bill No. 2 would increase the governor's powers in only one way: it would allow him to order action by county sheriffs.

NO TIME LIMIT

Sen. Quill Sammon of Lawrenceville asked whether the extension of power had any time limit. Vandiver replied that it did not.

The lieutenant governor said the GCE needs authorization to spend funds for publishing material to combat "distortion" of segregation stories in the Northern press.

The home rule bill was as much as dead after the Rules Committee voted to table it indefinitely. Sens. Carl Sanders of Augusta and Glenn W. Ellard of Cornelia opposed the tabling.

STICKS TO RULE

Sen. William P. Trotter of LaGrange cited Senate Rule 158 which does not allow introduction in one house of a measure which has been defeated in the other.

Sen. Fred Bentley Sr. of Marietta argued before the committee for his late primary bill.

He said it would cut down on the cost of holding two elections. Bentley added that in some counties local primaries are held a year in advance of the state primary, so that "lame ducks" sometimes remain in office a year after defeat.

The bill was tabled pending action on a House resolution setting up a commission to study all election laws.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS

In a busy session the same Senate committee approved a House-passed bill removing the $25,000 ceiling on campaign spending for state offices.

Vandiver said the limitation makes "liars out of everybody."

Sammon served notice he will offer a substitute on the floor to keep the limit at $25,000 for county races, $100,000 for district races and $250,000 for statewide races.

Protest Calls 3 Congresses That Acted on Legislation Illegally Constituted

---

ATLANTA, Feb. 8 (AP)—A resolution declaring the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution null and void was adopted by the Georgia Senate today.

The resolution declared the Thirtieth, Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses, which introduced and adopted the legislation setting up the amendments after the Civil War, excluded representatives of Georgia and ten other Southern states and were illegally constituted.

The Forteenth Amendment declares no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property except by due process of law. The Fifteenth declares no state shall deprive any person of the right to vote because of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

The resolution was introduced by Senator Peyton Hawes of Elberton. It said "the continued recognition of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments as valid parts of the Constitution of the United States is incompatible with the present day position of the United States as the world's champion of constitutional government."

Congresses Attached

It declared further that the "so-called thirty-ninth Congress which prepared legislation known as the Fourteenth Amendment and the so-called Fourtieth Congress which proposed the Fifteenth Amendment were without lawful power." It states that two-thirds of the House and Senate "as they should have been constituted" failed to vote to submit these amendments.

Copies of the resolution will be sent to President Eisenhower, Chief Justice Earl Warren and Congress.

There was no comment in Washington legal circles on the action.

The thirty-ninth Congress, which submitted the Fourteenth Amendment to the various states June 16, 1886, was essentially a war Congress. The amendment was frankly designed to slow the re-admission of the Southern states and contained the conditions under which Congress was willing to let the seseding states return.

The Southern states upon defeat had re-organized and by December, 1865, had re-elected members of congress.

South Acts Quickly

The rapidity with which the Southern states acted angered the northern "radicals" in Congress and they set up a fifteen-man committee to screen the returning states' credentials.

According to historians this committee clearly did not intend to let the Southern states return until the Fourteenth Amendment had been ratified.

Meanwhile, by proclamation Presidents Lincoln and Johnson agreed to let states return when 10 per cent of the population had taken a loyalty oath.

Even so, Congress had said that those who fought on the Southern side could not vote or hold office.

This situation, according to historians, gave rise to the so-called "carpetbagger" governments dominated in large measure by white men exercising influence over votes of newly freed Negroes.

Amendment Ratified in 1868

By 1868 the Fourteenth Amendment had been approved by twenty-three Northern states though Kentucky, Maryland and ten Southern states had taken no action. On July 28 of this year the Secretary of State proclaimed the amendment ratified.

In time the Southern states under "carpetbag" governments ratified the amendment and returned to the union.

As for the Fifteenth Amendment substantially the same situation prevailed. Such members in Congress as the South had were the products of the carpetbag regimes.

The Fifteenth Amendment was submitted to the states by the Fortieth Congress Feb. 26, 1869. It was ratified by thirty-one of the thirty-seven states and was declared a part of the Constitution March 30, 1870.

The Southern states that approved the amendment generally were controlled by men many Southerners called carpetbaggers and "scalawags," the term reserved for Southerners who went along with Northern policies.

Shortly after 1870 the native white Southerners began regaining control of their home states and finally completed the process in 1878.

Court Curbs Planned by Talmadge

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 2-12-57

Rips Race Rulings As Law of Force

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge told the Georgia Legislature Monday that the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decisions are not the "law of the land" but the "law of force and force alone."

He accused the nation's highest court of "openly flouting" the Constitution and of replacing "established law and precedent" with "impractical and unproved socialistic theory."

CURB ON POWERS

In his first Georgia address since taking his Senate seat, Talmadge disclosed that he plans to introduce three legislative measures to curb the power of the court:

1. To remove schools from the jurisdiction of the federal courts.

2. To require a "reasonable" minimum of experience for appointment to the federal bench.

3. To insure a jury trial in all cases of contempt citations by federal courts. This was obviously prompted by the contempt citations growing out of the Clinton, Tenn., school integration disorders.

APPLAUDED 18 TIMES

The former governor, obviously delighted to appear again before a Georgia Legislature, was applauded 18 times during his 27-minute speech.

Talmadge addressed the Assembly before returning to Washington from his first visit home since taking office last month.

He spoke of the five "grave crises" that face the nation but concentrated on recent rulings of the court and moves in Congress to enact civil rights legislation and to curb filibusters.

"CONTAIN NO LOGIC"

Talmadge said recent decisions by the court, including these aimed at school segregation, are "unconstitutional on their face." He said they "contain no more logic nor demonstrate any more responsibility than the fanatical utterances of a soap box orator in Central Park."

"They are not the 'law of the land' as some falsely insist on calling it," Talmadge declared. "They are the law of force and force alone."

"It is not the people of the South who defy the Constitution; it is rather they who uphold it."

Talmadge alluded to the Clinton affair, where a federal judge has cited several persons for contempt for opposing integration, with the following passage:

"When a federal district judge, acting under this peculiar new doctrine of force, issues a blanket edict that anyone who exercises the right of freedom of speech in this country may be hauled into court and fined for criminal contempt without a jury trial, then, I say to you, the time has come for us to restore the real constitutional law of the land."

"SWARM OF FED. AGENTS"

Talmadge said if the civil rights program now pending before Congress is passed "an army of federal agents will swarm over every state harassing and intimidating the people and usurping the functions of local law enforcement authorities."

Talmadge also assailed Republican farm and foreign policies. He said the South is being discriminated against in the operation of the soil bank and pledged to work to correct this.

"I have said before and repeat now my conviction that unless something is done, and done soon to give the farmer a better opportunity," this nation will suffer irreparable damage," Talmadge declared.

NO BLANK CHECK FOR AID

Speaking on President Eisenhower's Middle Eastern policy, Talmadge said he is opposed to giving the President blank-check authority to parcel out foreign aid."

"Nor do I favor any commitment of American soldiers to U.N. control under any circumstances without prior consent of Congress."

Talmadge said this nation's failure to support the British, French and Israeli moves against Egypt last fall "will be recognized by historians as a costly diplomatic mistake and a military blunder of catastrophic proportions."

"COURAGEOUS FIGHT"

Talmadge spoke from the speaker's stand in the House chamber and was introduced by Gov. Griffin and Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver.

Vandiver, sounding mighty like a gubernatorial candidate, praised Talmadge for his "courageous fight launched to preserve the principles of segregation in the state."

Vandiver served as Talmadge's campaign manager in his first gubernatorial race.

Segregation, Jekyll Bills Coming Up

Constitution Mon., 2-11-57 Atlanta Ga.

Leaders Predict Little Opposition

By WILLIAM M. BATES

The Georgia Legislature begins its final two weeks Monday with a series of major issues on tap, including bills dealing with segregation and the future of state-owned Jekyll Island.

Senate Administration Leader Peyton S. Hawes of Elberton said the upper chamber will take up the fifth and final administration-backed segregation bill Monday.

This is a measure to give Georgia governors power to suspend the state's compulsory school attendance laws in the event of an emergency such as a federal court school integration order.

OVERWHELMING PASSAGE

The bill faces some opposition but is expected to pass overwhelmingly. The four other measures in the anti-integration legislative package have already gone to Gov. Griffin for his signature.

In the House, a compromise Jekyll Island bill is ready for action.

Driver training and patrol expansion bills will pass, Senate floor leader says. Page 7.

House Speaker Marvin E. Moate said the bill would be called up for action Monday.

Floor Leader W. Colbert Hawkins of Screven County predicted the bill will pass with little opposition. The measure would continue the resort island under the operation of the Jekyll Island Authority but would permit the sale of residential and undeveloped commercial lots which not may only be leased. The bill would add State Parks Director John W. Brinson to the present five-member authority.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL?

Administration forces will push ahead with the bill despite some legal opinions that it would be unconstitutional to sell lots. Rep. Brack Blalock of Coweta, former chairman of the authority, said Saturday he had been told by an "eminent constitutional lawyer" that lot sales would be unconstitutional.

Hawkins disagreed with this opinion. And he has the qualified backing of Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook who said lot sales under the present setup "might well be legal."

Meanwhile, a high legislative source said that there is a possibility that a substitute measure would be offered on the floor to abolish the present authority and replace it with a new body composed of five state officials: the secretary of state, the attorney-general, the chairman of the public service commission, the state auditor and the parks director. It was understood that such a substitute measure has been drafted.

Constitution

The source pointed out that the substitute would take the authority "out of the hands of the governor and place it in the hands of a new group, three of whom have served on the planning and improvement authority for state buildings." He also pointed out that under the proposed new authority, three members would be answerable to the people of Georgia, one would be answerable to the governor and one would be answerable only to the Legislature.

"If mistakes are made by this group, they can be pinpointed and the people will have a recourse," the source declared.

Both the House and Senate will take a break from their legislative chores Monday to hear an address by Sen. Herman E. Talmadge. Talmadge likely will report on the battle by Southerners in Congress to resist passage of federal civil rights legislation.

Talmadge is scheduled to address at the Legislature at 11 a.m. It will be his first speech in Georgia since assuming his Senate duties last month.

The House Monday may also take another vote on a bill to make unwed mothers subject to criminal prosecution if they swear their children are illegitimate. The measure was defeated two weeks ago but the House decided to reconsider it.

Rep. Jack Ray of Warren County, chief sponsor of the bill, said he will probably ask Moate to call up the measure again Monday.

However, Ray said he would go along with an amendment to his measure which would make it applicable only to women who give birth to two or more illegitimate children.

The bill is designed as a deterrent to placing illegitimate children on the state welfare rolls.

Meanwhile, a possible House-Senate deadlock may be shaping up over Gov. Griffin's proposal to boost local school spending under the Minimum Foundation Program by $2,500,00 a year.

Griffin had recommended the action as a means of giving the state's school teachers a $100-a-year pay increase.

However, the House passed the bill with an amendment which would earmark only half of the $2,500,000 for pay increases. The other half could be used by local school boards for teacher pay raises or for maintenance and operation money.

Hawes said he was opposed to the House amendment and predicted the amendment would be scrapped in the Senate Education Committee.

"The governor would like the bill just as he proposed it," Hawes declared. "It is not fair to promise teachers a whole loaf and then give them only half of it."

Hawes said the House amendment only "muddied the waters" and should be rejected. But Hawkins questioned whether the bill would win House passage without the amendment.

As things now stand, the measure appears likely to wind up in a House-Senate conference committee to try to iron out the difference.

Both Hawes and Hawkins pledged support to the compromise Jekyll bill. They said it was designed to take the one-time rich man's playground out of politics and give it to the people of Georgia.

"The governor and everybody else interested in the welfare of the state want to see this Jekyll Island matter settled," Hawkins declared.

"The governor doesn't have the remotest idea of turning the island over to anybody to be used for speculative purposes," the Screven County representative said. "What we want to do is end this revolving political question."

Hawes added that "this is not the governor's bill."

"It is a meeting of the minds of the legislative leaders."

Hawkins said he would urge defeat of a resolution now before the House State of the Republic Committee sponsored by Rep. Jack Murr of Sumter County calling for an investigation of past operations of the island.

Hawes said the island and its operations have been investigated enough and that the time has come to enact permanent legislation to settle the island's future.

4 Segregation Bills Pushed in Assembly

Panel Study Ordered on Road Toll

Griffin's Message Today Awaited

By WILLIAM M. BATES

The Georgia Legislature moved swiftly at its opening session Monday to crack down on highway crashes and to shore up the state's segregation defenses.

These were the major legislative developments as the General Assembly kicked off its annual 40-day session. Gov. Griffin will deliver his "State of the State" message to a joint session at noon Tuesday.

Other legislative stories and pictures on Pages 12, 14 and 15.

Moves were begun almost immediately to check highway crashes that claimed the lives of almost 1,200 Georgians last year.

STUDY COMMITTEE

The Senate created a five-member special committee to study and coordinate a spate of suggestions for making roads safer. And a House group circulated a proposed bill to make driver education compulsory for new teen-age drivers.

In the House, four administration-backed segregation bills were started through the mill. Included is a controversial bill to abolish the state's compulsory school attendance laws.

The bills were drafted by the powerful Georgia Education Commission.

SEES OPPOSITION

Rep. W. Colbert Hawkins of Screven County, Griffin administration leader in the House, filed the measures with the House clerk for formal introduction Tuesday. He predicted House passage by next week.

Hawkins conceded that repeal of attendance laws would draw some opposition. But he said it would be "scattering" and predicted passage by a "substantial" margin.

The Georgia Education Assn. opposes repeal of the attendance laws so long as the schools remain public and segregated. Rep. Raymond Reed of Cobb County endorsed the GEA stand.

"Let's don't junk our laws now in anticipation of an inconvenience later," Reed said. "If we have to go to private schools, then will be the time to act."

CALLED A MUST

But Rep. Battle Hall of Floyd County, a member of the education commission and a school leader, defended the attendance bill repeal "as one of the necessary things we must do."

"It might damage the schools somewhat, but under the circumstances it's just something we must do. After all, we didn't create this situation (the threat to segregation)."

The other segregation bills would

1. Give the governor broad powers to maintain peace and "protect the public against violence, property damage and overt threats of violence" growing out of attempts to desegregate schools or transit systems.

TEACHER BENEFITS

2. Protect the benefits of teachers under city—as distinct from state—retirement system in event private schools are resorted to. The state retirement system was covered under a 1956 act.

3. Give the education commission subpoena powers to carry out investigations for the purpose of drafting anti-integration legislation.

The Senate Traffic Safety Committee was created by a resolution introduced by Sen. Peyton Hawes of Elberton, Griffin's Senate floor leader. Hawes said the Senate had been picked by the administration to handle the problem of highway safety legislation.

The committee will have full investigative powers, including that of subpoena.

"We're going to call in highway patrolmen from the field and anyone else we think can tell us what ought to be done to stop this slaughter," Hawes declared.

Named to the group by Lt.-Gov. Ernest Vandiver were Hawes, Senators DeNean Stafford of Tifton, William P. Trotter of LaGrange, L. A. Mallory Jr. of Thomaston and Alvin Foster of Forest Park.

Included in the group's study are expected to be proposals to increase the number of state patrolmen, to strengthen traffic laws and to set up driver training in schools.

A group of lawmakers in the House, led by the DeKalb delegation, are circulating a bill to be introduced soon which would make driver education a condition for obtaining a driver's license by persons under 18.

Rep. James Mackay of DeKalb said the measure would set up a driver education program to be handled through the Department of Education and taught in the schools. It would not make the course itself mandatory.

He said the cost of such a program probably would amount to $25 per pupil and probably would run to more than $1,000,000 a year. Mackay pointed out that revenue from drivers' licenses, now about $1,600,000, would pay for the program.

"When you consider the $97 million economic loss in Georgia because of highway accidents, this is one of the most economical approaches to reducing loss of life and property that has been brought up," Mackay declared.

Georgia Shores Up Segregation Fences

ATLANTA, Jan. 23 (AP)—Four measures designed to shore up Georgia's segregation defenses were ready for the House today. All appeared assured of passage.

The measures would protect retirement benefits of teachers if the state goes to a private school system to preserve school segregation; give the Governor additional powers to preserve peace and order; authorize the Education Commission to distribute information on the South's viewpoint on segregation; and extend the commission's life and give it subpena power.

A fifth more controversial bill to repeal the state's compulsory school attendance laws was withheld from committee action yesterday. Some administration forces want school attendance to remain compulsory as long as schools remain segregated, and Gov. Marvin Griffin has indicated he will not object to a compromise along that line.

Farmhouse Burns After Protest on Negro Tenant

ROSSVILLE, Ga., Jan. 8 (AP)—A one-room frame shack, center of a rural racial dispute, was in ashes today, destroyed by a mysterious fire a short time after its owner had assured a crowd of more than 200 white protesters he would not let a Negro farmhand live in it.

All that was left of the building after the premidnight blaze last night was a few concrete foundation blocks and a twisted bed frame.

The fire broke out about two hours after the big group left John Crane's place in the Dry Valley section of Walker County. Crane, a Rossville garage operator, had moved to the farm about a week ago.

Crane said it was his plan to let the Negro, whom he identified as Jud Allen, 59-year-old single man, live in the shack behind the barn while working as a laborer.

Although it was "no secret," Crane said, he did not know how anyone learned of the plan. However, last Friday, he said, a man drove into the farm yard and told Allen he had better not be working at the place the next day.

Saturday night came and a crowd estimated at more than 200 converged on the farm. Their spokesman called Crane out of the house and said the Negro was not wanted on the property.

Crane said he told the group he would let them know his decision Monday. The large crowd returned last night and after a 40-minute talk, punctuated by cries of "don't argue with the nigger-lover" and "break it up, hang him on the Market Street Bridge," Crane said he agreed "100 per cent" and would not permit the Negro to live in the shack.

The crowd dispersed after one of the spokesmen told of the agreement and added that "we have given our word that we won't cause him (Crane) any trouble."

The fire, Crane said, was noticed by his wife about two hours later when she stepped to the back porch to get milk for a baby.

The Walker County sheriff's office said it was making no investigation of the incident, which was not reported to authorities.

More Power To Fight Integration Is Voted To Griffin by House

Atlanta, Ga.

Could Order Policing of Any Outbreak

By WILLIAM M. BATES

A bill granting Georgia governors broad powers to quell integration disorders and three companion segregation measures were speeded through the House Wednesday over token opposition.

A fifth segregation bill, proposing repeal of compulsory school attendance laws, was ready for action Thursday in the House State of the Republic Committee.

In its first major legislative action of the session, the House passed and sent to the Senate bills to:

1. Give the governor power to use state militia, state patrolmen and other law enforcement officers to maintain law and order in emergencies caused by integration attempts. The vote was 184 to 3.

PUBLICIZING WINS

2. Authorize the 21-member Georgia Education Commission to publicize the South's side in the segregation dispute to Georgia and the nation. There was only one dissenting vote.

3. Protect retirement benefits of teachers now under city or county pension plans in the event they are employed in private schools under the plan voted last year. There were no opposition votes.

4. Give the Education Commission subpoena power to carry out investigations by it or its own committees in the preparation of any new segregation legislation. The vote was 176 to 4.

The four measures were drafted by the Education Commission and sponsored by the Griffin administration.

NEAR FLOOR TANGLE

The measure giving the governor new emergency powers provoked the nearest thing to a floor fight.

Although the bill does not refer specifically to integration, its backers made it clear it is intended to strengthen the governor's hand in maintaining segregation in Georgia.

House Floor Leader W. Colbert Hawkins of Screven County said the governor already has most of the powers spelled out in the bill. But he said it would gather them in one measure and make sure the governor had the right to use state patrolmen to cope with threatened integration disorders.

Constitution P. 12

The governor could exercise the emergency powers provided in the bill by issuing a proclamation declaring the "peace and tranquility" of the state are threatened by "unlawful assemblage, violence, overt threats of violence, or otherwise" and that life and property is threatened.

WOULD TAKE CONTROL

In such a situation, the bill provides:

"The governor of the State of Georgia is hereby authorized and empowered to intervene in any situation where there exists violence, overt threats of violence to persons or property and take complete control thereof to prevent violence, or to quell violence or any disturbance or disorder which threatens the peace and good order of society."

It would authorize the governor to make use of the state militia, county sheriffs, state patrolmen and all state, county and city officials in preserving order.

Rep. James A. Mackay of DeKalb County questioned whether the bill would "infringe on the constitutional rights of assembly and speech." Hawkins said it would not.

COULD COMBAT STRIKE

"This bill goes beyond integration," declared Rep. Raymond Reed of Cobb. "It could be used for a strike or any other situation that the governor deemed to be an emergency."

But Reed said he would support the measure as a "temporary measure" and proposed an amendment terminating the measure on Dec. 31, 1958, the date Gov. Marvin Griffin goes out of office, instead of July 1, 1961, as originally provided by the bill.

The House shouted down Reed's amendment and later struck out the termination date entirely. Reed did not oppose its passage.

Mackay did vote against the measure and was joined by Reps. Hugh McWhorter of DeKalb and M. M. (Muggsy) Smith of Fulton. Mackay said later the bill "gives the governor a blank check, and I don't sign that kind of check."

Mackay also opposed the bill giving the commission subpoena power. He said it would give the group power to inquire into the "private beliefs" of witnesses.

Hawkins said the commission should have the power to ask such "laudable" questions as whether a witness is a Communist or a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mackay, McWhorter and Reps. Wilson Brooks and Ralph McClelland of Fulton voted against the subpoena bill.

Only Rep. Arthur K. Bolton of Spalding County voted against the publicity measure. He said he didn't object to the purpose of the measure but said it gave "unlimited appropriations for printing."

The House delayed passage of the teacher retirement measure until a clarifying amendment was added to make sure it applied only to those teachers now in the public schools who might be used in private schools to be set up in the event of integration.

Meanwhile, Rep. Howard Overby of Hall County, chairman of the State of the Republic Committee, said his group would meet Thursday to take up the proposed repeal of compulsory school attendance laws.

He said an amendment would be offered in the committee to make repeal contingent upon a court desegregation order.

Youth Attempted to Oust Chief of Police From Meeting

New Epoch

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 17 (AP) —A 17-year-old pro-segregationist, who last week won his fight to enter Louisville Male High School, was arrested last night after trying to oust a police chief from a meeting he was conducting.

N. 1-18-57

Police Chief Luther Melton of near-by Shively said Billy Branham, who moved here recently from Detroit, was charged with breach of the peace. The meeting was held in Shively.

Chief Melton quoted the youth as saying, "Get out that door. You heard me, get out!"

Young Branham was at first denied admittance to the high school when he said he did not believe in racial integration.

Twelve other youths, five of them juveniles, along with young Branham, were taken to Children's Center on delinquency charges. Five were jailed on charges of breach of the peace and drunkenness. The five jailed were over 17 years of age.

Bill Is Intended to Halt Use Of Negroes in Sally League

Louisville, Ky.

Atlanta, Jan. 22 (AP)—A proposal to ban interracial athletic contests and other social functions—aimed chiefly at professional baseball—was introduced in the Georgia Senate today.

38a

Sen. Leon Butts, Jr., said his bill was intended to halt the use of Negro players in the Class A South Atlantic baseball league.

However, the measure also prohibits dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests between whites and Negroes. And it calls for separate seating and other facilities for the two races.

Under this broad coverage the bill would halt the long practice of major league baseball teams bringing all their minor league clubs to spring training camps in Georgia. It also would ban exhibition games featuring Negro players in any sport.

1956 Bill Beaten

Butts, a tackle at the University of Chattanooga in 1949, said that because there were Negroes on Sally League teams last year "a lot of people from my county won't go to see them play" at nearby Columbus.

He predicted that Negroes would be playing in the Class AA Southern Association "if something isn't done about it."

"If they (professional baseball teams) can't get along without Negroes, let's do away with baseball," Butts declared.

A similar proposal last year was defeated in the House.

Butts' bill provides that violation of the segregation provisions would be a misdemeanor with a fine of $100 to $1,000 and imprisonment of 60 days to a year. It would become effective as soon as signed by the governor.

'Better Get More'

General manager Jerry Waring of Macon's Sally League club said:

"If Negro players kept white fans away from Columbus (as Butts indicated), they had better get a few more for attendance at Columbus was more than doubled last year over the 1955 season.

"As far as the Macon club is concerned we don't have any players just because of color or race."

Waring also said that when Juan Pizarro, a Puerto Rican Negro playing for Jacksonville, Fla., pitched at Macon the two games drew a total attendance of 5,300, "considerably over our average attendance of less than 1,000 a game."

General manager Bill Herring of the Columbia (S. C.) team said Negro players hurt white attendance there "materially" while Negro attendance also was off.

At Charlotte, N. C., general manager Phil Howser said the question arises as to what to do with players who should be in Class A baseball.

"Players have to be assigned somewhere," he said, "and there are only three Class A loops—the Sally, Eastern and Western. It would put a burden on the majors if they were unable to assign Negroes to the Sally."

At Jacksonville and Knoxville, Tenn., other Sally teams, club spokesman said very little difference in attendance had been noted through use of Negro players.

General manager Bob Bonifay of the Augusta, Ga., club said "I don't know what would happen as far as Augusta baseball is concerned. We are owned by a major league organization (Detroit) which assigns players regardless of race or color and I have no control over this on the local level."

Talmadge Plans Cool, Calm Course As He Steps Into Capital Hot Spot

Constitution Wed. 1-2-57 P. 1

Atlanta Ga.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 — Sen-elect Herman Talmadge began one of the most momentous years of his career Tuesday with a cautious approach to the job he will take over Thursday as Georgia's junior senator.

Already the eyes of the nation are focused on this tall, black-haired, 42-year-old Georgian as he prepares to take over his seat as a member of what has been called "the most exclusive club in the world."

As governor of Georgia, as the son of the late Eugene Talmadge and as an outspoken advocate of racial segregation and states rights. Talmadge long ago achieved a controversial national reputation.

When he takes the oath of office Thursday as a freshman senator to succeed the veteran Walter F.

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Washington Bureau

George, Talmadge already will be better known to the nation than many senators with long tenure.

Realizing this and realizing he will be thrust into the spotlight as few freshmen senators ever have been before him, Talmadge indicates plans to conduct himself with dignity.

In this course, Talmadge likely will disappoint some of his critics among the more liberal elements of the North, who may expect him to conduct himself in the names of a demagogue.

At the same time, he may disappoint some of his most loyal supporters among the Georgia "wool hat boys" at home, who may be expecting him to take the lid off the Capitol dome soon after he takes office.

"The traditions of the Senate relegate a freshman to a back seat," Talmadge says. "It shall be my policy, insofar as practicable, to observe the traditions of the Senate.

"I am not anxious to alienate my future colleagues and render my future influence ineffective.

"I shall not, however, follow that tradition to the degree of rendering my effectiveness as Georgia's junior senator to the degree of impotence.

"If measures aimed at Georgia and the South are offered that necessitate my attempts to protect the interests of my state and my people, I shall not hestitate to take such action as the situation may warrant."

Talmadge almost certainly will be thrown into such a situation early in the 85th Congress when civil rights advocates seek to change Senate rules so as to limit debate and curb the Southerners' great weapon—the filibuster.

However, he may be expected to keep silent but to vote with his Southern colleagues and use his not inconsiderable influence with members of the Senate whom he already knows.

Constitution

WARM FRIENDS

He already knows 25 or 30 senators personally and counts about half of them among his warm friends.

P. 1

Talmadge, who has achieved respect among a sizable section of the Washington press for his skill in handling hot questions on national television programs, showed his sagacity in another way Monday.

He was invited to appear on a program of the National Women's Press Club on the night of Jan. 3, along with other freshmen members of Congress.

Wed. 1-2-57

NEAT SIDESTEP

The women's press club wanted him to speak for two minutes and allotted him the subject of racial segregation. Talmadge accepted the invitation to speak but declined to talk on the racial issue. He will speak on Senate Rule 22, the rule governing debate.

The Georgia senator-elect thought it would be inappropriate for him to sound off on segregation in a speech on the very day he takes office, especially since his views are well known.

He also thought it would be inappropriate at a social function and equally inappropriate at an affair which will be attended by members of President Eisenhower's Cabinet, including Atty. Gen. Brownell, who has been pushing integration.

TO GET CASE'S OFFICE

Talmadge has not yet been able to move into the Senate Office Building and temporarily is working out of Sen. Russell's office, but he disclosed Tuesday he has been assigned to Room 347 when Sen. Case of New Jersey moves out of those quarters after Jan 3.

He has a busy week ahead. Thursday at 9 a.m. he will attend a breakfast in the House Speaker's dining room given by Rep. and Mrs. James C. Davis honoring Gov. Griffin and the Georgia delegation.

Talmadge will have to hurry from the breakfast along with Russell to attend a Democratic caucus at 9:30 a.m. He then will be sworn in when Congress convenes at noon.

RUSSELL TO GIVE FETE

Unless a floor fight develops over limiting debate on the session's first day, Talmadge will be at a 1 p.m. luncheon Russell will give in his honor. That night comes the women's press club appearance.

The night before he takes office he will be an honor guest at a dinner of the Washington Board of Trade at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

On Sunday the senator, Mrs. Talmadge and their two sons, Gene and Bobby, are scheduled to appear on a CBS television program at 3 p.m. An hour later they will attend a reception at the Congressional Club, honoring new members.

Negro Leaders Here Ask Brownell Meeting

Constitution Sat. 1-12-57 P. 1

Atlanta, Ga.

By JACK NELSON

Southern Negro leaders, meeting here to plan their integration push, Friday requested a conference with U.S. Atty. Gen. Brownell to discuss the Justice department's responsibility in racial disorders.

A telegram was sent to Brown at the closing session of the first meeting of the Southern Leaders Conference on Transportation and Non-violent Integration.

ASK INTERVIEW

The conference said in a prepared statement that leaders requested an interview to discuss the department's responsibility "in maintaining order in several areas where Negroes and whites who stand up for justice fear for their lives."

The conference also wired President Eisenhower a request to make a "major speech in a major Southern city urging all Southerners to accept and abide by" the Supreme Court's segregation decisions.

The conference received a telegram from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt suggesting "an appeal to the President since this is a Supreme Court order."

However, conference leaders said they had wired the President before receiving Mrs. Roosevelt's telegram.

CALL ON NIXON

In another telegram, the conference urged Vice President Nixon to make a tour of the South. Conference leaders said it could be "similar to the one he made on behalf of Hungarian refugees."

The Negro group told Nixon that through such a trip he could "report to the President and the American people the economic boycotts, reprisals, bombing and violence directed against the persons and homes of Negroes who assert their rights. . . ."

The telegram to the President declared:

"Extreme violence continues to be directed toward Negro people in the South . . . Negroes who seek to vote are driven from their land in Mississippi on threat of death. In Tennessee, Negro children have been attacked. In Florida, stoning and cross burning are used to obstruct justice. . . .

"In Alabama, Christian churches literally have been destroyed by dynamite . . . numerous individuals, including women, have been beaten on the streets. . . .

Constitution P. 3

"Men and women, black and white, sitting peacefully in buses have been attacked by snipers. . . .

"A state of terror prevails."

Leaders of the conference, who signed the telegrams, were the Reverends M. L. King Jr. of Montgomery, F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, and T. J. Jemison of Baton Rouge, La.

They said some 60 Negro civic leaders from 29 communities in 10 Southern states attended the conference at the Ebenezer Baptist Church.

CONTINUING BODY

The group decided to make the conference a continuing body and named the Rev. King chairman. He said the next meeting will be held in New Orleans at a date announced.

The Rev. King predicted integration in transportation will be completed in the South soon — at least before 1960.

He said the conference also will be concerned with other forms of segregation, such as segregation in public schools. But he said the conference has made no specific plans in other fields.

In the prepared statement, the conference urged Negroes to "assert their human dignity" and to "reject segregation."

Negroes were urged to refrain from violence, no matter how great the provocation, and to dedicate themselves to this motto: "Not one hair of one head of one white person shall be harmed."

APPEAL TO WHITES

"White Southern Christians" were called upon to "realize that the treatment of Negroes is a basic spiritual problem."

At a press conference, the Negro leaders said they believed the current move to integrate public transportation in Atlanta will not result in violence if city officials "properly handle law and order."

Meanwhile, Fulton Sol. Gen. Paul Webb said the cases of six Negro ministers charged with violating state segregation laws will be presented to the grand jury Tuesday.

Two ministers were arrested Thursday after Mayor Hartsfield asked Police Chief Jenkins to obtain warrants. The ministers boarded an Atlanta trolley Wednesday and sat down in a front section also occupied by whites.

Webb said he would prosecute the "clear violation" of Georgia segregation laws. He also congratulated the Negro leaders on the manner in which they made the desegregation bid.

Vice-President Richard Nixon and Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. They asked Eisenhower and Nixon to make pre-integration speeches in the South.

SAID MR. PITTMAN: "There is no use for anyone to compete with those Negro preachers. They can't be beat. They didn't have to hunt headlines. The headlines hunted them.

"They called on Mayor Hartsfield of Atlanta and he delivered, according to plan. That encouraged them to believe that an approach to the President, the vice president and the attorney general would meet with equal success.

"If they had been smart, they would not have gone over the head of Dr. Milton Eisenhower. They should have known he is an old schoolmaster, jealous of his prerogatives. They knew, of course, that he is now the nation's 'Scientific Secretary of Integration.' Maybe the telegrams will reach him anyway."

Georgia Governor Defies 'Any Court Rule'

ATLANTA, Jan. 15 (AP) — Gov. Marvin Griffin Tuesday asked for "complete unity" in preserving racial segregation in Georgia "no matter what any court may rule."

In his annual state of the state message, prepared for delivery before a joint session of the general assembly, Griffin noted that it had been 2½ years since the United States supreme court banned racial segregation in public schools, and declared:

"The effect of this unconstitutional and unlawful decree has not been felt in Georgia yet.

"That fact is no mere accident."

He pledged that as long as he occupied the governor's chair "there will be no breakdown in the pattern of segregation in this state," and added:

"We are going to protect our white and colored citizens in Georgia from mob violence, abuse and unbridled intimidation . . . by maintaining Georgia's sacred heritages and traditions."

In reviewing the achievements of his administration, Griffin said that while Georgians are sharing in an "unprecedented prosperity . . . unfortunately, these advancements are being threatened ruthlessly through unwarranted and unauthorized interference by the federal judiciary in the purely internal affairs of the states."

The governor said that "in this crisis, Georgia stands firm . . . our precious institutions stand free and unsullied in this perilous hour."

He also recommended a change in school financing which he said would provide funds for an across-the-board teacher pay increase of $100 a year.

He outlined the achievements of his administration and said public improvements for which construction has been completed, approved or let to contract "represent the stupendous total of $718,439,864.76 or nearly three-fourths of a billion dollars."

The governor emphasized that his major recommendation to the general assembly is to "hold the line."

"There should be no new taxes levied," he declared. "Nor can we permit any reduction in the present revenue structure."

Tells Georgia Legislature to Back 'Sacred Heritages'—Negro Ministers Indicted

ATLANTA, Jan. 15 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin asked today for "complete unity" in preserving racial segregation in Georgia "no matter what any court may rule."

In his annual state of the state message before a joint session of the General Assembly, Governor Griffin said that it had been two and one-half years since the United States Supreme Court banned racial segregation in public schools. He declared:

"The effect of this unconstitutional and unlawful decree has not been felt in Georgia yet.

"The fact is no mere accident."

He pledged that as long as he occupied the Governor's chair "there will be no breakdown in the pattern of segregation in this state."

"We are going to protect our white and colored citizens in Georgia from mob violence, abuse and unbridled intimidation * * * by maintaining Georgia's sacred heritages and traditions," he said.

'Interference' by Judiciary

In reviewing the achievements of his administration, Governor Griffin said that while Georgians were sharing in an "unprecedented prosperity * * * unfortunately, these advancements are being threatened ruthlessly through unwarranted and unauthorized interference by the Federal judiciary in the purely internal affairs of the states."

The Governor said that "in this crisis, Georgia stands firm * * * our precious institutions stand free and unsullied in this perilous hour."

He also recommended a change in school financing, which, he said, would provide funds for an across-the-board teacher pay increase of $100 a year.

He outlined the achievements of his administration and said public improvements for which construction has been completed, approved or let to contract "represent the stupendous total of $718,439,864.76 or nearly three-fourths of a billion dollars."

The Governor emphasized that his major recommendation to the General Assembly is to "hold the line."

"There should be no new taxes levied," he declared. "Nor can we permit any reduction in the present revenue structure."

6 Negro Ministers Indicted

Six Negro ministers were indicted today on charges of having violated the Georgia "Jim Crow" law by riding in the white section of a bus.

Charged in separate cases were the Rev. William Holmes Borders, leader of the local integration drive, and the Revs. R. B. Shorts, Joseph Johnson, A. Franklin Fisher, Howard Bussey and R. H. Williams.

They boarded an Atlanta trolley bus last week and rode six blocks in front seats traditionally occupied by whites.

The Negroes, who are free in $1,000 bail each, said at the time of their arrest "this is what we wanted"—an opportunity to make a quick court test of the statute that has not been passed on directly.

Bus Service Resumed

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 15—Bus service during daylight hours will be resumed tomorrow morning. Police protection will be provided for the last run, the City Commission said today.

The commission had stopped the Montgomery City Lines last Thursday after integrated busts were fired upon. Bombs also shattered four Negro churches and the home of a Negro minister and a white pro-integration minister.

Negro Business Stoned

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP)—The stoning of a Negro leader's place of business during the night was reported by the police today.

Three large plate glass windows and a number of bottles inside the grocery store of Dan Speed were broken by bricks thrown by unidentified assailants, the police said.

Mr. Speed is chairman of the "ride integrated" campaign of the Inter Civic Council, Negro organization sponsoring a drive to end segregated seating on city buses.

BUS BOYCOTT LEADER AMONG PLOTTERS

The Rev. Martin Luther King (second from right), Negro minister who led the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, was among the Negro leaders, Communists, and Communist sympathizers who attended the meeting at Monteagle, Tenn.

COMMIES PLOT RACE STRIFE IN SOUTH

Methods of stirring up strife in the South were plotted at a meeting at the Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn., by Negro agitators, Communists and Communist sympathizers. Notice the Negro (at left with face turned) eyeing the white woman with bare legs.

INTEGRATED FUN AT RED MEET

A Negro man and a white woman bear-hug each other at a meeting held at the Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn. The photographs taken at the school were made by a photographer from the Georgia Commission on Education.

Race Strife Plotted At Integrated Meet

The Georgia Commission on Education has released a brochure giving documented evidence that racial strife was plotted at an integrated meeting attended by Communists and communist sympathizers at Monteagle, Tenn., last Labor Day.

The weekend meeting was held at the Highlander Folk School and was attended by the Rev. Martin Luther King, the Negro minister who led the Montgomery boycott, and many others who have been prominent in racial flareups in the South.

The Georgia Commission on Education has identified the founders and leaders of the Tennessee school as known Communists or Communist sympathizers.

The school was founded by Don West, Myles Horton, and James Dombrowski, according to the commission.

OPERATING IN GEORGIA

"Don West, presently operating in Georgia, was district director of the Communist party in North Carolina," the commission said.

The Georgia commission said Horton, who is now director of the school, was identified by the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities as a "person who attended a secret convention in North Carolina at which time plans were made for spreading revolutionary theories throughout the South."

A top Communist leader, in testimony before the Un-American Activities Committee, described Dombrowski as "being completely pro-communist and anxious to collaborate with the Communist party and follow its leadership without taking the risk of actual party membership," according to the commission.

The Georgia Commission sent a photographer to the Labor Day weekend meeting. The photographer made pictures of King and other integration leaders attending meetings which he said plotted methods of stirring up further racial strife.

EMBRACED WHITE WOMAN

He also made photographs which show a Negro man eyeing a white woman's legs at one of the sessions and another with a Negro man apparently embracing a white woman.

Another of the photographs show Ralph Helstein, president of the United Packing House Workers of America, and Abner W. Berry of the National Central Committee of the Communist party at the meeting. Berry, a Negro, is also a columnist for the Daily Worker, official publication of the Communist party in the U. S.

The Georgia Commission on Education said the meeting was directed by the Rev. John B. Thompson who "has a lengthy record of Communist affiliations."

The commission listed Thompson's affiliations and noted that he spoke against the conviction of the 11 Communists about a year ago.

Attending the Monteagle meeting were reprensentative leaders of the Tuskegee Alabama boycott, the Tallahassee Florida bus incident, the Montgomery Alabama bus boycott, the South Carolina — NAACP school teachers incident, the Koininia inter-racial farm — Americus, Georgia, and the Clinton, Tennessee school incident," according to the commission.

TYPICAL METHOD

"The meeting of such a large group of specialists in inter-racial strife under the auspices of a Communist training school, and in the company of many known Communists, is the typical method whereby leadership training and tactics are furnished to agitators," the commission said.

The Georgia commission's brochure included an editorial entitled "Every American Has the Right to Know the Truth" which said:

"On the preceding pages you have seen pictures of the leaders of every race incident in the South from May 1954 until the time of the meeting, Labor Day, 1957, weekend. You have seen executives and leaders of many organizations active in the southeastern region of the United States. All of the pictures contained in this folder were taken during one weekend at this Communist training school, Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tennessee.

"Names of the national figures are easily identified with their pictures. Other names of lesser figures are those given to the photographer in introductions and self identifications.

"It has been our purpose, as rapidly as possible, to identify the leaders and participants of this Communist training school and disseminate this information to the general public.

"It behooves each of us to learn more of Communist infiltration and the directions of Communist movements. Only through information and knowledge can we combat this alien menance of constitutional government.

Southern Presbyterians Rap Koinonia Incidents

Constitution Wed. 5-1-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 13

By KAY McLEOD
Constitution Church Editor

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 30—Southern Presbyterians took a strong stand against "racial discrimination" here Monday, decrying the treatment of members of the Koinonia Farm at Americus, Ga., and advocating adherence to Supreme Court edicts on education.

In one of the strongest racial pronouncements to come from any predominantly Southern church, commissioners adopted the 4,000-word report from its committee on Christian relations with only 10 minutes debate. The report was presented by Col. Francis P. Miller of Charlottesville, Va.

The action came during the closing sessions of the 97th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., meeting at South Highland Presbyterian Church here.

ASKS PHRASE STRICKEN

The reference to Koinonia drew the attention of Dr. Harry Fifield, pastor of Atlanta's First Presbyterian Church. He rose to ask that a phrase be stricken calling Koinonia residents model citizens on the grounds that the assembly could not judge without thoroughly investigating the matter.

He said, "I do not agree with the people of Koinonia, but I agree less with those who condemn them. There is no doubt they have made contributions to the community, there is no doubt they have broken no laws . . . but we must have criteria for the phrase 'model citizens.'" This change was readily accepted.

The pronouncement on Koinonia came in a segment of the report dealing with the freedom to worship.

ELECTION RIGHTS

The report also blasted what it called "devious means, such as literacy tests, the use of a poll tax, concealing information as to time and place of registration, economic pressure and threat of reprisal" in keeping some people from voting.

Upholding the freedom of fellowship, the assembly said, "Churchmen are supposed to be the ambassadors of reconciliation . . . A social climate must be created which will encourage a free concourse of men of good will regardless of their race, status, or national origin."

The assembly termed it "unthinkable that a Christian should join himself to Klan or council whose purpose is to gain its point by intimidation, reprisal and violence, or that he should lift no voice of protest against those who appeal to prejudice and spread fear."

This portion obviously referred to the White Citizens Councils and Ku Klux Klan organizations.

STATEMENT ON KOINONIA

The full text of the statement in regard to Koinonia follows:

"Within the bounds of our own assembly, there seems to exist a striking example of the violation of the right to worship. Members of the Koinonia community near Americus, Ga., state that their communal life is not primarily a social or agricultural experiment but an experience in worship. They have professed their allegiance to this nation, they have denied affiliation in any subversie party, they have violated no laws, and have made a significant contribution to farming techniques in this area."

"Yet, because their experiment knows no barrier of color, they are treated as enemies of society. Their property has been strafed, dynamited and burned; their children maligned, their lives jeopardized. Even worse, many 'respectable' citizens of the area have joined in an economic boycott designed to destroy their financial stability and drive them to ruin.

The Assembly would remind the citizens of this area of the danger of trying to destroy those who dare to live by their Christian convictions, even though they may differ from them in their opinions. The Assembly commends all Christian individuals and groups in Georgia who have spoken out so strongly against this denial of freedom of worship.

"Other examples might be given from other areas of attempts to destroy freedom of worship as a basic right of all Americans The Assembly calls on Christians everywhere to be alert to this grievous threat of freedom of religion."

Community In Appeal to Eisenhower

New York Herald-Tribune

Georgians Warn Of Annihilation

N.Y. 4-5-57

For the past several months staff correspondents of the Herald Tribune have been investigating the resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan in the South. In the process of this investigation, Mr. Bird and Mr. Mazo uncovered the story of Koinonia Farm in Georgia.

By Robert S. Bird and Earl Mazo

WASHINGTON, Apr. 4.—A tiny Georgia community of deeply religious white and Negro ministers and farmers which has been dynamited, shot up and burned so often that no insurance company will risk a policy on its people and equipment, will appeal for help in Washington tomorrow.

The forty-five white and fifteen Negro men, women and children at Koinonia community farm near Americus, 100 miles south of Atlanta, have withstood a year of night-time violence with prayer, wry good humor and a thin wire fence as their only protection.

Face Extinction

Now, however, they are threatened with extinction by means of an economic boycott and a grand jury investigation that could lead to a declaration that the community is illegal.

Prior to coming north for help through an all-out effort to focus the national spotlight on his community's plight, the Rev. Clarence L. Jordan, farm leader, appealed directly to President Eisenhower.

Opposition to the farm comes from the white people living in the surrounding area. They resent the fact of Negroes and whites living and working together, in defiance of long-standing Southern custom. However, previous to the Supreme Court's desegregation rulings, little real hostility had been shown to the inter-racial community.

The Rev. Mr. Jordan, a white Baptist minister and a native of Georgia, wrote the President on Jan. 22 that his community ". . . is facing annihilation unless quick, decisive action is taken by some one in authority."

"We make our living by farming, having no connection with any outside agency," the minister wrote.

"We have sought to live simply and humbly, and in a law-abiding manner. We welcome into our fellowship any person or any color or race," he added. "Until the Supreme Court's decision on desegregation of schools, and the subsequent rise of the White Citizens' Councils, we were not molested. Since then, our life together has become increasingly difficult and our very existence is now precarious."

The Rev. Mr. Jordan then outlined to Mr. Eisenhower some of the pressures, the violence, and the fact that local and state law had broken down to the extent that insurance companies classified the farm as an impossible risk, and canceled their policies.

"We Shall Not Run"

"We shall not run, for this is America. It is a land where free men have the right—and the duty—to walk erect and without fear in their pursuit of peace and happiness," the letter concluded.

"Should this freedom perish from our land, we would prefer to be dead. We gladly offer our lives for its preservation."

The White House sent the Jordan letter to Attorney General Herbert Brownell jr.

Over a month later—on Feb. 28—Mr. Brownell wrote the Rev. Mr. Jordan that the violations against his people involved state and local laws, and the Federal government could not intervene.

Governor Ge.. Copy

The Attorney General also sent a copy of the Jordan letter to Gov. Marvin Griffin, of Georgia, an outspoken foe of the religious farming community whose name is the Greek word for communal brotherhood.

In effect, Mr. Brownell implied Georgia ought to keep its citizens from dynamiting their neighbors.

The Attorney General also offered the laboratory facilities of the F. B. I. to any Georgia investigation of the shootings, dynamitings and burnings.

When last heard of, copies of the Rev. Mr. Jordan's letter to the President were being bandied about in Americus by District Solicitor General Charles Burgamy and Sumter County Sheriff Fred D. Chappell.

Probe Started March 26

Mr. Burgamy is in charge of the grand jury inquiry which started March 26.

It is understood witnesses have been grilled about rumors that white and Negro male and female members of the farm community have been more to each other than mere working companions. Questioning reportedly also has been along the line that the farm is some kind of financial racket, or that it is a beehive of Communist activity.

Sheriff Chappell said publicly that the Rev. Mr. Jordan shouldn't be running to the Federal people since "they can't do any more than we are doing."

Furthermore, the sheriff told The Associated Press that 25,000 residents of Sumter County—half of whom are white—have "had it up to here" over Koinonia Farm.

"We get reports of white and Negroes strolling down the streets together in Americus," the sheriff added. "One report said a white girl and two Negro boys walked down the street, all eating popcorn out of the same bag."

There is an unsubstantiated report that much of the pressure against the Jordan group is being stirred up by a local "big shot," who is said to want to buy, dirt cheap, the lush, 1,083 acres of rolling farm, pasture and woodlands. The Rev. Mr. Jordan and his people built the place from a 400-acre tract of rundown, eroded wasteland they bought when the community was founded in 1942.

Tomorrow, the Rev. Mr. Jordan will relate the story of the farm community at a luncheon meeting of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, an agency composed of the leading national fraternal, civic and welfare organizations interested in civil liberties.

To See Press

Following his speech at the Statler Hotel, in Washington, the minister will hold a press conference.

It has not been determined whether he also will attempt to bring the plight of his community to the attention of Federal officials.

Koinonia Farm—a peaceful inter-racial community which got along beautifully with its all-white and all-Negro neighbors until passions began to flame over the school integration decision—symbolizes two distinct stories.

One is today's frustration and anger of white Southerners, including the vast majority who abhor violence, over mounting integration pressures.

Passive Resistance

The other story is that of the farm people. It adds up to the most vigorous combination of violence and economic strangulation perpetrated against any group since the latest flare-up of racial ill-will—and also the most dramatic show of passive resistance by the victims and their determination to stand fast.

Georgia Interracial Farmers Shot at Selves, Jury Finds

By Earl Mazo

WASHINGTON, Apr. 5. — A county grand jury in Georgia charged today that shootings, burnings and bombings at the Koinonia Farm, an interracial community near Americus, Ga., were perpetrated by members of the farm community.

The Sumter County Grand Jury also implied that the farm, on which a handful of deeply religious white and Negro families have worked together since 1942, might be a Communist front. "Known Communists" visited the place, the grand jury said.

All-White Jury

The all-white jury panel was convened last month ostensibly to investigate a full year of night-time machine gunnings bombings and burnings at the farm, presumably by white mobs whose members publicly demanded that the interracial religious group sell out and leave Georgia.

The jury's twenty-page presentment today, however, formalized most of the rumors that had been bruited about on the streets of Americus by folks who characterized the farm as a "cancer" that might spread racial integration throughout Georgia.

The grand jury indicted no one for any of the dozens of violent acts. It offered no recommendations, and it suggested no legal action that might be taken against the farm.

"Cannot State"

"From the standpoint of legal evidence, we cannot state what person or persons committed the violence," said the presentment.

"This grand jury would be persuaded that the evidence more strongly indicates the violence was being committed by (members of the farm community) rather than any one else," it added.

In Washington, the Rev. Dr. Clarence Jordan, farm leader, expressed no amazement at the strange action.

He pointed out, however, that the farm folks could hardly be blamed for the economic boycott which is strangling their enterprise — or for the many legal harassments directed at the farm by Americus officials.

"Same Forces"

"The forces that caused the violence are undoubtedly the same that inspired the economic boycott and legal actions," said Dr. Jordan.

Furthermore, he added, "the farm never had any connection with Communists or the Communist movement, and no one on the farm is a Communist."

Earlier today Dr. Jordan said President Eisenhower could bring peace to the South if he would speak out clearly against violence and the growing resistance to integration.

The white, native Georgian, who was in Washington to plead his farm's plight to the national press and before national organizations interested in civil rights, expressed confidence that "the brotherhood of man" will win out in the end.

But he told a press conference Mr. Eisenhower has such great prestige in the South that he probably could end the battle now. "Some clear, decisive words from the President might do much to calm the hysteria" that has become increasingly violent since the Supreme Court outlawed public school segregation, said Dr. Jordan.

On Jan. 22, after the farm had been shot up, bombed and burned repeatedly, Dr. Jordan appealed to Presidnet Eisenhower for help.

The letter was sent in the hope the President would exert "moral influence," Dr. Jordan said.

The farm folks practice non-violence, he explained. Their religion preaches non-violence, thus they do not want to be protected by "troops" or gun-toting law enforcement people, Federal or local, he insisted.

Letter to Brownell

The White House sent Dr. Jordan's letter to the Justice Department. Attorney General Herbert Brownell jr. wrote the minister the Federal government could do nothing because no Federal laws were being violated.

In Washington today the minister said he doesn't intend to ask Mr. Eisenhower for any more help.

"He is aware of the problem," Dr. Jordan said. "His memory is not that short."

Dr. Jordan implied, however, that the Federal government should check up on the use of its National Guard equipment in Americus and Albany, Ga.

Children Shot At

Three-fourths of the violence against the farm occurred on Monday nights, after the Georgia National Guard drilled in Americus or Albany, Dr. Jordan said. On at least one occasion farm children playing on a lighted volley-ball court were shot at by a weapon which sounded like a military sub-machine gun and fired tracer bullets, which are available only to the military.

Dr. Jordan said the farm's troubles were instigated by a small group of well organized individuals. Many white teachers, ministers, business people, farmers and other residents of the area are sympathetic to the farm community, he said.

All Afraid of Few

But all are frightened of the violent few—and thus all take part in the boycott and none dares to help or speak out publicly in the farm's behalf.

Dr. Jordan said it has become too dangerous for any one to sleep in any of the farm's buildings near the outside road. Also, a number of the community's residents have become "so nervous" about the shootings that they need a rest.

Buy Jersey Site

Thus the farm has bought a 120-acre auxiliary site near Somerville in Somerset County, N. J., where families from the Georgia project will be able to spend two months at a time, and relax from the strain of the constant atacks in Georgia. Also, the New Jersey auxiliary is expected to provide an outlet for some of the Georgia farm's produce, now boycotted around Americus.

The Koinonia folks are going to hold out, regardless of what happens in the future, Dr. Jordan said. The farm's refusal to bow to violence is already having a good effect throughout the South, he continued. Its victory will be a victory for all the people of the area, added the minister, and also for the principles on which the farm operates, namely "the love of God and the brotherhood of man."

Embattled Koinonia

A Georgia grand jury finally got around to investigating Koinonia Farm, the famed interracial community near Americus. After twelve years of peaceful existence, rumors began to fly with the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision that there was "sex mixing" at the farm and that it harbored Communist spies. The jury's 16-page report revived the old accusations, also charged that Koinonia was masquerading as a religious group to avoid payment of taxes and that the violence was largely perpetrated by the farm members themselves as a bid for sympathy. (Koinonia answered back with an eleven-page, point-by-point refutation of the jury's report.) By and large, the jury had to concede that no law was being violated by the Koinonians.

But Koinonia's neighbors went right on as before, following a pattern of harassment that has been growing ever since last year (TIME, Sept. 17), when the unsegregated, pacifist Christian families of the 1,100-acre farm began to feel the sting of terror and the weight of boycott by local merchants. After the first blows, 13 Negroes and nine whites left the farm, but 36 whites and two Negroes stayed. The terror mounted.

The Citizens Bank of Americus refused to grant Koinonia more loans; the gas supplier for the farm's heating and cooking, the hardware dealer, the tractor dealer, and the mechanic who serviced the farm vehicles refused to do business with Koinonia. The farm's gas tank was shot up, its roadside produce stand (with cold-storage and meat-processing equipment) was dynamited and destroyed. The main building on an adjoining farm owned by the community was burned to the ground, and later twelve shotgun blasts were fired into the farm, showering some of the Koinonia children with pellets. One Sunday a 78-car motorcade of 153 robed and hooded Klansmen drove into Americus just after church, held a demonstration at the fairgrounds, then disrobed and went out to Koinonia to urge the community to move.

Last week Koinonia's president, Virginia-born Norman Long, 32, still a member of the Baptist Church, and Clarence Jordan, 44, were planning a move that looked to some like the beginning of retreat. Koinonia will open a branch farm at Neshanic Station, N.J. Jordan insisted that this is no retreat; the Northern farm will be used chiefly as a rest center for Koinonians with "battle fatigue." Said Norman Long: "There's no value in thinking what may happen. We are simply living our lives from day to day. The issues at stake are so great that we cannot allow ourselves to give up."

28 Georgia Ministers Demand Violence Halt

Post-Herald Mon. 4-29-57 Birm. Ala.

ATLANTA, April 28 (AP)—A group of Georgia ministers today urged that responsible officials put an end to violence at the controversial, biracial Koinonia Farm at Americus before someone is killed.

A statement signed by 28 ordained ministers of eight denominations noted past acts of violence at Koinonia and said: "Action must be taken soon to prevent the next step, which otherwise is apparently inevitable, and that is the killing of some person at the farm."

White persons and Negroes work, dine and find recreation together at the 1100-acre farm. It is located in South Georgia, where in the surrounding area segregation is strictly observed.

The statement calling for an end to violence was released by the Rev. Edward A. Driscoll of Decatur. Driscoll is executive secretary of the Georgia Council of Churches, an interdenominational organization, but said the statement was an independent action by the 28 ministers who signed it.

"When we read in the papers about what is happening at Koinonia Farm it is difficult for most of us to believe that it is happening in Georgia," the statement said.

"Georgia has an enviable name among the states in the South. We have differences about politics and religion and in other fields, but we settle our differences by other means than violence. We do not persecute; we do not endanger the lives of men, women or children.

"The Koinonia Farm was established in 1942. Since April, 1956, there have been 14 acts of violence against the defenseless people at Koinonia Farm. The roadside market has been dynamited; crosses have been burned in front of houses; shots have been fired into the houses, barely missing the occupants; property has been destroyed; lives threatened . . .

"We call upon the conscience of the people of Georgia to concern itself with this situation.

"It is a terrifying thing to remember, but we have to face the fact that violence knows no county boundary lines. If the lawless people can take over in one community, they can take over in another community. The good name of our state is being held up to the nation as a place where violence is tolerated and apparently encouraged . . ."

23 Southern Ministers Back Interracial Farm

Post-Herald Birm. Ala.

MACON, Ga., April 8 (INS) Georgia's interracial farm at Americus has won backing from 23 Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, Lutheran and Presbyterian Georgia ministers.

The ministers, in support of Koinonia Farm, charged Friday by an Americus grand jury of being a front for the Communist Party, wrote an open letter to their colleagues Sunday describing the mixed white-Negro settlement as a "Christian community."

Shooting Reported At Bi-Racial Farm

Post 4-27-57

AMERICUS, Ga. — (SNS) — A shooting early Tuesday morning added to the number of incidents of violence taking place at the Koinonia Farm during recent months.

Clarence Jordan, co-founder of the farm, said a bullet was fired from a car traveling toward Americus around 1:50 A. M. The bullet is reported to have struck a machine near the spot where the night watchman stood on guard.

Shooting Reported At Biracial Farm

Atlanta Const. Ga. Wed. 4-24-57

AMERICUS, Ga., April 24 (AP). —Another early morning shooting at controversial, biracial Koinonia Farm was reported yesterday by Clarence Jordan, co-founder.

Mr. Jordan said a bullet from a car traveling toward Americus plowed into the fender of a machine where Chris Crescher, 71-year-old night watchman, was sitting under a light near the main cluster of buildings at the 1,100-acre farm.

The car, he added, sped away.

Deputy Sheriff Buster Powell and Agent W. T. Beauchamp of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation reported officials of the farm turned over to them a fragment of a bullet.

Koinonia, where white persons and Negroes work, dine and find recreation together, has evoked a furore in this South Georgia community where segregation is strictly observed. A grand jury a few weeks ago reported that it found evidence of Communist association, although it did not charge anyone at the farm with being a Communist or return any indictments.

Question For Brownell

Atlanta Const. Afternoon

The interracial Koinonia farm down in Georgia has been shot at eight times.

It has been bombed four times.

Two buildings were destroyed by fires set by unknown arsonists.

Six fiery crosses have been ignited on its property by hate-filled trespassers.

Each of these outrages occurred on Monday nights.

That is the same night that Georgia National Guardsmen hold their drills in Americus.

Post 4-20-57

In several of the attacks tracer bullets have been used. This kind of ammunition cannot be purchased in a hardware store. It is available only to the military.

Up to date, Attorney General Herbert Brownell has refused an investigation of these violences on the grounds that no Federal laws are being violated.

We have a question for Mr. Brownell. Isn't it a violation of Federal laws to steal and illegally use weapons and ammunition belonging to the United States Government?

Parley Told of Terror On Interracial Project

Post & Times Herald P. 5-b Sat. 4-6-57 Washington, D.C.

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Rev. Clarence Jordan told a story of violence and terror in his native Georgia yesterday and predicted that "truth and freedom" will triumph in the South.

He spoke to the ninth annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House and told how the interracial farm he founded in 1942 in Americus, Ga., has been harassed by legal action, crippling economic boycotts and riddled by bullets by night riders.

Even as he spoke, a Sumter County, Ga., grand jury reported that its investigation of the farm known as Koinonia Farm "strongly indicated" it was a Communist front, that the acts of violence were committed by farm members themselves and the farm "has received profits" while operating as a nonprofit organization.

Apprised of the report, Mr. Jordan said: "They have no reason to say we are a Communist front. We have nothing to do with communism. And I think the acts of violence come from the same inspiration which set up the boycott and legal pressure."

In his speech, he said the Koinonia Farm prospered and relations with those outside were amicable until a year ago when he announced a willingness to sign entrance applications to the white Georgia College of Business Administration two years ago.

He recounted how bullets sprayed the 1100 acre operation at night, homes were burned and the roadside market dynamited. Once a machine gun with tracer bullets were used, he said.

"We knew what the bullets were saying," he said, "and they were not designed to kill, but were telling us to get out. But we were hearing other voices, the voice of God and people in the future who will be able to walk without fear."

Mr. Jordan said the farm's insurance coverage was canceled and no agent would renew it. Finally, he said, he turned to Lloyd's of London.

"I understood they would even insure a hound dog's hind claw. But they said we were an unusual risk and turned us down."

He said he appealed to local law enforcement officials and even to President Eisenhower.

The Federal Government turned over Mr. Jordan's appeal to Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia.

At a press conference later, Mr. Jordan said the farm originally had 60 members including about 15 Negroes. But half have moved to a new farm, near Somerville, N. J., for relief from harassment. He stressed the cooperative does not intend to give up the Americus venture, but that the New Jersey farm will help keep it going by providing an outlet for produce.

Farm Prospered 'Til Court School Ruling Spawned "Councils"

Pil

Special to Journal and Guide

AMERICUS, Ga.— Official Georgia is looking the other way as an integrated farm village near here nears extinction.

For more than a year now, the 45 white and 15 Negro men, women and children at Koinonia community farm near here have stood night-time violence perpetrated by racists with humor, prayers and "turning the other cheek."

BUT ITS NOW too much for them to bear. Racists have dynamited their roadside market, pumped bullets into their gas tanks, burned up their property and assaulted them physically so often they have appealed directly to President Eisenhower for relief.

Then, too, what was once a progressive enterprise, has become a shambles by way of economic boycott imposed by the residents of the area. "To buy from the Koinonia farm now is to set yourself up for reprisals," people in the area say.

• • •

THE AIM OF racists in the area is to "prove" that integration in anything cannot work, it appears. Yet before the Supreme Court decision on school and before the advent of White Citizens Councils, Koinonia farm prospered.

The Rev. Clarence L. Jordan, a white native-born Georgian and leader of the farm, said in a letter to President Eisenhower on Jan. 22 that his community "is facing annihilation unless quick, decisive action is taken by someone in authority.

"We make our living by farming, having no connection with any outside agency. We have sought to live simply and humbly and in a law-abiding manner," he told the President.

• • •

"WE WELCOME into our fellowship any person of any color or race," he said, adding "until the Supreme Court's decision on desegregation of schools and the subsequent rise of White Citizens Councils, we were not molested.

"Since then, our life together has become increasingly difficult and our very existence is now precarious," he declared.

• • •

REV. MR. JORDAN told President Eisenhower that the situation has become so tense, what with constant bombings, fires, etc., insurance companies refuse to cover the farm's holdings.

The White House forwarded this letter to Attorney General Herbert Brownell. He in turn sent a copy to Gov. Marv Griffin of Georgia early this year, but violence against the farm has continued.

NOW, GEORGIA officialdom has taken it upon itself to launch a grand jury inquiry to see if Koinonia (the word means communal brotherhood in Greek) farm is "legal."

Georgia insists that the colored and white workers on the farm are more to each other than just "workers." Georgia insists that the farm is some kind of financial racket, that it is a beehive of Communist activity.

BUT THERE ARE other rumors, too. One is that a Georgia "big shot" wants to buy up the lush 1,083 acres of farmland, pasture, etc., dirt cheap. The farm grew to this degree from a rundown 400-acre weed-covered tract founded in 1942.

Rev. Mr. Jordan is in Washington now to relate the story of the farm community to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, an agency composed of fraternal, civic, and welfare groups interested in civil liberties.

It is expected that he will try to receive opportunity to tell the tale of his community to Federal authorities.

Ministers Ask End Of Koinonia Farm Violence

Daily World Aug. 4-28-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Twenty-eight ministers in Georgia, holding ordination in eight denominational communions, ask "Where Does Violence End?" at Koinonia Farm, in Sumter County, near Americus, as violence flares again and an American police officer is reported to have related that he expects more violence at Koinonia and another Americus citizen has commented, "if those people don't get out of there, somebody's going to get hurt."

"When we read in the papers about what is happening at Koinonia Farm" the ministers said, "it is still difficult for most of us to believe that it is happening in Georgia."

The statement released by ministers of the Baptist, Congregational, Disciple, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal, and Reformed denominations continues:

ENVIABLE NAME

"Georgia has an enviable name among the states in the South. We have differences about politics and religion and in other fields, but we settle our differences by other means than violence. We do not persecute; we do not endanger the lives of men, women or children.

The Koinonia Farm was established in 1942. Since April, 1956, there have been 14 acts of violence against the defenseless people at Koinonia Farm. The roadside market has been dynamited; crosses have been burned in front of houses; shots have been fired into the houses, barely missing the occupants; proprety has been detroyed; lives threatened. Action must be taken soon to prevent the next step, which otherwise is apparently inevitable, and that is the killing of some person at the farm."

We call upon the conscience of the people of Georgia to concern itself with this situation.

ASK END OF VIOLENCE

"It is a terrifying thing to remember, but we have to face the fact that violence knows no county boundry lines. If the lawless people can take over in one community, they can take over in another community. The good name of our State is being held up to the nation and the world as a place where violence is tolerated and apparently encouraged. As people of good will, as Georgians brought up in the peaceful tradition of our State, we urge those officials in responsible places to put a stop to the violence before it is too late."

MR. JORDAN, co-founder of the religious colony, which is integrated in the heart of a segregated state, said at least eight shots, seemingly from "a high-powered rifle," were fired from the automobile between 1:40 and 1:45 a.m. The vehicle, heading toward Americus, drove away at high speed before it could be indentified.

According to the co-op leader, one of the shots tore through a vacant farm building near the roadside. The others were not immediately traced.

Hoodlums shoot up Ga. farm again

Pro-Jewish Baltimore, Md. Sat. 5-4-57

AMERICUS Ga. — A fusillade of gun shots, fired from an automobile that "slipped in over a dirt road with the lights out," was reported Wednesday by Clarence Jordan, leader of the interracial Koinonia Farm here.

It was the second incident reported by Mr. Jordan in as many days. Early Tuesday, he said, a single shot was fired into an automobile in which a night watchman was sleeping.

These were the latest of the sporadic shooting, dynamiting, house-burning and rock-throwing incidents reported over the last several months at the controversial 1,100 acre farm.

Sale to Biracial Farm Tied to Store Blasting

Courier Journal Mon. 5-20-57 Louisville, Ky.

Americus, Ga. May 19 (AP)—An explosion cayed in glass fronts of three stores in downtown Americus early today. No one was injured.

Authorities said the blast probably was caused from several sticks of dynamite, apparently tossed from a passing car. Officers theorized the blast was aimed at a feed store that has sold feed to nearby biracial Koinonia Farm.

Damage to the feed store, a grocery store, and a dry goods store was termed negligible.

A voluntary boycott of oKinonia Farms, where Negroes and whites live, work, and play together, has existed for some time among Americus merchants.

Talmadge Raps Ike Programs

Post + Times Herald P. 2-B

Tues. 4-30-57 Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, April 29 (UP)—Sen. Herman E. Talmadge (D-Ga.) said today that President Eisenhower's civil rights and big spending programs were part of a plot to destroy constitutional government.

He told a Kiwanis Club luncheon that the President's "diabolical" civil rights proposal, coupled with the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling, would substitute "judicial tyranny" for local law enforcement.

He said Mr. Eisenhower's $71.8 billion record peacetime budget had been inflated mainly by foreign aid, in a "reckless" attempt to appease other countries.

Talmadge said the Supreme Court is "not the 'law of the land,' as some falsely insist. We will never submit to this unlawful and unconstitutional judicial tyranny," he said.

The Senator said the President's civil rights program would loose on the states "an army of Federal agents . . . (for) harassing and intimidating the people and usurping the function of local law enforcement authorities."

Talmadge said the President's budget could be cut by $7 billion dollars by chopping out all "useless and non-essential spending," including at least $5.5 billion in foreign aid.

CITY POSTS REWARD LEADING TO ARREST OF DYNAMITE GROUP

Daily World Thurs. 5-23-57

Atlanta Ga.

AMERICUS, Ga. — (INS) — The city of Americus Tuesday posted a $500 reward for information connected with the dynamiting of three downtown stores early Sunday morning.

P. 4

The dynamite blast was believed to be mostly intended for a feed store merchant who failed to join in on an unofficial boycott of the interracial religious community of Koinoina.

COUNTY COURT HOUSE

The reward is for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person or persons involved in the dynamiting.

The explosion rocked a nearby grocery and clothing store and shattered windows of the county courthouse directly across the street.

The feed and flour store had been doing business with Koinoina despite the fact that other merchants in Americus have been refusing to trade with representatives of controversial group.

Mayor Fred P. Bowen, speaking for the city council yesterday, said that "we are vitally interested in seeing that justice is reached thru the arrest and punishment of anyone involved in this serious matter."

Six Sue Cafe For $90,000

Defender Sat. 8-17-57

Chicago Ill. P1

Six defendants in a civil rights case have filed suit against the owner in a Chicago restaurant, his bartender, two police officers and eight white patrons for damages totaling $90,000.

The suit has been filed in Municipal court, Atty. Howard Savage, who represents the plaintiffs, said.

Plaintiffs are:

John Corner, jr., Katherine Fields, John R. Forbes, Fred Fields, Jeanne K. Wesson and Dale Drews.

Defendants are:

Tony Tuccori, owner of Jennie's restaurant at 658 E. 79th st.; Joseph Siretta, a bartender in the place; Joseph Hooley and John Boeger, officers of the 10th district; Michial Berg, Marie King, Larry Nolan, Margaret Nolan, Allan Kune, Albert Kiel jr., Daniel Short, John Lellos, all white patrons in the cafe at the time of the incident.

The six plaintiffs claim (1) false arrest, (2) malicious prosecution, and (3) assault and battery.

They are asking $5,000 each on each of the three counts.

The group entered the restaurant on May 11, 956. They said they were refused service and that they were assaulted. When the police came, the officers arrested them on disorderly conduct charges.

Complaints were signed by patrons in the place.

Walter L. Lowe, prominent Chicago insurance broker and civic leader, has charged that he and his family were refused admission to Starved Rock Lodge in Utica, Ill., after reservations for him, his wife, Lois, and son, Walter, jr., had been confirmed in writing.

Chicago Ill.

The Lodge is located in Starved Rock Illinois State Park.

Atty. Sidney A. Jones, jr., who is representing Lowe, said protests have been lodged with Gov. William G. Stratton, State Senator Fred Smith and State Reps. Cecil A. Partee, Charles Armstrong and William H. Robinson.

Lowe, president of the Tourist Motor Club, said he had instructed Jones to start legal action against officials of the lodge.

Through his attorney, Lowe forwarded a copy of the lodge's original letter confirming the reservation.

Sat. 10-12-57

In part, the confirmation read:

"We are pleased to assign you the following accommodations for your party of three to arrive Wednesday, Sept. 18, checking out on Friday, Sept. 26.

"Two connecting rooms in the main lodge. Each room with private bath; one room with twin beds and one room with one full-sized bed. Each room has a radio and telephone.

"The rooms will be ready about 5 p.m."

The letter, which was signed by Henry Lehmann, reservation manager of the lodge, was dated Sept. 14. Four days later, the Lowe family arrived at the lodge and were refused admission by a desk clerk, who stated, "there must be some mistake."

Lowe said no further explanation was given for the refusal of admission.

Inasmuch as the Starved Rock Lodge is under the direct jurisdiction of the State Department of Parks, Superintendent William R. Allen was also notified of the incident, Atty. Jones said.

Through his attorney, Lowe recommended to the governor that immediate steps be taken to terminate the lease of the concessionaire, and that no future lessee be allowed to discriminate because of race, religion or color.

Jones said Lowe has requested him to institute criminal action against the lodge under the Civil Rights law of the state.

If convicted, those involved in restraining the Lowes from using the facilities of the Lodge could be fined $1,000 and imprisoned for a term up to one year.

Atlanta Students Hear Ill. Sheriff

Defender Chicago Ill.

ATLANTA, Ga. — The racial frontiers o America are no longer in the South but in the metropolitan centers of the North, Joseph Lohman said at Atlanta university this week. The sheriff of Cook County, Ill., addressed the Arts and Sciences forum on "group tensions and the police."

Citing the fact that in Chicago 150,000 non-whites now live in an area where 260,000 formerly lived had developed because there was no undrstanding on the part of the public of the new problems caused by the change in the nature of the population in both the North and South.

The future of Democracy is one of tensions for decades ahead, he declared, adding that tensions are not always bad and do not always lead to violence. The acceptance of this myth is an invitation to violence.

In order to dispel these tensions, Lohman pointed out that there are certain other myths which must be rejected: that racial discrimination is caused by the feeling that one race is inferior to another, that education and logic will improve race relations, that separate can be equal, that it is impossible to accomplish social change in an area that has been bound by tradition, that the law cannot legislate morals, and that in times of crisis we should make progress slowly.

On the role of the police he stated, Lohman said that tensions pect the police to rise above the aw, or to decide which laws to enforce. The police should, however, perform a role of pacification which requires of the police a knowledge of what makes people act as they do superior to the knowledge o the average citizen. They should know how organized groups, speaking for few, can disrupt a community and act to prevent disruption. Lohman stressed the fact that, with the rapid metropolitan growth of this era, the main burden fell upon local law enforcement officers.

Georgian Elated At White Exodus In Chicago Area

Commercial Appeal Mem. 2-21-57

From Associated Press Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20. — A Georgia representative said Wednesday his state is "most delighted" that it is swapping some of its Negro citizens for white people from Chicago. P.10

Representative E. L. Forrester (D., Ga.) inserted a news dispatch in the Congressional Record reporting that Chicago's white population is declining while its non-white population is increasing.

The dispatch said the city's white population has dropped from 3,112,000 in 1950 to 3,039,000 in 1956, while in the same period its non-white population increased from 500,000 to 706,000, 19 per cent of the city total.

"I think I can say to the people of Chicago that they need have no doubt that this non-white population is going to increase," Mr. Forrester said.

"The good people of Chicago may want to know what has happened to so many of their fine white citizens who have seen fit to move from their borders.

"I am happy to tell them that many of them have become firmly rooted down in South Georgia, and in the district that I have the honor to represent, and that we are thoroughly delighted with those new citizens.

"These people who have left their Chicago homes and come down to live with us are making a splendid contribution to our section and to our American way of life and we are most delighted to send them some more of our non-white population in exchange for those fine white citizens who have found that Chicago is no longer congenial to their thoughts and to their traditions.

"Keep it up, Chicago, because we will take all of your good people that want to come and be a part of us."

Adoption of Anti-Bias Bill Urged in Ill.

Black Dispatch Okla. City, Okla. Tue. 2-26-57

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — (ANP) — Contending that there are some 634 firms in this city who are responsible for racial and religious discrimination here, the president of the Bureau on Jewish Employment last week called for passage of an equal job opportunity act for the state of Illinois. P.1

At the same time, the Chicago City Council unanimously adopted a resolution Wednesday urging the state legislature to enact legislation that would prohibit bias as to race and religion in employment.

John B. Metzenberg, president of the Jewish Employment group, spoke before a House industry and labor relations committee confab here, stating that 20 per cent of 30,000 job orders placed there excluded persons of Jewish and Catholic faiths.

Lake County NAACP halts JC on skates

Chicago Defender Wed. 2-27-57

WAUKEGAN, Ill. — The Lake County branch of the NAACP has caused elimination of segregation at a Waukegan roller rink which had set aside a specific night each week for colored youth of Waukegan and North Chicago to roller skate.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther Lackey and the Rev. Robert Thomas Jr. of the NAACP took a group of youth to the rink on another night of the week and they skated with the other youths of the community without any difficulties.

'LAND OF LINCOLN'

Fatigued Drivers Can't Buy Coffee

Chicago Defender Sat. 5-25-57

By GERALD D. BULLOCK

The impact of racial discrimination in Illinois public places does not hit Negroes alone. It often ricochets and strikes devastatingly at the white community as well, twisting and tearing at its conscience and stopping only short of inducing active moral recoil.

On April 9, York High School, located in a suburban community only a few miles west of Chicago, was forced to cancel a long awaited special assembly of its student body at which a well-known Negro singing quartet was to have appeared. The reason, the quartet was unable to find, anywhere in York area, the overnight lodging necessary to their appearance. Frantic, last minute effort on the part of faculty members was of no avail. Thus an important part of the school's educational program was seriously aborted. To the credit of the youth of York it must be said they protested vehemently in letters to the local press. But the damage was done.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of articles by Gerald D. Bullock, Illinois Conference of Branches, NAACP, concerning segregation and discrimination in Illinois, the "Land of Lincoln.")

There is no record that the school authorities or local enforcement officers are doing anything to prevent a possible recurrence of this abominable reproach to an avowedly democratic community. Nor do the citizens of this economically above-average township seem to be sensitive to the deleterious effects on their youth of this obvious dichotomy between the principles taught in class and practices calmly accepted in the dynamics of community folkways.

ENACT LAW

Nearly 30 years ago Illinois enacted a law prohibiting activated bias in places of public accommodation. The law is not only little observed, especially in our smaller communities, but officials sworn to uphold the law, i.e., state attorneys, magistrates, police officers and even judges often do all in their tremendous power to hamper attempts to obtain enforcement.

The police will not make arrests on prima facie evidence, though this is all that is required in other types of violation. Magistrates are reluctant to issue warrants and warrant officers virtually refuse to serve them. If the case is finally brought to trial the racial prejudices of judge and jury usually govern the immediate outcome. Thus it is understandable that the NAACP branch in Rock Island reports that 95 per cent of all public places in that relatively large town practice some sort of racial discrimination, even the movie houses until recently required special seating arrangements for colored patrons.

FROWNED UPON

A Negro civic leader from Chicago, whose car suffered a flat tire in Plainsville, had difficulty in finding a service station willing to repair it and was warned to leave town as soon as possible as Negroes were frowned upon within the city limits after dark.

In Springfield, the state capital, hotel were persuaded to open their doors to colored patronage only a short time ago.

Along highway 66 you pass scores of unmarked sites of automobile crashes which brought death or mutilation to victims—crashes in which at least one of the cars contained Negroes. Contemplating this we are sharply reminded that if any one thing has characterized Governor William G. Stratton's two administrations it has been his sincere and laudable concern about the outrageously high rate of Illinois highway deaths. It is amazing that the Governor has never indicated, publicly, any sensitivity to the fact that the widespread, and officially condoned, violation of the Illinois civil rights statute is probably a contributing factor to this carnage. Negroes are not supermen. Like others they can drive only so far without becoming, through fatigue, a menace to their own safety and that of others on the public road.

The Chicago Motor club, echoing the Governor's apprehension, warned solemnly against driver fatigue just before the Christmas holidays in 1956. This club, however righteously concerned over highway safety, has a "white only" clause in its constitution which it has, apparently, no intention of revoking.

Its services, including road information, insurance, tips on driving efficiency, emergency mechanical and towing service and hostel references, are not made accessible to that part of the driving public which has detectable Negro ancestry. Thus the Chicago Motor Club gives formal and widely known sanction to an un-American practise which must cost uncounted lives annually.

On our way to East St. Louis we pass through, or narrowly bypass, a score of towns where no Negroes reside and where none are welcome. Edwardsville is not such a town. Larger numbers of colored citizens live there and they have many problems. The local NAACP believes that an enforceable equal job opportunities law would solve one of its most immediate and pressing problems and relieve the anxieties of a large portion of its Negro population.

Illinois Called Bias Stronghold

Defender Sat. 5-18-57

Chicago Ill.

By GERALD D. BULLOCK

An American Christian looking at his nation today, looking for that peace of which John wrote: "My peace I give to you, my peace I leave unto you," must be sorely disturbed by what he sees: a nation still troubled by plots and counterplots of a tragic story which began over three hundred years ago on the then dark continent of Africa.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a series of articles by Gerald D. Bullock, president, Illinois Conference of Branches, NAACP. In this article Bullock points out how open segregation and discrimination make a mockery of state laws

The immediate sequel of that story brought to America in 1619 the first boat-load of Negro slaves, and with them a moral and spiritual challenge that she somehow has never been able to meet.

Paradoxically the nation was to shrink away from this challenge, this unresolved moral question, through all the turbulent years which saw the development of our unmatched creed, our fine philosophy for the secular salvation of mankind.

This American Christian could not help but perceive that his nation, plagued by conscience, has evolved a wondrous capacity for saying one thing and doing the contrary. But he should remember one thing: The race question in America has been, until recently, a purely moral problem.

Like all moral matters it has two sides. One is the intrinsically academic and widely accepted knowledge and understanding of what is right, and the other is the dynamic of doing the right.

If he should narrow his gaze to the State of Illinois he would see a panorama of the nation's illness. He would see the same contradiction between oft-repeated principle and crystallized practices. Existing State laws in Illinois, by all precept and acceptance the will of the people, and binding upon all, should solve most of the problems which affect race relations here.

These laws forbid, for instance, racial discrimination in the administration of our public school system. Yet thousands of Negro children know and suffer the deleterious effects of de facto segregation in most of our larger communities. And no effective steps are being taken by the authorities or by any civic agency, except the NAACP, to eliminate this dangerous condition, despite the statewide approval of the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, which outlawed (and pointed out the unfortunate psychological effects of) segregated educational situations.

LAWS VIOLATED

Existing laws prohibit racial discrimination of any kind in all places of public accommodation. Still, a Negro who decided to see some of the natural or man-made wonders of his state could tour the length and breadth of Illinois and find no community which he could enter without fear that when hungry or thirsty he would be refused service at a restaurant, inn, drive-in, or even a hamburger joint; or that when tired, be refused a place to rest by a hotel, motel or rooming-house despite the flagrantly advertised urgings of such places to attract the jaded wayfarer. But the pulpits, lecture platforms and political podiums of the state resound with stirring endorsements of the principle of equality for all under the law.

Obviously there is a serious lack in our moral and religious training and we should be moved to ask ourselves whether we are not becoming a people with a fine facility for mouthing of platitudes, consoling ourselves with the thought that we have a deep knowledge and respect for the right, though content to rely upon the other fellow to do it.

To illustrate, let us take a motor trip southward from Chicago, toward East St. Louis. We shall travel along U. S. 66, one of the nation's main traffic arteries. Thousands use it daily; black and white, Americans all! Paralleling its broad lanes are myriad establishments ablaze with neoned inducements to the public to take advantage of their services. These are refreshment spots often essential to the physical comfort of the motorist. All are licensed by the State of Illinois, operating under its conferred privilege and subject to its laws and regulations. Most of the owners of these businesses are good citizens, eager for honest prosperity, courteously serving the public, providing surcease from the tiring monotony of the open road.

There is, however, one important exception: the motorist who happens to be of Negro ancestry must look far and long among these tempting hostelries to find one which will show him equal courtesy, or even serve him at all. For here the mores of the deep South have been transplanted to the North. Even into the land of Lincoln.

We can get the best of service for our car at almost any filling station, but few will willingly allow us to refresh our road-weary bodies with a meal, a stimulating cup of coffee, a restful night in the often adjoining motel. Nor, turning off the main highway, will a visit of any of the quiet, prosperous appearing towns along the way solve our problem. The restaurant keepers will either abruptly inform us we can eat only in the kitchen or "take it out." The hotels and motels will be "all filled up" or tell us we must have advance reservations. There is nothing we can do but climb dejectedly, wearily, submissively or angrily back into our car and brave the increasingly dangerous miles to a larger town, which may have a "Negro section."

Experts Discuss Desegregation Of Educational Theatres

World Sat. 1-12-57

Birm, Ala.

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Problems revolving about desegregation in Educational Theatre came into focus during a panel session of the American Educational Theatre Association held at the Hilton Hotel here last weekend. P. 4

Integration in the regular commercial theatre was also touched upon by speakers who participated in the panel and in the lively question period which followed.

The four participants in the Sunday afternoon panel was chaired by Dr. Lillian Voorhees of Fisk University, and who spoke to the subject, "The Negro Actor and Desegregation in the Educational Theatre," were: Thomas Paog of Tennessee State College; Robert Hilliard, Adelphi College, Garden City, New York; Miss Marjorie Dycke School of Performing Arts, New York City and Miss Anne Cooke of Howard University, whose paper was presented in her absence by Dr. Thomas Pawley of Lincoln University of Missouri.

The symposium addressed itself to four questions:

Should desegregation in the Educational Theatre follow desegregation off-stage or should it be considered a means of aiding the process and acceptance of desegregation off-stage?

How fast may desegregation in the Educational Theatre be expected to take place? What stages or limitations can you define?

What does experience teach us where desegregation in the Educational Theatre has taken place?

What effect may we expect desegregation to have upon the Educational Theatre?

Marjorie Dycke said: "As to how fast desegregation in the Educational Theatre can be expected to take place, I should say shortly after desegregation in the schools. Much will depend upon the theatre director—his good will, good sense and good taste as well as his imagination, rapport with students, faculty and administration and his prestige in the community."

Miss Dycke presented a list of plays suitable for mixed casts.

Thomas Poag declared that the director will be called upon to become "a social engineer." The question facing teachers and directors, he said was how well they could measure up to democratic principles and the great ideals of their theatre heritage.

Robert Hilliard pointed to some of the successful mixed cast plays which had reached Broadway. He mentioned Charles Gilpin as the first important player back in 1920. Paul Robeson, Canada Lee and Frank Silvera were others mentioned.

Chicago Coun. Adopts Anti-Bias Law

CHICAGO, Ill. — Chicago may soon be added to the growing number of cities having anti-discrimanation laws.

In a step in this direction last week, the City Council Judiciary Committee unanimously approved an anti-discrimination ordinance providing fines of $100 to $200 for discrimination in public places.

The ordinance prohibits discrimination on account of race or creed in stores, hotels, restaurants, recreational facilities and other public places.

THE COUNCIL will vote on the measure Sept. 19. Chicago is the second largest city in the United States, having a smaller population only than New York City. There are 645,000 Negroes in the state of Illinois.

INDIANS STUDYING BID TO BE NATION

New York Times 4-17-57

Penobscots of Maine Retain Attorney to Scan White Man's New Proposal

By JOHN H. FENTON

Special to The New York Times.

OLDTOWN, Me., April 17—Indians of the Penobscot Tribe are taking a long look at a proposal for formal declaration of their independence as a nation.

On the basis of experience for many generations as wards of the state of Maine the Penobscots say that they want to see both sides of the coin and the milling on the edge, too, before committing themselves to any further agreements with the white man.

The establishment of the tribe as an independent nation was suggested by James A. Murphy, an attorney of Beverly, Mass., whom the Penobscots retained to represent their interests. Mr. Murphy said he felt that the move would bolster an old treaty that said the Indians were entitled to an annual benefaction, "so long as they shall remain a nation."

Mr. Murphy is undertaking research on other possible treaties. He began his task about a month ago. He has met with the tribal leaders once, so far.

Mr. Murphy said this week that he was prepared to appeal to President Eisenhower, to Congress and to the United Nations, if necessary, to establish the Penobscot's rights as an independent nation.

In fact, he already has sent a statement of the tribe's position to those sources, as well as to the Governors of Maine and Massachusetts. Until 1820, Maine was a part of Massachusetts. The original treaties were signed with Massachusetts.

Until further research can be undertaken, Mr. Murphy said statement of the tribe's position like a "moratorium" on legislation affecting them. They feel that the Indians chiefly would Maine have violated treaties and that subsequent legislation has further eroded their rights.

One of the most controversial proposals, from the Indians' standpoint, already has been killed by the present Legislature. This would have given the three Indian reservations in the state the same considerations as unorganized territory, except for such special laws as applied to Indians.

The Penobscots opposed this bill from the outset. They held that this was merely a way of the state's "putting a foot in the door" to legislate the tribe out of existence.

What the Penobscots themselves appear to want most is a director of Indian affairs. They would prefer someone "neutral" as to race.

Under present Maine law the Indians' affairs are administered by the State Department of Health and Welfare. Mrs. Sadie Mitchell, a Penobscot herself, is the official Indian agent at the reservation in this town.

But two groups of Indians, who hold differing views on some things, said today that they would prefer someone not of Indian blood to act as liaison officer. They contended that they had no neutral person with whom they could sit down and talk over their problems on the reservation.

Two Tribes in Maine

There are two tribes of Indians in Maine. They are descendants of the Abenaki Tribe, which was a part of the Algonquin nation.

The Penobscots, with a population of 704, live on an island of 300 acres in the Penobscot River. The reservation is connected to the mainland by a bridge. There is unrestricted passage.

The Passamaquoddy Tribe is divided between two small reservations at Dana Point and at Pleasant Point in Washington County. The tribe numbers 558 and is not involved in the move for reaffirmation of tribal independence.

Indians living within the reservations pay no real estate taxes. The State of Maine cares for needy Indians and provides education for the children.

Some of the tribesmen earn good wages in shoe factories and a pulp mill around Oldtown. Others are indigent and live in housing that is decidedly substandard. The Passamaquoddies are even worse off. They reflect the depressed conomic conditions of Washington County with no prospects of improvement.

The State of Maine has custody of Indian trust funds, established through sales of tribal land and of lumber on tribal lands. The interest from these funds goes to the general fund of the state. The current state budget includes an item of $317,000 for Indian support for the bienium ending June 30 this year.

Dr. Dean H. Fisher, Commissioner of Health and Welfare, contended that legislation proposed by his department was intended only to clear the statutes of unnecessary laws and give the Indians additional privileges, such as the right to vote, available to other citizens.

INDIAN RIGHTS TO BE STUDIED BY NEW GROUP

Daily Tribune Wed. 4-10-57 Chicago, Ill.

New York, April 9 [Special]—The fund for the Republic has announced the establishment of a five man commission to make a broad study of the rights and responsibilities of the American Indian.

Robert M. Hutchins, president of the fund, announced that an initial grant of $100,000 has been made to finance the project, to be headed by Dr. O. Meredith Wilson, president of the University of Oregon.

Other members appointed to the commission are Charles A. Sprague, publisher of the Oregon Statesman; Earl Llewellyn, professor of jurisprudence, University of Chicago; Arthur M. Schlesinger Sr., professor emeritus of history at Harvard university; and W. W. Keeler, vice president and general manager of Phillips Petroleum and chief of the Cherokee nation.

The commission has outlined a four point program to include:

1. A study of the governments of Indian tribes and groups to determine to what extent they are organized, and to describe their variety and powers.

2. A study of the changes in policy of the United States toward Indians during the last quarter century.

3. A study of the promise that assimilation of Indians should proceed as rapidly as possible.

4. A study of representative tribal economics involving credit facilities, land alienation and ways to reduce, transfer, or terminate federal services.

Seminole Meeting Agrees on Program

By WILLIAM KENNEDY

Herald Staff Writer

Formation of a new tribe of Indians and tentative agreements on a land grant and prosecution of crimes were announced Thursday after a meeting of a state official and a group of Miccosukee Indians.

The meeting lasted until 1 a.m. Thursday at Jimmy Tiger's village on the Tamiami Trail. A group of about 80 Miccosukees met with Max Denton, director of the State Indian Affairs Dept.

According to Denton, these points — all of which are subject to the approval of Gov. LeRoy Collins and his Cabinet —were agreed upon:

1—That 200,000 acres of internal improvement land in the western part of Dade and Broward Counties be made available to the Indians for hunting, fishing and living.

2—That a tribal organization be established whereby the Indians can elect their own leaders. The exact structure of the organization, Denton said, is still in doubt, even among the Indians.

3—That prosecution of misdemeanors committed on the Indian land be carried out by the tribal council, but that prosecution of felonies be a matter for state or local authorities.

Denton said he felt the main accomplishment of the meeting, which lasted eight hours, was "a better understanding between our people and them.

The Indians at the meeting were of the Everglades Miccosukee Seminole Tribe, which heretofore has had no formal organization.

Denton said he met with a rival faction of this group, known as the Medicine Council, on Tuesday at Everglades City. He said no agreement was reached with the Medicine Council, but that the Indians merely listened to what he had to say.

Exactly how many Indians were represented at Denton's meeting with the Miccosukees is in doubt.

He said that there are an estimated 1,000 Indians in the state and that approximately 60 per cent of these live on a reservation. The remainder, which are split into factions, are living off the reservation.

Last month the governor's cabinet approved a plan to organize Florida's Seminoles under a constitution.

At that time Denton pointed out that money held in trust by the federal government and the state could not be transferred to the tribe until such time as some type of governing body was organized by the Indians and recognized by the state.

Morton Silver, Miami attorney, represented the Indians at the meeting with Denton. He said money was not discussed.

NAVAJOS GO TO SCHOOLS THAT COME TO THEM

Daily Tribune Chicago, Ill. June 20, 1957

Window Rock, Ariz., June 19 [Special]—Trailer schools are the latest innovation in Uncle Sam's attempts to educate Navajo Indian children.

Thirty-seven mobile units, strategically located in remote areas of the reservation, bring the three Rs to scores of the tribe's children who would otherwise not get to any school.

The Navajo reservation, the country's largest, covers much of southeastern Utah, northeastern Arizona, and northwestern New Mexico. It is a dry, forbidding land of lofty mesas, deep gorges and sparse vegetation. The federal bureau of Indian affairs has wrestled for decades with the problem of getting adequate school facilities to the children there.

Trailers Held Success

Experts on Navajo affairs deem the trailer schools successful. Each unit has house trailers especially constructed for school use. Most of the trailers are homes for teachers. One always has washroom facilities for the children. Classes are held in a quonset hut erected within the trailer community. This is movable, too—in sections by truck.

The children attend as day students. Buses pick them up as close to their hogans as possible and return them as far as possible when school is out. There are no paved roads off the main arteries of the reservation.

Breakfast on arrival and a hot lunch at midday is a part of the trailer school program. One trailer is fitted with cooking equipment.

Can Follow Pupils

Trailer schools are useful in two ways. First, they test an area to see if there is enough all-year, all-weather enrollment to justify the building of permanent facilities. Second, since whole schools can be moved about they can, circus-fashion, accompany nomadic groups of sheep-herding families.

Trailer schools are less expensive to operate than boarding schools, at which Navajo children live five to seven days

SEGREGATION OF INDIANS IN 1684 CITED BY VIRGINIAN

Star Mon. 9-16-57 Washington, D. C. P. 1-B

TAPPAHANNOCK, Va., (AP).—Senator Robertson, Democrat of Virginia, has pointed out that segregation has been practiced in Virginia since 1684 when Indians were set aside on a reservation in Essex County.

"This was obviously a case of segregation," he said yesterday in an address at the Jamestown Festival. It would be "condemned by some of our modern psychologists and social reformers, even though Indians and whites got along better," he asserted.

Also Indians were segregated from the whites at the Collegt of William and Mary after its founding in 1692. Senator Robertson said. He added that the colonists' in this field might have a modern application.

"It remains to be seen," he said, "whether the phychologists were right in thtir views that the Supreme Court "relied on to destroy a precedent set in Virginia in 1692." The high court has ruled that public schools in the South must be desegregated.

"We in Virginia believe that they were wrong and hope to be given the privilege of demonstrating that separate but equal schools will work to the advantages" of both whites and negroes, he said.

Senator Robertson spoke at the conclusion of a two-day program marking Essex County's participation in the Jamestown Festival.

a week during the school year. Parents like them better, as they feel that constant contact with nonIndians in the boarding schools removes the children too much from tribal customs in their formative years, with danger of a breakdown in religious and social tradition.

3,000 Are Still Out

The school trailer communities are part of a program instituted by Glenn Emmons, commissioner of Indian affairs, in an effort to make sure that every Navajo child of school age goes to school. Nevertheless, there are still about 3,000 Navajo children of school age unschooled in the 1956-57 school year.

Critics of trailer schools call the program a throwback to the days of the "little red school house" in which pupils of all ages, grades, and aptitudes were taught in one room. Bureau of Indian affairs officials argue that trailer schools are better than none at all.

Seminoles Wonder

P. 8-C

First of a Series

By DAN BROWN
Herald Staff Writer

Change is pounding at the Florida Seminoles like the blow of an ax—the Indians are split three ways.

BROWN

The change comes from the increasing pressure of the white man's civilization which, day-by-day, reaches further into Indian camps and chops away at Indian ways.

Although the births of the three groups have been accompanied by constitutions, charters, lawsuits, floods of legal language, and family squabbles, the splits appear to be cultural ones.

The Indians are split into groups which represent three different degrees of acceptance of white man's ways.

One group, which is centered around the City of Everglades, wants to preserve its Indian ways. It will have nothing to do with Indian organizations modeled on white man's governments; it wants to be left alone.

Another, the so-called Tamiami Trail Seminoles, seeks to keep a modified—and slowly changing — version of Indian culture. It accepts some of the ways of white men, it wants land, and it has a government modeled on the white man's.

The third group, mainly composed of reservation Indians, wants the white man's culture, his economy and his luxury. Its members, however, do not appear ready to abandon their ancient culture completely.

Sizes of the three groups change constantly as Indian "fence sitters" move from one group to another, but it appears the reservation group is numerically larger than the other two combined.

Almost two-thirds of Florida's almost 1,000 Seminoles live on the three federal reservations (Dania, Big Cypress, and Brighton).

However, the emergence of the three groups has caused deep rifts among the Indians and many families are split, with the father in one camp and his sons in another, or with brother against brother.

For example, the Rev. Bill Osceola of the Dania Reservation and a leader of the reservation group, has brothers and other relatives in other groups.

Mike Osceola, proprietor of a Tamiami Trail tourist-attraction village, and one of the few off-reservation Indians who has settled in the reservation faction, is closely related to Indians in both the Trail and Everglades groups.

Religious differences are also deep moats between the reservation group and the other

At the three federal reservations, Baptist churches run by Indian preachers are important centers of life.

One minister is Josie Billie, a former medicine man a fact which may have caused deep bitterness in the two off-reservation groups.

Christian marriages are performed at all reservations, and when reservation Indians die they are usually given Christian services and buried in the Christian manner.

Although the off-reservation Indians have accepted the friendship and help of Deaconess Harriet M. Bedell of Everglades, an Episcopalian missionary, most of them are still pagans who practice a religion peculiar to the Seminoles and believe in a Great Spirit rather than a Christian God.

Most of them still marry at the annual meeting of the medicine council at the Green Corn Dance, and many of their dead are still transported to remote Everglades hammocks and secreted there along with many of their belongings.

The group centered around Everglades is almost entirely

As My Fathers?
. . . elders study

As White Man?
. . . young ask

composed of followers of this Indian faith, but members of the Tamiami Trail group have a few Christians in their ranks.

As a result, the group carefully divorced its government from its religions when it adopted a constitution recently, and the constitution assures all group members of the right to worship as they chose.

Economically, the Trail and Everglades groups are similar. Much of their income comes from the commercial tourist-attraction villages they operate and the handicrafts they sell to tourists.

However, hunting, fishing and and cultivation of Everglades hammocks are still important to them, and some members of the groups live deep in the virgin 'Glades where they have little contact with white men.

Reservation Indians derive most of their income from a government-sponsored cattle program, and 84 of the reservation families own small herds.

Many Indians also work for farmers or are employed by construction companies.

Those at the Big Cypress and Brighton reservations still supplement their income and their diet with the game which roams both remote federal holdings.

Whites Suffer, Too

Segregation A Two-Edged Sword; Cuts Right, Left

By Jane Purcell Guild
In The Christian Century

38a

SEGREGATION is a two-edged sword: it discriminates savagely against Negroes, and to a lesser degree against many whites.

Over thirty years ago I became a Virginian by choice. After years away, I have again chosen to be a Virginian. Though I may deplore its racial prejudice, Virginia is my home.

Many years ago, before I had had time to familiarize myself with the Old Dominion's segregation laws and racial mores, I paid my fare on a Richmond bus and went to a seat in the rear. At once the bus was filled with a fog of commotion. It took me a few seconds to realize that the driver was yelling at me, ordering me to leave the seat I had chosen and move to the front of the bus. As I hurried to obey, the passengers looked at me with curiosity — to my considerable embarrassment.

Nowadays I may sit where I please in a Richmond bus. To its credit, the city voluntarily desegregated seating on public transportation some time ago. But in spite of the Supreme Court decision declaring segregation illegal, if I should go into the deep South I still would not have the legal right to sit where I please on a bus.

I

Some years ago I was employed to direct the Richmond Negro welfare survey—perhaps because there was no born southerner available to direct it. At once a prominent citizen who had a part in that survey came to me with advice: "Remember, you are not employed to solve the Negro problem."

When I wrote the report on the survey, white committee members requested that certain pertinent facts and recommendations be omitted. As a professionally trained person, I shall always be embarrassed when I recall the weak spots in the report of that survey as it was printed.

Some time later I wrote an article—innocuous but true — about Negro problems in Richmond. The townspeople heard about the article, and the mayor telephoned my husband, who was then director of the local community chest. Angirly the mayor told him: "Hereafter you must censor your wife's writings or you will be fired." My husband replied: "I never see anything my wife writes until after it is published. I cannot be her censor." I was deeply grieved to have been the cause of an incident so unpleasant for my husband, for I tried never to write in such a way as to hurt him in the eyes of the community.

Another time, publication of a cautiously written and honest article about Richmond's discrimination against its Negroes started my telephone ringing repeatedly. The calls were from anonymous persons who went into venomous tirades against "damyankees who should keep their so-and-so mouths shut or so-and-so will happen to them." I quickly hung up the receiver. Even after I moved from Richmond to California, critical always anonymous letters reached me, filled with racial prejudice and hatred.

Recently I told a friend I had just finished two articles on aspects of racial segregation. At once she begged me: "Oh, please have them published under a nom de plume; you know you will be hounded as soon as they appear." That had happened when my husband was alive, though I tried to be circumspect for his sake. He believed as I do, but a breadwinner must watch his tongue on race matters in the South. And the truth is seldom a defense.

II

For some years I taught at Virginia Union University—the only white person on the staff of that Negro school. Virginians by birth—usually "ladies"—referred to my "interesting conduct" and wondered how I could possibly do such a thing. But so far as I know no one who mattered ever seriously held my teaching in the school against me. The "ladies" simply felt that by doing something contrary to their accepted way of life I had proved myself somehow inferior. This attitude I reasoned, was a holdover from pre-Civil War days, when it was a crime for a white person to teach free Negroes. To this day Virginians seem to fear the power of educated Negroes.

Mrs. Guild is the widow of Arthur A Guild, who originated and directed the first Community Chest in Richmond, Va., where she now lives. A former social worker and lawyer, she organized the Negro welfare council in Richmond and for several years taught social work at Virginia Union University.

Through teaching at Virginia Union I came to know intimately many well educated, charming, capable dark-skinned people and to enjoy their company. But I was unable to visit them in their homes since I was unwilling to jeopardize my husband's position or to "sneak in the back door."

Richmond's Negroes cook our food serve our meals, wash our clothes, do our dishes, make our beds, nurse our children, care for us when we are ill, drive our cars, operate our elevators, clean our homes. But eat a sandwich with us? Never. Not even though they may have advanced university degrees and the same interests we do, enjoy the same cultural pursuits. If you do eat with them you lay yourself open to charges of being a Communist. It has happened to me.

Recently a motion picture I wanted to see was showing in one of our Negro theatres. I asked a white friend to go with me to see it. She was willing, but pointed out that we would be segregated in the dark and not too pleasant gallery. For the Virginia law requiring segregated seating in theatres applies to Negro as well as white theatres. We decided not to go.

Now that my husband is dead, I no longer try to disguise my attitude on race and segregation. But I have resolved never to argue with people clearly unable to see more than one side of the question. There are times when harmony must be preserved though freedom of speech is denied. Recently an elderly man sitting near me in a public place demanded angrily: "Isn't that a nigra newspaper you are reading?" I admitted that it was. He gave me a long look which plainly said he had just discovered an undesirable citizen. Then an elderly woman borrowed the "white" newspaper I had in my lap. In a few minutes shet urned to me in genuine agitation.

"I wish I never had to see or hear that world 'integration' again," she said. I mildly admitted that I was not "against" it. She stared at me with a look that could have killed, and muttered to herself in obvious distress. Such incidents are probably not important, but repeated they make one who respects the Supreme Court feel conspicuous and frustrated.

So long as Negroes are segregated, I too am a victim of the prosegregationists. They make me feel irritable and uncomfortable. I am willing thus to share in part the unhappy fate of Negro citizens deprived of their rights. But I realize that while those who discriminate hurt Negroes from birth to death, to me they can do little more than amuse or annoy.
than amuse or annoy.

III

Many accident-of-birth Virginians feel as I do. We who believe we are all children of one God whatever the color of our skin know that the time is here when we should speak up and be counted on the side of human rights and for law and order. But at the same time we hesitate, lest here in the homeland of presidents we be subjected to insult and boycott..

The most unpleasant thing about racial discrimination so far as white persons are concerned is the fact that it deprives them of freedom of speech. Even when he has made clear his attitude of opposition to racial prejudice, the white southerner often finds it impossible to argue the question; the consequences would be too disagreeable. We too suffer, though our suffering is only of the spirit.

The Japanese ambassador recently revealed that President EISENHOWER defeated the Premier of Japan in a golf match last year. Until recently the results of that match had been kept so secret that it seemed unlikely the winner would be revealed before some gossip wrote a "now it can be told" book in the year 2000.

Laud Store, Gary For Integration

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 3-18-57 P. 21

Carson Pirie Scott and Co. and Gary, Ind., were lauded for their racial integration campaigns during the Ladies of the Press May breakfast at the Edgewater Beach Hotel on Sunday.

The event sponsored by Theta Sigma Phi was termed, "Integration As We See It."

Principal speakers were Miss Ethel Payne, Chicago Defender correspondent; Elizabeth Hatch, personnel director, Carson Pirie, Scott; Jerrie Werber Atkin of the Gary Post-Tribune, and Dorothea Kehn Jaffee, free lance writer and special correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor.

Mrs. Hatch told how Carson's began integrating its workers seven years and how it had worked out successfully. She says integration is "today's living."

Mrs. Atkins described how Gary had gone about improving its race relations in the past 12 years.

She also noted that the Negro population there is now 36 percent of the total, double what it was back in 1945 when the city was plagued with racial school strikes and race riots.

She also said that 85 percent of the recent migrants to the city are colored.

Racial Ban Hit By Boxer-Cleric

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 7-6-57 P. 3

A guard at the Front st. Beach in Whiting, Ind. on Sunday who attempted to prevent 16 Negroes from attending an interracial church beach picnic got a lecture on the recent decisions of the Supreme Court and lost his issue. 38a

Delivering the lecture was Rev. Emerick Mitchell, one-time Golden Glove Boxing champion, who was escorting 14 members of his Methodist Youth Fellowship to the picnic.

Rev. Mitchell told the Defender that when he arrived at the gate and asked the guard where the Methodist beach party was being held the guard told him there was no such group there.

NOT OPEN TO NEGROES

The young cleric who had been invited to the event by the First Methodist church of Whiting, went to the church in search of the party.

Later, he said, a Rev. Louis Wilson came and escorted them to the beach where the guard informed Rev. Mitchell that Negroes were banned.

Angered, the clergyman retorted that the Supreme Court had already ruled that tax-supported recreation facilities were open to all.

The guard, he said, called police who in turn admitted that they could not keep the Negroes from the beach. However, Officer Gurekovick told Rev. Mitchell that the police would not be responsible for what happened to them while at the beach.

2 INCIDENTS

Two racial incidents occurred during the group's two-hour stay at the picnic: a group of white youths jeered at the girls when they went to the rest room and the concession stand owner refused to sell soft drinks to the Negro guests.

White members of the party made the refreshment purchases for the Negroes.

Rev. Mitchell is pastor of the Marshalltown church organized in Gary five months ago as a joint project of the Lexington Conference and Indiana Northwest Conference.

There are 51 members in the congregation and 152 in the Sunday School.

Mixed Dating Brings Penal Term To Pair

Courier 12-30 Mansfield, Ohio

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Nov. 11 (AP) —A Juvenile Court judge has handed penal terms to two 17-year-olds, a white girl and a Negro boy, after they refused to stop dating each other.

Judge William H. Schannen of Allen County Juvenile Court sentenced the boy to six months on the State Penal Farm, and the girl was sent to the Indiana Girls School for an indeterminate term. Feb. 11-12-53

Both were charged with delinquency after they resisted efforts of the girl's mother to stop their dating.

38a

Barbara Baker, an attractive blonde, and James Bowie were arrested last week outside a Fort Wayne youth center for creating a disturbance in a parked car. She first gave police a false address and her age as 19. Investigation revealed both were high school pupils.

The pair admitted in court they had had sexual relations on at least 20 occasions since school began last September and also engaged in drinking parties in Bowie's home.

Fort Wayne juvenile authorities said they knew of at least 40 white girls and 30 Negro boys in the city going on interracial dates. Some white boys are dating Negro girls, they said. Dancing of mixed races is common at several local youth centers, but this was the first time any of the youngsters appeared in court.

SCHOOL AID URGED BY INDIAN YOUTHS

College Scholarship Needs Stressed at New Mexico Parley of Tribal Groups

Times p 36 M

Special to The New York Times.

SANTA FE, N. M., Jan. 13—Better educational opportunities and more scholarships were the needs emphasized by speakers at the third annual Indian Youth Council held here yesterday.

The council met under the joint auspices of the New Mexico Association on Indian Affairs and the Fine Arts Department of the Museum of New Mexico. Navajo, Apache and Pueblo Indians from New Mexico, Hopis and Pimas from Arizona, Comanches from Oklahoma and Utes from Colorado participated. The University of New Mexico in Albuquerque, Arizona State College in Flagstaff and several New Mexico high schools were represented by student groups.

Charles E. Minton, executive secretary of the New Mexico Association on Indian Affairs, presided.

Government regulations, foreign aid and feelings of inferiority, said to be imposed upon Indians by the dominant white groups of the nation, were criticized sharply by Wilfred Herrera of Cochiti, a New Mexico Pueblo.

"We need a minimum of regulation and a maximum of encouragement," said Mr. Herrera, a sophomore in pre-law at the University of New Mexico. "The United States spends millions helping foreign governments with their problems, while they fuss at making small appropriations for the Indian service," he said. "Indians have got to begin to realize that there are no superior races—only superior people in every race."

Dillon Platero, a Navajo studying government at the University of New Mexico, spoke of the Kiva Club on the campus. This club, which he heads, is composed of Indian and non-Indian students working for better educational opportunities for Indians. It operates a scholarship fund to help Pueblo Indians to get a college education. "Of eighteen Pueblos in the State of New Mexico," it was pointed out, "only Laguna, with recent oil and mineral discoveries on its land-grant, has a scholarship fund."

Apaches of four tribes in Arizona and New Mexico set apart a large share of their tribal revenues for college scholarships for their young people for the school year 1956-57. The Navajo Tribal Council, which represents the nation's largest tribe, has appropriated $100,000 in scholarships for colleges and vocational schools throughout the United States. In recent years the council has accumulated considerable wealth through uranium finds on its reservation.

BETTER HEALTH SERVICES FOR INDIANS ASKED

Daily Tribune Chicago, Ill. Wed. 2-6-57

'Appalling' Death Rate, Illness Cited

P 23

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, Feb. 5 — The department of health, education, and welfare this year will seek continued improvements in federal health services for American Indians, Secretary Folsom said recently.

"It is an appalling fact that a vast amount of illness and death among our Indian citizens today is due to causes which modern public health is competent to control," Folsom said.

"We are confronted by an accumulated need of very large proportions. In attacking the Indian health problem, we must reduce death rates and incidence of illness among Indians to a level which should approximate those of the rest of the American people. Moreover, we must work more closely than in the past with the states, local communities, and the Indians themselves."

Death Average Age 39

A recent survey by the public health service indicates that the average age at time of death for Indians is 39, compared with 62 for the general population. Out of every 1,000 live births, 65 Indian infants die in the first year of life, compared with 27 in the general population.

The Indian death rate from diarrheal diseases, which result from poor environmental sanitation, is 11 times higher than for the country as a whole. Indian death rates from tuberculosis are five times higher, from penumonia and influenza three times higher, and from accidents two and one-half times higher than for the general population.

Clean Water Vital

Folsom said that safe water supplies and better sanitary facilities are among the first requirements for raising the level of Indian health.

Last year, the administration proposed a federally aided coöperative five year program to establish and improve sanitary facilities among the Indians at a cost of 29 million dollars. This measure, which was not enacted by Congress last year, will be introduced again this year, the secretary said.

"The administration hopes to improve Indian hospitals and curative services, and to extend public health services designed to prevent disease," Folsom said.

Plan for Training

"Plans will be presented for the training of greater numbers of Indians as practical nurses, sanitarian aides, and dental assistants, and for the training of professional staffs in the special problems of Indian health."

Health services for about 370,000 Indians are made available by the public health service both thru its own facilities and those of nonfederal agencies under contract. In many reservation areas, state or local health services available for the Indians are either extremely limited or nonexistent, Folsom said.

Federal appropriations for Indian health activities for the 1957 fiscal year were 39 million dollars and for construction of Indian health facilities 8.8 million dollars.

Last Of The Alabamas

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. P 4-A

THE Original Alabamians—not indeed the first residents of the state, but the people who gave it its name—are finding the going tough out in Texas, whither they moved around 130 years ago.

The Dallas Morning News recently reported:

> Although they are called Alabamas and came from east of the Mississippi in modern times, the small Indian tribe living in Polk County is Texas' last chance to do right by the redskins.
> The appeal of one of their chiefs, Foulton Batisse, deserves helpful action by the present legislature. He points out in commendable fashion that these 300 men, women and children do not want charity. They only ask the state to help them help themselves.

The Dallas paper notes that what is today Texas' last Indian tribe was given land by the state of Texas and thereby saved from being wiped out, at the instance of Sam Houston, in 1854. The state has enlarged the tribal holdings and provided some help for schools and other activities, but more is needed. Federal aid extended during the depression has been withdrawn.

According to Director Peter A. Brannon of the Alabama Department of Archives and History, the Alabama remnant in Texas is one of the few racially pure, or nearly pure, bodies of Indians remaining in this country. The Alabamas, finding themselves crowded by the white men, migrated to Texas in the 1820s; they were not forcibly deported west, as some other Indians were.

Although they gave their name to this state and its principal river, the Alabamas do not loom as large in our history as some other tribes, the Creeks and Choctaws for example.

For one thing, Director Brannon says they were an influential rather than a powerful tribe. Their culture was superior to that of some other Alabama Indians and they left an imprint out of proportion to their numbers.

Then, history denied the tribe a part in the two most dramatic events in Alabama's Indian annals—the expedition of De Soto, and, centuries later, the war in which Andrew Jackson broke the power of the red man in this area.

WHEN De Soto and his Spaniards struggled through Alabama, winning a costly victory at Maubila (Oct. 18, 1540) the Alabamas had not reached this state, but were in process of migrating hither from the west. De Soto found them in what is now northwest Mississippi, not far from the site of Memphis.

By the time of the war of 1813-14, ended by Jackson's decisive victory at Horseshoe Bend (March 27, 1814) the Alabamas had become members of, and lost their individuality in, the Creek or Muscogee Confederacy. So the Creeks had the name and glory on the Indian side.

The Alabamas seem to have been at their peak around 250 years ago, when the French first came to Alabama. In Bienville's time the Alabamas raided far and wide.

THE French called the river that flows by Montgomery the Riviere des Alibamons, the River of the Alabamas. The area occupied by the tribe in what is now central Alabama came to be known as the Alabama country, and that was adopted as the name of the state. Econchate, the Indian village situated at what is now the foot of Commerce Street, was an Alabama town. They had others in Elmore, Autauga, Lowndes and Dallas Counties.

The present day Alabamas have been practicing adherents of the Christian religion for generations. Their earlier history showed a people of personality and prestige that survived in the name of this commonwealth, and will continue to do so when rivals that loomed larger at the time have been forgotten. Their present plight might well strike a sympathetic note from Texas — and also from the people of the state in which they dwelt for centuries.

Smoke Puffs Tell Descendants Of Creeks To File For Lands

Advertiser Tues. 3-12-57
Montgomery, Ala.
P. 10-A

By JO ANN FLIRT
Advertiser Staff Writer

BAY MINETTE, Ala., March 11—Creek Indians east of the Mississippi have been reading the smoke signals sent up by their council.

Operating under instructions in line with an Indian Claims Commission decision awarding them a judgment on some 9,000,000 acres of land, 2,762 descendants of the original Creek Nation have registered with the Creek Nation East office here, according to Chief Calvin McGhee.

The descendants of the Nation as it existed in 1814 have furnished documentary proof of their Creek Indian blood and have applied for membership in the group recognized in a 1952 Claims Court decision.

The Indian Claims Commission has held that the U. S. Government is liable for taking certain lands from the Creek Nation under the Treaty of Fort Jackson on Aug. 9, 1814. The Claims Commission ruled that all descendants of the Creek Nation as it then existed will share in any award made.

During the next few days the last exhibits will be filed by attorney LeNoir Thompson in his efforts to establish the value of the nine million acres for which the court has said the Indians will be paid.

During the long court battles contests akin to the civil war which partly led to the wrongful taking of the land by General Andrew Jackson have broken out.

At one time the Oklahoma Creeks, descendants of Indians forced to move to reservations beyound the Mississippi, claimed they were the only rightful claimants to payments for the land.

Still later the Yuchi Tribe, a group of the Oklahoma Creeks, claimed seven million acres of the land to their exclusive benefit. A U.S. Supreme Court decision within the last two weeks, however, has denied their claim.

The Supreme Court decision upheld the Court of Claims decision that the land taken by Gen. Jackson belonged to the Creek Nation as it existed in 1814 and that all descendants will share in any payment.

Still before the Indian Claims Commission is another claim for about 17 million acres of land in Mississippi and Alabama which the Indians allege was also wrongfully taken.

Most of the land in the nine million acre parcel is located in Georgia.

Minister, Grandson of Sioux Medicine Man, Describes Plight of His People

New York

A Point Four program to aid American Indians was proposed yesterday by the grandson of a Sioux medicine man.

P. 19-C

The Rev. Dr. Vine Deloria also recommended a cloak of humility for white men searching for a solution to the "Indian problem." The minister is assistant secretary in charge of Indian work in the Division of Domestic Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Preaching at the Church of the Epiphany, York Avenue and Seventy-fourth Street, Dr. Deloria ascribed the plight of American Indians to their long exile on reservations.

"There they were isolated from the rest of the world," he said, "kept ignorant of the advances in world thought, living a Stone Age existence as the world was approaching the atomic era."

Although the Indian was permitted to leave the reservation in 1924, when he received United States citizenship, Dr. Deloria asserted that the damage already had been done.

"Before the white man came," he said, "the Indian was like an eagle, flying all over this country. The white man cooped him into a cage—the reservation—and pulled out his Indian cultural feathers."

According to Dr. Deloria, the first white missionaries entered the Indian country as superiors. They scoffed at the Indian customs and equated Christianity with Americanism.

The Indians today, he said, need experts to show them modern ways of raising stock, cultivating land, all within the framework of Indian traditions. A desperate need, he went on, is more priests, nurses and social workers.

Dr. Deloria called upon the congregation to urge Congress to repeal or amend Public Law 280. This law authorizes any state to extend civil and criminal jurisdiction over Indian lands.

Many Indians believe they will not receive justice from state courts, Mr. Deloria said. They prefer Federal supervision over their affairs, he asserted.

LABOR SUPPLY FROM INDIAN SCHOOL GROWS

Daily Inland
Chicago, Ill.

P. 14

They Quit the Range for Mechanics

Arkansas City, Kas., Feb. 18 [Special]—A new and unlimited supply of labor, particularly in the fields of auto mechanics, building trades, and home service, is slowly creeping toward the Chicago industrial area from the Kansas-Oklahoma border.

It may require several years for the first influx to reach the Chicago environs, but already it has pushed northward past Wichita and Topeka, Kas., and appears destined to extend northeastward thru Kansas City, St. Louis and into the Great Lakes industrial regions.

38a

The new labor supply of trained and skilled workers is composed of Navajo Indian youths who are leaving their sun-baked reservations by the hundreds each year in line with their tribal council's policy lifting a ban against leaving the "homeland" to get a vocational education.

Attend Vocational School

Five hundred Navajo youngsters ranging in age from 12 to 16 come to the Chilocco Indian school here every year to start a five-year vocational program, and already more than 200 graduates have been assimilated into the economic life of this area as self-supporting.

In the role of "displaced persons" when they first reach here after a 24-hour bus ride from their earth and stick hogans in New Mexico and Arizona, the young Navajos are set down suddenly among the modern "wonders" of electric lights, piped-in water, clocks, polished shoes, telephones and bathroom showers.

Their problems and bewilderment are best seen thru the eyes of one of their interpreters, Bob Begay, 27, a World War II veteran with the navy, and a graduate of the Chilocco Indian school.

He Mothers Them

Begay, with four other adults who speak both Navajo and English, is mother, father, counselor, teacher, banker and all-around friend of the 500 Navajo youngsters who have never before been away from their reservations until they enter the government's Chilocco Indian school.

On top of that, they cannot speak English.

But five years later, they are making their own living, raising families, and looking for new opportunities, particularly in the industrial areas of the north.

Begay's trials and tribulations are many.

There's never a dull moment, with problems ranging from homesickness to the impatient vexation of a Navajo youngster suddenly exposed to modern machinery and his unfulfilled eagerness to manipulate the complex mechanism at once.

Similar to DPs

Chilocco Supt. W. Keith Kelley believes about the only difference between the Navajo youngsters' geting adjusted to an entire new way of life and those problems faced by displaced persons from Europe is the fact the Navajos don't have to worry about earning a living while in school.

Perhaps one of Begay's biggest jobs is to encourage the young Navajos to go back home in the summer between school terms.

"The problem has two sides," Begay admits. "The children, on the one hand, have sampled a new way of life they never dreamed of, and they generally don't want to go back during the summer to the reservation where there is nothing to do except herd sheep."

Deny License to Tavern Operator Convicted of Civil Rights Violation

Convicted of refusing to sell beer to a Negro patron failed to get a beer permit renewal Monday for a Des Moines tavern owner.

The application was made by James McCoy, who operates Mac's Whistle Stop tavern at 301 E. Fourth Street.

No city councilman would move for renewal Monday and the application was returned to the clerk's office.

McCoy was convicted Nov. 28, 1956, of violating Iowa's civil rights statute.

Owner of Whistle Stop Tavern, he was accused by Donald Turner, 2b, 922 Ninth street, of refusing to sell him beer the afternoon of Sept. 15.

Negro and fined $25 by the court.

Inconsistent

The resolution further stated that McCoy was granted a Class "B" beer permit by the City Council subsequent to his approbation by Turk; and that "said defense of McCoy in view of his conviction by the court is untenable and inconsistent with the position that should be maintained by a member of the Committee appointed to eliminate discrimination within our city."

It was further resolved: "that we of the Des Moines Branch of NAACP hold with specific disdain the statements with reference to McCoy's innocence and attitude toward Negroes—an atempt to discredit the court—and we maintain that those who defended him be censored and admonished for said statements and acts which are inconsistent with facts and court findings."

DR. MORDECAI JOHNSON

The Poor White People

Afro-Magazine Section

They too have in Congress only one man who represents them.

Baltimore, Md. 38 L.3

Part Four

From and address by Dr. Mordecai Johnson before the Baltimore Branch NAACP, April 14, 1857.

Sat. 6-1-57

Getting ourselves ready for the proper use of political power is not merely a matter of getting ourselves ready to do certain things for ourselves.

There are certain things other people want that they can't get done because they don't have proper help.

The poor white people who live in small towns in southern districts have never yet got a square deal in their schools. It's spent for the people in the big cities. They get the leavings.

The people who controlled the political system, way back in slave days, still control it.

I ASKED a great southerner named Roy Alexander, one time we were talking together in St. John's Cathedral in New York, I knew he loved the southern people and I knew he loved the colored and white people, he was a free man in his soul; he's dead now.

I said, "Mr. Alexander, I'm going to ask you a question: How many friends in the United States has" (and I stopped), and I said, "You think I'm going to ask you how many friends has the colored citizen, but I'm not.

"I'm going to ask you, how many friends in the United States Congress has the southern white laborer and farmer got? Answer me that question."

He said to me, "Johnson—I'm ashamed to answer that question. God be my helper, standing here in this holy cathedral, I cannot think of any.

"Oh, yes, "he said, "I can think of one."

* * *

NINETY YEARS after slavery, a southern white man, big enough to care for other southern white men, could count only one friend that the poor whites had in the Congress of the United States.

And he certainly was a friend of the white working man.

Some day there is going to rise in these Southern states, a great political party, led by people who are determined to set free and build up a great society for the people who work.

White people, black people, men and women who work, they will try to see that they have in the first place plenty of work to do.

They are going to see to it that the proper amount of industry comes into this section, and that the rivers are so handled that electricity and water will come to double and treble agricultural production.

THEY WILL see to it that the white working man ceases to believe the lie that he is poor because the colored citizen is here.

They are going to teach him that he is poor because his country is still being handled down here by men with a slave-owner mentality; who don't want to do anything but to get riches for themselves and a few of their friends.

These men have never laid out an economic working program for building up the lives of the working people whether black or white.

If you begin to tell him that it is possible to have a political party that will undertake to handle the economic life of the South in such a way as to build up an economy that will give plenty of work and good income to every working man, whether he is white or black, he is going to begin to listen to you.

Together, you and he are going to elect a new type of people to public office, and the south, for the first time in its history, is going to come to a place where it is no longer dominated by the race question.

Instead, it will be filled with discussions, and plans and songs, in the night time, white working people and black working people, planning together, choosing their leaders together to build up a great free society based upon sound economics, a decent and honorable public life.

AND YOU are going to be a part of it; but as long as you keep yourselves in a state of helplessness by staying away from the polls, the people who don't care anything for you, and don't care anything for him, can sit down with their pencils in a little room, 10 x 6, and in a few minutes look at the statistics and count you out and count him out because he is still too ignorant to know what they count.

He himself has not come to be much better than you are about his vote, for there is one thing about you and about the poor white southern working man that is just alike;

Neither one of you has yet realized that in a democracy, it is the ballot box that is the foundation of power!

You will never be free, until you sit down together and work out a program for your common freedom, and send to the City Councils, and send to the Legislature, and send to the Congress, the men who have told you—in advance I'll follow your program.

When you and he begin to do that, there is going to come a great change in this country.

Kentucky Minister Says Bible Has Race Bias Answer

Daily World Thurs. 8-22-57
Atlanta Ga. Pd

LOUISVILLE Ky. — (ANP) — Rev. T. R. Brown pastor of First Baptist Church Henderson Ky told nearly 1000 persons attending the three-day annual session of the General Assembly of Kentucky Baptists last week that the Bible has the answer to race prejudice.

"If men would put the Bible into practice there would be no problems among the races' Rev. Brown said.

He said that Jesus is "our best example in destroying race prejudice" and that selfishness and fear are the roots of prejudice and must be replaced by love.

"We should love one another as people of the world" he said. "The same thing that affects one of us will vrey shortly affect all of us."

Leader Places Blame For Flare-Ups On Both Racial Groups

LOUISVILLE Ky.—(ANP)— Police here last week apparently placed the blame for recent racial flare up in Butler State Park on Negroes, bringing an immediate statement from the NAACP.

Attorney James A. Crumlin, president of this state's NAACP stated that he thought it "odd" that only Negroes had been accused of breaking laws in the racial melee that started last Saturday when some 3,000 Negroes went to the park and fights between two Negroes and a horse riding operator broke out.

Daily Worker 8-28-57

The Negroes allegedly purchased rides on horses but later declined to take the rides and demanded a refund of their money. The operator of the concession refused to give back the money and arguments ensued, leading into a fight that spread .

Denial of Visa Laid to Racial Policy

South Africa Bars Yale Jazz Band

By Jo-ann Price

Herald Tribune

The leader of the Eli Chosen Six, a Yale University jazz band, said yesterday that the group has been denied visas to tour South Africa this month with the Rev. Alvin L. Kershaw, winner of $32,000 on a CBS quiz program in 1955, on the ground that it was slated to appear before interracial audiences there.

Richard Voigt, twenty-one, of 15 Ridge Circle, Manhasset, L. I., who plays the piano for the sextet, said that he and other members of the band had "given up" plans for the tour, March 16 through April 1, after a two-week fight to obtain visas.

"Very Disappointed"

"We definitely feel we were turned down because we were attempting to support an interracial movement in a legitimate way," Mr. Voigt said. The band was "very disappointed" about it, he added.

The Eli Chosen Six were to be accompanied by Mr. Kershaw, rector of All Saints' Protestant Episcopal Church, Peterboro, N. H., whose knowledge of jazz netted him $32,000 on the "$64,000 Question" in November, 1955. Mr. Kershaw was to explain the history of American jazz in its cultural and racial aspects in concert hall appearances booked by the Union of South African Artists, a musicians' union. His visa was also denied.

Concert at Amherst

Since Christmas, the group has been giving benefit appearances and seeking private contributions to finance the trip. Now, Mr. Voigt said, the money will go to the sponsoring group. The jazz band and Mr. Kershaw gave a concert last night at Amherst College, Amherst, Mass.

Danial of the visas was reported by The Associated Press from Johannesburg yesterday. The story quoted Prime Minister J. G. Strijdom as saying that the planned visit was not "such an innocent affair," and it "now appears the orchestra was specially booked to appear before mixed audiences."

The Prime Minister's statements were carried by "Die Vaderland," pro-Nationalist newspaper which supports him

YALE'S JAZZ LEADER—The Rev. Alvin L. Kershaw beating the kettle drums when he won $32,000 on the "$64,000 Question" TV show.

Met Anglican Cleril

Mr. Voigt said he became interested in the South Africa race question last summer when he met, in Britain, the Rev. Trevor Huddleston, former provincial of the Anglican Community of the Resurrection, Johannesburg, a foe of segregation who was recalled to England by his religious order two years ago.

Members of the Eli Chosen Six, besides Mr. Voight, its leader and organizer, are: Peter Williams, of New Canaan, Conn.; Robert Morgan, New Haven, Conn.; Lyman Drake, Glen Cove, Ill.; Roswell Rudd, Lakeville, Conn., and Lee Lorenz, Greenwich, Conn.

Ky. hotel drops racial barriers

Dr. Taylor reported that the reception was cordial.

Summons Labor Leader To Senate Sub-Committee

Call p. 20 Fri. 6-14-57 Kansas City, Mo.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—(ANP) — On a subpoena signed by James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, Searing O. Neal, long time labor leader and foe of segregation has been summoned to appear before the Senate Internal Security Sub-committee in Washington, D. C.

Neal said the subpoena served on him at his home here on Friday, May 31, did not indicate in any way why he was being called before the subcommittee, but that based on the committee's history, he assumes that the Eastland's committee intends to question his loyalty to the U. S. government.

Neal declared, "I have serious doubt as to whether I am bound to honor a subpoena signed by a man who sits in the United States Senate illegally, as a result of mob violence and terror against the 45 per cent Negro population of his state", and who is leading an open revolt in the South, against the Supreme Court and the Constitution of the United States. "Instead of destroying the Constitution my efforts have been toward strengthening American democracy and extending its fruits to all of the people."

In 1952, he became the first Negro vice-president of the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America. He also headed the Ohio-Kentucky district of that union with offices in Dayton, Ohio.

Neal is one of a group of Louisvillians who formed the Wade Defense committee to aide a Negro couple, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV, whose home was bombed after they moved into a segregated neighborhood in 1924.

He recently became the first Negro appointed to the Grand Lodge staff of the International Association of Machinists (AFL-CIO), which position he now holds. He is a member of the Urban League, the YMCA and St. Augustine Catholic church. He once served on the Executive Board of the Louisville branch of the NAACP of which he is a member.

Community Problems: Accommodations—

NEGROES LACK FULL USE OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

By Clarence L. Matthews

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. p. 3 June 7-16-57

Public accommodations in the Louisville and Jefferson County area for Negro citizens has lagged conspicuously behind gains made in other medias where there is inter-racial contact.

It is regretable that this situation should exist for it thwarts an otherwise progressive picture of race relations now reflected in the city. Progress in public accommodations would have to be made by individuals voluntarily for the want of a civil rights law in the state, but different from other southern states, there is no law that prohibits Negroes and whites from sharing public facilities.

Biased Signs

At the end of last year, biased signs still remained at the Greyhound Bus Terminal and the 10th Street Railway Terminal. The signs at the stations separate the dining areas by the placing of white and colored signs in and outside of the station.

With the exception of one, theaters are segregated with the owners not allowing mixed attendance on any basis. Negroes are restricted to two theaters in the city. If they wish to attend another, they must either journey to New Albany or Jeffersonville, Ind., or look for another media of entertainment.

Unpleasant Pinch

The unpleasant pinch of discrimination can be felt at any time if you happen to be a Negro. For example, perhaps you are a person who doesn't care to patronize white restaurants or places of entertainment, but let us say that you are shopping uptown and you are hungry and have not completed your shopping. You might be served at a lunch counter in a department or dime store; but where would you go for a full course meal in comfort? Would it be feasible to go all the way downtown for a meal and return to complete your shopping? I don't believe so.

Hotels in the downtown area have housed Negroes on a limited basis in the past. A significant development in hotel policy is typified in the recent statement of policy of the Henry Clay Hotel. In February, this hotel became the first and only one to accommodate a large Negro group, the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, which had access to all hotel facilities.

Dimmed Outlook

This bright outlook was suddenly dimmed when the hotel changed hands two months ago. Now the policy of the hotel is not to accommodate individual Negroes. They will, however, accept Negroes when they are a part of a white group.

On the credit side picture are many notable developments. One, perhaps the most outstanding, is the non-discrimination policy at the new ultra-modern State Fair and Exposition Center which includes admission without discrimination to all public affairs and facilities of the modern plant.

Governor Chandler declared a policy of non-discrimination on the Kentucky Turnpike and any public places along the super highway. Consequently, the new glass house restaurants bordering the highway serve everyone without bias.

Park Desegregation

City and State parks are completely desegregated which was a giant step in paving the way for better race relations. Before the integration measure, Negroes were confined to one city park and only one state park. All parks are now open and welcome people of all races. In the city, recreation employees are placed indiscriminately according to where they are best suited.

From the above it would seem that significant gains have been made in accommodations but much is left to be desired. With the progress of desegregation in schools, parks and housing, it is only natural that other relationship in dining rooms, hotels and theaters should follow for it is through this close association of the races that prejudices based on untruths will eventually disappear and therefore bring an end to unwarranted and unjust segregation.

Interracial Klassy Club Closes After Beverage License Refusal

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. p. 3

The Klassy Klub, located at 19th and Broadway, was closed last week because of a refusal of the Alcoholic Beverage Commission to renew a beer license to Raymond Crable, owner of the night spot.

Reasons given for the refusal by A. Mountjoy of the Commission were stated in a letter to the owner which read that between January, 1957, and June 15, 1957, the club had been disorderly, a nuisiance, and was operated in a manner to cause a constant problem. The letter of refusal also stated that the owner had not cooperated with the police.

The club, since the early part of the year, had operated a mixed staff of white and Negro help including white waitresses. The club had also been frequented by people of both races since Negroes had been given access to the popular club's facilities.

A well known attorney revealed that as soon as the Klassy Klub made its change over, it became known in circles that Crable would not be given his renewal on his license unless he got rid of the white waitresses that he was employing.

A. J. Bartholomew, head of the Alcoholic Beverage Commission during the proceedings, said the reason he recommended refusal of the license was because of general disorders, neighborhood reports and the presence of disreputable characters around the establishment. He revealed that most of this information was received from the police who are required to make a report to the commission of any disturbances around a licensed establishment.

When contacted, Raymond Crable said that he had never had any trouble from the police until the place was integrated and he started hiring mixed help. He added that he had only one incident which was when a teenager was served some months ago. Other than that there have been no disturbances inside or outside of the club.

The Klassy Klub has had one violation of selling to a minor. Many nearby clubs have had several similar charges but they continue to operate. They, however, are still segregated.

Kingfish Drive Inn Maintains Spot for Negroes Under Viaduct

Defender Thurs. 7-11-57

According to recent reports received in the Defender office from patrons and investigation of the matter, the Kingfish Drive Inn, River Road and 4th Street, has been practicing a peculiar kind of bias in parking.

The Kingfish has two sides for customers to park on. One, the left side, is large and lighted while the right is under a viaduct and darker. When driving up to park on the left side to be served, Negroes are requested to pull around to the right side in order to be served.

Mrs. Frances Cummings, 646 S. 23rd, related that she, her husband and brother-in-law from Chicago were refused service when they drove up to the Kingfish on the "wrong" side of the building.

"I had been told they wouldn't serve you on a tray," said Mrs. Cummings, "and had expected that. When we drove up," continued Mrs. Cummings, "we were told that we would have to move around under the viaduct on the other side of the building." Instead Mrs. Cummings and her party journeyed elsewhere to eat.

She also said that her husband had gone into the Kingfish before and carried food out without any trouble. Mrs. Cummings said that other persons had told of the parking situation at the drive in but she didn't believe it.

C. Burns, manager and part owner of the Kingfish, when advised of the reports, stated that he was sort of "pressured" into the action by public opinion. He said that it was not his doing, that he was not a crusader but neither was he one to stop progress. "I have to go where the public pushes us," he said.

He also explained that he has three "colored" persons working for him and has had no trouble in race relations in his nine years at the location. Burns added that he couldn't speak for the attitude of his 42 employees that might have exhibited bad courtesy to Negro patrons.

At last report, parking separation remained at the 4th Street eatery.

Fountain Ferry Park Continues To Refuse Negro Admittance

Defender Thurs. 7-23-57 P.1

Louisville Ky

Fountain Ferry Park, a private enterprise, and Louisville's only amusement park still refuses to admit Negroes. The owners, who also operate the Fourth Avenue Roller Rink at one time owned the Madison Square Rink at 9th and Madison before it was sold to Negroes. For several years they profited from Negro patronage at Madison Square and garnered a neat profit when they later sold the building.

Located adjacent to a public facility — Shawnee Park which is now in its second year of desegregation, Fountain Ferry management has held fast to its policy of exclusion of Negroes.

During the season, Fountain Ferry promotes special days to draw crowds. One such affair recently was Pepsi Cocala Day. An enterprising merchant assured some of his customers that they would be welcome. However, when Mesdames Jesse Kelly and Irma H. Watson and their children of Anchorage arrived at Fountain Ferry with their bottle caps, the gate man told them:

"You folks can't come in. We haven't started that yet — maybe in the future."

Pepsi Cola was sponsoring the day and allowing rides for one bottle top and a nickle.

According to the visitors, they were the only Negroes who attempted to get in the park and participate in the outing.

Father E. Deedom Alston, rector of Our Merciful Savior Church, recently querried the sales manager at the Louisville Bottling Company who reportedly claimed that "the park handles everything and they (Pepsi) did not spend a nickle." The manager said all his concern did was to let them use its name.

The owners of Fountain Ferry have been approached on numerous occasions about admitting Negroes. Not too long ago the Louisville Firemen cancelled its outing there because of segregation. Last year for the first time the Louisville Transit Company had an integrated picnic for its employees in Shawnee Park.

Fountain Ferry Park made the news earlier about its segregation policy when a city stenographer wrote a letter to the manager protesting having been asked to type out a list of city employees to receive passes to the park but having to omit all names of Negroes from the list.

Situations of this kind point up the need for a city civil rights ordinance to prevent such insults.

'Negroes Advanced Faster In Past 15 Years Than in Any Previous Time:' LIFE

By Bystander Thurs. 3-14-57
Des Moines Iowa P. 6

New York — In a round-up of the current discrimination practices against Negroes, outside the South, LIFE Magazine in its issue of March 11, says that "while Negroes have advanced faster in the North in the past 15 years than in any previous time" and their political equality is now assured, they still encounter many walls of exclusion.

This discrimination in the North, LIFE says, "results from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox and hypocrisy."

The magazine finds "an enormous difference" between legal segregation in the South and practices in the North, where discrimination is a matter of social pressures. In the South resistance to desegregation is open and blatant. In the North, it is covert. "In most of the South, LIFE says, "segregation is still a way of life to be defended. In more and more of the North, discrimination is coming to be recognized a wrong to be corrected."

That Uneasy Feeling

In the North, 15 states and 36 cities now have laws which forbid discrimination against Negroes. Negroes can now frequent most leading northern hotels, restaurants and theaters, "although they still feel a little uneasy about it because pretexts are found to turn them away," LIFE says.

"Though the prejudice of the South is echoed in the North, it is less fierce in the North and hence more susceptible to change. Politically and legally the Negro has established his equality in the North. His hope for the future is based on the fact that this concept of equality is slowly gaining more and more acceptance in social practice."

More Crowded

According to LIFE, Negroes believe that housing is the key to their achieving more equality of opportunity in the North. Northern acceptance of integration in everything from schools to beaches often still means segregation in effect because Negroes have to take what housing is available in the limited areas where they may live.

The Negro ghettos in northern cities are more crowded today than ever, and even so Negroes have to pay up to half their income for housing, far more than the white average. Northern resistance to any genuine integration of private housing seems as firm as southern resistance to integration of schools.

LIFE says that to keep Negro and white sections separated from one another with the frequency which occurs throughout the North "requires steady tacit cooperation among real estate men, builders, bankers, home sellers and home buyers." These groups represent a large part of the whole northern community, and to a large degree reflect its attitude.

Negro Frustration

LIFE's survey of northern discrimination practices against Negroes also reveals:

Thurs. 3-14-57

In many places in the north, Negro doctors and patients are denied access to medical facilities. Using Chicago as an example, LIFE says that there are no Negro surgeons at any of that city's 77 private hospitals except the Provident, a Negro hospital. Only half a dozen of these private hospitals accept Negro patients in appreciable numbers, even though 22 per cent of Chicago's population is Negro and the city has an ordinance forbidding hospital discrimination.

Des Moines, Iowa

While qualified Negro engineers find a readier acceptance in the North than any other professional group, in spite of their high incomes and educational advantages, they run into the same problems on buying housing as plague other Negroes.

Negro real estate men find few attractive houses anywhere for their clients, and seek to open new areas for Negroes. But there are many kinds of obstacles placed in their way. Across the country, while a few branches of the National Association of Real Estate Boards (whose members are the only ones permitted to call themselves "realtors") allow membership to Negroes, most in the North are Jim Crow.

Went Abroad P. 6

No top American symphony orchestra employs any Negro intrumentalist—although Negroes sing at the Metropolitan Opera and have often appeared as vocal soloists with orchestras. Negro Conductor Dean Dixon won many rave reviews a decade ago for his guest appearances with the New York, Philadelphia and Boston symphonies. Unable to find a regular post in the U. S., Dixon has had to conduct abroad since 1949, and is now permanent conductor of the Gothenburg Symphony in Sweden.

Day laborers run into problems too. In New York, though some 5,000 of the city's dock workers are Negroes, they have not a single member of the waterfront's more favored occupations such as checkers, coopers, carpenters, weighers and watchmen. After five years of argument in Cleveland a qualified Negro electrician has yet to receive his union card. Some large unions such as the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the National Postal Transport Association, still have bars up against Negroes.

MAGAZINE SURVEYS LIFE IN NORTH

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Walls Of Exclusion Plague Negroes

Thurs. 3-7-54 P. 12

NEW YORK, March 6 (AP)—Life magazine said today that while Negroes have made far greater social progress in the North than in the South, they are still plagued by countless forms of discrimination in the North.

The magazine published results of a survey of northern Negro life in an article titled "The Negro and The North." It was a follow-up to a survey of Southern segregation published last September.

"The North has done far more for Negro dignity than the South," said the magazine. "In the past 15 years, Negroes have advanced faster there than in any previous time and their political equality is now assured.

"Thousands of northern Negroes hold excellent jobs, some with white employes under them. Hundreds of thousands of northern Negroes have social contacts with their white friends.

"In general they fare better and earn more than in the South. This is why Negroes have roughly quadrupled since 1920 while the number in the South has risen a mere 30 per cent.

"Yet northern Negroes keep encountering walls of exclusion which result from combinations of subterfuge, subtlety, paradox and hypocrisy.

"Some Negroes are jammed into ghettos more rigid and more squalid than many of those in the South. The northern white violence against Negroes at Trumbull Park in Chicago since 1953 has been as bad as any Southern white violence in Montgomery, Ala.—and has drawn a peaceable Negro response modeled on Montgomery."

Still, the magazine said, "An enormous difference exists between legal segregation in the South and practices in the North, where discrimination is a matter of social pressures."

Life described the difference in this way:

"In the South resistance to desegregation is open and blatant. In the North, it is covert. In most of the South, segregation is still a way of life to be defended. In more and more of the North, discrimination is coming to be recognized as a wrong to be corrected."

Some of the problems encountered by Negroes in the North at present were listed as:

"Negro real estate men find few attractive houses anywhere for their clients, and seek to open new areas for Negroes. They face many obstacles.

"From artists to day laborers, Negroes in the North find themselves excluded from work which white men may do . . . No top American symphony orchestra employs any Negro instrumentalist—although Negroes sing at the Metropolitan Opera.

"There are no Negro surgeons at any of Chicago's 77 private hospitals except Provident. Only a half dozen of these 77 private hospitals accept Negro patients in appreciable numbers. In many places in the North, Negro doctors and patients are likely to get a similar short shrift.

"Dozens of Midwestern towns refuse to let Negroes work as clerks. "Some large unions (E. G. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the National Postal Transport Assn.) still have bars up against Negroes.

On the other hand, the magazines listed these points of advancement for northern Negroes:

"Today qualified Negro engineers find a readier acceptance in the North than any other professional group. The whole 1956 and 1957 classes of engineers at Howard, a Negro University, had fine job offers long before graduation."

Segregation Probers Hear 'Authority on Influences'

New Orleans, La. Times-Picayune 3-7-57

By JAY HALL
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, La., March 6—A legislative segregation committee heard its first witness Wednesday on "influences bringing about a sudden upsurge of disturbances between the races."

The committee chairman, Sen. W. M. Rainach of Homer, said if all goes well there may be regional and possibly national repercussions from the hearing.

Rainach heads a committee of 10 legislators known as "The Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee." Though not restricted to racial matters, it has turned its hand almost exclusively to efforts to preserve segregation.

Rainach would not divulge the identity of Wednesday's witness, whom he termed a "top authority on the basic policy involved."

He said, however, that this "star witness" will probably be heard in open session all day Thursday.

The committee plans daily hearings, starting at 10 a. m. Thursday, and its chairman said he anticipates that it will take at least three and a half days and probably not more than four days to wind up its business.

He said "seven or more witnesses—some from out of the state," are scheduled to testify.

Rainach would not divulge the names of witnesses, say whether any were Negro, whether there would be any women witnesses, or whether the Communist issue as a "disturbing influence" in Louisiana race relations would be considered.

He explained his reluctance to be specific about some phases of the inquiry with the statement that:

"We are pioneering in an explosive new field. We think the developments should stand or fall entirely on their own weight. We make no advance predictions and will not be guilty of prejudging."

Asked what interest other states may have shown in his hearing, Rainach said, "I know of three other states that are seriously interested." These were identified as Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi.

Will his probe extend itself eventually into a federal inquiry on the same lines? Rainach said:

"This will be the beginning. I am sure several states will come in" if his own probe brings the results he hopes for "and eventually the federal government will have to come in" if the momentum reaches hoped-for proportions.

The same influences disturbed Louisiana, Rainach said as exist in other states. He added that "Louisiana has taken a rather firm stand, with action based on custom, and for that reason there has been less trouble here than in some states.

"I think the causes of our trouble here largely originated outside our borders."

Testimony of the surprise witness Wednesday was termed "highly interesting." Wednesday's closed session had been touted as a meeting to acquaint the full committee with the purpose of the investigation. There had been no prior disclosure the testimony would be taken.

Louisiana Loses Another Round On Segregation

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Feb. 6, 1957

The South lost another round in the fight to preserve segregated schools yesterday as the United States Supreme Court refused to review a lower court decision invalidating Louisiana's pupil assignment law.

Most Southern States, including Virginia, have adopted pupil assignment legislation to cope with the Supreme Court desegregation decision. These laws generally provide for assignment of students to schools without any mention of race, but the purpose is to prevent an overnight upheaval in the South's traditionally segregated school system.

The decision which the Supreme Court yesterday refused to review was given by the United States Circuit Court in New Orleans. It was appealed by the Orleans Parish School Board.

No Comment Made

The Supreme Court made no comment in announcing its refusal to hear the case. The Circuit Court had said the placement law was in direct conflict with the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Under the Louisiana law the parish superintendent was given authority to make all student assignments. The Circuit Court said the law provided no standards, however for the superintendent to follow other than separation of races.

Virginia's placement law, which currently is under legal attack, places assignment power in the hands of a three-member State board and specifies numerous reasons—excluding race—for determining where students shall go to school.

Survive Legal Tests

Federal Judge Walter Hoffman has held Virginia's law unconstitutional, principally because of other legislation that provides for the automatic withholding of State funds from integrated school systems, and the closing of any schools where integration occurs. An appeal from his decision currently is pending before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Placement laws of two other states—North and South Carolina—have survived legal tests all the way to the Supreme Court. In both States, the assignment power is vested in local school boards.

According to the Associated Press, Gov. Stanley of Virginia and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., both declined comment on the Louisiana decision. They said they were not familiar with the Louisiana law and the issues involved in that case.

Resign When Grand Jury Fails To Act

White supremacy leaders like Sen. Willie Rainach, Leander Perez, Dr. Emmett Irwin and the rest of their cohorts, who are forever on the soapbox deriding Negroes in their fruitless bid to maintain segregation in Louisiana were made to look like fools last week when two white men as is too often the case could not keep their hands off of a Negro woman and attacked her.

In typical Hitlerite fashion, two white Baton Rouge (Louisiana) police officers at gunpoint, allegedly assaulted and raped a Negro woman on the morning of May 18, 1957.

The alleged sordid and shameful assault of the woman, is merely the latest evidence that the discredited, professional race haters should turn around on the soapbox and address their "barbaric brothers".

The victim of the alleged criminal assault, a married mother of two children, told her early morning terrorism story to a team of News Leader news reporters last week.

Officers involved in the alleged criminal assault were Redic B. Sibley and Arden J. Simmoneaux.

According to a story bylined by Bennie Thomas and Leslie Barnum, it was revealed the woman being driven from her work at a local tavern about 2:05 a.m. (May 18) by a patron, who had stopped at the tavern to drink a beer, was halted and questioned by officers Sibey and Simmoneaux.

Later the driver threatened with the signature of the victim revealed that the woman was then taken to a lonely, dark road behind the Melrose School, where she was allegedly attacked by the two officers. She stated that she could smell alcohol on both of the officers.

After attacking her, she said, the officers brought her back to the vicinity of her home and told her not to tell anyone. They told her if her husband asked, tell him they took her to jail for not having an identification card.

The two police officers were temporarily suspended from the force pending an investigation by the grand jury. The grand jury after spending a number of days investigating the case and finally pretermitted the case—in effect passing over the case without a verdict.

However, Dist. Atty. J. St. Claire Favrot said the case could be reopened when new evidence is presented.

Shortly after the grand jury passed over the case, Sibey and Simmoneaux resigned from the city police force.

Later that same day, Police Chief Shirley S. Arrighi reinstated the men and immediately received their back pay for the period they were suspended.

Arrighi said the basis for reinstating and paying them was bases on an earlier court decision that was similar.

That my dear readers, is terrorism and justice, Southern style.

Gravel Hits Back At 'Wild Racists'

Weekly, New Orleans, La. Feb. 11-57

Democratic National Committeeman of Louisiana Camille F. Gravel, Jr., of Alexandria, this week manfully defended his position on civil rights and left no doubt that he will not give in to demands to resign his position.

Answering a barrage of criticism on his seemingly liberal position and support of civil rights which were accompanied by howls to resign, Gravel said "I am not disturbed by the wild and whirling words of racists who seek to promote controversy." Although five Democratic state central committee members have requested him to resign, three defended his position.

His attackers brought charges that last February at San Francisco meeting of the Democratic national advisory council Gravel voted for and supported a resolution seeking passage of the "federal force bill" which has been "misnamed the civil rights legislation of 1957."

It was further charged that last May 8 at a meeting in New Orleans of the American Civil Liberties Union Louisiana's Number One Democrat reaffirmed his earlier position supporting the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, on segregation, which his accusers declared was "contrary to the policy of the State of Louisiana and the separation of the races."

The following statement was issued by Mr. Gravel in Alexandria on his return from a law convention in New York:

"I have just returned to Louisiana to find that vicious attacks have been made in a planned effort to discredit me as Democratic national committeeman for Louisiana.

Sat. 2-13-57

Classes of Charges

The charges fall into two classes. First, I am critized for supporting the Democratic party's platform and, secondly, I am specially condemned for having said that I approved the purpose behind the civil rights bill now awaiting action in the Senate.

"Since the presidential election of 1952, I have publicly and consistently declared that I would individually and officially support the Democratic party, its candidates, and its platform commitments.

"If and when I find that I cannot do so, I will have the courage and honesty to withdraw from the party.

"Any lawyer can readily see that the chief purpose of the civil rights bill presently pending in the Senate is to provide, subject to reasonable, uniform restrictions provided by the states, that all Americans are guaranteed the right to vote.

"In that regard, I think it is a good bill. It seeks to prevent the un-Christian, un-American and undemocratic type of action recently taken in Louisiana whereby thousands of voters were disenfranchised solely on account of their race.

"As I publicly stated in New Orleans several months ago, there are some phases of the bill with which I do not fully agree. Perhaps the failure to provide for trial by jury is the chief defect.

Better Than None

"I would prefer, however, to see the enactment of a statute without the jury trial provision which would protect the right of every citizen to vote, than to have no protective law at all.

"My official acts as Democratic national committeeman for Louisiana have been taken deliberately, intentionally, and conscientiously with the firm belief that I was doing the right thing.

"I have always conceded the right of others to have views contrary to mine.

"I am not disturbed or dismayed by the 'wild and whirling words' of racists who seek to promote controversy. I shall never be subject to thought control by extremists on either side of the unfortunate race problem with which we are confronted.

"I have firm hope that moderate, enlightened, realistic Louisianians will lay aside bias and prejudice in a sincere effort to resolve fiery issues without rancor and without hate."

Gravel's reference to disenfranchisement in Louisiana because of race looked back to a voter purge backed by the citizens councils of the state last year which resulted in eliminating approximately 10,000 Negro registrants.

Jim Crow Graves For 'Audrey' Dead

LAKE CHARLES, La. — One day last week they buried the last of the broken and battered remains of 66 victims of Hurricane "Audrey" in long trench-like common graves.

But neither the tragedy that struck here nor the grief and bitter sorrow it brought was enought to erase worship of a big idol here known as Jim Crow.

The 66 bodies were buried at the Combra Negro cemetery and across town at the six-month old new white cemetery. But the unpainted pinewood coffins were the same at each place.

Forty seven of the victims were buried in the Negro cemetery; 19 in the white. All bodies were unidentified.

Monday a gaping trench 150 feet long and 10 feet deep, gouged out by bulldozers and huge mechanical shovels, awaited services at the Negro cemetery.

A similar hole was prepared at Highland Memorial Gardens, the white cemetery to receive 19 bodies.

But the common grave at the Negro cemetery couldn't accommodate all the Negro dead on Monday. Another big grave had to be hurriedly dug to complete the Negro burials.

Most of the victims buried at the white cemetery were babies and small children. All were lowered into a common grave.

"Identification" cards on the coffins contained such pathetically meager pieces of information such as estimated age, sex, color of hair and eyes, and any scars the victims may have had before the fatal gashes were inflicted by the hurricane.

Dr. Harry S. Snatic, Calcasieu Parish (county) coroner, who arranged for the burials, said duplicate cards would be kept on file in his office.

"But I doubt if we'll ever know who they were," he said.

He added:

"The hurricane did something really terrible to them. There was hardly enough to bury."

A long line of flat-laid trucks motored out to the Negro graveyard with the coffins from the funeral homes. The coffins were so tightly packed on the trucks that one onlooker choked up and said to his companion:

"All they've got left is standing room, but the people can't stand."

After the trucks pulled up their grim cargoes three Protestant ministers and a Catholic priest said a few comforting words to the more than 500 persons who attended the burial services.

All four advised the living not to question why the people died. One of the Protestant ministers told the gathering:

"This is all Gods will. It is not for us to question but to bear our suffering bravely."

After the services, a huge bright yellow mobile crane lifted the coffins from the trucks and lowered them gently into the huge grave.

The stench from the coffins was overpowering and many left hurriedly. The entire atmosphere was crowded with death. A white Red Cross worker at the Negro cemetery was forced to wear a surgical mask soaked in ammonia to alleviate the terrible odor.

Pro-segregation Negroes to Meet

(Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

BATON ROUGE, Aug. 2—A national gathering of Negroes who profess belief that "the devil is the author of integration" is scheduled Aug. 6-11 in Dutchtown, La.

Principal figure in the convention is Archbishop C. C. Addison of the African Universal Church and Commercial League Corporation. Now a New Yorker, he is a native of Colquitt, Ga. He has drawn attention in recent years across the nation as a Negro leader actively opposed to integration.

The Dutchtown convention is being staged by the African Stock Exchange Association Development Corporation, United Council of Organizations. Elder G. B. Brown of Baton Rouge will be host for the national meeting.

There was no indication here Friday as to how many will attend. Spokesmen said, however, that delegations "from Texas, New York and Mississippi" have indicated they will be present.

A leaflet publicizing the meeting was headlined, "Northern Segregationist(s) Hold National Convention South." The leaflet promised speakers would give Biblical proof that "the devil is the author of integration. God is the author of segregation."

The leaflet said, "We are calling for 100,000 members by 1959."

Presley 'Hater' Plants A Bomb At Elvis' Movie

ALEXANDRIA, La., July 26. —(AP)—Police Friday sought an Elvis Presley hating teenager who planted a bomb-like device in a theater to keep movie fans from seeing Elvis on the screen.

A demolition expert, Sgt. A. L. Solomon of nearby England Air Force Base, examined the two-by-five inch device and said it contained nothing more than firecracker powder.

Although it was a dud, Juvenile Officer Leo Michiels said it accomplished its purpose.

Officers found the device Thursday behind the movie screen after a search closed the theater and a line of teenage fans was turned away. Presley was being featured in "Loving You."

The search began when barber Tony Montalbano received a telephone call at his shop next door to the theater. A boy's voice told him:

"You'd better get the hell out of there because I'm going to blow the place up at 2 p.m."

Montalbano told officers the voice told him Presley caused a rift between him and his girl and he was getting even.

'Bias' Shifts Tulane Game To W. Point

The Army-Tulane football game on Nov. 16 has been shifted from Tulane Stadium in New Orleans to the United States Military Academy Stadium at West Point, N. Y., because of Louisiana segregation laws, it was announced yesterday.

Col. Joel Stephens, public information officer at the Military Academy, said "To my knowledge this is the first time Army has ever changed the site of an athletic contest for this reason."

Since there are no Negro players on either team, the segregation law would have applied only to the seating arrangements. Army has one Negro in its senior class.

Originally Army had hoped for sufficient funds to take its senior class and band to New Orleans, but after it was disclosed that the Tulane Stadium would be segregated the Army Athletic Association found it did not have the funds to transport the senior class and band.

The change is likely to cost both institutions a substantial sum since the Tulane Stadium has a capacity of 80,985 while Army's Michie Stadium can accommodate 27,000 persons.

Disclosure of the transfer of the game came first in a telegram from Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker to Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D., La. It was amplified a short time later in an announcement issued simultaneously at New Orleans and West Point on behalf of Lt. Gen. Garrison H. Davidson, Superintendent of the Military Academy, and Dr. Fred Cole, acting president of Tulane University.

'ISIANA PROGRAM 'KOPS NEGRO SINGER

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 11 (AP) —Because of a 1956 state law banning interracial activities, plans have been canceled to have a 12-year old Negro girl sing with the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra.

Chosen in state-wide auditions, Barbara Ann Remo was to take part in the Louisiana Youth Concerts on Jan. 23.

She is the daughter of Mr and Mrs. Andes Remo of Baton Rouge. Her father is a native of Manila and formerly played with a Navy band there.

A letter to the girl from Dr. J. C. Morris, president of the Louisiana Youth Concerts, was made public today. It said:

"I regret to inform you that we will not be able to do as we had planned and have you take part with us. This decision has been made solely because we have been advised by legal counsel that recent laws passed by the State of Louisiana prohibit this. We regret this necessity of changing our programs in which you have a part."

The 1956 law bans interracial athletics and all racial mixing in public events.

The Jan. 23 concert is to be broadcast over a state-wide network from Booker T. Washington High School here.

The girl received a $50 prize.

In the past Negro music students have taken part in the concerts with the orchestra.

Given $50 To 'Soothe' Hurt Feelings

Baton Rouge, La.--Gladness turned to sadness last Monday, when little Barbara Ann Remo, 12-year-old golden voice soprano, originally scheduled to sing with the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra in New Orleans was regretfully informed by Orchestra officials that she would not be permitted to perform in January at Booker T. Washington High School on a statewide network because of the Louisiana law passed in 1956 that bans interracial activities.

Thus Barbara, seventh grade pupil at McKinley Junior-Senior High School, became another person that has been denied an opportunity to display God given talent since master "race baiter", Senator W. M. Rainach and his race hating cohorts engineered the passage of legislation that prohibits interracial athletics an social events.

Similar notice of the cancellation of her scheduled performance was also received by Elenora Merrick, a senior at Xavier Preperatory. Elenora was slated to appear with the orchestra in a December concert. She, too, was saddened with the news of the cancellation of her opportunity.

Earlier, Barbara had merited the chance to sing with the Orchestra by winning in the Louisiana Youth Concerts held in New Orleans with her rendition of Ah So Pure." She was overjoyed with the thought of performing with the Orchestra. Then, the sad, disappointing news came.

With tear dimmed eyes, Barbara read the following letter from J. C. Morris, President of Louisiana Youth Concerts:

"I regret to inform you that we will not be able to do as we had planned and have you take part with us. This decision was made solely because we have been advised by legal counsel that recently laws passed by the State of Louisiana prohibits this. We regret the necessity of changing our programs, in which you have a part."

The letter continued: "We are disappointed that we are not able to go through with our program as planned and know that you too will be disappointed. We assure you that this change would not have been made had it not been for conditions beyond our control. Since we are unable to have you take part as planned, we would like to award to each of the successful colored contestants a prize of $50.00 which we hop you will use to further your musical studies."

A prominent educator, who asked that his name be withheld, told the WEEKLY he favored a plan whereby parents would have their children stay away from the New Orleans Symphony Concert series in protest of the orchestra's refusal to take a firmer stand in fighting the unfair legislation. He pointed out that it is generally known that the laws that forbid appearances of Negroes and whites on the same program would fall if they were challenged. He feels that they should be challenged by the Symphony orchestra.

He also suggested that money be raised to present the children, so they in turn could return the money given them by the orchestra as compensation for their denial of performance.

The treatment Miss Remo has received is typical of the kind of treatment Negroes are supposed to be "satisfied with" in this professed land of freedom, democracy and opportunity. Such incidents do not "stir up unrest, tension and ill feelings" according to Willie "The Master Baiter" Rainach. Rainach insists that all the unrest is stirred up by organizations like the N-AACP. This would indicate that a man so posessed with hatred as Rainach is not able to think logically, for it is now quite apparent that the "race hate" laws he has sponsored is widening the gap between white and Negro citizens in this state.

Louisiana's Advance Marked

Chicago Tribune Reporter Notes Progress

(Editor's Note: Joseph Ator, Chicago Tribune reporter, recently made a swing through the Deep South. His report on Louisiana is printed below to give Louisianians opportunity to see themselves as others see them.)

By JOSEPH ATOR
(Chicago Tribune Press Service)

If you want to see the great river, you walk east in Canal st., although any map will assure you that New Orleans is on the east bank of the Mississippi. After climbing the steepest incline in town you come to the Father of Waters and find it flowing north.

This discovery has nothing to do with the Ramos fizz, the Absinthe frappe, or any of the other subtly treacherous concoctions with which New Orleans greets the unwary. It can be verified by any select committee of teetotalers. It might serve as a warning, however, that nothing is ever quite as it seems in this cosmopolitan city.

If you will ignore the compass, and just follow the river upstream, you will come upon a startling and little publicized phase of the current American miracle of industrial growth. From New Orleans to Baton Rouge, where a bridge stops the larger ocean-going ships, the Mississippi is becoming one long, twisted, deep sea harbor serving a vast industrial complex, most of it developed since World War II.

Industries Attracted

A few of the plants are older. The Esso refinery at Baton Rouge was opened 48 years ago, but recent additions, mile upon mile of tanks and fantastic piping, have made it the largest in the country. Petroleum, natural gas, sulphur, salt and forest products are some of the raw materials that combine with superb transportation to stimulate this growth. There is a big aluminum plant. Most of its bauxite comes by sea, and cheap gas makes possible cheap steam generated electric power which most aluminum smelters seek at hydro-electric plants.

The state has attracted these industries with offers of tax exemption. New plans, if competing industries approve, as they invariably have, can be relieved of certain state taxes for five to 10 years. From 1957 to 1956 these exemptions covered $1,764,249,000 in new industrial installations. Exemptions so far this year totaled another $130 million. In the chemical field alone the state estimates investments at $1.7 billion.

Another vexing tax exemption is that granted a generation ago on homesteads. Everyone admits it's silly but it is politically impossible to get rid of it. The exemption is only $2000, but a Chicagoan, recently transferred to New Orleans, discovered that every one of his neighbors, except the handful who had purchased their homes recently, had a most comfortable residence assessed at exactly $2000.

School Funds Increased

So far Louisiana has skimmed along, principally by taxation on extraction of its subsoil wealth and its timber; which in the current budget yields $177 million, as against $128.7 million in sales and excise taxes and $48 million in property and income taxes. But the current budget dipped into surpluses, which are about exhausted, to achieve a balance, and a hassle between Gov. Earl Long and the Legislature resulted in failure to appropriate enough money to meet the minimum salary scale for teachers that was placed in the statutes.

Louisiana citizens decided last year that they should do something about teachers' salaries and the Legislature increased appropriations to the common schools substantially (about 27 per cent within two successive budgets) to establish a state guaranteed schedule of minimum pay started in 1948. On the book, New Orleans' schedule is about 10 per cent below Chicago's, ranging from $3600 for a college graduate with no teaching experience to $6700 for a teacher possessing a master's degree and 15 years experience. But because of the state budget deficiency, these salaries are cut 7½ per cent this year.

In salaries actually paid last year, however, a study by the Public Affairs Council of Louisiana, a privately financed civic organization, showed that Louisiana ranked 16th in the nation, with an average of $4477 a teacher. No other Southern state ranked so high. Teachers in the northern parishes (counties), which are largely Protestant and Anglo-Saxon, drew an average of $152 a year more than those in the southern, predominantly French and Roman Catholic parishes.

Discrepancy Explained

The difference arose from a high proportion of college trained teachers in the north. The same factor explained a lower average, $4228 as against $4410, for Negro teachers than for white teachers. But in 10 parishes the Negro teachers had a higher proportion of degrees than white teachers, and drew higher salaries.

New Orleans Negroes were 31.8 per cent of the population in the 1950 census, but there are 43,130 Negroes enrolled in the public schools and only 39,634 white pupils. The discrepancy in enrollment arises from the heavier white enrollment in parochial schools in a heavily Roman Catholic city. The parochial enrollment is only 12 per cent colored.

By a deliberate legislative provision, New Orleans public schools get credit for parochial enrollment as well in the distribution of state funds that pay the bulk of teachers' salaries. The funds are distributed primarily on the basis of the number of educable children in a parish, whether they attend public or other schools.

School enrollment indicates that the Negro population of the city is increasing. There was a 3918 increase in public school enrollment this fall, of which 2762 were Negroes. Of school building projects now in progress in the city, both additions and new buildings, 14 are intended for Negro pupils and eight for whites.

Archbishop Acts

Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel announced a year ago last spring that New Orleans parochial schools, with some 50,000 pupils, would be desegregated because segregation is "morally wrong and sinful." This raised a storm in his flock, some members of which took the unorthodox step of forming an organization to appeal the order to Rome.

In September, 1956, it was announced that action was postponed. This fall the archbishop announced that desegregation would be postponed again, on the ground that "we find it necessary to reconcile these difficulties and make other preparations."

Archbishop Rummel vindicated his authority in another incident, however, when he assigned a Negro priest to a mission at Jesuit Bend, in Plaquemines parish. This is the political stronghold of Leander Perez, the bitterest segregationist in Louisiana, and the parishioners barred the church to their new priest. The archbishop promptly closed the mission, and the community has been without the solaces of religion since.

Louisiana has been the scene of a number of suits by the National Association for Advancement of Colored People to win admittance of Negro students to previously all-white schools. Louisiana State university has dropped the bars to its graduate schools, on the old legal theory that "separate but equal" facilities were not available.

Negroes Law Graduates

The first successful suit was over admission to the LSU law school. Since 1950 nine Negroes have been admitted there. Four took non-degree courses, three were dropped or withdrew, and two of the nine were graduated and admitted to the Louisiana Bar. Also in 1950 Southern university, whose 7000 students make it the largest Negro institution of higher education in the country, opened it own law school, at which enrollment since has ranged from nine to 16 students. Southern opened engineering courses and a graduate school of education this year.

New Orleans has been waging a stubborn legal fight against desegregation of its public schools for more than two years, and to date a losing one. In the course of the litigation extensive evidence was offered by the board of education that Negro pupils consistently lag behind white pupils in learning ability and accomplishments; that Negro teachers, though paid on the same scale, do not rate as high in tests as do white teachers, and that veneral disease and illegitimacy have far higher rates among Negroes, including those of school age, than among whites. The United States court of appeals paid no heed to these affidavits.

Arthur J. Chapital, the New Orleans chairman of the NAACP has 33 years tenure as a mail clerk, a position that protects him against the economic reprisals that have been visited on some Negroes active in the organization. The local organization was forced to disband in February under the provisions of a law dealing with secret membership lists, originally passed against the Ku Klux Klan. It had 5000 members at the time. It has been re-organized and its membership, now 800, is expanding.

'Time to Educate People'

Mr. Chapital is a moderate man, and has been known to term members of his race who want to push things faster "agitators." He quashed a scheme to start a bus desegregation case by having Negroes take the front seats reserved for whites, telling his followers: "You wouldn't get a federal case out of it. You would be tried on local charges of boisterous conduct or disturbing the peace."

He also takes a philosophical view of the legal delays in the school desegregation cases, of which he said: "They have just appealed and writted us to death. But these delaying tactics benefit us as much as they do the other side. They give us more time to educate our people to the responsibilities and duties of first class citizenship, as well as its rights."

Race relations in New Orleans have, by the account of its white citizens, been good, but they are not improving. Stores, including the downtown department stores, have always served Negro customers. The residential pattern, particularly in the poorer districts, has always been mixed, sometimes to the extent that a white family will occupy one side of a duplex dwelling and Negroes the other. Public facilities, of course, are strictly segregated.

But Little Rock was immediately reflected in behavior patterns in New Orleans, as it was throughout the South. A few days after the paratroopers moved into Arkansas, police began to have trouble making arrests in Negro districts. In one incident a crowd beat a white policeman who had arrested a Negro for a traffic violation, and freed his prisoner.

Some of Faces Black

Up at the state capital, Baton Rouge, Huey Long stands in bronze over his own grave, facing the magnificent capitol that he built with a five million dollar bond issue. (Huey returned $200,000 of the bond funds to the state treasury. The real stealing, his old enemies say, didn't get under way until after he was killed.)

The sides of the white marble pedestal beneath the statue are graved with figures representing the people of Louisiana, with Long assisting them in their upward struggle. All of the features are Caucasian, but over a generation verdigris has washed down off the bronze, and some of the upturned faces are now black. This is not inappropriate, for it was Huey Long who gave the first substantial state aid to Negro schools in Louisiana.

In the governor's office inside the capitol another Long sits, Huey's younger brother, Earl. The governor has a shrewd, quick wit, but the family resemblance goes little further. Gov. Long is trying to ride two horses, dashing wildly in opposite directions. Negro votes in New Orleans and other cities put him into the primary in which he won his office. But he also had the support of the "red neck" element in North Louisiana where, the fewer Negroes there are, the hotter is segregationist sentiment.

"Every night," a veteran political reporter joked, "Earl gets down on his knees and says, 'Dear Lord, don't let nothin' happen in Louisiana while I'm governor.'"

Gov. Long Gives View

That day Gov. Long said: "I've been critized for what I've done for Negroes—hot school lunches—money for charity hospital (in New Orleans)—school buses—$68 old age pensions. Ninety-eight per cent of the Negroes are eligible for pension, 98 to 99 per cent for the lunches, and 90 per cent for Charity hospital admission.

"I don't think desegregation is going to help the colored people. They are doing better every day without it. I don't think the majority of them want it."

"Most Negroes don't want desegregation" is a common claim of white people in the South. Aside from the fact that there are some hundreds of thousands of them on the back roads in the back counties who probably have never heard of it, the proposition is incapable of proof of disproof.

But the following figures do indicate that at least all Negroes are not antisegregationist. The figures are from the voting record of 13 predominantly Negro precincts in New Orleans in the Nov. 2, 1954, general election at which a constitutional amendment was adopted permitting school boards to assign pupils to specific schools on other grounds than race. Until a federal court knocked it out last year, it was hoped that it would provide a means of evading desegregation.

Proposal Defeated

The precincts had 6700 Negro and 946 white voters. Of these 2619 Negroes and 434 whites went to the polls. But since Louisiana voters seem to share with their brothers in other states a propensity to overlook constitutional propositions, only 2092 votes were cast on the school assignment proposal, which in those particular precincts was beaten, 1371 to 721.

Even assuming that every white vote supported the proposal, 15 per cent of the Negroes must have voted for it, too, and another 37 per cent of the Negroes were not interested enough to express an opinion afer they got to the polls.

But even if some Negroes are not interested in desegregation, a white man who devotes himself to improving their economic status in Louisiana insists that it is essential to that progress. He is Wade M. Mackie, director at Baton Rouge of the merit employment service, operated by the American friends service committee.

"This is a new industrial area and is growing rapidly, especially its chemical industry," he said. "Industial leadership, with some exceptions, is enlightened. Wide experience has shown Negro personnel to be dependable beyond any doubt that might have been held in the beginning. I know of no responsible business executive who employs Negroes who is not well satisfied with the results.

Limiting Factor Cited

"You will hear considerable criticism of negroes on what are traditionally 'Negro jobs.' Women complain of their maids. They are harder to find, and demand and get better pay and shorter hours. But none of these mistresses hires a white maid.

"One of the greatest limiting factors up to now has been the educational pattern of the segregated school system. The talented Negro boy or girl simply has not had a chance to develop. Negroes do not have schools to educate their people for employment opportunities. From the classroom up, they have no choice. Courses, textbooks, supervision and staffing are all in the hands of white people. No wonder the supreme court decreed that separate is 'inherently unequal.'"

Baton Rouge, quiet and sedate as it normally is, is suffering the pangs of a boom town. The city's population leaped from 34,719 in 1940 to 125,629 in 1950. East Baton Rouge parish, in which the city is located, now numbers more than 200,000 souls, about a third Negroes.

Progress Still on Wing

The city and parish have been bonding themselves like mad to provide the facilities for the influx of population. A $44 million issue for schools was approved. This was followed by the proposition to issue 42 millions more in bonds for municipal improvements. Some of the local old grumps pointed out that this would raise the authorized bonded debt to 35 per cent of the taxable valuations, and that it was unlikely that anyone would buy the bonds if they were authorized.

The proposal was beaten, 3 to 1, and the forces of progress are temporarily disconsolate. It may be that the tax exemption policy has caught up with them.

But progress is still on the wing. Three of the ablest political writerts in the state gave their private opinion that however Louisianans talk, they will not close their public schools, at least in the urban centers, if the federal courts finally compel their desegregation.

EXCOMMUNICATED 2 WHO BEAT TEACHER

Journal + Constitution 6-14-0

Bishop in Race Tiff Ban Dies

Atlanta, Ga.

LAKE CHARLES, La., Feb. 23 (AP)—The Most Rev. Jules Benjamin Jeanmard, the Roman Catholic bishop who excommunicated two women for beating up a teacher of integrated classes, died here Saturday after a long illness. He was 77.

Bishop Jeanmard

Bishop Jeanmard was bishop of Lafayette in November, 1955, when he issued his excommunication decree, the severest penalty for a Catholic, against two women in Erath. The women had beaten a woman who taught both Negroes and whites in the same catechism class.

Sun. 2-24-57

The excommunicated women apologized a week later, and Bishop Jeanmard lifted the ban.

He retired as bishop of Lafayette last March because of failing health. He was the diocese's first bishop. The Most Rev. Maurice Schexnayder succeeded him.

Bishop Jeanmard then assumed the title of Bishop of Bareta, a bishopric no longer in existence.

Since his retirement, Bishop Jeanmard has spent much of his time commuting between his home in Lafayette and Lake Charles' St. Patrick's Hospital, where he died.

Bishop Jeanmard was born in Breaux Bridge, La., Aug. 15, 1879. He studied at the Diocesan Preparatory Seminary at Gessen, La., Kendrick Seminary of St. Louis and the St. Louis Seminary in New Orleans, before being ordained as a priest June 10, 1903.

After he was ordained, the priest became an assistant at St. Louis Cathedral in New Orleans. Three years later, he was appointed secretary to the late Most Rev. James Hubert Blenk, archbishop of New Orleans.

In 1914, Bishop Jeanmard was made chancellor of the New Orleans Archdiocese. Three years later, he became administrator.

The appointment as first bishop of Lafayette came in 1918.

ducted at St. John's Cathedral, Lafayette, at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

A solemn Pontifical Requiem High Mass will be celebrated by the Most Rev. Richard Gerow, bishop of Natchez-Jackson.

States Offered Data On Probe By Louisiana

Mon. 3-11-57

Montgomery, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., March 10 (AP)—Louisiana planned today to make available to other Southern states the findings of a three-day hearing aimed at showing Communist influences behind racial disturbances.

At the conclusion of the hearings yesterday, Sen. W. M. Rainach said, "We have shown that Communist influence working through such instruments as the NAACP — National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People—is a prime cause of racial disturbances.

"Creation of racial uprisings against the existing order is a principal instrument of the Communist party."

Rainach is chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation that conducted the hearings.

RED-HUNTING GROUP

He said the legislators also would consider a suggestion for formation of a statewide Red hunting group to supplement the FBI, probably as part of the state police.

Sgt. Hubert Badeaux, a New Orleans police expert on communism, made the suggestion.

Badeaux said he had evidence "enough to convince even the most skeptical" of charges that the Communist party had penetrated the NAACP.

Badeaux said the Communists aren't interested in integration except as an "issue to sharpen their warfare."

In New York, NAACP counsel Thurgood Marshall said the "Communists tried desperately to infiltrate the ranks of the NAACP," but "failed miserably."

Observers during the hearings included Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia and the Mississippi Permanent Legislative Investigating Committee.

Will Sit In On Louisiana Segregation Talks

P. 7

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 5.—Members of Mississippi's permanent Legislative Investigating Committee will attend a Louisiana hearing Thursday on the segregation question.

Senator Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg, the chairman, said Tuesday his group had accepted an invitation from a Louisiana Legislative Committee studying the racial question to meet with it in Baton Rouge.

The invitation came from Senator W. M. Rainach, chairman of the Louisiana group which is studying "influences that are disturbing the peace and tranquility between the segments of population in Louisiana."

Senator Rainach told the Mississippi group he believes the hearing will develop that "these disturbances primarily originate outside our borders" and that they are "a part of a conspiracy which also involves Mississippi and other Southern states." A delegation from Georgia is also expected to attend the hearing.

Senator Hall said "we are vitally interested in the situation in Mississippi and we want to co-operate with the Louisiana committee on this problem."

Other members to attend the Baton Rouge hearing are Senators Dees Stribling of Philadelphiaa nd Mayes McGehee of Meadville, and Representatives Buddy Newman of Issaquena County, Russell Fox og Claiborne County and Luther Sims of Lowndes County.

Quick End Of Special Days Is Indicated

Times-Picayune New Orleans Sat. 3-30-57

U. S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright obviously extended the period of "segregated practices of New Orleans City Park" another thirty days, when he indicated that an order ultimately would be given the New Orleans City Park Improvement Association to end segregation in the use of park facilities.

Judge Wright has allowed the state attorney general 30 days in which to appear in a suit brought against the city's park board by Negroes. The suit was filed in January, 1952 by Mandeville Detiege and members of the New Orleans Golf Club, and was permitted to lie dormant until the latter part of 1956.

The judge said that "The court feels it is bound by the rulings in the Atlanta and Baltimore cases." In the named cities operators of city parks have been directed to end systems where Negroes were permitted to use park facilities only on certain days.

In New Orleans Negroes had been granted permission to use certain park facilities on Tuesday and Fridays. Louis B. Porterie, counsel for the association, alledged that "an agreement had been reached to allow Negroes to use park facilities on indicated days."

This statment of Porterie was denied by A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the plaintiffs. Tureaud stated that "there had been no agreement and he offered proof that the petitioners asked for a review of the decision to allow Negroes the use of park facilities on certain days."

Within thirty days a new adventure with many new experiences may be opened to some 200,000 inhabitants of this community, which have been previously denied them, although tax-supported for others' use.

The 1500 acres extending from City Park Avenue to Lake Pontchartrain are now denied thousands of law abiding citizens of New Orleans. In the future, they will be able to visit the famous "Duelling Oaks," Allard Tomb; observe the beauty of McFadden Building with its Mediterranean architecture; and, to enjoy the beauty of the Rose Garden, which has been described as a beautiful landscaped plot planted with hundreds of rose bushes of many varieties. These are just a few of the new avenues of physical enjoyment and recreational facilities which will be opened to thousands of "tax-paying Philanthropists" of New Orleans. Louisiana Legislators To Open Hearings Today

Thurs. 3-7-57

P. 6

BATON ROUGE, March 6.—(UPI) The South's racial unrests are the result of a "designed plan," in the "nature of a conspiracy," the chairman of a Louisiana joint legislative committee said Wednesday.

Senator W. D. Rainach, of Summerfield, refused to identify witnesses to be examined under oath at a series of hearings which start Thursday.

Senator Rainach said there is "no question" there is a "plan" behind the influences which have caused disturbances between the races in the South. He said he would not disclose just what the committee expects to develop, because if he did, "some of these influences would bring about propaganda to discredit the investigation."

The senator disclosed that the committee in executive session Wednesday examined a witness who gave "most interesting" testimony. The witness, from outside the South, is a "top authority" on the influences which are disturbing the tranquility between the races, he added.

The person will be examined again Thursday, Senator Rainach said, in open testimony to lay a general outline of the entire problem.

Louisiana Would Learn If Boxer Is Of Negro Race

Daily World

Fri. 3-29-57

Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — The Louisiana athletic commission Thursday was given a legal okay to probe into the racial background of middleweight boxer Ralph Dupas.

The Commission was scheduled to meet last night to examine public health records which allegedly show that Dupas is a Negro.

The commission said that if Dupas is found to be a Negro it would have to cancel a scheduled 10-round bout between Dupas and Vince Martinez in New Orleans April 8 in view of a state segregation law which prohibits the mixing of races in Athletic contests.

Daily World

Promoter Regas sought to have the commission prevented from examining the records in a suit filed earlier today but civil district court Judge Alexander E. Rainold refused to halt the scheduled meeting.

However, the Judge said he would order the commission to show cause Monday why it should not be enjoined from preventing the bout.

Regas said he filed the suit after the commission informed him that it would be "incumbent on this commission to recind its sanction of the bout" if Dupas was found to be a Negro.

FEW NEGROES FALL FOR REDS SAYS MIDDLETOWN REPORTER

A Louisiana Legislative Committee sought to show at a hearing in Baton Rouge, La. that the fight by Negroes to uphold the Supreme Court's desegregation decision was influenced by Communist.

At the hearings, a white woman citizen from Middletown, Ohio, appeared and said few Negroes fell for the "Red line."

Mrs. Martha Edmiston — Middletown Daily Journal reporter and former FBI agent— told the southern legislators that she and her husband entered the Communist party in 1940 at the request of the FBI.

She said she was reprimanded severely once for "slipping some money to an old Negro couple.

"You do not give money to the poor, you give them pamphlets so you can incite them," she was told by the party secretary.

However she said, "Actually it was only a small percentage of the Negroes who fell for the Communist party line."

In previous testimony, three ex Communist leaders testified the Communists used racial incidents for their own purposes, had been trying to infiltrate the Negro churches for many years and concentrated their efforts on taking over the NAACP.

Mrs. Edmiston, attractive, brown-haired former Communist, told how she and her husband entered the Communist Party in 1940 at the request of the FBI, staying in for about two years.

She told of early party work when she and others were assigned to take two Negro girls around Chicago creating racial incidents by seating them in white cafes.

"Those girls," she said, "only wanted to have a good time in Chicago. They didn't want to make any trouble."

LAYMEN RECEIVE SETBACK

Pope Backs Louisiana Integration Fight

VATICAN CITY Aug. 10 (UP)—Pope Pius XII fully supports Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel of New Orleans in his fight against racial segregation in the church, a high Vatican source said today.

It appeard that the Vatican, indirectly, would reject an appeal to the Pontiff by the New Orleans Association of Catholic Laymen asking him to halt the archbishop's program of racial integration.

The source said the church's stand was contained in the first encyclical of the Pope's reign, issued Oct. 20 1939. In that encyclical entitled "Summi Pontificatus" (of the supreme pontificate) the Pope declared all men "equal sons in the house of the Father" once they have been baptized and enter the church.

However, the source said it was unlikely that the Pontiff himself or the Vatican Sercretariat of State would reply directly to the appeal of the New Orleans Catholics.

He said a reply probably would be made either through Msgr. Amleto Cicognani, the apostolic delgate to the United States or through Archbishop Rummel himself.

A direct answer from the Pope was not necessary, the source said, because the spritual leader already has taken his stand that segregation is sinful.

Archbishop Rummel ruled that segregation in the church was "morally wrong and sinful" a statement which the semi-official Vatican newspaper "Osservatore Romano" has echoed frequently in sharp editorial language.

In October 1955, Osservatore said it was the duty of American Catholics to erase the "color smudge." At the time, Archbishop Rummel had closed down the St. Cecelia Mission at Jesuit Bend, La., as punishment because the parishioners refused to accept a Negro priest.

The newspaper denounced segregation as "blasphemy" and "sacrilege."

An even more bitter attack on segregation appeared in the paper last Sept. 6 when it charged that racial discrimination in the United States was a "sin against the nature of Christianity."

Anti-Negroes riots in Oliver Springs Tenn., sparked that editorial in which Osservatore said race discrimination "mortifies" the United States and denies it the full flowering of its "genius."

La. seeks NBA help

Balt. Md. Sun. 5-19-57

NEW ORLEANS—A request that the National Boxing Association reconsider a suggestion of boycott, was filed with NBA president Abe Green by the Louisiana State Athletic Commission last week.

The NBA would have fighters and their managers bypass Louisiana because of recently-enacted legislation banning mixed bouts in the State.

In a letter signed by assistant secretary Michael J. Cusimano, the state commission said it had no control over the state laws. It also said Louisiana "has been a boxing center for the last 100 years" and that mixed bouts were banned when Louisiana entered the NBA as a charter member.

"We urge you to reconsider your point of view for the sake of unity within the NBA . . . And let the laws and time take care of local conditions which exist in Louisiana," the letter said.

Decries South as 'Lambs for Political Altar'

Wed. 5-22-57

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

ALEXANDRIA, La., May 21—Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion told the Rapides parish citizens council Monday night "We are fighting the War Between the States all over again, but this time without bullets."

Gremillion, who vigorously indicted the United States supreme court and proposed civil rights legislation decried the plight of the South as "sacrificial lambs on the altar of national political control."

He accused the federal government of "operating on a policy of the end justifying the means, and if the constitution is in the way it must be bypassed."

In a methodical statistical reply to federal allegations of discrimination, Gremillion said that during the last few years some 43,000 whites have been admitted to charity hospitals and nurseries in Louisiana, while 92,000 Negroes were being admitted.

Gremillion praised Rep. George S. Long of the Eighth District for his stand on segregation.

He quoted Long as having told a House judiciary subcommittee, "You can pass as many laws as you want to, but Louisiana will never integrate its schools."

On civil rights legislation now before Congress, Germillion said a constitutional amendment is "the only logical way to deal with the whole problem."

"If two-thirds of both Houses of Congress and three-fourths of the states want to take away or limit further the right of trial by jury," he said, "then the constitution and law will order it done."

But, he added, "I don't think Congress will ever deprive the citizens of a right like trial by jury."

Louisiana Anti-Integration Law Is Declared Unconstitutional

Sat. 4-20-57

New Orleans, La., Apr. 16.—A two-judge federal district court today declared unconstitutional a Louisiana law which sought to halt enrollment of Negroes in white colleges.

The statute, passed by the 1956 Legislature, required state college enrolees, white and Negro, to have a certificate of eligibility signed by a parich (county) school official. The certificate attested to the student's good moral character.

Negro college students and their lawyers attacked the law in federal court because a companion law made it a criminal offense for a public school official to sign a certificate for a Negro seeking admittance to a white college.

The court also struck down the companion law, declaring the Legislature had used a transparent device to accomplish with two laws what it knew it could not do with one.

The ruling by Judges Herbert Christenberry and Skelly Wright was on cases involving Louisiana State University, McNeese State College, Southeastern Louisiana College, and Southwestern Louisiana Institute.

The same federal court earlier had issued temporary injunctions against the school which made possible enrollment of about 100 Negroes.

Despite the earlier court victories by Negroes, their enrollment in white college was cut in half in the 1956-57 school year because of the "good character" law.

New Orleans Told To Lift Race Barrier

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 5-16-57

NEW ORLEANS, May 15 (AP)—A U. S. District Court Judge today ruled out segregation in city park and on street cars and buses here but the city attorney said he would not stop enforcement of segregation laws until all appeals are exhausted.

Judge J. Skelly Wright handed down his decision after hearing arguments in the two separate cases. He declared both state and city laws on segregation unconstitutional. He said the questions of law were settled by previous rulings.

City lawyers immediately announced plans for appealing the rulings. Officials of the local transit system said they would continue to operate on a segregated basis.

City Atty. Alvin Liska said Wright advised him he would not issue a permanent injunction stopping enforcement of the laws until the city exhausted all appeals.

Before ruling on the city park case, Wright said he had delayed his ruling to see in which direction such litigation would go.

The city park case came to court today on a motion to dismiss it. William P. Schuler, assistant attorney general for Louisiana, filed the motion. The state intervened several weeks ago at the direction of the court.

The bus and street car case was before the court on a motion for summary judgment.

Liska argued the parties filing the suit had never been compelled to sit behind segregation signs in street cars or buses, and that they had never been arrested for not sitting behind such signs.

Unconstitutional Ruling Is Made In Louisiana

Thurs. 5-16-57

NEW ORLEANS, May 15.—(UP)—A Federal district judge ruled Wednesday that state laws requiring park and public transportation segregation in New Orleans are unconstitutional.

Federal Judge S. Kelly Wright said he would issue permanent injunctions to stop enforcement of the laws, but did not say when they would be issued.

Meanwhile, New Orleans Public Service, Inc., which operates city transportation said pending final court action bus seating would be unchanged.

Attorneys representing the city said they would appeal the decisions. If the appeal is granted, the judge may grant a stay of the injunctions until the appeal is heard.

News of the decision reached the Louisiana Legislature, which passed the laws, as the House prepared to adjourn for the day. Some legislators were not surprised at the decision, but they declined to be quoted.

Federal court attaches said the bus case could not be decided by the appeals court before next February, due to a jammed docket.

One case involves the use of city park facilities by Negroes. The other dealt with segregated bus and streetcar seating.

Louisiana Law Opposed In Federal Court

Memphis Press Sat. 6-15-57

NEW ORLEANS, June 14.—(UP)—Louisiana's law banning racially mixed athletic events has been challened for the first time in Federal Court by a New Orleans Negro boxer.

Light heavyweight Joseph Dorsey Jr. said Friday he filed an amended petition in Federal District Court challenging the constitutionality of the 1956 law. A trial date has not been set.

The law, which was approved by the State Legislature with barely a murmur of opposition, bans Negroes from playing against whites in amateur or professional athletics.

Because of the law, Louisiana State University and Wisconsin canceled a home and away football series. The law prevents Negroes from competing in the Evangeline Baseball League or on Shreveport's team in the Texas League. It would also forbid a racially mixed team from playing in New Orleans' Sugar Bowl football classic.

Last year, several teams withdrew from the Sugar Bowl's basketball tourney because of the law.

Dorsey, an unranked fighter, said the law had cost him the means of his livelihood. He said he cannot earn more than $800 a year because of the law. If permitted to fight whites, he could earn $10,000 a year, he said.

Dorsey began a suit in July, 1955, to break Louisiana's ban on mixe bouts. At that time, mixed bouts were blocked by rules of the State Athletic Commission, rather than by law.

By permission of Federal Judge Skelly Wright, Dorsey was permitted to amend his original suit against the commission to include a challenge to the 1956 law. Wright has given several decisions in recent months voiding Louisiana Segregation laws. Dorsey is challenging the law under the 14th amendment.

SEGREGATION LAWS HIT BY INJUNCTIONS

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn.

Won't Take Effect Until Appeals Are Heard

Wed. 5-29-57

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—(UP)—A Federal judge Tuesday signed permanent injunctions to ban enforcement of segregation laws affecting New Orleans buses, streetcars and city parks.

Judge J. Skelly Wright ruled, however, that the injunctions do not become effective until all appeals in the case are heard.

Judge Wright's action followed his May 15 decision which declared Louisiana's bus and public park segregation laws unconstitutional. His ruling came on suits brought by Negroes.

Attorneys for the city and state said they will appeal the decision to the Fifth United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Their appeals are not expected to be heard until early next year.

In other action on the segregation front, Atty Gen. Jack Gremillion announced the state would appeal another of Judge Wright's decisions which voided laws upholding segregation in state colleges.

Last year, the appelate court upheld a ruling which declared public school segregation laws unconstitutional.

In New Orleans last week, Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright made permanent, his decision, invalidating all laws of the state of Louisiana and municipal ordinances of the city of New Orleans dealing with the separation of the races. City and state officials stated that the judge's decision would be ap-

Judge Wright ruled that both injunctions "shall become effective when it shall have become final after exhaustion of appeals."

The orders were issued by Judge Wright, based on his earlier findings May 15 that segregation on street cars and buses and in park recreation facilities were in violation of the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution

The city park case was brought about four years ago when city officials tried to stave off a segregation wrangle by making park facilities such as golf courses and tennis courts available to Negroes on a parttime basis, still segregated

Negroes contested the arrangement as an extension of the "separate but equal doctrine" which had been outlawed by the court in 1954.

The federal court delayed its ruling awaiting the outcome of similar cases. Judge Wright based his ruling on similar cases in Atlanta and Baltimore.

Both orders were similarly worded saying the laws violated "...the equal protection of the laws and due process of the laws secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United Sates. . ."

Race Relations In New Orleans Present Odd Situation Variety

NEW ORLEANS, La. (ANP)—Race relations in New Orleans presented some oddities at the Xavier University a white priest Rev. Robert Pavlak, received a degree in education while a Negro priest received his degree from Loyola an all-white institution.

Two white Catholic nuns also received their degrees from Xavier and three white citizens, Father Edward F. Murphy, Miss Ellen Cavanaugh, both teachers at Xavier, and a white medical doctor received honorary degrees there

A mother, Mrs. Ophelia Kiper, and one of her thirteen children both received bachelor degrees from Xavier and another mother Mrs. Alma Granderson received a master's degree while her son was receiving his bachlor's degree.

Two sets of twins were among the Xavier grads.

In another action a group of students from a public school visited the City Park with permission of the Orleans Parish School Board. They were accompanied by their teacher Miss Oliver Evans. Park officials tried to force them to leave the park but they refused to do so until their bus returned for them.

APPEAL AWAITED

They did not use the park facilities but walked about and looked at the things long forbidden to Negroes. Park officials are quoted as saying Negroes were not even permitted to walk through the park.

City Park has been enjoined from refusing Negroes entrance by the federal court but most people are awaiting an appeal from the decision by park officials before trying to use park facilities.

Recent figures showed that there were more Negroes in New Orleans public schools than whites but there were more and better schools for the fewer whites there.

There are almost ten thousand Negro children on half-day classes but not a single white student on the same basis.

The New Orleans Symphony orchestra Friday said a 12-year-old Negro will not sing with the orchestra because of a 1956 law banning interracial activities.

Although she was chosen through statewide auditions, Barbara Ann Remo will not be able to take part in the Louisiana Youth Concerts as planned.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andes Remo of Baton Rouge. Her father is a native of Manila, Philippines, and formerly played with a United States Navy band there.

A letter from Dr. J. C. Morris, president of the Louisiana Youth Concerts, advised her:

"I regret to inform you that we will not be able to do as we had planned and have you take part with us. This decision has been made solely because we have been advised by legal counsel that recent laws passed by the state of Louisiana prohibit this. We regret the necessity of changing our programs, in which you have a part."

The 1956 law bans interracial athletics and all racial mixing in public events.

The girl was scheduled to appear next Jan. 23 with the New Orleans Symphony orchestra in a concert broadcast over a statewide network from Booker T. Washington High school. Instead, she received a $50 prize.

In the past, Negro music students have taken part in the concerts with the orchestra.

Pressing Questions Arise

Who are the Negroes in New Orleans?

By O. C. W. Taylor For The Associated Negro Press

NEW ORLEANS—Way down yonder in New Orleans where there are the blackest white folk and the whitest black folk in the world, they are calling the roll to see if it can be determined just who is white and who is not.

Those who have been passing are on edge for it is hard to have been white and to declared black again. Those who are really white, and there are just a few of these, do not seem to be worrying at all

They feel safe from the buzzards of hate and segregation. Those who are light skinned and want to go to the other side are keenly looking at what is happening. Many who have been passing are threatening to tell on many others who have been getting by. They'll tell if caught up with.

Tough Being A Negro

And there is no wonder that there is such a hubbub down there in deep Dixie. It is hard to be a Negro there. You are kept away from all of the good things America has provided for its citizens: fine hotels, restaurants, schools, theatres, parks, playgrounds, etc. and you are cornered off into a little dirty spot in the town, a special place on street cars, buses and trains and just labeled "impure" or "untouchable."

Dixie has helped Negroes to pass or attempt to pass the color line. The greed of the white man for the Negro woman's love and affection has given rise to a light colored group neither Negro nor white. His love for some of these mixed children has led him to aid them in passing.

The influx of mulattoes from Haiti where the blacks had chased them out and their coming to New Orleans with real money has led citizens to forget the real race and color of the person an donly see the color of their money.

Haven't Proved It Yet

This week they teamed up to prove that Ralph Dupas was a black man instead of a white man. They have not proven anything yet, but there are those who are determined to do so.

Many Negroes have entered the white groups and have risen to great heights. And they and their families have stayed there. They have become interwoven with other families of power and to have turned them up as blacks would have wrecked the community.

But there are many rumors circulating among the neighborhood. One of them is to the point where a descendant of one of the French-speaking Haitians prospered until he became president of one of America's largest transportation systems.

Policy King Passes, Wife Can't

One of the kings of the numbers game is reported to have passed into the white group while his black wife must remain in the kitchen whenever company is around. A public school principal prefers the company of low-standard whites to that of the high-type Negroes with whom she could easily have social relations.

Many light-skinned persons, unable to attend white schools, attended schools and grew up ignorant and illiterate but on the border line of race where there may be some who call them white whether they mean it or not.

A public high school teacher of over 35 years experience says it is pleasing to pass through the Canal street department stores and see the number of Negro (?) girls employed as clerks.

It is rather late to call the figures in this racial dance in New Orleans. There has been too much cream in the coffee already and who can tell whom or what? Can you?

Army Approves Jim-Crow Game in La.

Pittsburgh Pa.

PITTSBURGH—West Point's Black Knights will defy a boycott of Northern universities and travel South this year to play Tulane University in New Orleans on Nov. 16.

• Lieut. Gen. Garrison H. Davidson confirmed the Army's decision to play in Dixie via an interview held with Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph sports writer George Kiseda.

A so-called "unofficial" boycott has been imposed upon Louisiana schools ever since the Louisiana State Legislature passed a law against interracial sports competition and integrated seating.

• Since this law was passed, no Northern college has sent either football or basketball teams into Louisiana.

One of the first school to announce its stand was the University of Pittsburgh, which withdrew as a possible Sugar Bowl candidate despite the fact that there are no Negroes on the Pitt grid squad.

PITT'S ACTION was followed by the University of Wyoming, which canceled a two-year contract with LSU; Notre Dame, St. Louis and Dayton asked to be relieved of basketball obligations.
